The Authors

SARINA SINGH Coordinating Author, Destination India, Getting Started, Snapshot, History, The Culture, Food & Drink, Delhi, Glossary

After finishing a business degree in Melbourne, Sarina bought a one-way ticket to Delhi, where she completed a corporate traineeship at the Sheraton before working a journalist. After four years in the subcontinent she returned to Australia, pursued post-graduate studies and wrote/directed a documentary that premiered at the Melbourne International Film Festival. Life on the Road

In India, you can unexpectedly find yourself up close and personal with moments that have the power to alter the way you view the world and your place in it… It was a sultry subcontinental afternoon in 1990. To escape a sudden monsoonal downpour, I dashed into a museum and found myself tagging behind a bunch of tourists. Suddenly the group's guide, a crinkle-faced old man with thick silvery hair and a wispy beard, pointed directly at me: 'You, with the strong Jupiter vibrations, you're on the wrong path!' I froze in puzzled embarrassment as the other tourists spun around and speared me with inquisitive stares. The somewhat agitated guide scuttled over, beseeching me to start writing – only then would I be going the 'right' way… That evening, while jostling my way through a people-packed bazaar in the old city, a willowy lady selling spice-cakes beckoned me over and insisted – with the same peculiar urgency as the museum guide – that I write about 'all this'. It was too much serendipity to ignore.

JOE BINDLOSS Coordinating Author, Itineraries, Environment, Activities, Himachal Pradesh, Jammu & Kashmir, Directory, Transport

Joe first visited India in the early '90s, and something clicked. He's been back a dozen times, seeking the high mountain passes, the southern badlands, the northeast backwaters and the steamy cities. Joe's lived in half a dozen countries, including the US, Australia and the Philippines, writing for Lonely Planet plus a string of dining guides and print media. When not scouring India for the perfect kali mirch (peppercorn) kebab, he lives in London with partner Linda and a collection of carpets, masks and musical instruments.

Life on the Road

India is intensity, at least that has always been my experience. There's a unique sensation that surges through the veins on the day you arrive in India, when you drop your bags off and step into the streets for the first time. In one direction, a cow chews meditatively in the midst of honking traffic. In the other direction, women in iridescent saris jostle for space between rickshaws and phut-phut-ing Enfield motorcycles. As you watch, a young boy rushes past with a rack of chai glasses and a fortune teller gestures towards a chart of astrological symbols. Suddenly, the call to prayer from the local mosque rises above the scene like a siren. Without prompting, a smile cracks your face from ear to ear. This is India and you have arrived.

JAMES BAINBRIDGE

Punjab & Haryana, Madhya Pradesh & Chhattisgarh

James' first visit to India, as a long-haired student en route to Nepal, was halted by a missed connection in Frankfurt. A decade later, with a shorter fringe and more experience, his task for Lonely Planet was more successful. He got a taste for chai and philosophical conversation among the Sikhs in Punjab, before searching for temples, tigers and tribes in the forests of Madhya Pradesh. Having begun his career as a nomadic journalist with stints on magazines in London and Sydney, James has contributed to half a dozen Lonely Planet books.

LINDSAY BROWN

West Bengal, Orissa

After completing a PhD on evolutionary genetics and following a stint as a science editor and a sojourn on the subcontinent, Lindsay started working for Lonely Planet. Lindsay is a former publishing manager of the Outdoor Activity guides at Lonely Planet, and he returns to the subcontinent to trek, write and photograph whenever possible. He has also contributed to Lonely Planet's South India, Nepal, Bhutan, and Pakistan & the Karakoram Highway guides, among others.

STUART BUTLER

Maharashtra, Goa

Stuart Butler is an England-born, France-based photojournalist who has travelled extensively in India over the past decade in search of empty surf, unlikely stories and fodder for his camera lenses. When not struggling to grasp the mathematics behind Indian train timetables he writes about his travels, which have taken him beyond the borders of India to places as diverse as the coastal deserts of Pakistan and the jungles of Colombia. These stories feature frequently in the world's surfing and travel media and can be seen on his website, www.oceansurfpublications.co.uk.

LONELY PLANET AUTHORS

Why is our travel information the best in the world? It's simple: our authors are independent, dedicated travellers. They don't research using just the internet or phone, and they don't take freebies in exchange for positive coverage. They travel widely, to all the popular spots and off the beaten track. They personally visit thousands of hotels, restaurants, cafés, bars, galleries, palaces, museums and more – and they take pride in getting all the details right, and telling it how it is. Think you can do it? Find out how at lonelyplanet.com.

MARK ELLIOTT Kolkata (Calcutta), Sikkim, Northeast States

Mark has been making occasional forays to the subcontinent since a mad 1984 trip that lined his stomach for most eventualities. Delighted to finally have the excuse to explore the northeast, Mark was bowled over by the human warmth of Sikkim, Kolkata and Mizoram, and fascinated to compare mythical Tawang with equivalent Tibetan temples on 'the other side'. Between researching travel guides, Mark lives in blissfully quiet suburban Belgium with his beloved wife Danielle who found him at a Turkmenistan camel market. A camel would probably have been cheaper.

PAUL HARDING Uttar Pradesh, Uttarakhand (Uttaranchal), Bihar & Jharkhand

Since arriving in Delhi a decade ago, Paul's been drawn back to India regularly. A journalist, travel writer and sometime photographer for more than 15 years, he's spent lots of time on the subcontinent, particularly in South India. This time he headed north and admired the mountains in Uttarakhand's Himalaya, saw a great deal of the Ganges, and made his way through Varanasi's illuminating old city. Paul's contributed to many Lonely Planet guides, including India, South India and Goa. He lives by the beach in Melbourne, Australia.

VIRGINIA JEALOUS Tamil Nadu, Andaman & Nicobar Islands

Virginia first visited India (carrying Lonely Planet's very first India guide) in 1984. Infected by her father's obsession with the subcontinent, and the Books About India he dealt in, she's visited several times, equally enchanted by the wildlife, enthralled by the complex culture and flummoxed by the idiosyncrasies. Updating the Tamil Nadu and Andaman & Nicobar Islands chapters gave her the chance to revisit some birding hotspots, where the racket-tailed drongo was a big favourite but the famed Nicobar pigeon continued to elude her. She dreams of inventing one perfect adjective to describe India, but isn't even close yet.

AMY KARAFIN Andhra Pradesh, Tamil Nadu (Chennai section)

Amy Karafin grew up on the USA Jersey shore, where she developed a keen curiosity about the horizon that developed into a phobia of residence. Indian in several former lives, she headed straight to India after university for an extended trip that would turn out to be karmically ordained. She spent the next few years alternating between New York and faraway lands until, fed up with the irony of being a travel editor in a Manhattan cubicle, she relinquished her MetroCard and her black skirts to make a living closer to the equator. She currently divides her time between Mumbai (Bombay), New York and Dakar.

SIMON RICHMOND

Karnataka

In 1999 Simon first encountered southern India on a journey that included snorkelling in the Andaman Islands, trekking in the Nilgiri Hills and drifting through the Kerala backwaters on a kettuvallam (rice barge) houseboat. A year later he travelled through northern India at the tail end of an overland haul from Istanbul to Kathmandu for Lonely Planet. In 2004 he covered the maximum city of Mumbai, the beaches of Goa and the architectural and cultural wonders of Maharashtra. Simon has authored several other Lonely Planet guides.

TOM SPURLING

Rajasthan, Gujarat

Tom grew up in Geelong, a mid-sized city in the bottom right-hand corner of Australia, and he still goes back there to see the dentist. A freelance writer by trade – and high-school teacher by profession – he currently works as a writer-in-residence for Amazwi, a literary magazine in rural South Africa, though usually lives in Melbourne. As a wobbly-kneed Lonely Planet debutante, Tom always had India coming. On this, his second trip to the subcontinent, he chased monsoons through the Thar Desert and rainbows around Diu. Tom likes telling other people's stories, and he recommends travelling light.

RAFAEL WLODARSKI

Mumbai (Bombay), Kerala

After completing degrees in Melbourne, Rafael vowed never to use them and set off on a round-the-world trip. Seven years and four passports later, he's yet to come home. He spent most of his 20s travelling overland through the Middle East, the Indian subcontinent and North and South America. Rafael relished the opportunity to return to Kerala for Lonely Planet. He currently calls 'sunny' London home and spends a lot of time in Brick Lane reliving his memories with the aid of fish curry. In between overseas jaunts, he contributes to a travel-advice and -coaching website, www.waywardcamel.com.

Destination India

With its mind-bending diversity – from snowcapped mountains to sun-washed beaches, crusty old bazaars to chichi designer boutiques, tranquil temples to feisty festivals, ramshackle rural villages to techno-savvy urban hubs – it's hardly surprising that India has been dubbed the planet's most multidimensional country.

The subcontinent is home to more than a billion people, and its eclectic melange of ethnic groups translates into an intoxicating cultural cocktail for the traveller. For those on a spiritual quest, India has oodles of sacrosanct sites and stirring philosophies, while history buffs will discover gems from the past almost everywhere – from grand vestiges of the British Raj peering over frenetic city streets, to battle-scarred forts rising from forlorn country fields. Meanwhile, lovers of the great outdoors can paddle in the shimmering waters of one of many palm-fringed beaches, scout for big jungle cats on an adrenaline-pumping wildlife safari, or simply breathe in the scent of wildflowers on a rejuvenating forest walk. And then there's the food! From squidgy south Indian idlis (rice dumplings) to zesty north Indian curries, travellers are treated to a positively seductive smorgasbord of subcontinental specialities.

Demystifying India is a perpetual work-in-progress and for many travellers that's precisely what makes her so deeply addictive. Ultimately, it's all about surrendering yourself to the unknown: this is the India that nothing can quite prepare you for because its very essence – its elusive soul – lies in its mystery. Love it or loathe it – and most visitors seesaw between the two – India will jostle your entire being and no matter where you go or what you do, it's a place you'll never forget.

GREG ELMS

Getting Started

Nothing can fully prepare you for India, but perhaps the one thing that best encapsulates this extraordinary country is its ability to inspire, frustrate, thrill and confound all at once.

India is one of the planet's most multidimensional countries, presenting a wildly diverse spectrum of travel encounters. Some of these can be challenging, particularly for the first-time visitor: the poverty is confronting, Indian bureaucracy can be exasperating and the crush of humanity sometimes turns the simplest task into an energy-zapping battle. Even the most experienced travellers find their sanity frayed at some point, yet this is all part of what makes India a unique travel destination. If you haven't visited this part of the globe before, set aside the first few days to simply acclimatise to the subcontinent's bamboozling symphony of sights, sounds, tastes and smells.

Get excited and knowledgeable about your trip beforehand by reading up on India, especially its cultural framework. Doing so will augment your appreciation of the subcontinent's sights and traditions and also better equip you to hold more informed conversations with locals. Allow a few weeks of pretrip preparation to sort out immunisations and visas.

In terms of planning what to do once you arrive, the country's remarkable diversity can actually make it a veritable quagmire when nutting out itineraries. The key is to try not to squeeze in too much, as travelling often involves considerable distances and stamina. It's wise to factor in some flexibility, as things don't always run like clockwork in India – more than a few travellers have had their holidays marred by not being able to get their preferred train seats, or by being delayed by rescheduled transport services, for example. Flexibility will also allow spontaneity, whether it's simply spending an afternoon discussing samsara with a pujari (priest) whom you initially approached for directions after getting lost in a bazaar, or ditching travel plans with friends to join a short-staffed rural volunteer group you heard about while queuing for bus tickets in Delhi. Regardless, your Indian sojourn is going to be a whole lot more enjoyable if you give yourself some time off purely to chill.

WHEN TO GO

Climate plays a key factor in deciding when to visit India. You should keep in mind that climatic conditions in the far north are distinctly different to those of the extreme south.

Generally speaking, India's climate is defined by three seasons – the hot, the wet (monsoon) and the cool, each of which can vary in duration from north to south. The most pleasant time to visit most of the country is during the cooler period of November to around mid-February, although there are marked regional variations (see the Fast Facts boxed texts at the start of regional chapters for the best times to visit specific regions).

THE INDIA EXPERIENCE

There's a whole lot more to India than merely sightseeing:

- Activities (see p90)
- Courses (see p1129)
- Festivals (see p1136)
- Shopping (see p1144)
- Volunteering (see p1155)

Apart from the weather, the timing of certain festivals or special events may also influence when you wish to visit India (see p1136).

The Hot

See p1129 for more climate information.

The heat starts to build up in India from around February and by April it really warms up. It can get unbearably hot in May and June, with many parts of the country experiencing temperatures of 40°C and above. Late in May the first signs of the monsoon are visible in some areas – high humidity, electrical storms, short rainstorms and dust storms that turn day into night. The hot season is the time to abandon the plains and head for the cooler hills, and this is when hill stations are at their best (and busiest).

The Wet

When the monsoon finally arrives, it doesn't just suddenly appear. After some advance warning the rain comes in steadily, generally starting around 1 June in the extreme south and sweeping north to cover the whole country by early July. The monsoon doesn't really cool things down; at first hot, dry and dusty weather is simply replaced by hot, humid and muddy conditions. It doesn't rain solidly all day, but it rains virtually every day; the water tends to come down in buckets for a while, followed by periods of sun, creating a fatiguing steam bath–like environment. The main monsoon comes from the southwest, but the southeast coast (and southern Kerala) is largely affected by the short and surprisingly heavy northeast monsoon, which brings rain from around October to early December.

The Cool

Around October the monsoon ends for most of the country, and this is when India sees most tourists – however, by this time it's too cold to visit Ladakh (May to October is the optimum period; see p366). During October and November it's generally not too hot and not too cool (although October can still be quite humid in some regions). In the thick of winter (around mid-December to mid-January), Delhi and other northern cities can become astonishingly cold, especially at night. It certainly becomes bone-chillingly cold in the far north. In the far south, where it never gets truly cool, the temperatures become comfortably warm during this period.

COSTS & MONEY

When it comes to finances, India pleases all pockets. Accommodation ranges from lacklustre backpacker lodgings to sumptuous top-end hotels, with some delightful midrange possibilities that won't bust the bank. A delicious array of eateries at all prices means you can fill your belly without spending a fortune, and it's possible to zip around economically as well thanks to the country's comprehensive public transport network.

As costs vary nationwide, the best way of ascertaining how much money you'll require for your trip is to peruse the relevant regional chapters of this book. Be prepared to pay more in the larger cities such as Mumbai (Bombay) and Delhi, as well as at popular tourist destinations.

In relation to sightseeing, foreigners are often charged more than Indian citizens for entry into tourist sites (admission prices for foreigners are sometimes given in US dollars, payable in the rupee equivalent), and there may also be additional charges for still/video cameras.

So how does this all translate to a daily budget? Roughly speaking, if you stick to a tight budget you can manage on around Rs 450 to 600 per day (but budget for at least double that in some big cities and tourist hubs). This means staying in basic lodgings, travelling on the cheaper buses and train

DON'T LEAVE HOME WITHOUT...

- Getting a visa (p1154) and travel insurance (p1139)
- Seeking advice about vaccinations (p1181); some must be administered over a period of weeks
- Nonrevealing clothes (women and men) – covering up will win you more respect and is essential when visiting sacred sites
- A well-concealed money belt (p1133)
- Sunscreen lotion and sunglasses
- A small torch (flashlight) for poorly lit streets and power cuts
- Good-quality earplugs to block out night din and for long bus/train journeys
- A little alarm clock – budget and midrange hotels often lack clocks and can be notorious for missing wake-up calls
- Flip-flops (thongs) for shared or grotty bathrooms
- A shower cap and universal sink plug (uncommon except at top-end hotels)
- Tampons – sanitary pads are widely available but tampons are usually restricted to big (or touristy) cities
- Mosquito repellent (a mosquito net can also come in handy)
- Expecting the unexpected – India has an uncanny knack for throwing up surprises classes, eating simple meals and doing limited sightseeing. If you wish to stay in midrange hotels, dine at nicer restaurants, do a reasonable amount of sightseeing and largely travel by autorickshaw and taxi, you're generally looking at anywhere between Rs 900 and 1700 per day. Of course, you may be able to subsist on less in India's smaller, less touristy towns.

Accommodation prices may be influenced by factors such as location (see p1124). Tariffs can shoot up during festivals or other special events, with some hotels charging at least double the normal rate during these times. It would be misleading of us to pinpoint an exact countrywide average accommodation cost (due to broad regional variations), but most hotels around the country fall somewhere between the following ranges: in the budget category, single rooms roughly range from Rs 100 to 400, and doubles from Rs 200 to 600. For more comfort opt for midrange hotels, where you should expect to pay anywhere between Rs 300 and 1300 for a single and between Rs 450 and 1800 for a double. Budget and midrange hotel prices are usually higher in big cities (especially Mumbai) and tourist hot spots. At the upper end of the spectrum there's a bevy of opulent five-star properties (including some stunning palace-hotels), where you can easily spend at least US$150 per night.

Eating out in India is sizzling-hot value, with meals for as little as Rs 40 at decent budget eateries, and usually little more than double that for a satiating midrange restaurant meal. Again, prices vary regionally (see the Eating sections of individual chapters).

Regarding long-distance travel, there's a range of classes on trains and several bus types, resulting in considerable flexibility vis-à-vis comfort and price – regional chapters supply specific costs and also see p1169. Domestic air travel has become a lot more price competitive thanks to recent deregulation (see p1170). Within towns there's inexpensive public transport (see p1173), or perhaps you'd like to hire a car with driver, which is surprisingly good value if there are several of you to split the cost (see p1172).

HOW MUCH?

Incense (15 sticks): from Rs 10

Toothpaste (100g): Rs 27

Bellybutton bindi: Rs 15

Mars Bar: Rs 25

TRAVEL LITERATURE

William Sutcliffe's Are You Experienced? is the hilarious tale of first-time backpacker Dave, who accompanies his best friend's girlfriend to India in an attempt to seduce her. It adroitly portrays the backpacker scene in India.

Inhaling the Mahatma by Christopher Kremmer is the author's fascinating and multifarious encounter with India, from his stint as a foreign correspondent in the early 1990s to his marriage to an Indian woman and life beyond.

Bedazzled by wizardry since childhood, Tahir Shah travelled through India to learn the art of illusion under the guidance of a mysterious master magician. Sorcerer's Apprentice is the wild and wonderful story of his journey.

The Age of Kali by celebrated travel writer William Dalrymple is a perceptive compilation of insights gleaned from a decade of travelling the subcontinent.

Anita Desai's Journey to Ithaca is the engaging tale of two young Europeans, Matteo and Sophie, who go to India seeking spiritual enlightenment. While Matteo's ashram experience is spiritually affirming, Sophie's isn't quite so rosy.

Indian Summer by Will Randall is the memoir of a somewhat disenchanted English teacher who unexpectedly finds himself in Pune, teaching at a school for street kids – then suddenly fighting to save it from being shut down.

Gita Mehta's Karma Cola amusingly and cynically describes the cultural collision as India looks to the West for technology and modern methods, and the West descends upon India in search of wisdom and enlightenment.

Chasing the Monsoon by Alexander Frater is an Englishman's story of his monsoon-chasing journey from Kovalam to Meghalaya. It offers a captivating window into the monsoon's significance and its impact on people.

RAJASTHAN & THE GOLDEN TRIANGLE Two Weeks

This much-loved circuit starts and ends in the bustling capital, Delhi, but extends into the heart of Rajasthan. You can cover this route in two busy weeks, but extra days are recommended.

On day one, get a dose of Mughal history at Old Delhi's evocative Jama Masjid (p129) then dive into the surrounding bazaars (p153) to absorb the sights and sounds of the Old City. On day two, visit Humayan's Tomb (p130) and the National Museum (p131), then attend the Sound and Light show at the historic Red Fort (p127).

Take the bus through the desert to the ancient fortress of Jaisalmer (p243) to relive your Arabian Nights fantasies on a camel safari in the dunes (p248). Finally, make your way back to Delhi, completing the two-week odyssey.

This classic circuit around Delhi visits the Delhi–Agra–Jaipur loop – affectionately dubbed 'The Golden Triangle' – and takes in some of Rajasthan's most famous sights. It's a cross-section across the northern plains for travellers short on time.

ONCE AROUND NORTH INDIA

Two Months

Start this northern extravaganza in Kolkata (Calcutta; p485), finishing in Delhi (p119). Time your schedule so the last leg through Ladakh falls between July and October when the mountain passes are open (see p376).

Pass a few days enjoying the atmosphere and food (p506) in Kolkata, home to mighty Victoria Memorial (p492). Then head to Bodhgaya (p557), where Buddha attained enlightenment. Roll across the plains to the sacred city of Varanasi (p425), then to Khajuraho (p673), where temples drip with erotic carvings.

Head southwest through Orchha (p670) and Jhansi (p669) to Sanchi (p689), where Emperor Ashoka embraced Buddhism. In Bhopal (p682) pick up the train to Jalgaon (p815), jumping-off point for the wonderful Ajanta Caves (p812).

Head by train to buzzing Mumbai (Bombay; p766), then break north along the coast to frenetic Ahmedabad (Amdavad; p717). For a more peaceful slice of Gujarat, visit the mellow island of Diu (p739) and the tribal heartland of Bhuj (p760). Kick off your tour through Rajasthan in whimsical Udaipur (p217) and circle the sights to Jaipur (p165) to catch the train to Agra's Taj Mahal (p399).

Next, drop by Delhi (p119), to relish the sights (p127), tastes (p145) and shopping (p152) before dashing northeast to spot tigers in Corbett Tiger Reserve (p472) and to engage in yoga in Rishikesh (p459). Connect through Dehra Dun (p446) and Chandigarh (p261) to Shimla (p282), India's premier hill station.

Suitably rested, bus to Manali (p306) for some adrenalin-charged activities, then ride the mountain bus to the Buddhist city of Leh (p367). If the political situation allows (see p352), head to Srinagar (p353) in Kashmir, then through Jammu (p363) to McLeod Ganj (p319), home of the Tibetan government in exile.

Finish off the trip at Amritsar (p269) with its shimmering Golden Temple (p271) before one last train ride to Delhi. What a journey!

Kicking off in Kolkata and winding up in Delhi, this wide-ranging journey draws a snaking line through the highlights of Bihar, Uttar Pradesh, Madhya Pradesh, northern Maharashtra, Gujarat, Rajasthan, Uttarakhand (Uttaranchal), Himachal Pradesh, Ladakh, Kashmir and Punjab.

CIRCLING THE SOUTH

Two Months

Mumbai is the borderline between North and South, and the easiest starting point for exploring India's steamy southern tip. Time your trip to avoid the monsoon – the sunniest skies are from October to February.

Kick off in cosmopolitan Mumbai (p766) and make the most of the shopping (p792) eating (p786) and drinking (p789) before heading inland to Ajanta (p812) and Ellora (p809) to marvel at Maharashtra's finest cave art. Sashay southwest to Goa (p837) to laze on palm-fringed beaches before dosing up on history inland at wonderful Hampi (p919), with its temple ruins and giant boulders.

Next, rub shoulders with yuppies in the party bars of Bengaluru (Bangalore; p890) and smell the waft of incense in spicy Mysore (p894) with its extravagant Maharaja's Palace (p895). Feast on a banana-leaf thali (p900) before cruising south to Kerala, stopping at enigmatic Kochi (Cochin; p1002) for a performance of Kathakali dance (p1011). Cruise Kerala's languorous backwaters from Alappuzha (Alleppey; p980), before dipping your toes in the warm waters around Varkala (p973).

For a change of pace, go northwest to Periyar Wildlife Sanctuary (p988) to spot elephants before boggling at the intricacy of the Tamil temples in Madurai (p1080). Pop into Trichy (Tiruchirappalli; p1073) and Thanjavur (p1070) before slowing down the pace in French-flavoured Puducherry (Pondicherry; p1057). Get more fine food in Tamil Nadu's busy capital, Chennai (Madras; p1038), before breaking north to admire the Mughal-era relics of Hyderabad (p937).

It's a long train-ride up the cost to Bhubaneswar (p628), leaping-off point for Puri (p643), site of the famous Rath Yatra chariot festival (p645). Drift north to the legendary Sun Temple at Konark (p649) before one last train-ride northeast to Kolkata (p485).

A slice of the steamy south featuring beaches, cave temples, jungle reserves and some of South India's best and brightest cities. Allow at least two months to soak up the sights, sounds and sensations of the tropical south.

SIKKIM & THE NORTHEAST STATES — One Month

Surprisingly few people explore mountainous Sikkim and the tribal heartland of India's Northeast States. Permits are required, so plan your trip in advance – see p592 and p570. Also be aware of the security risks – see p595.

Obtain a Sikkim permit in Siliguri (p523), or Darjeeling (p530), where you can sample India's most famous teas (p541). Permit in hand, head to Gangtok (p571), the Sikkimese capital, and the surrounding Buddhist monasteries (p577).

Veer to Namchi (p579), for giant statues of Shiva and Padmasambhava, and to Pelling (p582), for Pemayangtse Gompa (p584) and Khangchendzonga views. Consider the week-long trek from Yuksom (p585) to Goecha La (p587). Exit Sikkim via Tashiding (p588), returning to Siliguri for the journey east to Assam.

In Guwahati (p595), the Assamese capital, arrange tours and permits for Arunachal Pradesh, Nagaland, Mizoram, and Manipur. If you can't get a permit, try this loop: from Guwahati, head to Manas (p600) and Kaziranga (p602) National Parks to spot Indian rhinos and other rare wildlife. Detour to sleepy Meghalaya capital, Shillong (p607), and the waterfalls of Cherrapunjee (Sohra; p611). From Agartala (p613), capital of Tripura, head by air or land to Bangladesh (p615).

With the right permits, head from Guwahati to Arunachal Pradesh for the stunning Buddhist monastery at Tawang (p621), or the tribal villages near Ziro (p619). A Nagaland permit opens up the capital Kohima (p617), and fascinating tribal villages around Mon (p618). Manipur permits are rarely granted, but there's a fair chance of eyeing Mizo culture in Mizoram (p622).

This is a journey off the beaten track through the gorgeous hills of Buddhist Sikkim and the rarely visited Northeast, with the chance to get even further from the tourist circuit in tribal Nagaland, Mizoram and Arunachal Pradesh, providing you can obtain the required permits.

THE GREAT HIMALAYAN CIRCUIT

Four to Six Weeks

This rugged mountain odyssey can be started in Srinagar (p353) in Kashmir or Manali (p306) in Himachal Pradesh, depending on the political situation – see p352. Note that the mountain passes are only open from July to October. Acute Mountain Sickness is also a hazard – see p1181.

Assuming things are safe, start off with a houseboat stay in Srinagar (p356) before embarking on the epic journey into the mountains. Start with the bone-shaking ride to Kargil (p388), the dusty gateway to remote Zanskar (p389). By bus or jeep, head south through Rangdum (p389) to the monastery-strewn valley around Padum (p390), then return to Kargil for the coccyx-crunching ride on to Ladakh (p365). Break the journey east at Lamayuru (p387), Alchi (p386) and Basgo (p386), for awesome monastery paintings and sculptures.

On arrival in Leh (p367), take some time to unwind. Consider a meditation course (p373) and visit the local stupas, gompas and palace (p369). Join a tour over the world's highest road pass to the Nubra Valley (p383) and explore the Indus Valley by bus or rented motorcycle, visiting the monastery towns of Stok (p382), Thiksey (p381) and Hemis (p382).

Next, veer south over perilous mountain passes to Keylong (p340), the calm capital of Lahaul. Stroll to local gompas (p340), and travel by bus through parched deserts to Kaza (p342), the capital of Spiti. Obtain a permit for onward travel, then continue east to Dhankar (p344) and Tabo (p344) for more mesmerising Buddhist art.

With permit in hand, you can continue through knee-trembling mountain scenery to Rekong Peo (p295), capital of Kinnaur. Detour north to the pretty village of Kalpa (p296) to shake off the trail dust, then finish the journey with some creature comforts in Shimla (p282) – you've earned it!

A mountain odyssey, crossing over the world's highest motorable passes from Kashmir all the way to Kinnaur in Himachal Pradesh. Even when Kashmir is off-limits, you can travel from Manali to Ladakh and finish the circuit from there.

THE TRIBAL CENTRE

Eight to 10 Weeks

Well off the radar of most travellers, the western plains are full of offbeat sights and fascinating glimpses of tribal India (see p93 for more information). However, security can be a concern in parts of Bihar – see p551 for more advice.

Start in Kolkata (p485), Bengal's bustling cultural capital, before riding the rails north to Ranchi (p566), gateway to little-visited Betla (Palamau) National Park (p567). Head back via Ranchi and Gaya (p562) to famous Bodhgaya (p557), the birthplace of Buddhism. Continue north via the Buddhist ruins at Nalanda (p565) to Bihar's capital, Patna (p552), to stock up on Mithila tribal art (p554).

Travel on to Madhya Pradesh through Varanasi (p425), detouring south past tiger- and leopard-inhabited Bandhavgarh National Park (p711) to Jabalpur (p705), for a boat cruise along the Narmada River gorge (p708). Take a side-trip to Kanha National Park (p709) for another decent chance of spotting tigers.

Next, break east for Bhopal (p682), a surprising city that is rising above its tragic past. From here, you can detour to well-preserved Buddhist ruins at Sanchi (p689) and prehistoric painted caves at Bhimbetka (p688).

Next, trundle southeast to Indore (p698) for detours to the Mughal and Afghan ruins at Mandu (p702), the Hindu temples of Ujjain (p695) and the holy island of Omkareshwar (p700). From Indore, cut back across the state to Jagdalpur (p713) for visits to surrounding Bastar tribal areas.

More tribal visits are possible in nearby Jeypore (p654) in Orissa. For a change of scenery, head to the coast at Gopalpur-on-Sea (p652). Spot sea turtles at Rushikulya (p652) or take your binoculars to the bird-watching paradise of Chilika Lake (p650). Continue north through the capital, Bhubaneswar (p628), to the famous temples at Puri (p643) and Konark (p648). Finally, drift up the coast to Kolkata, with a final detour to animal-packed Similipal National Park (p656).

A looping circuit from Kolkata visiting the rarely seen sights of Bihar, Jharkhand, Madhya Pradesh, Chhattisgarh and Orissa – the tribal heartland of the Indian plains. Count on temples, historic ruins, encounters with tribal culture and glorious national parks.

TAILORED TRIPS

AN INDIAN SAFARI

India is covered with captivating national parks, home to some of the wildest and most exotic creatures on earth, from tigers and lions to elephants and rhinos. Your best chances of spotting wildlife are early in the morning or late in the afternoon, preferably from the back of an elephant – see p90.

Starting from Delhi (p119), bag your first bagh (tiger) at Uttarakhand's Corbett Tiger Reserve (p472), then connect through Jaipur (p165) to Ranthambhore National Park (p197), where deer and tigers cavort among fort and temple ruins. Cross over to Gujarat to see rare khurs (wild ass) at Little Rann Sanctuary (p765) and Asiatic lions at Sasan Gir Wildlife Sanctuary (p746).

In the steamy south, spot gaur (Indian bison) at Karnataka's Bandipur National Park (p903) and track wild elephants in Kerala's Wayanad Wildlife Sanctuary (p1019) and Periyar Wildlife Sanctuary (p988). Elephants tramp the jungles of Tamil Nadu's Mudumalai National Park (p1104).

The jungles of Madhya Pradesh burn bright with tigers, best seen at Pench Tiger Reserve (p708), Kanha National Park (p709), Bandhavgarh National Park (p711) and Panna National Park (p681).

Further east, spot wild elephants and waterfalls at Orissa's Similipal National Park (p656), before taking a boat through the rain-drenched waterways of Sunderbans Tiger Reserve (p517). Wind up your trip with a wildlife-spotting river tour in Assam's Manas National Park (p600) and commune with one-horned Indian rhinos at Kaziranga National Park (p602).

THE BUDDHIST CIRCUIT

The Buddhist (or Lotus) Circuit is a pilgrims' trail in the footsteps of Buddha, connecting the sacred sites in Bihar and Uttar Pradesh where the historical Buddha walked and talked. A logical continuation of this circuit is Buddha's birthplace at Lumbini, an easy detour across the Nepal border from Sunauli (p441).

Begin in Bodhgaya (p557), the most sacred Buddhist site. Mahabodhi Temple (p558) is where Prince Siddhartha Gautama attained enlightenment and became the Buddha over 2500 years ago. Start your own path to enlightenment on a meditation course (p559) before heading to Rajgir (p563), where Buddha gave many sermons about the 'middle way'. Continue north to the ruins of Nalanda (p565), marking the site of a vast and vanished Buddhist university.

At Patna (p552), see sculptures from Buddhist sites at Patna Museum (p554). You can detour here to Vaishali (p556), where Buddha preached his final sermon, and to Kesariya (p557), where he passed his begging bowl to his followers and began his final journey towards his birthplace at Lumbini. He died just short of the border at Kushinagar (p440). Heading here, you can visit Sarnath (p438), where Buddha first preached the middle way after achieving enlightenment.

INDIA FOR THRILL-SEEKERS

India is one big adventure playground for fans of action and adrenalin. Most activities are seasonal, so check the Activities chapter (p90) for the best times to get stuck in.

With the Himalaya looming overhead, it's little wonder that trekkers come here in droves. Start any trekking challenge in style on the high-altitude routes of Zanskar (p391) and Ladakh (p379). Go rafting on the churning Indus River near Leh (p372), then head south to Manali (p310) for more treks plus hot-air balloon rides, paragliding, rafting, rock-climbing, zorbing and skiing (January to March). Zip over to Uttarakhand for yet more excellent rafting and trekking from Rishikesh (p459) and ski and snowboard opportunities at Auli (p470).

For adventure without the mountain chill, head to the west coast. Lonavla (p823) in Maharashtra is a famous paragliding launch pad. Beach resorts in Goa (p854) offer diving and water sports, and more paragliders launch over the ocean at Arambol (p867) and Anjuna (p861). Rafting trips up to Grade IV are possible in Karnataka's Dubare Forest Reserve (p907).

Next, head across the country to Chennai (p1026) to catch a flight to the Andaman Islands (p1110) for India's best scuba diving. There's more adventure north of Kolkata (p485) – arrange rafting trips in Darjeeling (p537) or trek Sikkim's Goecha La (p587) for eye-popping views over Khangchendzonga. Finish with something offbeat – canyoning over living tree bridges near Cherrapunjee (p611) in Meghalaya.

SAND, SEA & SACRED SITES

This route, from Mumbai (p766) to Chennai (p1026), blends some southern temples with the south's most beautiful beaches. To continue the beach theme, tag the sun-soaked Andaman Islands (p1106) to the end of this itinerary.

Start the search for sea and sand at Mumbai's Chowpatty Beach (p777) with a plate of the Maharashtra snack, bhelpuri, overlooking the Arabian Sea. Cruise to the stunning rock-cut temples on Elephanta Island (p797), then travel south by train to beach-blessed Goa (p837). Enjoy the best of the sand at Arambol (p866), Vagator (p863) and Palolem (p875), then continue along the coast to the sacred town of Gokarna (p916). Next, veer inland to the ruined Vijayanagar temples at Hampi (p919) and the Hoysala temples of Belur and Halebid (p909).

Connect through Mangalore (p912) and Kochi (Cochin; p1002) to Kerala's seaside strip. Enjoy serious beach therapy in Varkala (p973) and Kovalam (p969), before jumping the train northeast to the awesome Sri Meenakshi Temple in Madurai (p1082). Continue north through the historic temple towns of Tiruchirappalli (p1074), Thanjavur (p1070) and Chidambaram (p1065) and break the journey at the French-influenced seaside town of Puducherry (p1057).

Continuing north, detour inland to the captivating Arunachaleswar Temple in Tiruvannamalai (p1055), and follow the coast to Mamallapuram (Mahabalipuram; p1044), home to the famous rock-carved Shore Temple (p1045). Finally, finish your journey with a stroll along Chennai's Marina Beach (p1033).

Snapshot

Apart from the cricket, the glittering star-studded world of Bollywood would have to be one of the hottest topics of discussion throughout India. Indeed the most avidly talked about subject in early 2007 was the widely publicised racist slurs that Bollywood star, Shilpa Shetty, copped from some of her fellow (British) housemates while on the UK's reality TV show, Celebrity Big Brother. The ensuing racism debate made front-page headlines in India and limelighted the prolific sense of national pride and identity that has been forged on the subcontinent six decades after the British were booted out.

Also making recent news headlines was the legal challenge to India's antigay law, which has been in place since the mid-19th century. There has been increasing public opposition to this controversial law which, critics purport, blatantly contradicts the government's assertion that India is a fair, tolerant and liberal nation – see p60.

Politics – whether at a national, state or village level – is the most consistently discussed topic on the subcontinent. Middle- and upper-class India also keeps its finger on the pulse of world politics, especially the USA, and there's little reticence when it comes to expressing opinions about world leaders and their respective parties' policies.

In the domestic political arena, when the renascent Congress Party snatched power from the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) in the 2004 elections, the new government, headed by Prime Minister Manmohan Singh, promised a steady economic hand. Singh was, after all, known as the father of Indian economic reform after instigating much of India's revolutionary economic liberalisation in the early 1990s as Finance Minister. However, despite the country boasting one of the world's fastest-growing economies – averaging 8.1% growth in recent years – vast sections of the population have seen little benefit from the boom. Indeed the big challenge for Singh's government is to spread both the burden and bounty of India's economic prosperity. Not an easy task given that the gap between the haves and the have-nots is far from shrinking, and poverty (see p61) is set to spiral upwards if India's population growth rate continues to gallop beyond that of its economic growth.

Despite government initiatives to rein in the ballooning birth rate, overpopulation (see p61) lies at the crux of many of India's most pressing problems. Apart from the pressure that an expanding population is placing on India's already groaning infrastructure, analysts warn that it's just a matter of time before the mounting competition for resources ignites volatile communal conflict – not to mention brings to breaking point an already overburdened healthcare system. Analysts also predict that as the population continues to soar, so too will the number of children from low-income households who leave school in order to scrape together whatever they can to supplement their family's meagre earnings (see p60).

While India has made giant economic strides, the government has attracted scathing criticism for failing to adequately address its AIDS crisis; India now records the planet's highest number of HIV-positive cases (see p59). Another recent health epidemic – primarily among the burgeoning well-to-do middle class – is diabetes. In 2007 India registered 41 million cases, a figure that's expected to swell to a staggering 75 million over the next two decades unless there are more government initiatives to promote healthy lifestyles.

When it comes to the environment, although there's legislation to protect ecosystems, activists cite government lethargy, coupled with corruption down the ranks, for invariably exacerbating environmental degradation (see p85)

History

India's story is one of the grand epics of world history. Throughout thousands of years of great civilisations, invasions, the birth of religions and countless cataclysms, India has time and again proved itself to be, in the words of its first prime minister, Jawaharlal Nehru, 'a bundle of contradictions held together by strong but invisible threads'. Indian history has always been a work-in-progress, a constant process of reinvention and accumulation that can prove elusive for those seeking to grasp its essential essence. And yet, from its myriad upheavals, a vibrant, diverse and thoroughly modern nation has emerged, as enduring as it is dynamic and increasingly well equipped to meet the challenges of the future.

INDUS VALLEY CIVILISATION

The Indus Valley, straddling the modern India–Pakistan border, is the cradle of civilisation on the Indian subcontinent. The first inhabitants of this land were nomadic tribes who cultivated land and kept domestic animals; indeed, it is no leap of the imagination to wonder whether in some parts of rural India, little has changed. Over thousands of years, an urban culture began to emerge from these tribes, particularly from 3500 BC. By 2500 BC large cities were well established, the focal points of what became known as the Harappan culture, which would flourish for more than 1000 years.

Harappa (www.harappa.com) provides an illustrated yet scholarly coverage of everything you need to know about the ancient Indus Valley civilisations, including a link to recent archaeological discoveries.

The great cities of the Mature Harappan period were Moenjodaro and Harappa (both excavated in the 1920s) in present-day Pakistan, and Lothal (p728) near Ahmedabad. Lothal can still be visited and from the precise, carefully laid-out street plan, some sense of this sophisticated 4500-year-old civilisation is still evident. Harappan cities often had a separate acropolis, suggesting a religious function, and the great tank at Moenjodaro may have been used for ritual bathing purposes. The major Harappan cities were also notable for their size – estimates put the population of Moenjodaro as high as 40,000 to 50,000.

By the middle of the 3rd millennium BC the Indus Valley culture was the equal of other great civilisations emerging at the time. The Harappans traded with Mesopotamia, and developed a system of weights and measures and a highly developed art in the form of terracotta and bronze figurines. Recovered relics, including models of bullock carts and jewellery, offer the earliest evidence of a distinctive Indian culture. Indeed, many elements of Harappan culture would later become assimilated into Hinduism: clay figurines found at these sites suggest worship of a Mother goddess (later personified as Kali) and a male three-faced god sitting in the attitude of a yogi (the prehistoric Shiva) attended by four animals. Black stone pillars (associated with phallic worship of Shiva) and animal figures (the most prominent being the humped bull; later Shiva's mount) have also been discovered.

Like so many periods of Indian history, Harappan culture carries a strong element of mystery – the Harappan script has never been deciphered.

EARLY INVASIONS & THE RISE OF RELIGIONS

The Harappan civilisation fell into decline from the beginning of the 2nd millennium BC. Some historians attribute the end of the empire to floods or decreased rainfall, which threatened the Harappans' agricultural base. The more enduring, if contentious, theory is that an Aryan invasion put paid to the Harappans, despite little archaeological proof or written reports in the ancient Indian texts to that effect. As a result, some nationalist historians argue that the Aryans (from a Sanskrit word meaning noble) were in fact the original inhabitants of India and that the invasion theory was actually invented by self-serving foreign conquerors. Others say that the arrival of Aryans was more of a gentle migration that gradually subsumed Harappan culture.

MAP-DRAWING ARYAN-STYLE

While historians dispute the origins of the Aryan presence in northern India, there is little argument that the subsequent Aryan kingdoms adhered to one of history's more curious forms of territorial demarcation. Under the highly formalised ritual of asvamedha (horse sacrifice), a horse was allowed to roam freely, followed by a band of soldiers. If the horse's progress was impeded, the king would fight for the land in question. At the end of the prescribed period, the entire area over which the horse had wandered was taken to be the king's unchallenged territory. The horse was rewarded for its success or failure – which, it didn't matter – by being sacrificed. The system must have worked, because the ritual was still being performed centuries later by dynasties such as the Chalukyas of Badami (p926) to demonstrate the ruler's complete control over his kingdom.

Those who defend the invasion theory believe that from around 1500 BC Aryan tribes from Afghanistan and Central Asia began to filter into northwest India. Despite their military superiority, their progress was gradual, with successive tribes fighting over territory and new arrivals pushing further east into the Ganges plain. Eventually these tribes controlled northern India as far as the Vindhya Hills. Many of the original inhabitants of northern India, the Dravidians, were pushed south.

The Hindu sacred scriptures, the Vedas (see p65), were written during this period of transition (1500–1200 BC) and the caste system became formalised.

As the Aryan tribes spread across the Ganges plain in the late 7th century BC, many were absorbed into 16 major kingdoms, which were, in turn, amalgamated into four large states. Out of these states arose the Nanda dynasty, which came to power in 364 BC, ruling over huge swathes of North India.

During this period, the Indian heartland narrowly avoided two invasions from the west which, if successful, could have significantly altered the path of Indian history. The first was by the Persian king Darius (521–486 BC), who annexed Punjab and Sindh (on either side of the modern India–Pakistan border). Alexander the Great advanced to India from Greece in 326 BC, but his troops refused to go beyond the Beas River in Himachal Pradesh. Alexander turned back without ever extending his power into India itself.

Emperor Ashoka's ability to rule over his empire was assisted by a standing army consisting of 9000 elephants, 30,000 cavalry and 600,000 infantry.

The period is also distinguished by the rise of two of India's most significant religions, Buddhism (p68) and Jainism (p69), which arose around 500 BC. Both questioned the Vedas and condemned the caste system, although, unlike the Buddhists, the Jains never denied their Hindu heritage and their faith never extended beyond India.

AD 319–510

Golden age of the Gupta empire

THE MAURYAN EMPIRE & ITS AFTERMATH

If the Harappan culture was the cradle of Indian civilisation, Chandragupta Maurya was the founder of the first great Indian empire. He came to power in 321 BC, having seized the throne from the Nandas, and he soon expanded the empire to include the Indus Valley previously conquered by Alexander.

From its capital at Pataliputra (modern-day Patna), the Mauryan empire encompassed much of North India and reached as far south as modern-day Karnataka. The Mauryas were capable of securing control over such a vast realm through the use of an efficient bureaucracy, organised tiers of local government and a well-defined social order consisting of a rigid caste system.

According to Megasthenes, an ambassador to the Mauryan court, Pataliputra was 33.8km in circumference, making it the largest city in the world at the time.

The empire reached its peak under emperor Ashoka (see the boxed text, below). Such was Ashoka's power to lead and unite that after his death in 232 BC no-one could be found to hold the disparate elements of the Mauryan empire together. The empire rapidly disintegrated and collapsed altogether in 184 BC.

None of the empires that immediately followed could match the stability or enduring historical legacy of the Mauryans. The Sungas (184–70 BC), Kanvas (72–30 BC), Shakas (from 130 BC) and Kushanas (1st century BC until 1st century AD, and into the 3rd century in a diminished form) all had their turn, with the latter briefly ruling over a massive area of North India and Central Asia.

Despite the multiplicity of ruling powers, this was a period of intense development. Trade with the Roman Empire (overland, and by sea through the southern ports) became substantial during the 1st century AD; there was also overland trade with China.

AN ENLIGHTENED EMPEROR

Apart from the Mughals and then the British many centuries later, no other power controlled more Indian territory than the Mauryan empire. It is therefore fitting that it provided India with one of its most significant historical figures.

Emperor Ashoka's rule was characterised by a period of flourishing art and sculpture, while his reputation as a philosopher-king was enhanced by the rock-hewn edicts he used to both instruct his people and delineate the enormous span of his territory. Some of these moral teachings can be still be seen, particularly the Ashokan edicts at Junagadh in Gujarat (p749).

Ashoka's reign also represented an undoubted historical high point for Buddhism. He embraced the religion in 262 BC, declaring it the state religion and cutting a radical swathe through the spiritual and social body of Hinduism. The extant highlights of Ashokan Buddhist India are visible in Sarnath (p438) in Uttar Pradesh (on the spot where Buddha delivered his first sermon expounding the Noble Eightfold Path, or Middle Way to Enlightenment; see p68) and the stupas that the emperor built at Sanchi (p689) in Madhya Pradesh. Ashoka also sent missions abroad, and he is revered in Sri Lanka because he sent his son and daughter to carry Buddhism to the island.

The long shadow this emperor of the 3rd century BC still casts over India is evident from the fact that Ashoka's standard, which topped many pillars, is now the seal of modern-day India (four lions sitting back-to-back atop an abacus decorated with a frieze and the inscription 'truth alone triumphs') and its national emblem, chosen to reaffirm the ancient commitment to peace and goodwill.

THE GOLDEN AGE OF THE GUPTAS

The empires that followed the Mauryans may have claimed large areas of Indian territory as their own, but many secured only nominal power over their realms. Throughout the subcontinent, small tribes and kingdoms effectively controlled territory and dominated local affairs.

In AD 319 Chandragupta I, the third king of one of these tribes, the little-known Guptas, came to prominence by a fortuitous marriage to the daughter of one of the most powerful tribes in the north, the Liccavis. The Gupta empire grew rapidly and under Chandragupta II (r 375–413) achieved its greatest extent. The Chinese pilgrim Fahsien, visiting India at the time, described a people 'rich and contented', ruled over by enlightened and just kings.

A History of India by Romila Thapar (Volume One) and Percival Spears (Volume Two) is one of the more thorough introductions to Indian history, from 1000 BC to Independent India.

Poetry, literature and the arts flourished, with some of the finest work done at Ajanta (p812), Ellora (p809), Sanchi (p689) and Sarnath (p438). Towards the end of the Gupta period, Hinduism became the dominant religious force and its revival eclipsed Jainism and Buddhism; the latter in particular went into decline and, deprived of Ashoka's patronage, would never again be India's dominant religion.

The invasions of the Huns at the beginning of the 6th century signalled the end of this era, and in 510 the Gupta army was defeated by the Hun leader Toramana. Power in North India again devolved to a number of separate Hindu kingdoms.

THE HINDU SOUTH

Southern India has always laid claim to its own unique history. Insulated by distance from the political developments in the north, a separate set of powerful kingdoms emerged, among them the Shatavahanas (who ruled over central India while the Kushanas held sway in the north), Kalingas and Vakatakas. But it was from the tribal territories on the fertile coastal plains that the greatest southern empires – the Cholas, Pandyas, Chalukyas, Cheras and Pallavas – came into their own.

It is believed that St Thomas the Apostle arrived in Kerala in AD 52, which accounts for the state's sizable Christian population in the otherwise overwhelmingly Hindu south.

The Chalukyas ruled mainly over the Deccan region of central India, although their power occasionally extended further north. With a capital at Badami in modern-day Karnataka, they ruled from 550 to 753 before falling to the Rashtrakutas. An eastern branch of the Chalukyas, with its capital at Kalyani in Karnataka, rose and ruled again from 972 to 1190.

In the far south, the Pallavas pioneered Dravidian architecture with its exuberant, almost baroque, style. The surviving architectural high points of Pallava rule are to be found in the shore temple (p1045) and Five Rathas (p1047) in Mamallapuram (Mahabalipuram), the temples of the erstwhile Pallava capital at Kanchipuram (p1052) and the Rock Fort Temple at Trichy (Tiruchirappalli; p1074).

The south's prosperity was based on long-established trading links with other civilisations, among them the Egyptians and Romans. In return for spices, pearls, ivory and silk, the Indians received Roman gold. Indian merchants also extended their influence to Southeast Asia. In 850 the Cholas rose to power and superseded the Pallavas. They soon set about turning the south's far-reaching trade influence into territorial conquest. Under the reign of Raja Raja Chola I (985–1014) they controlled almost the whole of South India, the Deccan plateau, Sri Lanka, parts of the Malay peninsula and the Sumatran-based Srivijaya kingdom.

Not all of their attention was focused overseas, however, and the Cholas left behind some of the finest examples of Dravidian architecture, most notably the sublime Brihadishwara Temple in Thanjavur (p1071) and Chidambaram's stunning Nataraja Temple (p1065). Both Thanjavur and Chidambaram served as Chola capitals.

Throughout, Hinduism remained the bedrock of South Indian culture.

India: A History by John Keay is an astute and readable account of subcontinental history spanning from the Harappan civilisation to Indian Independence.

THE MUSLIM NORTH

While South India guarded its resolutely Hindu character, North India was convulsed by Muslim armies invading from the northwest.

In the vanguard of Islamic expansion was Mahmud of Ghazni. Today, Ghazni is a nondescript little town between Kabul and Kandahar in Afghanistan. But in the early years of the 11th century, Mahmud turned it into one of the world's most glorious capital cities, which he funded by plundering his neighbours' territories. From 1001 to 1025 Mahmud conducted 17 raids into India, most infamously on the famous Shiva temple at Somnath (p745) in Gujarat. The Hindu force of 70,000 died trying to defend the temple, which eventually fell in early 1026. In the aftermath of his victory, Mahmud, not particularly intent on acquiring new territory at this stage, transported a massive haul of gold and other booty back to his capital. These raids effectively shattered the balance of power in North India, allowing subsequent invaders to claim the territory for themselves.

Following Mahmud's death in 1033, Ghazni was seized by the Seljuqs and then fell to the Ghurs of western Afghanistan, who similarly had their eyes on the great Indian prize. The Ghur style of warfare was brutal – the Ghur general, Ala-ud-din, was known as 'Burner of the World'.

In 1191 Mohammed of Ghur advanced into India. Although defeated in a major battle against a confederacy of Hindu rulers, he returned the following year and routed his enemies. One of his generals, Qutb-ud-din, captured Delhi and was appointed governor; it was during his reign that the great Delhi landmark, the Qutb Minar complex (p161), was built. A separate Islamic empire was established in Bengal and within a short time almost the whole of North India was under Muslim control.

Following Mohammed's death in 1206, Qutb-ud-din became the first sultan of Delhi. His successor, Iltutmish, brought Bengal back under central control and defended the empire from an attempted Mongol invasion. Ala-ud-din Khilji came to power in 1296 and pushed the borders of the empire inexorably south, while simultaneously fending off further attacks by the Mongols.

NORTH MEETS SOUTH

Ala-ud-din died in 1320, and Mohammed Tughlaq ascended the throne in 1324. In 1328 Tughlaq took the southern strongholds of the Hoysala empire, which had centres at Belur, Halebid and Somnathpur. India was Tughlaq's for the taking.

However, while the empire of the pre-Mughal Muslims would achieve its greatest extent under Tughlaq's rule, his overreaching ambition also sowed the seeds of its disintegration. Unlike his forebears (including great rulers such as Ashoka), Tughlaq dreamed not only of extending his indirect influence over South India, but of controlling it directly as part of his empire.

A History of South India from Prehistoric Times to the Fall of Vijayanagar by Nilakanta Sastri is arguably the most comprehensive (if heavy-going) history of this region.

After a series of successful campaigns Tughlaq decided to move the capital from Delhi to a more central location. The new capital was called Daulatabad and was near Aurangabad in Maharashtra. Not a man of half measures, Tughlaq sought to populate the new capital by force-marching the entire population of Delhi 1100km south, resulting in great loss of life. However, he soon realised that this left the north undefended and so the entire capital was moved north again. The superb hilltop fortress of Daulatabad (p808) stands as the last surviving monument to his megalomaniac vision.

The days of the Ghur empire were numbered. The last of the great sultans of Delhi, Firoz Shah, died in 1388 and the fate of the sultanate was sealed when Tamerlane (Timur) made a devastating raid from Samarkand (in Central Asia) into India in 1398. Tamerlane's sacking of Delhi was truly merciless; some accounts say his soldiers slaughtered every Hindu inhabitant.

After Tughlaq's withdrawal from the south, several splinter kingdoms arose. The two most significant were the Islamic Bahmani sultanate, which emerged in 1345 with its capital at Gulbarga, and later Bidar (p933), and the Hindu Vijayanagar empire, founded in 1336 with its capital at Hampi (p919). The battles between the two were among the bloodiest communal violence in Indian history and ultimately resolved nothing in the two centuries before the Mughals ushered in a more enlightened age.

THE STRUGGLE FOR THE SOUL OF INDIA

Founded as an alliance of Hindu kingdoms banding together to counter the threat from the Muslims, the Vijayanagar empire rapidly grew into one of India's wealthiest and greatest Hindu empires. Under the rule of Bukka I (c 1343–79), the majority of South India was brought under its control.

The Vijayanagans and the Bahmani sultanate, which was also based in South India, were evenly matched. The Vijayanagar armies occasionally got the upper hand, but generally the Bahmanis inflicted the worst defeats. The atrocities committed by both sides almost defy belief. In 1366 Bukka I responded to a perceived slight by capturing the Muslim stronghold of Mudkal and slaughtering every inhabitant bar one, who managed to escape and carry news of the attack to Mohammad Shah, the sultan. Mohammad swore that he would not rest until he had killed 100,000 Hindus. Instead, according to the Muslim historian Firishtah, 500,000 'infidels' were killed in the ensuing campaign.

Somehow, Vijayanagar survived. In 1482, following much intrigue and plotting in the royal court, the Bahmani sultanate disintegrated and five separate kingdoms, based on the major cities – Berar, Ahmednagar, Bijapur, Golconda and Ahmedabad – were formed. Of these, Bijapur (p930) and Ahmedabad (Amdavad; p717) still bear exceptional traces of this period of Islamic rule. With little realistic opposition from the north, the Hindu empire enjoyed a golden age of almost supreme power in the south. In 1520 the Hindu king Krishnadevaraya even took Bijapur.

Like Bahmani, however, Vijayanagar's fault lines were soon laid bare. A series of uprisings divided the kingdom fatally, just at a time when the Islamic sultanates were beginning to form a new alliance. In 1565 a Muslim coalition routed the Hindu armies at the Battle of Talikota. Hampi was destroyed. Although the last of the Vijayanagar line escaped and the dynasty limped on for several years, real power passed to local Muslim rulers or Hindu chiefs once loyal to the Vijayanagar kings. One of India's grisliest periods came to an end when the Bahmani kingdoms fell to the Mughals.

THE MUGHALS

Even as Vijayanagar was experiencing its last days, the next great Indian empire was being founded. The Mughal empire was massive, and covered, at its height, almost the entire subcontinent. Its significance, however, lay not only in its size. Mughal emperors presided over a golden age of arts and literature and had a passion for building that resulted in some of the finest architecture in India. In particular, Shah Jahan's sublime Taj Mahal (p399) ranks as one of the wonders of the world.

White Mughals by William Dalrymple tells the true story of an East India Company soldier who married an Indian Muslim princess, a tragic love story interwoven with harem politics, intrigue and espionage.

The founder of the Mughal line, Babur (r 1526–30), was a descendant of both Genghis Khan and Tamerlane. In 1525, armed with this formidable lineage, he marched into Punjab from his capital at Kabul. With technological superiority brought by firearms, and consummate skill in simultaneously employing artillery and cavalry, Babur defeated the numerically superior armies of the sultan of Delhi at the Battle of Panipat in 1526.

Despite this initial success, Babur's son, Humayun (r 1530–56) was defeated by a powerful ruler of eastern India, Sher Shah, in 1539 and forced to withdraw to Iran. Following Sher Shah's death in 1545, Humayun returned to claim his kingdom, eventually conquering Delhi in 1555. He died the following year and was succeeded by his young son Akbar (r 1556–1605) who, during his 49-year reign, managed to extend and consolidate the empire until he ruled over a mammoth area.

True to his name, Akbar (which means 'great' in Arabic) was probably the greatest of the Mughals, for he not only had the military ability required of a ruler at that time, but was also a just and wise ruler and a man of culture. He saw, as previous Muslim rulers had not, that the number of Hindus in India was too great to subjugate. Although Akbar was no saint – reports of massacres of Hindus at Panipat and Chitrod tarnish his legacy – he remains known for integrating Hindus into his empire and skilfully using them as advisers, generals and administrators. Akbar also had a deep interest in religious matters, and spent many hours in discussion with religious experts of all persuasions, including Christians and Parsis.

Akbar, the great Mughal emperor, formulated a religion, Deen Ilahi, which combined the favoured parts of all the religions he had studied.

Jehangir (r 1605–27) ascended to the throne following Akbar's death. Despite several challenges to the authority of Jehangir himself, the empire remained more or less intact. In periods of stability Jehangir took the opportunity to spend time in his beloved Kashmir, eventually dying en route there in 1627. He was succeeded by his son, Shah Jahan (r 1627–58), who secured his position as emperor by executing all male relatives who stood in his way. During his reign, some of the most vivid and permanent reminders of the Mughals' glory were constructed; in addition to the Taj Mahal, he also oversaw the construction of the mighty Red Fort in Delhi (p127) and converted the Agra Fort (p400) into a palace that would later become his prison.

The last of the great Mughals, Aurangzeb (r 1658–1707), imprisoned his father (Shah Jahan) and succeeded to the throne after a two-year struggle against his brothers. Aurangzeb devoted his resources to extending the empire's boundaries, and thus fell into much the same trap as that of Mohammed Tughlaq some 300 years earlier. He, too, tried moving his capital south (to Aurangabad) and imposed heavy taxes to fund his military. A combination of decaying court life and dissatisfaction among the Hindu population at inflated taxes and religious intolerance weakened the Mughal grip.

The empire was also facing serious challenges from the Marathas in central India and, more significantly, the British in Bengal. With Aurangzeb's death in 1707, the empire's fortunes rapidly declined, and Delhi was sacked by Persia's Nadir Shah in 1739. Mughal 'emperors' continued to rule right up until the Indian Uprising in 1857, but they were emperors without an empire.

THE RAJPUTS & THE MARATHAS

A Princess Remembers by Gayatri Devi and Santha Rama Rau is the captivating memoir of the former maharani of Jaipur, the glamorous Gayatri Devi, born in 1919.

Throughout the Mughal period, there remained strong Hindu powers, most notably the Rajputs. Centred in Rajasthan, the Rajputs were a proud warrior caste with a passionate belief in the dictates of chivalry, both in battle and in state affairs. The Rajputs opposed every foreign incursion into their territory, but were never united or adequately organised to deal with stronger forces on a long-term basis. When they weren't battling foreign oppression, they squandered their energies fighting each other. This eventually led to their territories becoming vassal states of the Mughal empire. Their prowess in battle, however, was acknowledged, and some of the best military men in the Mughal emperors' armies were Rajputs.

The Marathas were less picaresque but ultimately more effective. They first rose to prominence under their great leader Shivaji, who gathered popular support by championing the Hindu cause against the Muslim rulers. Between 1646 and 1680 Shivaji performed heroic acts in confronting the Mughals across most of central India. At one time, Shivaji was captured by the Mughals and taken to Agra but, naturally, he managed to escape and continued his adventures. Tales of his larger-than-life exploits are still popular with wandering storytellers today. He is a particular hero in Maharashtra, where many of his wildest adventures took place. He is also revered for the fact that, as a lower-caste Shudra, he showed that great leaders do not have to be of the Kshatriya (soldier or administrator) caste.

The Proudest Day – India's Long Road to Independence by Anthony Read and David Fisher is an engaging account of India's pre-Independence period.

Shivaji's son was captured, blinded and executed by Aurangzeb. His grandson was not made of the same sturdy stuff, so the Maratha empire continued under the Peshwas, hereditary government ministers who became the real rulers. They gradually took over more of the weakening Mughal empire's powers, first by supplying troops and then actually taking control of Mughal land.

The expansion of Maratha power came to an abrupt halt in 1761 at Panipat. In the town where Babur had won the battle that established the Mughal empire more than 200 years earlier, the Marathas were defeated by Ahmad Shah Durani from Afghanistan. Maratha expansion to the west was halted, and although they consolidated their control over central India and the region known as Malwa, they were to fall to India's final imperial power, the British.

THE RISE OF EUROPEAN POWER

The British were not the first European power to arrive in India, nor were they the last to leave – both of those 'honours' go to the Portuguese. In 1498 Vasco da Gama arrived on the coast of modern-day Kerala, having sailed around the Cape of Good Hope. Pioneering this route gave the Portuguese a century of monopolisation over Indian and far-Eastern trade with Europe. In 1510 they captured Goa, followed by Diu in 1531, two enclaves the Portuguese controlled until 1961. In its heyday, the trade flowing through 'Golden Goa' was said to rival that passing through Lisbon. In the long term, however, the Portuguese did not have the resources to maintain a worldwide empire and they were quickly eclipsed and isolated after the arrival of the British and French.

In 1600 Queen Elizabeth I granted a charter to a London trading company that gave it a monopoly on British trade with India. In 1613 representatives of the East India Company established their first trading post at Surat in Gujarat. Further British trading posts, which were administered and governed by representatives of the company, were established at Madras (Chennai) in 1640, Bengal in 1651 and Bombay (Mumbai) in 1668. Strange as it now seems, for nearly 250 years a commercial trading company and not the British government 'ruled' over British India.

Kumaon and Shimla were originally part of Nepal but were ceded to Britain after the battles of 1814 (in which the Gurkhas initially defeated the British, establishing themselves in legend).

By 1672 the French had established themselves at Pondicherry (Puducherry; p1057), an enclave they held even after the British departed and where unmistakable architectural traces of French elegance remain. The stage was set for more than a century of rivalry between the British and French for control of Indian trade. At one stage, under the guidance of a handful of talented and experienced commanders, the French appeared to hold the upper hand. In 1746 they took Madras (only to hand it back in 1749) and their success in placing their favoured candidate on the throne as Nizam of Hyderabad augured well for the future. But serious French aspirations effectively ended in 1750 when the directors of the French East India Company decided that their representatives were playing too much politics and doing too little trading. Key representatives were sacked and a settlement designed to end all ongoing political disputes was made with the British. Although the French company's profits may have risen in the short term, the decision effectively removed France as a serious influence on the subcontinent.

In 1909 the so-called Morley-Minto reforms provided for limited Indian participation in government and introduced separate electorates for the country's different religious communities.

BRITISH INDIA

By the early 19th century, India was effectively under British control (British Raj), although there remained a patchwork of states, many nominally independent and governed by their own rulers, the maharajas (or similarly titled princes) and nawabs. While these 'princely states' administered their own territories, a system of central government was developed. British bureaucratic models were replicated in the Indian government and civil service – a legacy that still exists. From 1784 onwards, the British government in London began to take a more direct role in supervising affairs in India, although the territory was still notionally administered by the East India Company until 1858.

Trade and profit continued to be the main focus of British rule in India, resulting in far-reaching changes. Iron and coal mining were developed and tea, coffee and cotton became key crops. A start was made on the vast rail network that is still in use today, irrigation projects were undertaken and the zamindar (landowner) system was encouraged. These absentee landlords eased the burden of administration and tax collection for the British, but contributed to the development of an impoverished and landless peasantry.

Plain Tales from the Raj by Charles Allen (ed) is a fascinating series of interviews with people who played a role in British India on both sides of the table.

The British also imposed English as the local language of administration. For them, this was critical in a country with so many different languages, but it also kept the new rulers at arm's length from the Indian populace.

You've probably seen Gandhi, the film starring Ben Kingsley and 300,000 extras, but watch it again because few movies capture the grand canvas that is India in tracing the country's path to independence.

THE ROAD TO INDEPENDENCE

The desire among many Indians to be free from foreign rule remained. Opposition to the British began to increase at the turn of the 20th century, spearheaded by the Indian National Congress, the country's oldest political party, also known as the Congress Party and Congress (I).

It met for the first time in 1885 and soon began to push for participation in the government of India. A highly unpopular attempt by the British to partition Bengal in 1905 resulted in mass demonstrations and brought to light Hindu opposition to the division; the Muslim community formed its own league and campaigned for protected rights in any future political settlement. As pressure rose, a split emerged in Hindu circles between moderates and radicals, the latter resorting to violence to publicise their aims.

With the outbreak of WWI, the political situation eased. India contributed hugely to the war (more than one million Indian volunteers were enlisted and sent overseas, suffering more than 100,000 casualties). The contribution was sanctioned by Congress leaders, largely on the expectation that it would be rewarded after the war was over. No such rewards transpired and

BRITAIN'S SURGE TO POWER

The transformation of the British from traders to governors began almost by accident. Having been granted a licence to trade in Bengal by the Mughals, and following the establishment of a new trading post at Calcutta (Kolkata) in 1690, business began to expand rapidly. Under the apprehensive gaze of the nawab (local ruler), British trading activities became extensive and the 'factories' took on an increasingly permanent (and fortified) appearance.

Eventually the nawab decided that British power had grown far enough. In June 1756 he attacked Calcutta and, having taken the city, locked his British prisoners in a tiny cell. The space was so cramped and airless that many were dead by the following morning. The cell infamously became known as the 'Black Hole of Calcutta'.

Six months later, Robert Clive, an employee in the military service of the East India Company, led an expedition to retake Calcutta and entered into an agreement with one of the nawab's generals to overthrow the nawab himself. This he did in June 1757 at the Battle of Plassey (now called Palashi) and the general who had assisted him was placed on the throne. During the period that followed, with the British effectively in control of Bengal, the company's agents engaged in a period of unbridled profiteering. When a subsequent nawab finally took up arms to protect his own interests, he was defeated at the Battle of Baksar in 1764, a victory that confirmed the British as the paramount power in east India.

In 1771 Warren Hastings was made governor in Bengal. During his tenure the company greatly expanded its control. His astute statesmanship was aided by the fact that India at this time was experiencing a power vacuum created by the disintegration of the Mughal empire. The Marathas (p46), the only real Indian power to step into this gap, were divided among themselves. Hastings concluded a series of treaties with local rulers, including one with the main Maratha leader.

In the south, where Mughal influence had never been great, the picture was confused by the strong British–French rivalry, and one ruler was played off against another. This was never clearer than in the series of Mysore wars where Hyder Ali and his son, Tipu Sultan, waged a brave and determined campaign against the British. In the Fourth Mysore War (1789–99), Tipu Sultan was killed at Srirangapatnam and British power took another step forward. The long-running struggle with the Marathas was concluded in 1803, leaving only Punjab (held by the Sikhs) outside British control. Punjab finally fell in 1849 after the two Sikh Wars (1845–46 and 1848–49).

disillusion was soon to follow. Disturbances were particularly persistent in Punjab and, in April 1919, following riots in Amritsar, a British army contingent was sent to quell the unrest. Under direct orders of the officer in charge they ruthlessly fired into a crowd of unarmed protesters attending a meeting, killing more than 1000 people. News of the massacre spread rapidly throughout India, turning huge numbers of otherwise apolitical Indians into Congress supporters.

At this time, the Congress movement found a new leader in Mohandas Gandhi (see the boxed text, p51). Not everyone involved in the struggle agreed with or followed Gandhi's policy of nonviolence, yet the Congress Party and Gandhi remained at the forefront of the push for independence.

As political power-sharing began to look increasingly likely, and the mass movement led by Gandhi gained momentum, the Muslim reaction was to consider its own immediate future. The large Muslim minority had realised that an independent India would be dominated by Hindus and, despite Gandhi's fair-minded approach, others in the Congress Party would perhaps not be so willing to share power. By the 1930s Muslims were raising the possibility of a separate Islamic state.

Political events were partially disrupted by WWII when large numbers of Congress supporters were jailed to prevent disruption to the war effort.

The Indian Mutiny by Saul David is a measured attempt to get behind the rhetoric of one of India's most controversial episodes, the Indian Uprising of 1857.

THE FIRST WAR OF INDEPENDENCE: THE INDIAN UPRISING

In 1857, half a century after having established firm control of India, the British suffered a serious setback. To this day, the causes of the Uprising (known at the time as the Indian Mutiny and subsequently labelled by nationalist historians as a War of Independence) are the subject of debate. The key factors included the influx of cheap goods, such as textiles, from Britain that destroyed many livelihoods; the dispossession of territories from many rulers; and taxes imposed on landowners.

The incident that is popularly held to have sparked the Indian Uprising, however, took place at an army barracks in Meerut in Uttar Pradesh on 10 May 1857. A rumour leaked out that a new type of bullet was greased with what Hindus claimed was cow fat, while Muslims maintained that it came from pigs; pigs are considered unclean to Muslims, and cows are sacred to Hindus. Since loading a rifle involved biting the end off the waxed cartridge, these rumours provoked considerable unrest.

In Meerut, the situation was handled with a singular lack of judgment. The commanding officer lined up his soldiers and ordered them to bite off the ends of their issued bullets. Those who refused were immediately marched off to prison. The following morning, the soldiers of the garrison rebelled, shot their officers and marched to Delhi. Of the 74 Indian battalions of the Bengal army, seven (one of them Gurkhas) remained loyal, 20 were disarmed and the other 47 mutinied. The soldiers and peasants rallied around the ageing Great Mughal in Delhi, but there was never any clear idea of what they hoped to achieve. They held Delhi for four months and besieged the British Residency in Lucknow for five months before they were finally suppressed and the local nawab deposed. The incident left festering scars on both sides.

Almost immediately the East India Company was wound up and direct control of the country was assumed by the British government, which announced its support for the existing rulers of the princely states, claiming they would not interfere in local matters as long as the states remained loyal to the British.

INDEPENDENCE & THE PARTITION OF INDIA

The Labour Party victory in the British elections in July 1945 dramatically altered the political landscape. For the first time, Indian independence was accepted as a legitimate goal. This new goodwill did not, however, translate into any new wisdom as to how to reconcile the divergent wishes of the two major Indian parties. Mohammed Ali Jinnah, the leader of the Muslim League, championed a separate Islamic state, while the Congress Party, led by Jawaharlal Nehru, campaigned for an independent greater India.

India's Struggle for Independence by Bipan Chandra expertly chronicles the history of India from 1857 to 1947.

In early 1946 a British mission failed to bring the two sides together and the country slid closer towards civil war. A 'Direct Action Day', called by the Muslim League in August 1946, led to the slaughter of Hindus in Calcutta, which prompted reprisals against Muslims. In February 1947 the nervous British government made the momentous initial decision that independence would come by June 1948. In the meantime, the viceroy, Lord Wavell, was replaced by Lord Louis Mountbatten.

The new viceroy implored the rival factions to agree upon a united India, but to no avail. A decision was made to divide the country, with Gandhi the only staunch opponent. Faced with increasing civil violence, Mountbatten made the precipitous decision to bring forward Independence to 15 August 1947.

The Nehrus and the Gandhis is Tariq Ali's astute portrait-history of these families and the India over which they cast their long shadow.

The decision to divide the country into separate Hindu and Muslim territories was immensely tricky – indeed the question of where the dividing line should actually be drawn proved almost impossible. Some areas were clearly Hindu or Muslim, but others had evenly mixed populations, and there were isolated 'islands' of communities in areas predominantly settled by other religions. Moreover, the two overwhelmingly Muslim regions were on opposite sides of the country and, therefore, Pakistan would inevitably have an eastern and western half divided by a hostile India. The instability of this arrangement was self-evident, but it was to be 25 years before the predestined split finally came and East Pakistan became Bangladesh.

An independent British referee was given the odious task of drawing the borders, knowing full well that the effects would be catastrophic for countless people. The decisions were fraught with impossible dilemmas. Calcutta, with its Hindu majority, port facilities and jute mills, was divided from East Bengal, which had a Muslim majority, large-scale jute production, no mills and no port facilities. One million Bengalis became refugees in the mass movement across the new border.

The problem was far worse in Punjab, where intercommunity antagonisms were already running at fever pitch. Punjab, one of the most fertile and affluent regions of the country, had large Muslim, Hindu and Sikh communities. The Sikhs had already campaigned unsuccessfully for their own state and now saw their homeland divided down the middle. The new border ran straight between Punjab's two major cities – Lahore and Amritsar. Prior to Independence, Lahore's population of 1.2 million included approximately 500,000 Hindus and 100,000 Sikhs. When the dust had finally settled, just 1000 Hindus and Sikhs remained.

Mahatma Gandhi argued that the leader of the Muslim League, Mohammed Ali Jinnah, should lead a united India, if that would prevent Partition.

It was clear that Punjab contained all the ingredients for an epic disaster, but the resulting bloodshed was far worse than anticipated. Huge population exchanges took place. Trains full of Muslims, fleeing westward, were held up and slaughtered by Hindu and Sikh mobs. Hindus and Sikhs fleeing to the

MAHATMA GANDHI

One of the great figures of the 20th century, Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi was born on 2 October 1869 in Porbandar, Gujarat, where his father was chief minister. After studying in London (1888–91), he worked as a barrister in South Africa. Here, the young Gandhi became politicised, railing against the discrimination he encountered. He soon became the spokesman for the Indian community and championed equality for all.

Gandhi returned to India in 1915 with the doctrine of ahimsa (nonviolence) central to his political plans, and committed to a simple and disciplined lifestyle. He set up the Sabarmati Ashram in Ahmedabad, which was innovative for its admission of Untouchables.

Within a year, Gandhi had won his first victory, defending farmers in Bihar from exploitation. This was when he first received the title 'Mahatma' (Great Soul) from an admirer. The passage of the discriminatory Rowlatt Acts (which allowed certain political cases to be tried without juries) in 1919 spurred him to further action and he organised a national protest. In the days that followed this hartal (strike), feelings ran high throughout the country. After the massacre of unarmed protesters in Amritsar (p48), a deeply shocked Gandhi immediately called off the movement.

By 1920 Gandhi was a key figure in the Indian National Congress, and he coordinated a national campaign of noncooperation or satyagraha (passive resistance) to British rule, with the effect of raising nationalist feeling while earning the lasting enmity of the British. In early 1930, Gandhi captured the imagination of the country, and the world, when he led a march of several thousand followers from Ahmedabad to Dandi on the coast of Gujarat. On arrival, Gandhi ceremoniously made salt by evaporating sea water, thus publicly defying the much-hated salt tax; not for the first time, he was imprisoned. Released in 1931 to represent the Indian National Congress at the second Round Table Conference in London, he won the hearts of the British people but failed to gain any real concessions from the government.

Jailed again on his return to India, Gandhi immediately began a hunger strike, aimed at forcing his fellow Indians to accept the rights of the Untouchables. Gandhi's resoluteness, and widespread apprehension throughout the country, forced an agreement, but not until Gandhi was on the verge of death.

Disillusioned with politics and convinced that the Congress leaders were ignoring his guidance, he resigned his parliamentary seat in 1934 and devoted himself to rural education.

He returned spectacularly to the fray in 1942 with the Quit India campaign, in which he urged the British to leave India immediately. His actions were deemed subversive and he and most of the Congress leadership were imprisoned.

In the frantic bargaining that followed the end of the war, Gandhi was largely excluded and watched helplessly as plans were made to partition the country – a tragedy in his eyes. He toured the trouble spots, using his influence to calm intercommunity tensions and promote peace.

Gandhi stood almost alone in urging tolerance and the preservation of a single India, and his work on behalf of members of all communities inevitably drew resentment from some Hindu hardliners. On his way to a prayer meeting in Delhi on 30 January 1948, he was assassinated by a Hindu zealot.

India is strewn with Gandhi landmarks, which can still be visited. There's a memorial in Delhi at the site where he was assassinated, known as Gandhi Smriti (p130) as well as the Sabarmati Ashram (p722) in Ahmedabad and Delhi's Raj Ghat (p129), the site of his cremation. Other sites marking significant periods of the Mahatma's life are the Kirti Mandir (p752) in Porbandar; the Kaba Gandhi No Delo (p758) in Rajkot; Mani Bhavan (p778) in Mumbai (Bombay); the Gandhi National Museum (p828) in Pune; the Sevagram Ashram (p817) in Maharashtra; the Gandhi Memorial Museum (p1083) in Madurai; and a memorial (p1087) in Kanyakumari.

east suffered the same fate. The army that was sent to maintain order proved totally inadequate and, at times, all too ready to join the sectarian carnage. By the time the Punjab chaos had run its course, more than 10 million people had changed sides and at least 500,000 had been killed.

The Autobiography of an Unknown Indian by Nirad C Chaudhuri simultaneously chronicles the life of an ordinary Indian and paints a portrait of his country against the backdrop of an at-times-confusing history.

INDEPENDENT INDIA

Jawaharlal Nehru, independent India's first prime minister, tried to steer India towards a policy of nonalignment, balancing cordial relations with Britain and Commonwealth membership with moves towards the former USSR. The latter was due partly to conflicts with China and US support for its archenemy Pakistan.

The 1960s and 1970s were tumultuous times for India. A border war with China in 1962, in what was then known as the North-East Frontier Area (NEFA; now the Northeast States) and Ladakh, resulted in the loss of Aksai Chin (Ladakh) and smaller NEFA areas. India continues to dispute sovereignty. Wars with Pakistan in 1965 (over Kashmir) and 1971 (over Bangladesh) also contributed to a sense among many Indians of having enemies on all sides.

In the midst of it all, the hugely popular Nehru died in 1964 and his daughter Indira Gandhi (no relation to Mahatma Gandhi) was elected as prime minister in 1966.

In India's first post-Independence elections in 1951–52, the Congress Party won 364 of 489 seats but took just 45% of the popular vote.

Indira Gandhi, like Nehru before her, loomed large over the country she governed. Unlike Nehru, however, she was always a profoundly controversial figure whose historical legacy remains hotly disputed.

In 1975, facing serious opposition and unrest, she declared a state of emergency (which later became known as the Emergency). Freed of parliamentary constraints, Gandhi was able to boost the economy, control inflation remarkably well and decisively increase efficiency. On the negative side, political opponents often found themselves in prison, India's judicial system was turned into a puppet theatre and the press was fettered.

Blind to the impact of her reforms, Gandhi was convinced that India was on her side. Her government was bundled out of office in the 1977 elections in favour of the Janata People's Party (JPP). The JPP founder, Jaya Prakash Narayan, 'JP', was an ageing Gandhian socialist who died soon after but is widely credited with having safeguarded Indian democracy through his moral stature and courage to stand up to Congress' authoritarian and increasingly corrupt rule.

Once it was victorious, it quickly became obvious that Janata had no other cohesive policies, nor any leader of Narayan's stature. Its leader, Morarji Desai, proved unable to come to grips with the country's problems. With inflation soaring, unrest rising and the economy faltering, Janata fell apart in late 1979. The 1980 election brought Indira Gandhi back to power with a larger majority than ever before.

CONTINUITY IN CONGRESS

Dependent upon a democracy that she ultimately resented, Indira Gandhi grappled unsuccessfully with communal unrest in several areas, violent attacks on Dalits (the Scheduled Caste or Untouchables), numerous cases of police brutality and corruption, and the upheavals in the northeast and Punjab. In 1984, following a very ill-considered decision to send in the Indian army to flush out armed Sikh separatists (demanding a separate Sikh state to be called Khalistan) from Amritsar's Golden Temple, Indira Gandhi was assassinated by her Sikh bodyguards. Her heavy-handed storming of the Sikhs' holiest temple was catastrophic and sparked brutal Hindu–Sikh riots that left more than 3000 people dead (mostly Sikhs who had been lynched). The quest for Khalistan has since been quashed.

Indira Gandhi's son Rajiv, a former pilot, became the next prime minister, with Congress winning in a landslide in 1984. However, after a brief golden reign, he was dragged down by corruption scandals and the inability to quell communal unrest, particularly in Punjab. In 1991 he, too, was assassinated in Tamil Nadu by a supporter of the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE; a Sri Lankan armed separatist group).

Political Resources – India (www.politicalresources.net/India.htm) contains extensive links to the major players and political parties in India.

Narasimha Rao assumed the by-now-poisoned chalice that was leadership of the Congress Party and led it to victory at the polls in 1991. In 1992 the economy was given an enormous boost after the finance minister, Manmohan Singh, took the momentous step of partially floating the rupee against a basket of 'hard' currencies. State subsidies were phased out and the once-moribund economy was also opened up, tentatively at first, to foreign investment, with multinationals drawn by an enormous pool of educated professionals and relatively low wages. The greatest exemplifier of this was India's emergence as a leading player in the world software industry (see p62).

A rapidly improving economy notwithstanding, the Rao government found itself mired in corruption scandals and failed to quell rising communal tension. It stumbled on until 1996, but was a shadow of the Congress Party governments that had guided India for most of its years as an independent country.

In 1997 KR Narayanan became India's president, the first member of the lowest Untouchable Hindu caste to hold the position.

After losing the 1996 election, the Congress Party eventually swept back to power in 2004 under the leadership of another Gandhi – Sonia, the Italian-born wife of the late Rajiv Gandhi. The Bharatiya Janata Party's (BJP) planned national agitation campaign against the foreign origins of the Italian-born Congress leader was subverted by Sonia Gandhi's unexpected but widely lauded decision to step aside. The Congress Party's highly respected former finance minister, Manmohan Singh, was sworn in as prime minister.

RISING COMMUNAL TENSION

The defining moment for India in the 1990s came on 6 December 1992 when Hindu zealots destroyed a mosque, the Babri Masjid, in Ayodhya (revered by Hindus as the birthplace of Rama; p424) in Uttar Pradesh. Claiming the site as the former location of a Rama temple, the zealots used Ayodhya as an incendiary symbol for their call to 'return' India to its Hindu roots. The Hindu-revivalist BJP, which had become the main opposition party at the 1991 elections, egged on those responsible for the mosque's destruction. Rioting flared across the north, leaving thousands dead; 257 people were killed and an estimated 1100 were wounded after a series of bomb blasts in Mumbai alone.

From 1989 to 2007, it's estimated that at least 70,000 people were killed during the conflict in Kashmir.

After the 1996 national elections, the BJP emerged as the largest party but only governed for two weeks as secular parties banded together to defeat its attempts to build a viable coalition. However, with the upsurge of Hindu nationalism and the disarray within the ranks of the Congress Party, momentum was with the BJP. It won the elections in 1998 and again in 1999, thereby becoming the first nonsecular party to hold national power in India.

THE KASHMIR CONFLICT

Kashmir is the most enduring symbol of the turbulent partition of India. In the lead up to Independence, the delicate task of drawing the India–Pakistan border was complicated by the fact that the 'princely states' in British India were nominally independent. As part of the settlement process, local rulers were asked which country they wished to belong to. Kashmir was a predominantly Muslim state with a Hindu maharaja, Hari Singh, who tried to delay his decision. A ragtag Pashtun (Pakistani) army crossed the border, intent on racing to Srinagar and annexing Kashmir for Pakistan. In the face of this advance, the maharaja panicked and requested armed assistance from India. The Indian army arrived in time to prevent the fall of Srinagar, and the maharaja signed the Instrument of Accession, tying Kashmir to India, in October 1947. The legality of the document was immediately disputed by Pakistan and the two nations went to war, just two months after Independence.

In 1948 the fledgling UN Security Council called for a referendum (which remains a central plank of Pakistani policy) to decide the status of Kashmir. A UN-brokered ceasefire in 1949 kept the two countries on either side of a demarcation line, called the Line of Control (LOC), with little else being resolved. Two-thirds of Kashmir fell on the Indian side of the LOC, which remains the frontier, but neither side accepts this as the official border. The Indian state of Jammu and Kashmir, as it has stood since that time, incorporates Ladakh (divided between Muslims and Buddhists), Jammu (with a Hindu majority) and the 130km-long, 55km-wide Kashmir Valley (with a Muslim majority and most of the state's inhabitants). On the Pakistani side, three million Kashmiris live in Azad (Free) Kashmir.

Since the frontier was drawn, incursions across the LOC have occurred with dangerous regularity. Although India and Pakistan normalised relations in 1976, tensions remain incredibly high. Conflict within Kashmir itself began in earnest in 1989.

In the 1990s, skirmishes were an almost annual event. A militant fringe of Kashmiris turned to armed revolt against the Indian government, joined by waves of freedom fighters from Afghanistan and Pakistan. Unfortunately, civilians proved as popular a target as soldiers. India accused Pakistan of assisting and directing the insurgents, while Pakistan countered that India was denying Kashmiris the right to self-determination. India–Pakistan relations reached their nadir in 1998 when the new Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) government detonated five nuclear devices in the deserts of Rajasthan, after which Pakistan responded in kind. When Pakistan mounted an incursion across the LOC near Kargil, the spectre of nuclear conflict in one of the world's most volatile regions loomed.

Both parties stepped back from the brink amid a wave of international condemnation, although full-blown conflict remained a constant threat. The terrorist attack on the Indian parliament in December 2001 (the Indian government blamed Pakistan) led to new sabre-rattling, while allegations persist of human-rights abuses (including the unexplained disappearance of around 4000 people) by the Indian security forces in Kashmir. Uncertainty over the ability (and even willingness) of Pakistani president Pervez Musharraf to crack down on Pakistan-based fundamentalist Islamic groups also feeds anxiety over Kashmir's future direction.

By the time of the election of the Congress Party government of Prime Minister Manmohan Singh in 2004, relations were strained but reasonably cordial. Confidence-building measures – the re-opening of cross-border transport links, an Indian decision to withdraw a small number of troops and Pakistan's softening of its rhetoric – had helped to calm the situation, and despite two recent train bombings on Indian soil, both the Indian and Pakistani governments vowed not to let these terrorist attacks jeopardise ongoing peace talks.

And yet, both India and Pakistan see Kashmir as an inalienable part of their territory. The long-term viability of any substantive agreement will ultimately depend upon the extent to which the leaders of India and Pakistan can carry their countries along with them, for Kashmir has become a cause célèbre and a matter of intense national pride among both populations.

TSUNAMI TERROR

The catastrophic 26 December 2004 tsunami battered coastal parts of eastern and southern India as well as the Andaman and Nicobar Islands. The country's worst-affected areas were parts of the South Indian state of Tamil Nadu and the Andaman and Nicobar Islands. At least 15,000 people are believed to have perished, with many thousands more injured and/or left homeless. Infrastructure and property reconstruction in India's tsunami-affected regions has made significant progress in some areas but still continues in others.

The apparent moderacy and measured tones of Prime Minister Atal Behari Vajpayee were constantly offset by the more belligerent posture of other members of his government and many of the BJP's grass-roots supporters. Although some attempts were made at quieting the fears of India's minority communities, friction with Pakistan increased and communal tensions remained high.

In early 2002, 52 Hindu activists returning home from Ayodhya were burned to death in a train near Godhra in Gujarat. The deaths were initially blamed on a Muslim mob, an accusation fed by the regional BJP government in Gujarat. The subsequent riots left at least 2000 people dead and 12,000 homeless, mainly Muslims. Government inquiries later cast considerable doubt on the cause of the fire, with an accident the most likely cause.

When Congress swept back to power in 2004, Prime Minister Manmohan Singh was clearly passionate about resuming productive peace talks with Pakistan over the disputed territory of Kashmir. However these talks came to an abrupt halt when communal tensions soared following the July 2006 train bombings in Mumbai that left more than 200 people dead. The Indian government pointed the finger at Pakistan, claiming that its intelligence had played a hand in the blasts – an accusation that Islamabad vehemently denied. Singh later recommenced peace talks with Pakistan, but with suspicions running high on both sides of the border, the road to reconciliation was set to be a challenging one.

Adding further pressure to the peace process was the February 2007 terrorist bomb attack on a train travelling from Delhi to Lahore (Pakistan), which killed 68 commuters. The Indian and Pakistani governments vowed not to let the attack – designed to disrupt India–Pakistan relations – freeze biltateral peace talks. At the time of writing, investigations were being conducted by Indian authorities to identify and bring to justice the culprits.

In April 2003 the Gujarat state assembly followed Madhya Pradesh, Orissa and Tamil Nadu in passing the Freedom of Religion Bill, designed to prevent religious conversions.

In 2004 Sikh prime minister, Manmohan Singh, became the first member of any religious minority community to hold India's highest elected office.

The Culture

THE NATIONAL PSYCHE

One of the first things travellers are likely to observe about India is how everyday life is intertwined with the spiritual: from the housewife who devoutly performs puja (prayers) each morning at a tiny shrine set up in a corner of the home, to the shopkeeper who – regardless of how many eager-to-buy tourists may have piled into the premises – rarely commences business until blessings have been sought from the gods.

Along with religion, family lies at the heart of Indian society. For the vast majority of Indians the idea of being unmarried and without children by one's mid-30s is unthinkable. Despite the steadily rising number of nuclear families – primarily in larger cities such as Mumbai (Bombay), Bengaluru (Bangalore) and Delhi – the extended family remains a cornerstone in both urban and rural India, with males – usually the breadwinners – generally considered the head of the household.

Matchmaking has embraced the cyber age with websites such as www.shaadi.com and www.bharatmatrimony.com catering to tens of millions of Indians and NRIs (Non-Resident Indians).

With religion and family considered so sacrosanct, don't be surprised or miffed if you are constantly grilled about these subjects yourself, especially beyond the larger cities, and receive curious (possibly disapproving) looks if you don't 'fit the mould'. The first question travellers are most commonly asked is which country they are from. This may well be followed by questions on subjects that might be considered somewhat inappropriate elsewhere, especially coming from a complete stranger. Apart from religion and marital status, frequently asked questions include age, qualifications, profession and possibly even income. Such questions aren't intended to offend and it's also perfectly acceptable for you to ask the same questions back.

National pride has always existed on the subcontinent but has swelled in recent years as India attracts increasing international kudos in the fields of information technology (IT), science, literature and film. The country's robust economy – one of the world's fastest growing – is another source of prolific pride. And then, of course, there's its ever-developing nuclear programme, which, although vehemently condemned by some, is widely embraced as a potent symbol of Indian pride and sovereignty – especially evident when relations with neighbouring Pakistan take a sour turn.

In 21st-century India the juxtaposition of time-honoured and New Age flies in the face of some common stereotypes about the country. Sure you'll find tandoori chicken and women decked out in technicoloured saris, but these days your tandoori chicken could well come atop a cheesy wood-fired pizza, and that reticent-looking, sari-clad lady you pass in the bazaar could be chitchatting about last night's rerun of Sex and the City on a flashy mobile phone that makes yours look like a fossil.

Traditional Culture

MARRIAGE, BIRTH & DEATH

Marriage is a supremely auspicious event for Indians and although 'love marriages' have spiralled upwards in recent times (mainly in urban hubs), most Hindu marriages are arranged. Discreet inquiries are made within the community. If a suitable match is not found, the help of professional matchmakers may be sought, or advertisements may be placed in newspapers and/or the internet. The horoscopes are checked and, if propitious, there's a meeting between the two families. The legal marriage age in India is 18.

Dowry, although illegal, is still a key issue in many arranged marriages (primarily in traditional-minded communities), with some families even plunging into debt to raise the required cash and merchandise. In 2005 there were 6787 registered cases of dowry-related deaths (many cases go unreported) either from the new bride committing suicide or, more commonly, being killed by her husband's family.

The wedding ceremony is officiated over by a priest and the marriage is formalised when the couple walk around a sacred fire seven times. Despite the existence of nuclear families, it's still the norm for a wife to live with her husband's family once married and assume the household duties outlined by her mother-in-law. Not surprisingly, the mother–daughter-in-law relationship can be a prickly one, as reflected in the many Indian TV soap operas which largely revolve around this theme.

In big cities, such as Mumbai (Bombay) and Delhi, the average cost of a wedding is pegged at around US$12,000.

Divorce and remarriage is becoming more common (predominantly in India's bigger cities) but is still not granted by courts as a matter of routine and is generally frowned upon by society. Among the higher castes, widows are expected not to remarry and are admonished to wear white and live pious, celibate lives. Also see p70.

The birth of a child is another momentous occasion, with its own set of special ceremonies, which take place at various auspicious times during the early years of childhood. These include the casting of the child's first horoscope, name-giving, feeding the first solid food, and the first hair cutting.

Hindus cremate their dead, and funeral ceremonies are designed to purify and console both the living and the deceased. An important aspect of the proceedings is the sharadda, paying respect to one's ancestors by offering water and rice cakes. It's an observance that's repeated at each anniversary of the death. After the cremation the ashes are collected and, 13 days after the death (when blood relatives are deemed ritually pure), a member of the family usually scatters them in a holy river such as the Ganges, or in the ocean.

THE CASTE SYSTEM

Although today the caste system is weakened, it still wields considerable power, especially in rural India, where the caste you are born into largely determines your social standing in the community. It can also influence one's vocational and marriage prospects. Castes are further divided into thousands of jati, groups of 'families' or social communities, which are sometimes but not always linked to occupation. Conservative Hindus will only marry someone of the same jati.

Two insightful books about India's caste system are Interrogating Caste by Dipankar Gupta and Translating Caste edited by Tapan Basu.

Caste is the basic social structure of Hindu society. Living a righteous life and fulfilling your dharma (moral duty) raises your chances of being born into a higher caste and thus into better circumstances. Hindus are born into one of four varnas (castes): Brahmin (priests and teachers), Kshatriya (warriors), Vaishya (merchants) and Shudra (labourers). The Brahmins were said to have emerged from the mouth of Lord Brahma at the moment of creation, Kshatriyas were said to have come from his arms, Vaishyas from his thighs and Shudras from his feet.

Beneath the four main castes are the Dalits (formerly known as Untouchables), who hold menial jobs such as sweepers and latrine cleaners. The word 'pariah' is derived from the name of a Tamil Dalit group, the Paraiyars. Some Dalit leaders, such as the late Dr Ambedkar, sought to change their status by adopting another faith; in his case it was Buddhism. At the bottom of the social heap are the Denotified Tribes. They were known as the Criminal Tribes until 1952, when a reforming law officially recognised 198 tribes and castes. Many are nomadic or seminomadic tribes, forced by the wider community to eke out a living on society's fringes.

Of the 545 seats in the Lok Sabha (Lower House of India's bicameral parliament), 120 are reserved for Scheduled Castes and Tribes.

DOS & DON'TS

India has many time-honoured traditions and while you won't be expected to get everything 'right', common sense and courtesy will take you a long way. If in doubt about how you should behave (eg at a temple), watch what the locals do, or simply ask.

Dressing conservatively (women and men) wins a far warmer response from locals (women should also read p1160). Refrain from kissing and cuddling in public as this isn't condoned by society. Nudity in public is not on, and while bikinis may be acceptable on Goa's beaches, you should cover up (eg swim in shorts and a t-shirt) in less touristy places – use your judgement.

Religious Etiquette

Whenever visiting a sacred site, always dress and behave respectfully – don't wear shorts or sleeveless tops (this applies to men and women) and refrain from smoking. Loud and intrusive behaviour isn't appreciated, and neither are public displays of affection or kidding around.

Before entering a holy place, remove your shoes (tip the shoe-minder a few rupees when retrieving them) and check if photography is allowed. You're permitted to wear socks in most places of worship – often necessary during warmer months, when floors can be uncomfortably hot.

Religious etiquette advises against touching locals on the head, or directing the soles of your feet at a person, religious shrine or image of a deity. Religious protocol also advises against touching someone with your feet or touching a carving of a deity.

Head cover (for women and sometimes men) is required at some places of worship (especially Sikh temples), so carry a scarf just to be on the safe side. There are some sites that don't admit women and some that deny entry to nonadherents of their faith – inquire in advance. Women may be required to sit apart from men. Jain temples request the removal of leather items you may be wearing or carrying and may also request menstruating women not to enter.

Eating & Visiting Etiquette

If you're lucky enough to be invited to someone's home it's considered good manners to remove your shoes before entering the house and to wash your hands before the main meal. Wait to be served food or until you are invited to help yourself – if you're unsure about protocol, simply wait for your host to direct you.

It's customary to use your right hand for eating and other social acts such as shaking hands; the left hand is used for unsavoury actions such as toilet duties and removing dirty shoes. When drinking from a shared water container, hold it slightly above your mouth (thus avoiding contact between your lips and the mouth of the container).

Photography Etiquette

Exercise sensitivity when taking photos of people, especially women, who may find it offensive – obtain permission in advance.

Taking photos inside a shrine, at a funeral, at a religious ceremony or of people publicly bathing (including rivers) can be offensive – ask first. Flash photography may be prohibited in certain areas of a shrine, or may not be permitted at all.

Other Tips for Travellers

To augment your chances of receiving the most accurate response when seeking directions from people on the street, refrain from posing questions in a leading manner. For instance, it's often best to ask, 'Which way to the museum?' rather than pointing and asking, 'Is this the way to the museum?'. This is because you may well receive a fabricated answer (usually 'yes') if the person can't quite decipher your accent or simply didn't hear you properly. There is no malicious intent in this misinformation – they're just trying to be polite, as an unsympathetic 'no' sounds so unfriendly!

It's also worth noting that the commonly used sideways wobble of the head doesn't necessarily mean 'no'. It can translate to: yes, maybe, or I have no idea.

TRADITIONAL INDIAN ATTIRE

Commonly worn by Indian women, the elegant sari comes in a single piece (between 5m and 9m long and 1m wide) and is ingeniously tucked and pleated into place without the need for pins or buttons. Worn with the sari is the choli (tight-fitting blouse) and a drawstring petticoat. The palloo is that part of the sari draped over the shoulder. Also widely worn by women is the salwar kameez, a traditional dresslike tunic and trouser combination accompanied by a dupatta (long scarf). Saris and salwar kameez come in a wonderful range of fabrics and designs to suit all budgets.

Traditional attire for men includes the dhoti, and (in the south) the lungi and the mundu are also commonly worn. The dhoti is a loose garment pulled up between the legs like a long loincloth. The lungi is more like a sarong, with its end usually sewn up like a tube. The mundu is like a lungi but is always white.

There are regional and religious variations in costume – for example, you may see Muslim women wearing the all-enveloping burka.

To improve the Dalits' position, the government reserves considerable numbers of public-sector jobs, parliamentary seats and university places for them. Today these quotas account for almost 50% of sought-after government jobs. The situation varies regionally, as different political leaders chase caste vote-banks by promising to include them in reservations. The reservation system, while generally regarded in a favourable light, has also been criticised for unfairly blocking tertiary and employment opportunities for those who would have otherwise got positions on merit.

PILGRIMAGE

Devout Hindus are expected to go on yatra (pilgrimage) at least once a year. Pilgrimages are undertaken to implore the gods or goddesses to grant a wish, to take the ashes of a cremated relative to a holy river, or to gain spiritual merit. India has thousands of holy sites to which pilgrims travel; the elderly often make Varanasi their final one, as it's believed that dying in this sacred city releases a person from the cycle of rebirth.

Most festivals in India are rooted in religion and are thus a magnet for pilgrims. This is something that travellers should keep in mind when attending festivals, many of which have a somewhat carnivalesque sheen (see the boxed text, opposite).

Contemporary Issues

AIDS IN INDIA

According to the latest reports, India has surpassed South Africa as having the world's highest number of HIV-positive cases; there are currently 5.7 million reported cases in India; however analysts believe this is a conservative estimate as many go unreported. Apart from sex workers, truck drivers and intravenous drug users also fall into the high-risk category. There are believed to be at least 12,000 sex workers in Mumbai alone.

In a country of more than one billion people, health officials warn that unless the government radically increases educational programmes (especially promotion of condom use – something that prostitutes claim they can't enforce, as many clients refuse to wear condoms) the number of HIV-positive cases could climb to at least 12 million by 2010. Campaigners say that India's antigay laws (see p60) make it ambiguous to accurately assess the extent of the epidemic, and also hamper treatment and education efforts.

See also p1185.

CHILD LABOUR

Despite national legislation prohibiting child labour, human-rights groups believe India has an estimated 60 million (not the officially quoted 12 million) child labourers – the highest rate in the world. Poorly enforced laws, poverty and lack of a social-security system are cited as major causes of the problem. The harsh reality for many low-income families is that they simply can't afford to support their children, so they send them out to work in order to survive.

Recognising the need for tougher anti–child labour laws, in 2006 the government ordered a ban against the employment of children (aged below 14) as labourers in households and the hospitality trade. Combined, these areas are said to employ around 260,000 children, however activist groups put the figure closer to 20 million. Employers who contravene the ban face possible imprisonment of up to two years, a fine of Rs 20,000, or both. The government has promised to appropriately rehabilitate the displaced child labourers, however critics are sceptical about its ability to effectively do so. If rehabilitation is inadequate, they believe that many jobless children will turn to begging and/or crime. The government's latest ban is an addendum to existing legislation which already forbids the employment of children under the age of 14 in what it classifies as 'hazardous jobs' (eg glass factories, abattoirs).

The South Indian state of Kerala has India's lowest rate of child labour (one in 100); the national average is eight in 100.

The majority (approximately 53%) of India's child labourers work in the agricultural industry, while others work on construction sites, or as rag pickers, household servants, carpet weavers, brick makers and prostitutes. There are also a considerable number of children making beedis (small handmade cigarettes), inhaling large quantities of harmful tobacco dust and chemicals. Another hazardous industry employing children is that of fireworks manufacturing. Meanwhile in Kanchipuram (Tamil Nadu), an estimated 4000 school-aged children work full-time in the silk industry – see the boxed text, p1052.

GAY & LESBIAN ISSUES

Although difficult to accurately pinpoint, India is believed to have between 70 and 100 million gay, lesbian and transgender people. Section 377 of the national legislation forbids 'carnal intercourse against the order of nature' (that is, anal intercourse) and the penalties for transgression can be up to 10 years imprisonment plus a fine. Although this colonial-era law, which dates back to 1861, is rarely used to prosecute, it's allegedly used by authorities to harass, arrest and blackmail gay people.

In 2006 more than 100 high-profile personalities, including Nobel prize–winning economist, Amartya Sen, and literary stalwarts, Vikram Seth and Arundhati Roy, signed an open letter supporting a legal challenge that has been lodged with the Delhi High Court. The challenge seeks to overturn the country's antiquated antigay law; at the time of writing, a court decision had not been reached.

HIJRAS

India's most visible nonheterosexual group is the hijras, a caste of transvestites and eunuchs who dress in women's clothing. Some are gay, some are hermaphrodites and some were unfortunate enough to be kidnapped and castrated. Since it's traditionally unacceptable to live openly as a gay man, hijras get around this by becoming, in effect, a sort of third sex. They work mainly as uninvited entertainers at weddings and celebrations of the birth of male children, and as prostitutes.

Read more about hijras in The Invisibles by Zia Jaffrey and Ardhanarishvara the Androgyne by Dr Alka Pande.

While the more liberal sections of certain cities – such as Mumbai, Bengaluru, Delhi and Kolkata (Calcutta) – appear to be becoming more tolerant of homosexuality, gay life is still largely suppressed. As marriage is so highly regarded on the subcontinent, it's believed that most gay people stay in the closet or risk being disowned by their families and society. Nevertheless, freedom of expression is growing. For instance, in 2003 Mumbai hosted the Larzish festival – India's first queer film festival – now held annually in November. This was quite a coup for the gay community, considering the hullabaloo raised by religious zealots over Deepa Mehta's film Fire (with lesbian themes), which was famously banned by the ultraconservative Shiv Sena party in 1998 (read also p74).

For details about gay support groups and publications/websites see p1138.

POVERTY

Raising the living standards of India's poor has been high on the agenda for governments since Independence. However, India presently has one of the world's highest concentrations of poverty, with an estimated 350 million (and growing) Indians living below the poverty line, 75% of them in rural areas. Many others live in horrendously overcrowded urban slums. The worst affected states are Bihar, Orissa, Uttar Pradesh, Rajasthan and Madhya Pradesh, which also have the nation's fastest growing population rates.

The major causes of poverty include illiteracy and a population growth rate that is substantially exceeding India's economic growth rate. Although India's middle class is ballooning, there's still a marked disparity when it comes to the country's distribution of wealth.

Although around a third of India's population subsists on less than US$1 per day, the country has an estimated 85,000 (and growing) millionaires (in US dollars).

In 2006 the average annual wage in India was US$710. An estimated 35% to 40% of the population survive on less than US$1 per day. Hardest hit are rural dwellers, who earn, on average, four times less than urban Indians. India's minimum daily wage, which varies from state to state, averages Rs 55 (US$1.26), although this certainly isn't always the case in reality. Wages between industries vary, with state governments setting different minimums for different occupations, and there are sectors which have no minimum wages at all. Women are often paid less, especially in areas such as construction and farming.

Prostitution and poverty are closely linked, with a 2007 report indicating that India has upwards of 10 million prostitutes, with around 20% under the age of 18.

Poverty accounts for India's ever-growing number of beggars, mainly in the larger cities. For foreign visitors this is often the most confronting aspect of travelling in the subcontinent. Whether you give something is a matter of personal choice, though your money can often be put to better long-term use if given to a reputable charity. Or, you could work as a volunteer at a charitable organisation – for volunteering possibilities see p1155.

POPULATION

India has the world's second-largest population and is tipped to exceed China as the planet's most populous nation by 2035.

India has one of the world's largest diasporas – more than 25 million people in 130 countries – who pumped US$23 billion into India's economy in 2005 alone.

A population census is held every 10 years in India. The most recent was in 2001 and this revealed that India's population had risen by 21.34% in the previous decade. According to this census, Mumbai is India's most populated city, with an urban agglomeration population of 16.37 million; Kolkata ranks second with 13.22 million, with Delhi and Chennai (Madras) third and fourth respectively. Despite India's many urban centres, the nation is still overwhelmingly rural, with an estimated 75% of the population living in the countryside.

A SOFTWARE SUPERPOWER

India's burgeoning information technology (IT) industry, born in the boom years of the 1990s and founded on India's highly skilled middle class and abundance of relatively inexpensive labour, has made India a major player in the world of technology.

The industry currently employs more than one million Indians, with that figure expected to rise to more than two million by 2008 and a further two million or so benefiting through indirect employment. When this is added to the trend towards large-scale outsourcing, whereby call centres attached to Western companies move offshore to India, the scale of the revolution in India's once-ramshackle economy starts to become apparent. In 2006 outsourcing was a very healthy US$10 billion industry, a figure that is forecast to more than double by 2010.

The IT boom has transformed cities such as Hyderabad, nicknamed 'Cyberabad' by many locals, and Bengaluru (Bangalore), known as 'India's Silicon Valley', into IT world leaders. Tamil Nadu, Karnataka and Andhra Pradesh now produce more than 50% of India's software exports, although the dominance of the south is being challenged by other growth centres such as Pune, Mumbai (Bombay), Kolkata (Calcutta) and Ahmedabad.

From the societal perspective, the IT boom has spawned a new breed of Indian yuppie. Many of these young professionals (most in their 20s or early 30s and unmarried) are ditching traditional spending patterns (eg household appliances and retirement) and spending a hefty chunk of their incomes on more hedonistic pursuits such as dining out at fancy restaurants, shopping and travelling overseas.

The average wage rise per annum in the Indian IT industry is 15%, with middle managers enjoying considerably higher increments. An Indian call-centre operator receives an average income of between Rs 10,000 and Rs 12,000 per month. This is at least several thousand rupees higher than that paid by the average Indian company, but a fraction of the cost of what the overseas-based company would pay back home. Meanwhile, talented young Indian managers who have worked with an international company for just a few years may be rewarded (and, from the company's perspective, hopefully deterred from being poached by other companies) with incomes of between Rs 150,000 and Rs 200,000 (even higher in some cases) per month – up to 80% more than the national average income for a middle manager.

Apart from the financial carrot, another incentive used by international companies to lure well-qualified job seekers is the high standard of workplace comfort (eg state-of-the-art equipment, modern cafeterias, and sometimes even gyms), which counter the drawbacks associated with the job (eg boredom, erratic working hours, verbal phone abuse from people who loathe call centres etc). Many call centres put their staff through rigorous training courses to get them up to speed with the countries they'll be calling (usually the UK, USA and Australia). These often include lessons on how to mimic foreign accents, and staff may also be given pseudo Western names as another means of bridging the cultural divide.

Despite the IT boom playing a critical role in boosting the economy, the industry does have its detractors, particularly those who claim that the country's IT growth is an entirely urban phenomenon with little discernible impact upon the lives of the vast majority of Indians. Whatever the pros and cons, IT will certainly go down in history as one of India's great success stories.

RELIGION

From a mother performing puja for her child's forthcoming exams, to a mechanic who has renounced his material life and set off on the path to self-realisation, religion suffuses every aspect of life in India.

India's major religion, Hinduism, is practised by approximately 82% of the population. Along with Buddhism, Jainism and Zoroastrianism, it is one of the world's oldest extant religions, with roots extending beyond 1000 BC.

Islam is India's largest minority religion; around 12% of the population is Muslim. Islam was introduced to northern India by invading armies (in the 16th and 17th centuries the Mughal empire controlled much of North India) and to the south by Arab traders.

Christians comprise around 2.3% of the population, with around 75% living in South India, while the Sikhs – estimated at around 1.9% of the population – are mostly found in the northern state of Punjab. Around 0.76% of the population is Buddhist, with Bodhgaya (Bihar) being a major pilgrimage destination. Jainism is followed by about 0.4% of the population, with the majority of Jains living in Gujarat and Mumbai. Parsis, adherents of Zoroastrianism, number between roughly 75,000 and 80,000 – a mere drop in the ocean of India's billion-plus population. Historically, Parsis settled in Gujarat and became farmers, however, during British rule they moved into commerce, forming a prosperous community in Mumbai – see the boxed text, p781. There are believed to be fewer than 8000 Jews left in India, most living in Mumbai and parts of South India.

Tribal religions have so merged with Hinduism and other mainstream religions that very few are now clearly identifiable. It's believed that some basic tenets of Hinduism may have originated in tribal culture.

Communal Conflict

Religion-based conflict has been a bloody part of India's history. The post-Independence partition of the country into Hindu India and Muslim Pakistan resulted in horrendous carnage and epic displacement – see p50.

Later bouts of major sectarian violence in India include the Hindu–Sikh riots of 1984, which led to the assassination of then prime minister, Indira Gandhi (p52), and the politically fanned 1992 Ayodhya calamity (p53), which sparked ferocious Hindu–Muslim clashes.

The ongoing dispute between India and Pakistan over Kashmir is also perilously entwined in religious conflict. Since Partition, India and Pakistan have fought two wars over Kashmir and have had subsequent artillery exchanges, coming dangerously close to war in 1999. The festering dispute over this landlocked territory continues to fuel Hindu–Muslim

ADIVASIS

India's Adivasis (tribal communities; Adivasi translates to 'original inhabitants' in Sanskrit) have origins that precede the Vedic Aryans and the Dravidians of the south. Today there are around 84.3 million Adivasis in India, with some 450 different tribal groups. The literacy rate for Adivasis, as per the last census (2001), is just 29.6%; the national average is 65.38%.

Historically, contact between Adivasis and Hindu villagers on the plains rarely led to friction as there was little or no competition for resources and land. However, in recent decades the majority of Adivasis have been dispossessed of their ancestral land and turned into impoverished labourers.

Although they still have political representation thanks to a parliamentary quota system, the shocking dispossession and exploitation of Adivasis has often been with the connivance of officialdom – a record the government would prefer to forget and one it fervently denies. Instead, it points to the millions of rupees said to have been sanctioned into Adivasi schemes. Although some of this has indeed been positively used, corruption has snatched a large portion and unless more is done, the Adivasis' future is uncertain, with one of the biggest threats being the erosion of their ancient traditions and culture.

Learn more about Adivasis in The Todas of South India – A New Look by Anthony Walker, Tribes of India – The Struggle for Survival by Christoph von Fürer-Haimendorf, Archaeology and History: Early Settlements in the Andaman Islands by Zarine Cooper and The Tribals of India by Sunil Janah.

animosity on both sides of the border – for more information, see the boxed text, p54.

Despite two recent train bomb attacks (one in 2006, the other in 2007; see p38), believed to have been conducted to sabotage India–Pakistan peace talks, the governments of both countries have refused to allow what they term 'cowardly acts of terrorism', to jeopardise ongoing bilateral dialogue.

Hinduism

Hinduism has no founder, central authority or hierarchy and isn't a proselytising religion. Essentially, Hindus believe in Brahman, who is eternal, uncreated and infinite; everything that exists emanates from Brahman and will ultimately return to it. The multitude of gods and goddesses are merely manifestations – knowable aspects of this formless phenomenon.

Shakunthala Jagannathan's Hinduism – An Introduction unravels the basic tenets of Hinduism – if you have no prior knowledge, this book is a terrific starting point.

Hindus believe that earthly life is cyclical; you are born again and again (a process known as samsara), the quality of these rebirths being dependent upon your karma (conduct or action) in previous lives. Living a righteous life and fulfilling your dharma will enhance your chances of being born into a higher caste and better circumstances. Alternatively, if enough bad karma has accumulated, rebirth may take animal form. But it's only as a human that you can gain sufficient self-knowledge to escape the cycle of reincarnation and achieve moksha (liberation).

GODS & GODDESSES

All Hindu deities are regarded as a manifestation of Brahman, who is often described as having three main representations, the Trimurti: Brahma, Vishnu and Shiva.

Brahman

The One; the ultimate reality. Brahman is formless, eternal and the source of all existence. Brahman is nirguna (without attributes), as opposed to all the other gods, which are manifestations of Brahman and therefore saguna (with attributes).

Brahma

Only during the creation of the universe does Brahma play an active role. At other times he is in meditation. His consort is Saraswati, the goddess of learning, and his vehicle is a swan. He's sometimes shown sitting on a lotus that rises from Vishnu's navel, symbolising the interdependence of the gods. Brahma is generally depicted with four (crowned and bearded) heads, each turned towards a point of the compass.

Vishnu

The preserver or sustainer, Vishnu is associated with 'right action'. He protects and sustains all that is good in the world. He is usually depicted with

OM

One of Hinduism's most venerated symbols is 'Om'. Pronounced 'aum', it's a highly propitious mantra (sacred word or syllable). The 'three' shape symbolises the creation, maintenance and destruction of the universe (and thus the holy Trimurti). The inverted chandra (crescent or half moon) represents the discursive mind and the bindu (dot) within it, Brahman.

Buddhists believe that, if repeated often enough with complete concentration, it will lead to a state of blissful emptiness.

four arms, holding a lotus, a conch shell (as it can be blown like a trumpet it symbolises the cosmic vibration from which all existence emanates), a discus and a mace. His consort is Lakshmi, the goddess of wealth, and his vehicle is Garuda, a half-bird, half-beast creature. The Ganges is said to flow from his feet. Vishnu has 22 incarnations, including Rama, Krishna and Buddha.

Shiva

Shiva is the destroyer, but without whom creation couldn't occur. Shiva's creative role is phallically symbolised by his representation as the frequently worshipped lingam. With 1008 names, Shiva takes many forms, including Pashupati, champion of the animals, and Nataraja, lord of the tandava (cosmic dance), who paces out the cosmos' creation and destruction.

Shiva is sometimes characterised as the lord of yoga, a Himalaya-dwelling ascetic with matted hair, an ash-smeared body and a third eye symbolising wisdom.

Sometimes Shiva has snakes draped around his neck and is shown holding a trident (representative of the Trimurti) as a weapon while riding Nandi, his bull. Nandi symbolises power and potency, justice and moral order. Shiva's consort, Parvati, is capable of taking many forms.

Other Prominent Deities

The jolly elephant-headed Ganesh is the god of good fortune, remover of obstacles, and patron of scribes (the broken tusk he holds was used to write sections of the Mahabharata). His animal mount is a ratlike creature. How exactly Ganesh came to have an elephant's head is a story with several variations. One legend says that Ganesh was born to Parvati in the absence of his father (Shiva), and Ganesh grew up not knowing his father. One day, as Ganesh stood guard while his mother bathed, Shiva returned and asked to be let into Parvati's presence. Ganesh, who did not recognise Shiva, refused. Enraged, Shiva promptly lopped off Ganesh's head, only to later discover, much to his horror, that he had slaughtered his own son! He vowed to replace Ganesh's head with that of the first creature he came across. This happened to be an elephant.

Another prominent deity, Krishna, is an incarnation of Vishnu, sent to earth to fight for good and combat evil. His alliances with the gopis (milkmaids) and his love for Radha have inspired countless paintings and songs. Depicted with blue-hued skin, Krishna is often seen playing the flute.

There are around 330 million deities in the Hindu pantheon; which of these are worshipped is a matter of personal choice or tradition.

Hanuman is the hero of the Ramayana and loyal ally of Rama; he embodies the concept of bhakti (devotion). Hanuman is the king of the monkeys, but is capable of taking on other forms.

Among the Shaivite (followers of the Shiva movement), Shakti – the goddess as mother and creator – is worshipped as a force in her own right. Those who follow her are known as shaktis. The concept of shakti is embodied in the ancient goddess Devi (mother and destroyer of evil), also known as Durga and, in another, fiercer incarnation, Kali. Other widely worshipped goddesses include Lakshmi, the goddess of wealth who is often depicted sitting or standing on a lotus flower, and Saraswati, the goddess of learning.

SACRED TEXTS

Hindu sacred texts fall into two categories: those believed to be the word of god (shruti, meaning heard) and those produced by people (smriti, meaning remembered).

The Vedas are regarded as shruti knowledge and are considered the authoritative basis for Hinduism. The oldest of the Vedic texts, the Rig-Veda, was compiled more than 3000 years ago. Within its 1028 verses are prayers for prosperity and longevity as well as an explanation of the universe's origins. The Upanishads, the last parts of the Vedas, reflect on the mystery of death and emphasise the oneness of the universe.

The oldest of the Vedic texts were written in Vedic Sanskrit (related to Old Persian). Later texts were composed in classical Sanskrit, but many have been translated into the vernacular.

The smriti texts comprise a collection of literature spanning many centuries and include expositions on the proper performance of domestic ceremonies as well as the proper pursuit of government, economics and religious law. Among its better-known works are the great epics of the Ramayana and the Mahabharata, as well as the Puranas, which expand on the epics and promote the notion of the Trimurti. Unlike the Vedas, reading the Puranas is not restricted to initiated males of the higher castes; they have wider popular appeal.

Two impressive publications containing English translations of holy Hindu texts are The Bhagavad Gita by S Radhakrishnan and The Valmiki Ramayana by Romesh Dutt.

The Mahabharata

Thought to have been composed some time around the 1st millennium BC, the Mahabharata focuses on the exploits of Krishna. By about 500 BC the Mahabharata had evolved into a far more complex creation with substantial additions, including the Bhagavad Gita (where Krishna proffers advice to Arjuna before a battle).

The story centres on conflict between the heroic gods (Pandavas) and the demons (Kauravas). Overseeing events is Krishna, who has taken on human form. Krishna acts as charioteer for the Pandava hero Arjuna, who eventually triumphs in a great battle with the Kauravas.

The Ramayana

Composed around the 3rd or 2nd century BC, the Ramayana is believed to be largely the work of one person, the poet Valmiki. Like the Mahabharata, it centres on conflict between the gods and demons.

The story goes that Dasharatha, the childless king of Ayodhya, called upon the gods to provide him with a son. His wife duly gave birth to a boy. But this child, named Rama, was in fact an incarnation of Vishnu, who'd assumed human form to overthrow the demon king of Lanka, Ravana. The adult Rama, who won the hand of the princess Sita in a competition, was chosen by his father to inherit his kingdom. At the last minute Rama's stepmother intervened and demanded her son take Rama's place. Rama, Sita and Rama's brother, Lakshmana, were exiled and went off to the forests, where Rama and Lakshmana battled demons and dark forces. Ravana's sister attempted to seduce Rama. She was rejected and, in revenge, Ravana captured Sita and spirited her away to his palace in Lanka. Rama, assisted by an army of monkeys led by the loyal monkey god Hanuman, eventually found the palace, killed Ravana and rescued Sita. All returned victorious to Ayodhya, where Rama was crowned king.

SACRED ANIMALS & PLANTS

Animals, particularly snakes and cows, have long been worshipped in the subcontinent. The cow represents fertility and nurturing, while snakes

THE SACRED SEVEN

The number seven has special significance in Hinduism. There are seven sacred Indian cities, each of which are major pilgrimage centres: Varanasi (p425), associated with Shiva; Haridwar (p454), where the Ganges enters the plains from the Himalaya; Ayodhya (p424), birthplace of Rama; Dwarka (p753), with the legendary capital of Krishna thought to be off the Gujarat coast; Mathura (p410), birthplace of Krishna; Kanchipuram (p1051), site of Shiva temples; and Ujjain (p695), site every 12 years of the Kumbh Mela.

There are also seven sacred rivers: the Ganges (Ganga), Saraswati (thought to be underground), Yamuna, Indus, Narmada, Godavari and Cauvery.

(especially cobras) are associated with fertility and welfare. Naga stones (snake stones) serve the dual purpose of protecting humans from snakes and propitiating snake gods.

Plants can also have sacred associations, such as the banyan tree, which symbolises the Trimurti, while mango trees are symbolic of love – Shiva is believed to have married Parvati under one. Meanwhile, the lotus flower is believed to have emerged from the primeval waters and is connected to the mythical centre of the earth through its stem. Often found in the most polluted of waters, the lotus has the remarkable ability to blossom above their murky depths. The centre of the lotus corresponds to the centre of the universe, the navel of the earth; all is held together by the stem and the eternal waters. This is how Hindus are reminded their own lives should be – like the fragile yet resolute lotus, an embodiment of beauty and strength. So revered is the lotus that today it's India's national flower.

WORSHIP

Worship and ritual play a paramount role in Hinduism. In Hindu homes you'll often find a dedicated worship area, where members of the family pray to the deities of their choice. Beyond the home, Hindus worship at temples. Puja is a focal point of worship and ranges from silent prayer to elaborate ceremonies. Devotees leave the temple with a handful of prasad (temple-blessed food) which is humbly shared among friends and family. Other forms of worship include aarti (the auspicious lighting of lamps or candles) and the playing of soul-soothing bhajans (devotional songs).

A sadhu is someone who has surrendered all material possessions in pursuit of spirituality through meditation, the study of sacred texts, self-mortification and pilgrimage.

Islam

Islam was founded in Arabia by the Prophet Mohammed in the 7th century AD. The Arabic term islam means to surrender, and believers (Muslims) undertake to surrender to the will of Allah (God), which is revealed in the scriptures, the Quran. In this monotheistic religion, God's word is conveyed through prophets (messengers), of whom Mohammed is the most recent.

Following Mohammed's death, a succession dispute split the movement, and the legacy today is the Sunnis and the Shiites. Most Muslims in India are Sunnis. The Sunnis emphasise the 'well-trodden' path or the orthodox way. Shiites believe that only imams (exemplary leaders) can reveal the true meaning of the Quran.

All Muslims, however, share a belief in the Five Pillars of Islam: the shahada (declaration of faith: 'There is no God but Allah; Mohammed is his prophet'); prayer (ideally five times a day); the zakat (tax), in the form of a charitable donation; fasting (during Ramadan) for all except the sick, the very young, the elderly and those undertaking arduous journeys; and the haj (pilgrimage) to Mecca, which every Muslim aspires to do at least once.

Sikhism

Sikhism, founded in Punjab by Guru Nanak in the 15th century, began as a reaction against the caste system and Brahmin domination of ritual. Sikhs believe in one god and although they reject the worship of idols, some keep pictures of the 10 gurus as a point of focus. The Sikhs' holy text, the Guru Granth Sahib, contains the teachings of the 10 Sikh gurus, among others.

Like Hindus and Buddhists, Sikhs believe in rebirth and karma. In Sikhism, there's no ascetic or monastic tradition ending the eternal cycles of rebirth.

Fundamental to Sikhs is the concept of Khalsa, or belief in a chosen race of soldier-saints who abide by strict codes of moral conduct (abstaining from alcohol, tobacco and drugs) and engage in a crusade for dharmayudha (righteousness). There are five kakkars (emblems) denoting the Khalsa brotherhood: kesh (the unshaven beard and uncut hair symbolising saintliness); kangha (comb to maintain the ritually uncut hair); kaccha (loose underwear symbolising modesty); kirpan (sabre or sword symbolising power and dignity); and karra (steel bangle symbolising fearlessness). Singh, literally 'Lion', is the name adopted by many Sikhs.

To understand the intricacies of Sikhism read A History of the Sikhs by Khushwant Singh, which comes in Volume One (1469–1839) and Volume Two (1839–2004).

A belief in the equality of all beings lies at the heart of Sikhism. It's expressed in various practices, including langar, whereby people from all walks of life – regardless of caste and creed – sit side by side to share a complimentary meal prepared by hard-working volunteers in the communal kitchen of the gurdwara (Sikh temple).

The Wonder That Was India by AL Basham offers detailed descriptions of the Indian civilisations, major religions, origins of the caste system and social customs – a good thematic approach to bring the disparate strands together.

Buddhism

Buddhism arose in the 6th century BC as a reaction against the strictures of Brahminical Hinduism. The Buddha (Awakened One) is believed to have lived from about 563 BC to 483 BC. Formerly a prince (Siddhartha Gautama), the Buddha, at the age of 29, embarked on a quest for emancipation from the world of suffering. He finally achieved nirvana (the state of full awareness) at Bodhgaya (Bihar), aged 35. Critical of the caste system and the unthinking worship of gods, the Buddha urged his disciples to seek truth within their own experiences.

Buddha taught that existence is based on Four Noble Truths – that life is rooted in suffering, that suffering is caused by craving worldly things, that one can find release from suffering by eliminating craving, and that the way to eliminate craving is by following the Noble Eightfold Path. This path consists of right understanding, right intention, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right awareness and right concentration. By successfully complying with these one can attain nirvana.

Buddhism had almost vanished in much of India by the turn of the 20th century. However, it saw a revival in the 1950s among intellectuals and Dalits who where disillusioned with the caste system. The number of followers has been further increased with the influx of Tibetan refugees.

KNOW YOUR GOMPAS

Sikkim, among other places, is famous for its ornate and colourful gompas (Buddhist monasteries). The best time to visit any gompa is during the morning puja (prayers), when monks and novices gather to chant passages from the sacred scriptures, accompanied by ringing cymbals, booming drums and honking Tibetan horns. Visitors are welcome to watch, but should dress and behave respectfully. The first puja takes place at dawn, but there's normally a second prayer meeting around 9am.

Another feature common to all gompas are masked chaam, dances held to celebrate major festivals. Chaam dancers wear ornate robes and magnificent painted masks, depicting characters from Tibetan legends. Popular figures include Mahakala, the Great Protector, who has fearsome fangs and a headdress of human skulls, and the mythical snow lion, believed to live high on the slopes of Khangchendzonga. These characters are often depicted with a third eye in the centre of their foreheads, signifying the need for inner reflection.

The main chaam usually take place in the run up to Losar (Tibetan New Year) in February/March (December/January in some regions) and Losoong (Sikkimese New Year) in December/January. If you can't visit when a chaam is taking place, politely request a monk to show you the room where the masks and costumes are stored.

Another fascinating activity at Buddhist monasteries is the production of butter sculptures. These elaborate and slightly psychedelic models are made from coloured butter and dough and feature sacred symbols from Tibetan mythology. The sculptures are deliberately left to decay, symbolising the impermanence of human existence.

THE WHEEL OF LIFE

By the main entrance to most Buddhist monasteries you'll find a mural of the Wheel of Life, which neatly explains the key elements of Buddhist philosophy. In the mural, a fearsome monster – representing the impermanence of earthly life – holds a disk depicting the six worlds where humans end up as the result of good and evil deeds.

The top world is the temporary heavenly abode of the gods and enlightened, flanked by the worlds of humans and warring deities, which are full of suffering. Below these are the worlds of hungry ghosts and animals, the destinations of the sinful and indifferent. The final scene depicts the hot and cold hells, reserved for people who commit truly evil deeds.

The hub of the wheel contains a rooster (representing greed), a snake (representing hatred) and a pig (representing ignorance) – the three root causes of all evil. Surrounding the hub are illustrations of the White Path, which leads to Enlightenment, and the Dark Path, which leads to damnation. The 12 'causes and effects' that can lead to rebirth in a higher or lower form of existence are pictured in the outer rim of the wheel.

You can find an excellent interactive description of the Wheel of Life on the website www.buddhanet.net/wheel1.htm.

Jainism

Jainism arose in the 6th century BC as a reaction against the caste restraints and rituals of Hinduism. It was founded by Mahavira, a contemporary of the Buddha.

Jains believe that liberation can be attained by achieving complete purity of the soul. Purity means shedding all karman, matter generated by one's actions that binds itself to the soul. By following various austerities (eg fasting and meditation) one can shed karman and purify the soul. Right conduct is essential, and fundamental to this is ahimsa (nonviolence) in thought and deed towards any living thing.

The religious disciplines of the laity are less severe than for monks, with some Jain monks going naked. The slightly less ascetic maintain a bare minimum of possessions including a broom, with which to sweep the path before them to avoid stepping on any living creature, and a piece of cloth that is tied over their mouth to prevent the accidental inhalation of insects.

Christianity

Christianity is said to have arrived in South India with St Thomas the Apostle in AD 52. However, scholars say it's more likely Christianity arrived around the 4th century with a Syrian merchant, Thomas Cana, who set out for Kerala with 400 families.

Catholicism established a strong presence in South India in the wake of Vasco da Gama's visit in 1498 and orders that have been active in the region include the Dominicans, Franciscans and Jesuits. Protestantism arrived with the English, Dutch and Danish.

Set in Kerala against the backdrop of caste conflict and India's struggle for independence, The House of Blue Mangoes by David Davidar spans three generations of a Christian family.

Zoroastrianism

Zoroastrianism, founded by Zoroaster (Zarathustra), had its inception in Persia in the 6th century BC and is based on the concept of dualism, whereby good and evil are locked in continuous battle. Zoroastrianism isn't quite monotheistic: good and evil entities coexist, although believers are enjoined to honour only the good. Humanity therefore has a choice. Unlike Christianity, there is no conflict between body and soul: both are united in the good versus evil struggle. Humanity, although mortal, has components such as the soul, which are timeless; a pleasant afterlife depends on one's deeds, words and thoughts during earthly existence. But not every lapse is entered on the balance sheet and the errant soul is not called to account on the day of judgement for each and every misdemeanour.

Zoroastrianism was eclipsed in Persia by the rise of Islam in the 7th century and its followers, many of whom openly resisted this, suffered persecution. In the 10th century some emigrated to India, where they became known as Parsis.

The Parsi death ritual involves the 'Towers of Silence' – three concentric circles where the corpse is exposed to vultures, which pick the bones clean.

WOMEN IN INDIA

Women in India are entitled to vote and own property. Although the percentage of women in politics has risen over the past decade, they're still notably underrepresented in the national parliament, accounting for around only 10% of parliamentary members. In an ongoing bid to improve women's parliamentary representation, campaigners continue to fight for the Women's Reservation Bill (which proposes a 33% reservation of seats for women) to be passed.

Although the professions are still very much male dominated, women are steadily making inroads, especially in urban centres. Kerala was India's first state to break societal norms by recruiting female police officers back in 1938. It was also the first state to establish an all-female police station (1973). For village women it's much more difficult to get ahead, but groups such as the Self-Employed Women's Association (SEWA) in Gujarat have shown what's possible. Here, socially disadvantaged women have been organised into unions, offering at least some lobbying power against discriminatory and exploitative work practices (see the boxed text, p726).

Sati: A Study of Widow Burning in India by Sakuntala Narasimhan looks at the startling history of sati (widow's suicide on her husband's funeral pyre; now banned) on the subcontinent.

In low-income families girls can be regarded as a liability because at marriage a dowry must often be supplied, posing an immense financial burden. For the urban, middle-class woman, life is materially much more comfortable, but pressures still exist. Broadly speaking, she is far more likely to be given an education, but once married is still usually expected to 'fit in' with her in-laws and be a homemaker above all else. Like her village counterpart, if she fails to live up to expectations – even if it's just not being able to produce a grandson – the consequences can sometimes be dire, as demonstrated by the practice of 'bride burning', wherein women are doused with flammable liquid by their husband or husband's family and set alight. It's claimed that for every reported case, around 250 go unreported and that less than 10% of the reported cases are pursued through the legal system.

According to reports, every six hours a married woman in India is beaten or burnt to death, or emotionally harassed to the point of suicide. In October 2006, following persistent civil women's rights campaigns, the Indian parliament passed a landmark bill (on top of existing legislation) which gives women who are suffering domestic violence increased protection and rights. Prior to this legislation, although Indian women could lodge police complaints against abusive spouses, they were not automatically entitled to a share of the marital property or to ongoing financial support. The new law purports that any form of physical, sexual (including marital rape), emotional and economic abuse entails not only domestic violence, but also human rights violations. Perpetrators face imprisonment and fines. Under the new law, abused women are now legally permitted to remain in the marital house; in the past many were thrown out and made destitute. In addition, the law prohibits emotional and physical bullying in relation to dowry demands. Although the government has been widely lauded for taking this long-overdue step, critics point out that a sizable proportion of women (especially in rural areas) will remain oblivious of their new rights until and unless there are sufficient government-sponsored awareness programmes. They also suggest that many women, especially those outside India's larger cities, will be too frightened to seek legal protection because of the social stigma and alienation that is often a consequence of speaking out.

Although the constitution allows for divorcées (and widows) to remarry, few do so, simply because divorcées are generally considered outcasts from society. Even a woman's own family will often turn its back on a wife who seeks divorce. Divorce rates in India are among the worlds lowest, despite having risen from seven in 1000 in 1991 to 11 in 1000 in 2004. Although no reliable post-2004 statistics are yet available, divorce rates are reportedly growing by 15% per annum, with most cases registered in urban India.

Although sexual harassment has increased in recent years, India has fewer reported sex crimes than most Western nations. Authorities claim a rape occurs every 30 minutes in India (in the US it averages one every two minutes), with around 50% of victims aged under 18. Statistics can be deceiving, as most rapes in India go unreported. It's estimated that only one in every 70 rape cases is registered with authorities, with only 20% of the accused being convicted.

ARTS

Artistic beauty lies around almost every corner, whether it's the garishly painted trucks rattling down dusty rural roads or the exquisite, spidery body art of mehndi (henna). Indeed, a glowing highlight of subcontinental travel is its wealth of art treasures, from ancient temple architecture to the dynamic performing-arts scene.

Contemporary Indian artists have fused historical design elements with edgy modern influences, creating art (and music) that has received worldwide acclaim.

Dance

Dance is an ancient Indian art form and is traditionally linked to mythology and classical literature. Dance can be divided into two main forms: classical and folk.

Classical dance is essentially based on well-defined traditional disciplines and includes the following:

- Bharata Natyam (also spelt bharatanatyam), which originated in Tamil Nadu, has been embraced throughout India.
- Kathakali, which has its roots in Kerala, is sometimes referred to as 'dance' but essentially is not – see the boxed text, p1011.
- Kathak, which has Hindu and Islamic influences, and was particularly popular with the Mughals. Kathak suffered a period of notoriety when it moved from the courts into houses where nautch (dancing) girls tantalised audiences with renditions of the Krishna and Radha love story. It was restored as a serious art form in the early 20th century.
- Manipuri, which has a delicate, lyrical flavour, hails from Manipur. It attracted a wider audience in the 1920s when the Bengali writer Rabindranath Tagore invited one of its most revered exponents to teach at Shantiniketan (West Bengal).
- Kuchipudi is a 17th-century dance-drama that originated in the Andhra Pradesh village from which it takes its name. The story centres on the envious wife of Krishna.
- Odissi, claimed to be India's oldest classical dance form, was originally a temple art, and was later also performed at royal courts.

Indian Classical Dance by Leela Venkataraman and Avinash Pasricha is a lavishly illustrated book with good descriptions about the various Indian dance forms, including Bharata Natyam, Odissi, Kuchipudi and Kathakali.

India's second major dance form, folk, is widespread and varied. It ranges from the high-spirited bhangra dance hailing from Punjab (see the boxed text, opposite) to the theatrical dummy horse dances of Karnataka and Tamil Nadu and the graceful fishers' dance of Orissa.

Pioneers of modern dance forms in India include Uday Shankar (older brother of sitar master Ravi), who once partnered Russian ballerina Anna Pavlova. Rabindranath Tagore was another innovator; in 1901 he set up a school at Shantiniketan (p522) that promoted the arts, including dance.

Music

Indian classical music traces its roots back to Vedic times, when religious poems chanted by priests were first collated in an anthology called the Rig-Veda. Over the millennia classical music has been shaped by many influences, and the legacy today is Carnatic (characteristic of South India) and Hindustani (the classical style of North India) music. With common origins, both share a number of features. Both use the raga (the melodic shape of the music) and tala (the rhythmic meter characterised by the number of beats); tintal, for example, has a tala of 16 beats. The audience follows the tala by clapping at the appropriate beat, which in tintal is at beats one, five and 13. There's no clap at the beat of nine; that's the khali (empty section), which is indicated by a wave of the hand. Both the raga and the tala are used as a basis for composition and improvisation.

Both Carnatic and Hindustani music are performed by small ensembles, generally comprising three to six musicians, and both have many instruments in common. There's no fixed pitch, but there are differences between the two styles. Hindustani has been more heavily influenced by Persian musical conventions (a result of Mughal rule); Carnatic music, as it developed in South India, cleaves more closely to theory. The most striking difference, at least for those unfamiliar with India's classical forms, is Carnatic's greater use of voice.

One of the best-known Indian instruments is the sitar (large stringed instrument) with which the soloist plays the raga. Other stringed instruments include the sarod (which is plucked) and the sarangi (which is played with a bow). Also popular is the tabla (twin drums), which provides the tala. The drone, which runs on two basic notes, is provided by the oboelike shehnai or the stringed tampura (also spelt tamboura). The hand-pumped keyboard harmonium is used as a secondary melody instrument for vocal music.

Indian regional folk music is widespread and varied. Wandering musicians, magicians, snake charmers and storytellers often use song to entertain their audiences; the storyteller usually sings the tales from the great epics.

In North India you may come across Qawwali (Islamic devotional singing), performed at mosques or at musical concerts. Qawwali concerts usually take the form of a mehfil (gathering) with a lead singer, second singer, harmonium and tabla players and a thunderous chorus of junior singers and clappers, all sitting cross-legged on the floor. The singer whips up the audience with favourite lines of poetry, dramatic hand gestures and religious phrases as the two voices weave in and out, bouncing off each other to create an improvised, surging sound. On command the chorus dives in with a hypnotic and rhythmic refrain. Members of the audience sway and shout out in ecstatic appreciation.

A completely different genre altogether, filmi music entails musical scores from Bollywood movies. These days, a lot of filmi music consists of rather cheesy pop-techno tunes, rather than the lyrically poetic and mellow melodies of old times. Modern (slower paced) love serenades also feature among the predominantly hyperactive dance songs. With

BHANGRA

Originating in the north Indian state of Punjab, bhangra is a wildly rhythmic and innovative form of subcontinental music and dance. It first came about as part of Punjab's harvest-festival celebrations (dating back to around the 14th century) then later appeared at weddings and other joyous occasions.

In terms of dance movements, there are different variations but most entail the arms being held high in the air coupled with the energetic shaking of the shoulders and intermittent kicking of the legs. More traditional forms involve brightly costumed participants dancing in a circle. The most prominent musical instrument used in bhangra is the dhol (a traditional two-sided drum), while accompanying lyrics tend to revolve around the themes of love, marriage and assorted social issues.

In the 1980s and '90s, inventive fusion versions of traditional bhangra (which include elements of hip-hop, disco, techno, rap, House and reggae) made big waves on both the domestic and international music/dance arenas, especially in the UK.

Bollywood cranking out hundreds of movies a year, it's hardly surprising that filmi hits tend to come and go in the wink of an eye. To ascertain the latest filmi favourites as well as in-vogue Indian pop singers, simply ask at any music store.

Radio and TV have played a paramount role in broadcasting different music styles – from soothing bhajans to booming Bollywood hits – to even the remotest corners of India.

Cinema

India's film industry was born in 1897 when the first Indian-made motion picture, Panorama of Calcutta, was screened in Kolkata. India's first feature film, Raja Harishchandra, was made in the silent era in 1913 and it's ultimately from this that Indian cinema traces its vibrant lineage.

Today, India's film industry is the biggest in the world – larger than Hollywood – and Mumbai, the Hindi-language film capital, is affectionately dubbed 'Bollywood'. Bollywood has a worldwide audience of around 3.7 billion, as compared with Hollywood's estimated 2.6 billion. India's other major film-producing centres include Chennai, Hyderabad and Bengaluru, with a number of other centres producing films in their own regional vernaculars. Bollywood movies in particular have a huge Non-Resident Indian (NRI) following, which has largely been responsible for the recent success of Indian cinema on the international arena.

On average, 900 feature films are produced annually in India, each costing anywhere between Rs 2 million and upwards of Rs 500 million, although only a small percentage yield healthy profits. Big-budget films are often partly or entirely shot abroad, with some countries aggressively wooing Indian production companies because of the spin-off tourism revenue these films generate. Switzerland, with its lofty snow-capped mountains, has been particularly popular with Indian filmmakers in search of a credible Kashmir lookalike (picturesque but politically unstable Kashmir is too risky for shooting films).

Encyclopedia of Indian Cinema by Ashish Rajadhyaksha and Paul Willemen comprehensively chronicles India's cinema history, spanning from 1897 to the 21st century.

Broadly speaking, there are two categories of Indian films. Most prominent is the mainstream movie – three hours and still running, these blockbusters are often tear-jerkers and are packed with dramatic twists interspersed with copious song-and-dance performances. There aren't explicit sex or kissing scenes (although nowadays smooching is creeping into some films) in Indian films made for the local market; however, lack of nudity is often compensated for by heroines writhing to music in clinging wet saris.

The second Indian film genre is art house, which adopts Indian 'reality' as its base. The images are a faithful reproduction of what one sees in the subcontinent and the idiom in which it is presented is usually a Western one. Generally speaking they are, or at least supposed to be, socially and politically relevant. Usually made on infinitely smaller budgets than their commercial cousins, these films are the ones that win kudos at international film festivals. One example is India-born Canadian film-maker Deepa Mehta's widely acclaimed trilogy, Earth, Fire and Water. Although these films received accolades around the world – including a Best Foreign Language Film Oscar nomination for Water in 2007 – Mehta faced unexpected obstacles and widespread criticism back in India. For instance, in 2000, a few days into the initial Varanasi-based shoot for Water, Mehta's crew was forced to abruptly pack up and leave. Set in 1938 in Varanasi, the script concerned the sorry plight of Hindu widows and some of its themes did not sit comfortably with Hindu nationalists, who demanded a stop to filming. Mehta later resumed shooting in Sri Lanka and Water eventually made its debut, amid rave reviews, in 2005. Mehta's controversial film Fire also faced stiff opposition in India for its lesbian themes (see p60) with some nationalists even burning down cinemas that chose to screen the film, claiming that its themes maligned Hinduism and religiously revered figures (the screen names of the two lead female characters are Sita and Radha).

Literature

India has a long tradition of Sanskrit literature, although works in the vernacular have contributed to a particularly rich legacy. In fact, it's claimed there are as many literary traditions as there are written languages.

Bengalis are credited with producing some of India's most celebrated literature, a movement often referred to as the Indian or Bengal Renaissance, which flourished from the 19th century with works by Bankimchandra Chatterjee. But the man who to this day is credited with propelling India's cultural richness onto the world stage is Rabindranath Tagore, a Bengali who was awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1913 for Gitanjali (see the boxed text, opposite).

India boasts an ever-growing number of internationally acclaimed authors who are especially revered for evoking a sense of place and emotion through deliciously sensuous and insightful language. Some particularly prominent writers include Vikram Seth, best known for his award-winning epic novel A Suitable Boy, and Amitav Ghosh, who has won a number of awards including the Prix Medici Etranger (one of France's top literary awards) with his work The Circle of Reason, and the Sahitya Akademi Award (India's most esteemed literary prize) for The Shadow Lines.

For details about English-language Indian literature, from historical to contemporary times, check out Indian English Literature (www.indianenglishliterature.com).

RK Narayan received various awards for his novels, many of which centre on the fictitious South Indian town of Malgudi – some of his best-known works include Malgudi Schooldays: The Adventures of Swami and his Friends, The Guide, Waiting for the Mahatma and The Painter of Signs.

India's latest shining literary star is India-born Kiran Desai who won the 2006 Man Booker Prize for her superb novel, The Inheritance of Loss, which, through a handful of engaging characters, intimately explores a gamut of issues including migration, globalisation, economic disparity and identity. Her first novel, Hullabaloo in the Guava Orchard, was also widely applauded.

RABINDRANATH TAGORE

The brilliant and prolific poet, writer, artist and patriot Rabindranath Tagore (or 'Rabi Babu' as he's known to Bengalis) has had an unparalleled impact on Bengali culture. Born to a wealthy, prominent family in Kolkata (Calcutta) in 1861, he began writing as a young boy and never stopped, dictating his last poem only hours before his death in 1941.

Tagore is also credited with introducing India's historical and cultural greatness to the Western world. He won the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1913 with his mystical collection of poems Gitanjali (Song Offering), and in later years his lecture tours saw him carrying his message of human unity around Asia, America and Europe.

But for all his internationalism, Tagore's heart was firmly rooted in his homeland; a truth reflected in his many popular songs, sung by the masses, and in the lyrics of the national anthems of both India and Bangladesh. In 1915 Tagore was awarded a knighthood by the British, but he surrendered it in 1919 as a protest against the Amritsar massacre (see p48).

For a taste of Tagore's work, read his Selected Short Stories.

Kiran Desai, who is the youngest woman to ever win the Booker Prize, is the daughter of the award-winning Indian novelist Anita Desai, who has thrice been a Booker Prize nominee. In 1997, Keralan-born Arundhati Roy won the Booker Prize for The God of Small Things.

Trinidad-born Indian writer VS Naipaul has written widely about India and his book A Million Mutinies Now has to be one of the most penetrating insights into Indian life. Naipaul has won many awards including the Booker Prize (1971) and the Nobel Prize for Literature (2001). Also of wide international repute is Mumbai-born Salman Rushdie, who bagged the Booker Prize in 1981 for Midnight's Children. UK-born Bengali writer Jhumpa Lahiri won the 2000 Pulitzer Prize for Fiction for Interpreter of Maladies, a tremendous collection of short stories.

Architecture

Travellers will come across various forms of exquisite temple architecture, India's most striking and revered form of construction. Although none of the wooden (occasionally brick) temples built in early times have survived the vagaries of the climate, by the advent of the Guptas (4th to 6th centuries AD) of North India, sacred structures of a new type were being constructed, and these set the standard for temples for several hundred years.

For Hindus, the square is the perfect shape and complex rules govern the location, design and building of each temple, based on numerology, astrology, astronomy and religious law. Essentially, a temple is a map of the universe. At the centre is an unadorned space, the garbhagriha (inner shrine), which is symbolic of the 'womb-cave' from which the universe emerged. This provides a residence for the deity to which the temple is dedicated.

Architecture buffs will appreciate Masterpieces of Traditional Indian Architecture by Satish Grover and The History of Architecture in India by Christopher Tadgell, both of which include insights into temple architecture.

Above the shrine rises a superstructure known as a vimana in South India, and a sikhara in North India. The sikhara is curvilinear and topped with a grooved disk, on which sits a pot-shaped finial, while the vimana is stepped, with the grooved disk being replaced with a solid dome. Some temples have a mandapa (temple forechamber) connected to the sanctum by vestibules. These mandapas may also contain vimanas or sikharas.

A gopuram is a soaring pyramidal gateway tower of a Dravidian temple. The towering gopurams of various South Indian temple complexes (eg Madurai's Sri Meenakshi Temple – p1082) took ornamentation and monumentalism to new levels.

TEMPLE TANKS

Commonly used for ritual bathing and religious ceremonies, as well as adding aesthetic appeal to places of worship, temple tanks have long been a focal point of temple activity.

These often-vast, angular, engineered reservoirs of water, sometimes fed by rain, sometimes fed – via a complicated drainage system – by rivers, serve both sacred and secular purposes. The waters of some temple tanks are believed to have extraordinary healing properties, while others are said to have the power to wash away sins.

Devotees (as well as travellers) may be required to wash their hands and feet in a temple tank before entering a place of worship.

From the outside, Jain temples can resemble Hindu ones, but inside they're often a riot of sculptural ornamentation, the very opposite of ascetic austerity. Meanwhile, Sikh gurdwaras can usually be identified by a nishan sahib (flagpole) flying a triangular flag with the Sikh insignia. Amritsar's sublime Golden Temple (p271) is Sikhism's holiest shrine.

Stupas, which characterise Buddhist places of worship, essentially evolved from burial mounds. They served as repositories for relics of the Buddha and, later, other venerated souls. A relatively recent innovation is the addition of a chaitya (hall) leading up to the stupa itself. Bodhgaya (p557), where the Buddha attained enlightenment, is an auspicious Buddhist centre. The gompas (Buddhist monasteries) found in Ladakh and Dharamsala are characterised by distinctly Tibetan motifs (see also the boxed text, p372).

India's Muslim invaders contributed their own architectural conventions, including arched cloisters and domes. The Mughals uniquely melded Persian, Indian and provincial styles. Examples include the tomb of Humayun in Delhi (p130), the fort at Agra (p400) and the city of Fatehpur Sikri (p408). But it is Shah Jahan who was responsible for some of India's most spectacular architectural creations, most notably the jaw-dropping Taj Mahal (p399).

One of the most striking differences between Hinduism and Islam is religious imagery. While Islamic art eschews any hint of idolatry or portrayal of God, it has evolved a rich heritage of calligraphic and decorative designs. In terms of mosque architecture, the basic design elements are similar worldwide. A large hall is dedicated to communal prayer and within the hall is a mihrab (niche) indicating the direction of Mecca. The faithful are called to prayer from minarets, placed at cardinal points.

Churches in India reflect the fashions and trends of typically European ecclesiastical architecture with many also displaying Hindu decorative flourishes. The Portuguese, among others, made impressive attempts to replicate the great churches and cathedrals of their day.

Painting

Around 1500 years ago artists covered the walls and ceilings of the Ajanta caves (p812) in western India with scenes from Buddha's life. The figures are endowed with an unusual freedom and grace, and contrast with the next major style that emerged from this part of India in the 11th century.

India's Jain community created some particularly lavish temple art. However, after the Muslim conquest of Gujarat in 1299, the Jains turned their attention to illustrated manuscripts, which could be hidden away. These manuscripts are the only known form of Indian painting that survived the Islamic conquest of North India.

The Indo-Persian style – characterised by geometric design coupled with flowing form – developed from Islamic royal courts, although the depiction

MAGNIFICENT MEHNDI

Mehndi is the traditional art of painting a woman's hands (and sometimes feet) with intricate henna designs for auspicious ceremonies such as marriage. If quality henna is used, the design, which is orange-brown, can last up to one month. The henna usually fades faster the more you wash it and apply lotion.

In touristy areas, mehndi-wallahs are adept at doing henna tattoo 'bands' on the arms, legs and even the navel area. If you're thinking about getting mehndi applied, allow at least a couple of hours for the design process and required drying time (during drying you can't use your hennaed hands).

It's always wise to request the artist to do a 'test' spot on your arm before proceeding, as nowadays some dyes contain chemicals that can cause allergies or even permanent scarring. If good henna is used, you should not feel any pain during or after the procedure.

of the elongated eye is one convention that seems to have been retained from indigenous sources. The Persian influence blossomed when artisans fled to India following the 1507 Uzbek attack on Herat (in present-day Afghanistan), and with trade and gift-swapping between the Persian city of Shiraz, an established centre for miniature production, and Indian provincial sultans.

The 1526 victory by Babur at the Battle of Panipat ushered in the era of the Mughals in India. Although Babur and his son Humayun were both patrons of the arts, it's Humayun's son Akbar who is generally credited with developing the characteristic Mughal style. This painting style, often in colourful miniature form, largely depicts court life, architecture, battle and hunting scenes, as well as detailed portraits. Akbar recruited artists from far and wide, and artistic endeavour first centred on the production of illustrated manuscripts (topics varied from history to mythology), but later broadened into portraiture and the glorification of everyday events. European paintings influenced some artists, and this influence occasionally reveals itself in experiments with motifs and perspective.

Akbar's son Jehangir also patronised painting, but he preferred portraiture, and his fascination with natural science resulted in a vibrant legacy of paintings of flowers and animals. Under Jehangir's son Shah Jahan, the Mughal style became less fluid, and although the bright colouring was eye-catching, the paintings lacked the vigour of before.

Various schools of miniature painting (small paintings crammed with detail) emerged in Rajasthan from around the 17th century. The subject matter ranged from royal processions to shikar (hunting expeditions), with many artists influenced by Mughal styles. The intense colours, still evident today in miniatures and frescoes in some Indian palaces, were often derived from crushed semiprecious stones, while the gold and silver colouring is in fact finely pounded pure gold and silver leaf.

Indian Art by Roy Craven provides a sound overview of India's art history, tracing its early beginnings in the Indus Valley to the development of various forms of Hindu, Islamic and Buddhist art.

By the 19th century, painting in North India was notably influenced by Western styles (especially English watercolours), giving rise to what has been dubbed the Company School, which had its centre in Delhi.

In the 21st century, paintings by contemporary Indian artists have been selling at record numbers (and prices) around the world. One very successful online art auction house, the Mumbai-based Saffronart (www.saffronart.com) has reportedly surpassed heavyweights such as Sotheby's and Christie's in terms of its online Indian art sales. Online auctions promote feisty global bidding wars, largely accounting for the high success rate of Saffronart, which also previews its paintings in Mumbai and New York prior to its major cyber auctions. Many bidders are wealthy NRIs who not only appreciate Indian art, but have also recognised its investment potential. However there is also mounting demand from non-Indian collectors, with spiralling sales in Europe, the USA, UK, Southeast Asia and the Middle East. International auction houses are descending upon India, to either set up offices or secure gallery alliances, in order to grab a piece of the action of what they have identified as a major growth market. Although the bulk of demand, on both the domestic and international fronts, is for senior Indian artists' works, such as those of Francis Newton Souza, Tyeb Mehta, Syed Haider Raza, Akbar Padamsee, Ram Kumar and Maqbool Fida Husain, there's an escalating interest in young emerging Indian artists.

KOLAMS

Kolams, the striking and breathtakingly intricate rice-flour designs (also called rangoli) that adorn thresholds, especially in South India, are both auspicious and symbolic. Kolams are traditionally drawn at sunrise and are sometimes made of rice-flour paste, which may be eaten by little creatures – symbolising a reverence for even the smallest living things. Deities are deemed to be attracted to a beautiful kolam, which may also signal to sadhus (spiritual men) that they will be offered food at a particular house. Some people believe that kolams protect against the evil eye.

Sprinkled with sumptuous colour illustrations, Traditional Indian Textiles by John Gillow and Nicholas Barnard explores India's stunning regional textiles and includes sections on tie-dye, weaving, beadwork, brocades, natural dyes and even camel girths.

Handicrafts

Over the centuries India's many ethnic groups have spawned a vivid artistic heritage that is both inventive and spiritually significant. Many crafts fulfil a practical need as much as an aesthetic one.

Crafts aren't confined to their region of origin – artists migrate and have sometimes been influenced by the ideas of other regions – which means you can come across, for example, a Kashmiri handicraft emporium anywhere in India.

There's a vast range of handicrafts produced in India, with standouts including ceramics, jewellery, leatherwork, metalwork, stone carving, papier-mâché, woodwork and a dazzling array of textiles. For detailed information about what's on offer, see p1144.

SPORT

Cricket

Cricket is, without a doubt, India's most beloved sport. Travellers who show even a slight interest in the game are likely to spark passionate conversations with locals from all walks of life. Indeed, cricket is more than just a sport – it's a matter of enormous national pride, especially evident whenever India plays against Pakistan. Matches between these two countries – which have had rocky relations since Independence – attract frenzied support, and the players of both sides are under colossal pressure to do their country proud.

Today cricket is big business in India, attracting juicy sponsorship deals and celebrity status for its players, especially for high-profile cricketers such as star batsman Sachin Tendulkar and Sikh ace-bowler Harbhajan Singh (fondly dubbed the 'turbanator'). The sport has not been without its dark side though, with Indian cricketers among those embroiled in match-fixing scandals some years back.

International matches are played at various Indian centres (usually from October to April), including Mumbai's Wankhede Stadium (p791). Match tickets are usually advertised in the local press (and often on the internet) a few weeks in advance.

India's first recorded cricket match was in 1721. It won its first test series in 1952 at Chennai against England.

Tennis

When it comes to the world of tennis, the biggest success story for India is the doubles team of Leander Paes and Mahesh Bhupathi, who won Wimbledon's prestigious title in 1999 – the first Indians ever to do so. Among more recent wins, Paes (partnered by the Czech Republic's Martin Damm) nabbed the 2006 US Open men's doubles, while Bhupathi (partnered by Switzerland's Martina Hingis) seized the 2006 Australian Open's mixed doubles.

Meanwhile, at the 2005 Dubai Open, Indian wild card Sania Mirza made waves when she thrashed US Open champion Svetlana Kuznetsova. Mirza, then ranked 97th, 90 spots behind Kuznetsova, became the first Indian woman to win a Women's Tennis Association Tour title. In the 2006 Doha Asian Games, Mirza won silver in the women's singles category and gold in the mixed doubles (her partner was Leander Paes). In early 2007 Sania Mirza's world ranking was 53rd in singles, 25th in doubles.

Polo

Polo flourished in India until Independence (especially among Indian royalty), after which patronage sharply declined due to lack of funds. However, today there's a renewed interest in the game thanks to beefed-up sponsorship, although it still remains an elite game and consequently fails to attract widespread public interest.

Travellers can catch a polo match, and hobnob with high society, during the cooler winter months at centres that include Delhi, Jaipur, Kolkata and Mumbai (check local newspapers for details). Polo is also popular in Ladakh (see p376).

It's believed that Emperor Akbar first introduced rules to the game, but polo, as it's played today, was largely influenced by a British cavalry regiment stationed in India during the 1870s. A set of international rules was implemented after WWI. One of the world's oldest polo clubs, established in 1862, is in Kolkata.

Hockey

Hockey doesn't enjoy the same following it once did, partly due to the unassailable popularity of cricket, which snatches most of India's sponsorship funding.

Some believe that the decline of hockey is largely due to the media, as the sport flourished in India before the live TV era; between 1928 and 1956, India won six consecutive Olympic gold medals (it has had none since 1980).

There have been recent initiatives aimed at generating renewed interest in the game, with high-profile hockey clubs encouraging high-school and university students to join, resulting in some success.

For those keen to tap into the hockey scene, two recommended websites are www.indianhockey.com and www.bharatiyahockey.org.

> Through scintillating text and pictures, The Illustrated History of Indian Cricket by Boria Majumdar adeptly explores this popular sport, from its origins right up to modern times.

Other Sports

The world's second most populous nation has copped derisive criticism for its dismal performances in recent Olympic Games, with critics pointing the finger at paltry sponsorship commitment and lack of public interest. The weightlifter, Karnam Malleswari, was the only Indian to win a medal (bronze) at the 2000 Sydney Olympic Games, making her the first Indian woman to ever win an Olympic medal. Meanwhile, at the 2004 Athens Olympics, India only managed one medal (silver), won by Rajyavardhan Singh Rathore for the men's double-trap shooting.

Football (soccer) has a reasonably strong following, especially in the country's east and south. In 2007 India slipped to the 165th spot in the FIFA world rankings.

Horse racing, held primarily in the cooler winter months, is especially popular in Kolkata and Mumbai, but there are also tracks in other major cities (check locally to see if any events are taking place during the time of your visit).

Some traditional sports that have survived over time include kho-kho and kabaddi, both of which are essentially elaborate games of tag.

MEDIA

Despite often having allegiances to particular political parties, India's extensive print media enjoys widespread freedom of expression. There are more than 4500 daily newspapers and many thousand more weekly/monthly magazines and journals, in a range of vernaculars. For major English-language dailies and news magazines, see p1125. Most major publications have websites.

India's oldest English-language newspaper is the Times of India (title since 1850), first published biweekly in 1838 as the Bombay Times & Journal of Commerce.

Indian TV was at one time dominated by the dreary national (government-controlled) broadcaster Doordarshan (www.ddindia.gov.in); the introduction of satellite TV in the early 1990s revolutionised viewing habits by introducing several dozen channels. Satellite TV offers a great variety of programming, from Indian and American soap operas to Hindi- and English-language current affairs. There are also a number of Indian regional channels broadcasting in local dialects.

Programmes on the government-controlled All India Radio (AIR; www.allindiaradio.org), one of the world's biggest radio service providers, include news, interviews, music and sport. There are also mushrooming nationwide private channels that offer more variety than the government broadcaster, including talkback on subjects, such as marital problems, once considered taboo.

Consult local newspapers for TV and radio programme details.

Environment

THE LAND

India covers an area of 3,287,263 sq km, and encompasses some of the most dramatic landscapes on earth – steamy jungles and tropical rainforest, waterlogged marshlands and arid deserts, and the soaring peaks of the Himalaya.

The Himalaya

Creating an impregnable boundary between India and its neighbours to the north, the Himalaya are the world's highest mountains, as well as being some of the youngest. This mighty ridge began to rise in the Jurassic era (80 million years ago) when Laurasia, the main landmass in the northern hemisphere, tore away from Gondwanaland in the southern hemisphere. The Indian landmass was pulled across the divide by plate tectonics and thrust against the soft sedimentary crust of Laurasia, buckling the plate upwards to form the Himalaya. Fossils of sea creatures from this time are still found at 5000m above sea level. This continental collision is an ongoing process and the Himalaya are growing in height by up to 8mm each year. The highest point in India is Khangchendzonga (8598m) in Sikkim – the world's third-highest mountain.

The World Wide Fund for Nature (WWF; www.wwfindia.org) promotes environmental protection and wildlife conservation in India; see the website for offices around the country.

Although it looks like a continuous range on a map, the Himalaya is actually a series of interlocking ridges, separated by broad valleys. Until the technology was created to run roads through the Himalaya, many of these valleys existed in complete isolation, preserving a diverse series of mountain cultures – Muslims dominate Kashmir, while Buddhists hold sway in Zanskar, Ladakh, Lahaul, Spiti, Sikkim and western Arunachal Pradesh, and Hindus dominate most of Himachal Pradesh and Uttarakhand (Uttaranchal). The final southern range of the Himalaya, the Siwalik Hills, ends abruptly in the great northern plain in the northwest.

The Northern Plains

Covering most of central India, the vast northern plains drop just 200m between Delhi and the waterlogged marshlands of West Bengal. The sacred Ganges River (Ganga) rises in Gangotri and joins forces with a host of tributaries as it crosses the northern plain, finally merging with the Brahmaputra River from India's northeast. In the far northwest, the Indus River defines the topography of Ladakh, flowing northwest into Pakistan.

Northern India is still a volatile area for tectonic activity – Kashmir was rocked by a devastating earthquake in October 2005, killing 80,000 people; see p360.

The Northeast

The northeast boundary of India is made up of densely folded hills that spill over into neighbouring Myanmar (Burma). Until the creation of East Pakistan (present-day Bangladesh), Indian territory extended to the Bay of Bengal. In culture and appearance, most states in the northeast are closer to Southeast Asia than the rest of India.

The Centre & the South

Heading south from the northern plains, the land rises to the Deccan plateau, marking the divide between the Mughal heartlands of North India and the Dravidian civilisations of the south. The plateau is bound on either side by the Western and Eastern Ghats, which come together in Tamil Nadu to form the Nilgiri Hills. The major rivers of the south are the Godavari and the Krishna, which rise in the Western Ghats and empty into the Bay of Bengal.

The West

The Himalaya form a natural land border between India and Pakistan in the northern state of Jammu and Kashmir. Further south, the plains of Punjab merge into the Great Thar Desert in western Rajasthan, the site of a vanished prehistoric forest. Gujarat in the far west of India is separated from Sindh (Pakistan) by the Rann of Kutch – in the wet season, this brackish marshland floods to become a vast inland sea, but in the dry season (November to April) the waters recede, leaving isolated islands perched on an expansive plain.

The Andaman and Nicobar Islands comprise 572 islands and are the peaks of a vast submerged mountain range extending almost 1000km between Myanmar (Burma) and Sumatra.

The Islands

Offshore from India are a series of island groups, politically part of India but geographically linked to the landmasses of Southeast Asia and islands of the Indian Ocean. The Andaman and Nicobar Islands sit far out in the Bay of Bengal, while the coral atolls of Lakshadweep (300km west of Kerala) are a northerly extension of the Maldives islands, with a land area of just 32 sq km.

WILDLIFE

With a staggering 89,451 recorded species of fauna, India has some of the richest biodiversity in the world. Understandably, wildlife watching has become one of the country's prime tourist activities and there are dozens of national parks offering opportunities to spot rare and unusual wildlife. If you're keen on getting close to nature, see the boxed text, p86, detailing where and when to view wildlife.

India's national animal is the tiger, its national bird is the peacock and its national flower is the lotus. The national emblem of India is a column topped by three Asiatic lions.

Animals

Indian wildlife is fascinating and diverse. The hills and plains of central and southern India hide a host of signature species – elephants, tigers, monkeys, leopards, antelopes and rhinos. Most of these species are severely endangered by human competition for land, water and other resources, particularly in the overpopulated plains. Elephants and buffaloes are widely pressed into service as beasts of burden, and dwindling numbers of wild elephants, as well as one-horned Indian rhinos, can be found in India's northern grasslands.

In east India, the Ganges and Yamuna Rivers merge and empty into the Bay of Bengal, creating the vast Sunderbans Delta – 80,000 sq km of swamps and watercourses that provide a home to tigers (estimated at 274 in 2004), aquatic reptiles, fish, wild boars, sea turtles and snakes. Chitals (spotted deer) have evolved the ability to secrete salt from their glands to cope with this salt-laden environment.

The deserts of Rajasthan and Gujarat provide a home for desert-adjusted species such as chinkaras (Indian gazelle), khurs (Asiatic wild asses), blackbucks (a large breed of antelope) and Indian wolves. The 1400-sq-km Sasan Gir Wildlife Sanctuary (p746) in Gujarat is the last refuge of the Asiatic lion, once found across India. Wilderness areas in the central plains provide a home to dholes (wild dogs), jackals, wolves, striped hyenas and numerous species of deer and antelope, including sambar, chitals and threatened mouse deer and muntjacs (barking deer).

India's primates range from the extremely rare hoolock gibbon and golden langur of the northeast to species which are so common as to be a pest – most notably the stocky and aggressive rhesus macaque and the elegant grey langur. In the south, the role of loitering around temples and tourist sites is filled by the bonnet macaque. Threatened species clinging on in the rainforests of the south include lion-tailed macaques, glossy black Nilgiri langurs and slender loris, an adept insect catcher with huge eyes for nocturnal hunting.

India has 238 species of snake, of which 50 are poisonous. There are various species of cobra, including the legendary king cobra, the world's largest venomous snake, which grows up to 5m. For obvious reasons, snake charmers stick to smaller species! Other poisonous snakes include the krait, Russell's viper and the saw-scaled viper. Nonvenomous snakes include the rat snake, the bright-green vine snake and the rock python. All live in the fear of the snake-killing mongoose, which has evolved ingenious techniques for hunting poisonous snakes, tricking the reptiles into striking repeatedly until they are exhausted, and then eating the head first to avoid being bitten.

Cobras are believed to have power over the monsoon and the snakes are worshipped during the Naag Panchami festival each August; to the despair of animal-rights campaigners many snakes die from exhaustion and over-feeding.

In South India, the tropical forests of the Western Ghats contain one of the rarest bats on earth – the small Salim Ali's fruit bat – as well as flying lizards (technically gliders), sloth bears, leopards, jungle cats, hornbills, parrots and hundreds of other bird species – birders should check out the reserves listed on p90. Elephants and gaurs (Indian bison) abound, and the hills are the last remaining stronghold of the endangered Nilgiri tahr, or cloud goat.

The Himalaya harbours its own hardy range of creatures. Yaks (shaggy, horned oxen weighing up to a ton) and two-humped Bactrian camels are the main domesticated animals. Wild herbivores include the urials (wild sheep) and bharals (blue sheep), kiangs (Tibetan wild ass), Himalayan ibexes (a graceful mountain antelope), Himalayan tahrs (mountain goat) and rare Tibetan antelopes. Also found here are musk deers, hunted almost to extinction for the scent produced by glands in their abdomens. Recent attempts at captive breeding near Kedarnath (Uttarakhand) are providing some hope for this threatened species.

Must-have books for bird-watchers include the Pocket Guide to Birds of the Indian Subcontinent by Richard Grimmett, Carol Inskipp and Tim Inskipp; A Birdwatchers' Guide to India by Krys Kazmierczak and Raj Singh; and The Book of Indian Birds by Salim Ali.

Predators of the Himalaya include black and brown bears, tigers, and the endangered snow leopard, an animal so elusive that many locals claim it can appear and disappear at will. Tiny populations cling on in Ladakh, Sikkim, Uttarakhand, Himachal Pradesh and Arunachal Pradesh. The rare red panda inhabits the bamboo thickets of the eastern Himalaya, particularly in Sikkim and Bhutan.

Offshore, the Lakshadweep in the Indian Ocean and the Andaman and Nicobar Islands in the Bay of Bengal preserve classic coral atoll ecosystems. Bottlenose dolphins, coral reefs, sea turtles and tropical fish flourish beneath the water, while seabirds, reptiles, amphibians and butterflies thrive on land. The Andamans' small population of elephants has been known to swim up to 3km between islands. Another oddity found here is the coconut or robber crab, a 5kg tree-climbing monster that combs the beaches for broken coconuts.

ENDANGERED SPECIES

Despite its amazing biodiversity, Indian wildlife faces a growing challenge from the exploding human population. At last count, India had 569 threatened species, comprising 247 species of plants, 89 species of mammals, 82 species of birds, 26 species of reptiles, 68 species of amphibians, 35 species of fish and 22 species of invertebrates.

The Wildlife Protection Society of India (www.wpsi-india.org) is a prominent wildlife conservation organisation campaigning for animal welfare through education, lobbying and legal action against poachers.

In 1972 the Wildlife Protection Act was introduced to stem the abuse of wildlife, followed by a string of similar pieces of legislation with bold ambitions but few teeth with which to enforce them. A rare success story has been Project Tiger, launched in 1973 to protect India's big mammals. The main threats to wildlife continue to be habitat loss due to human encroachment and poaching by criminals and even corrupt national park officials. The bandit Veerappan is believed to have killed 200 elephants and sold US$22 million of illegally harvested sandalwood during his 20-year crime spree in Tamil Nadu.

India is the only country in the world with native lions and tigers, and the forests and mountains hide significant populations of leopards, snow leopards, panthers and jungle cats. However, all these species are facing extinction from habitat loss and poaching for the lucrative trade in skins and body parts for Chinese medicine. There are thought to be fewer than 3500 tigers, 1000 snow leopards and 300 Asiatic lions still out in the wild. Spurious health benefits are linked to every part of the tiger, from the teeth to the penis, and a whole tiger carcass can fetch upwards of US$10,000. Government estimates suggest that India is losing 1% of its tigers every year to poachers.

In the early 20th century there were believed to be at least 40,000 wild tigers in India. Current estimates suggest there are fewer than 3500.

Rhinos are also threatened by the medicine trade – rhino horn is highly valued as an aphrodisiac and as a material for making handles for daggers in the Persian Gulf. Elephants are regularly poached for ivory – we implore you not to support this trade by buying ivory souvenirs. Various species of deer are threatened by hunting for food and trophies, and the chiru, or Tibetan antelope, is threatened by furriers who weave its fur into wool for expensive shahtoosh shawls.

India's bear species are under threat and sloth bears are widely poached to be used as 'dancing bears' at tourist centres such as Agra and Jaipur – see the boxed text, p408. In the water, India's freshwater dolphins are in dire straits from pollution and human competition. The sea turtle population on the Orissa coast also faces problems – see the boxed text, p652.

Plants

India's total forest cover is estimated to be around 20% of the total geographic coverage, despite an optimistic target of 33% set by the Forest Survey of India. The country boasts 49,219 plant species, of which around 5200 are endemic.

Around 2000 plant species are described in Ayurveda (traditional Indian herbal medicine) and a further 91 plant species are used in amchi (Tibetan traditional medicine).

Tropical forests occur in the Western Ghats of South India and in the Northeast States, as well as the Andaman and Nicobar Islands, but Indian rosewood, Malabar kino and teak have been virtually cleared from some part of the Western Ghats, and sandalwood is endangered across India due to illegal logging for the incense and wood-carving industries. A bigger threat to forestry is firewood harvesting, often carried out by landless peasants who squat on gazetted government land.

The foothills of the Himalaya preserve classic alpine species, including blue pine and deodar (Himalayan cedar) and deciduous forests of apple, chestnut, birch, plum and cinnamon. Kashmir is the only home of the chinar (Indian plane) while poplars are the main tree species in the high-altitude deserts of Zanskar, Ladakh, Lahaul and Spiti. Above the snowline hardy plants such as anemones, edelweiss and gentians grow, while orchids appear in mountain meadows and damp southern jungles. Distinctive trees of the lowlands include the hardwood sal and the Indian banyan (fig), with its dangling aerial roots.

The Foundation for Revitalisation of Local Health Traditions has a search engine for medicinal plants at www.medicinalplants.in. Travellers with a serious interest should pick up CP Khare's Encyclopedia Of Indian Medicinal Plants.

India's hot deserts have their own unique species – the khejri tree and various strains of scrub acacia, adapted to the dry conditions. The hardy sea buckthorn bush is the main fruiting shrub in the deserts of the Himalaya. All these indigenous species face a challenge from introduced species such as the eucalyptus, a water-hungry species introduced by the British to dry out malarial swamps.

NATIONAL PARKS & WILDLIFE SANCTUARIES

India has 93 national parks and 486 wildlife sanctuaries, which constitute about 4.7% of Indian territory. There are also 14 biosphere reserves, overlapping many of the national parks and sanctuaries, providing safe migration channels for wildlife and allowing scientists to monitor biodiversity.

We strongly recommend visiting at least one national park/sanctuary on your travels – the experience of coming face to face with a wild elephant, rhino or tiger will stay with you for a lifetime. Wildlife reserves tend to be off the beaten track and infrastructure can be limited – book transport and accommodation in advance, and check opening times, permit-requirements and entry fees before you visit. Many parks close to conduct a census of wildlife in the off-season and monsoon rains can make wildlife-viewing tracks inaccessible.

Almost all parks offer jeep/van tours, but you can also search for wildlife on guided treks, boat trips and elephant safaris. For various safari possibilities, see p90.

See our Indian Safari itinerary (p35) for recommended national parks or pick up a copy of Indian National Parks & Sanctuaries by Anand Khati.

ENVIRONMENTAL ISSUES

With more than one billion people, expanding industrialisation and urbanisation and chemical-intensive farming, India's environment is under threat. An estimated 65% of India's land is degraded in some way, and the government has fallen short on most of its targets for environmental protection. Many of the problems experienced today were a direct result of the Green Revolution of the 1960s when a quantum leap in agricultural output was achieved using chemical fertilisers and pesticides.

Despite numerous new environmental laws since the Bhopal disaster in 1984 (see p684), corruption continues to exacerbate environmental degradation – worst exemplified by the flagrant flouting of environmental rules by companies involved in hydroelectricity, mining, and uranium and oil exploration. Usually, the people most affected are low-caste rural farmers and Adivasis (tribal people) who have limited political representation and few resources to fight big business. Rather than decreeing from on high, some of the most successful environmental schemes have returned power to local communities through the creation of seed banks, micro-loan schemes and water-users' cooperatives. Organic and bio-dynamic farming – based on the use of natural compost and the timing of farming to lunar and other natural cycles – is also gaining ground (see www.biodynamics.in for details).

Get the inside track on Indian environmental issues at Down to Earth (www.downtoearth.org.in), an online magazine that delves into stories overlooked by the mainstream media.

India's environmental problems are depressingly familiar. Between 11% and 27% of India's agricultural output is lost due to soil degradation from over-farming, rising soil salinity, loss of tree-cover and poor irrigation. Pollution from industry, human habitation and farming is further affecting the health and quality of life for India's rural poor. The human cost is heart-rending – crushing levels of debt and poverty drive thousands of Indian farmers to suicide every year. Lurking behind all these problems is a basic Malthusian truth: there are too many people for India to support at its current level of development.

While the Indian government could undoubtedly do more, some share of blame must also fall on Western farm subsidies that artificially reduce the cost of imported produce, undermining prices for Indian farmers. Western agribusiness may also like to take a cynical bow for promoting the use of nonpropagating, genetically modified (GM) seed stocks.

As anywhere, tourists tread a fine line between providing an incentive for change and making the problem worse. Many of the environmental problems in Goa (see the boxed text, p878) are a direct result of years of irresponsible development for tourism. Always consider your environmental impact while travelling in India, including while trekking (see p98) and diving (see p94).

Air pollution in many Indian cities has been measured at more than double the maximum safe level recommended by the World Health Organization.

Air Pollution

Air pollution from industry and vehicle emissions is an ongoing concern. Indian diesel reportedly contains around 50 to 200 times more sulphur than European diesel and the ageing engines of Indian vehicles would fail most emissions tests in Europe or America. However, there have been some positive developments – Delhi and Mumbai (Bombay) have both switched over much of their public transport to Compressed Natural Gas (CNG), while Agra has pioneered the use of nonpolluting electric vehicles and closed the area around the Taj Mahal to motorised traffic. Several Indian cities have banned polluting industry completely from urban areas, though often with limited compensation for affected workers.

Noise pollution in major cities has been measured at over 90 decibels – more than one and a half times the recognised 'safe' limit. Bring earplugs!

Despite laws aimed at reducing toxic emissions, industry is still a major polluter. One of the worst industrial disasters in history occurred at Bhopal in 1984 (see the boxed text, p684). The massive growth of budget air travel is pumping even more greenhouse gases into the atmosphere – modern ideas such as carbon-balancing hold little truck in a nation embracing the freedom of the skies for the first time.

Climate Change

Changing climate patterns – linked to global carbon-emissions – have been creating dangerous extremes of weather in India. While India is a major polluter, in carbon emissions per capita it stands far behind America, Australia and Europe in the global league of polluting nations.

Elevated monsoon rainfall has caused widespread flooding and destruction, including the devastating Gujarat and Maharashtra floods in 2005. In the mountain deserts of Ladakh, increased rainfall is changing traditional farming patterns and threatening traditional mud-brick architecture. Conversely, other areas are experiencing reduced rainfall, causing drought and riots over access to water supplies. Offshore, several islands in the Lakshadweep group have been inundated by rising sea levels.

Deforestation

Since Independence, some 5.3 million hectares of Indian forests have been cleared for logging and farming or damaged by urban expansion, mining, industrialisation and river dams. The number of mangrove forests has halved since the early 1990s, reducing the nursery grounds for the fish that stock the Indian Ocean and Bay of Bengal.

India's first Five Year Plan in 1951 recognised the importance of forests for soil conservation, and various policies have been introduced to increase forest cover. Almost all have been flouted by officials, criminals and by ordinary people clearing forests for firewood and allowing grazing in forest areas. Try to minimise the use of wood-burning stoves while you travel (this is less of an issue in areas with fast growing pine species in the hills).

Denotification, a process allowing states to relax the ban on the commercial exploitation of protected areas, is another factor. Officially, the states are supposed to earmark an equivalent area for afforestation, but enforcement is lax and the land set aside may be unsuitable for forestry. On another front, invasive eucalyptus and other foreign plant species are swamping indigenous flora. Numerous small charities are working with rural communities to encourage tree planting and many religious leaders have joined the movement, including the Dalai Lama.

The popular guru Jaggi Vasudev has launched an ambitious project to plant 114 million new saplings in Tamil Nadu by 2016, increasing forest cover in the region by 10%.

Plastic Waste

Ah, plastic! What a wonderful invention. Only a small proportion of plastic products can be reused or recycled and plastic rubbish persists in the environment for 1000 years before crumbling into a polluting chemical dust. Across India, plastic bags and bottles litter streets, streams and beaches; animals choke on the waste and the plastic clogs watercourses, increasing the risk of malaria and water-borne diseases. Campaigners estimate that about 75% of plastics used are discarded within a week and only 15% are recycled.

A DAM TOO FAR?

The most controversial of India's many hydroelectric schemes is the Narmada Valley Development, a US$6 billion scheme to build 30 hydroelectric dams along the Narmada River in Madhya Pradesh, Rajasthan and Gujarat. Despite bringing benefits in terms of irrigation to thousands of villages and reducing desert encroachment into rural areas, the project will flood the tribal homelands of some 40,000 Adivasi (tribal) villagers, many of whom worship the waters as a deity. The government has promised to provide alternative accommodation, but thus far only barren land unsuitable for farming has been offered as compensation. The World Bank refused to fund the ongoing development, but Britain's Barclays Bank stepped in with loans and the Indian government has overruled every legal challenge to the development, despite some high-profile names joining the anti–Narmada Dam movement – including Booker Prize winner Arundhati Roy. For the latest developments, see the Friends of River Narmada website – www.narmada.org.

Travellers may feel that efforts to avoid plastic are futile when locals toss rubbish from every bus window, but Western companies are the driving force behind disposable packaging and the switch from glass to plastic bottles by the Indian soft-drinks industry. A number of Indian states, particularly in the hills, have banned plastic bags to try and stem the tide of plastic waste.

You can do your bit to help by purifying your own water – see p1187 – or carrying a canteen and obtaining refills of purified water from local environmental organisations – towns leading the way include Leh (p370) and McLeod Ganj (p324). Set a good example by refusing plastic bags (and explaining why!) and insisting on soft drinks in recyclable glass bottles and tea in terracotta cups at train stations.

Water Resources

Arguably the biggest threat to public health in India is inadequate access to clean drinking water and proper sanitation. With the population set to double by 2050, agricultural, industrial and domestic water usage are all expected to spiral, despite government policies designed to control water use.

Ground water is being removed at an uncontrolled rate, causing an alarming drop in water-table levels and supplies of drinking water. Simultaneously, contamination from industry is rendering ground water unsafe to drink across the country. The soft drink manufacturer Coca-Cola faced accusations that it was selling drinks containing unsafe levels of pesticides, as well as allegations over water shortages near its plants, and of farmland being polluted with industrial chemicals. Although cleared of claims about the safety of its drinks, Coco-Cola has yet to be held to account on any of the other allegations.

Rivers are also affected by runoff, industrial pollution and sewage contamination – the Sabarmati, Yamuna and Ganges are among the most polluted rivers on earth. If you fancy a ceremonial dip in the Ganges, do it in Rishikesh, before the water has flowed through a dozen crowded cities. In recent years, drought has devastated parts of the subcontinent (particularly Rajasthan and Gujarat) and has acted as a driving force for rural-to-urban migration.

Water distribution is another volatile issue. Since 1947 an estimated 35 million people in India have been displaced by major dams, mostly built for hydroelectricity projects to provide energy for this increasingly power-hungry nation. While hydroelectricity is one of the greener power sources, valleys across India are being sacrificed to create new power plants and displaced people rarely receive adequate compensation – see the boxed texts, above and p295, for more on this issue.

Every argument has two sides: the pro-Narmada Dam lobby has launched its own campaign to publicise the virtues of the project – see www.supportnarmadadam.org and www.sardarsarovardam.org.

Activities

India covers every terrain imaginable, from rainforest and deserts to towering mountains. With all this to play with, the opportunities for adventurous activities are endless. Choose from trekking, paragliding, mountaineering, jungle safaris, scuba diving, elephant rides, river boats, yoga courses, meditation…the list goes on and on. It would take a whole book to cover all the options, but some of the most popular activities are covered in the following sections.

Choosing an Operator

Regardless of what you decide to do, you need to exercise a little caution when choosing an operator. We receive regular reports of dodgy operators taking poorly equipped tourists into dangerous situations. Remember that travel agents are only middlemen and the final decisions about safety and equipment come down to the people actually operating the trip. Check out all tour operators, trekking companies and activity providers carefully. Make sure that you know in advance what you are getting, then make sure you get what you paid for.

Where possible, stick to companies that provide activities themselves, using their own guides and teaching staff. If you go through an agency, look for operators who are accredited by the Travel Agents Association of India, the Indian Association of Tour Operators or the Adventure Tour Operators Association of India. Note that dodgy operators often change their names to sound like the trusted companies – consult official tourist offices for lists of government-approved operators and seek first-hand recommendations from fellow travellers.

Always check safety equipment before you set out and make sure you know what is included in the quoted price. If anything is substandard, let the operator know. If it refuses to make the necessary changes, go with another company. For any activity, make sure that you have adequate insurance – many travel insurance policies have exclusions for risky activities, including such commonplace holiday activities as skiing, diving and trekking (see p1139).

OUTDOOR ACTIVITIES

All sorts of activities are possible in the Indian outdoors, from trekking and mountaineering to jungle safaris and white-water rafting, along with more relaxing activities such as elephant rides, boat tours and pony treks.

India Outdoors (www.indiaoutdoors.com) provides information on an incredible range of outdoor activities, from abseiling and rock-climbing to scuba diving and water skiing.

MEETING THE WILDLIFE

India has some of the most amazing flora and fauna on earth – from lumbering elephants and growling tigers to desert orchids and trailing lianas. Here are some excellent ways to get up close and personal with Indian wildlife.

Bird-Watching

India has some of the world's major bird breeding and feeding grounds. The following are prime bird-watching sites:

Andaman & Nicobar Islands Spot rare drongos and golden orioles on Havelock Island (p1118).

Gujarat Top spots for twitchers include Khijadiya Bird Sanctuary (p755), the Little Rann Sanctuary (p765) and Nal Sarovar Bird Sanctuary (p727), best from November to April.

Karnataka See storks, egrets, ibises and spoonbills at Karanji Lake Nature Park (p898), Ranganathittu Bird Sanctuary (p902), Bandipur National Park (p903) and Nagarhole National Park (p904).

Tamil Nadu There's plenty to point binoculars at in Mudumalai National Park (p1104), Calimere (Kodikkarai) Wildlife & Bird Sanctuary (p1069) and Vedantangal Bird Sanctuary (p1050). Come here from December to January for multitudinous waterfowl.
West Bengal Bird-watching tours are offered by Kalimpong's Gurudongma Tours & Travels (p546).

The website www.birding.in is a one-stop-shop for bird-watchers in India, with listings of bird-watching sites and all the species you are likely to see.

Camel Treks

Camel safaris can be arranged in desert areas across India, from one-hour joy rides to bum-numbing multiday safaris. This can be a fabulous way to experience the desert, and longer trips set up camp each night beneath the stars. Rajasthan is the best place to get the hump, but camel treks are also possible in the remote Nubra Valley in Ladakh using Bactrian (two-humped) camels left behind from the Silk Road era. Good places to arrange safaris include the Nubra Valley (p385) in Ladakh and, in Rajasthan, Bikaner (p253), Jaisalmer (p248), Khuri (p252), Osiyan (p242), Pushkar (p193) and Shekhawati (p185).

Elephant Safaris

Elephant rides provide an amazing way to get close to Indian wildlife. Many of India's national parks have their own working elephants, which can be hired for safaris into areas that are inaccessible to jeeps and walkers. You might even find yourself just metres from a snarling Bengal tiger. As well as being a childhood dream for most travellers, elephant rides are much less disturbing to wildlife than noisy jeeps. To find out the best times to visit parks, see regional chapters and the boxed text, p84.
Bihar & Jharkhand Elephant safaris tour Jharkhand's Betla (Palamau) National Park (p567).
Goa Elephant rides go through spice plantations near Ponda (p877).
Karnataka Elephant safaris go to India's largest elephant reserve at Bandipur National Park (p903) near Mysore. You can also interact with retired working elephants at Dubare Forest Reserve (p907) near Madikeri.
Kerala There are elephant rides at Periyar Wildlife Sanctuary (p988) and Neyyar Dam Sanctuary (p968) near Trivandrum.
Madhya Pradesh & Chhattisgarh Tiger-spotting elephant safaris go through Panna National Park (p681), Pench Tiger Reserve (p708), Kanha National Park (p709) and Bandhavgarh National Park (p711).
Northeast States One-horned rhinos can be spotted on elephant safaris at Kaziranga National Park (p603) and other wildlife at Manas National Park (p600).
Rajasthan Elephant rides go to the hilltop fort in Amber (p178).
Uttarakhand (Uttaranchal) Tigers are spotted on elephant rides in Corbett Tiger Reserve (p472) and Rajaji National Park (p459).
West Bengal Try the jumbo rides around Jaldhapara Wildlife Sanctuary (p527) to spot one-horned Indian rhinos.

You don't have to stop at short rides through national parks – Mark Shand describes travelling across the country by elephant in Travels On My Elephant, a compelling travelogue of a jumbo-sized adventure.

Horse Riding

Horse riding is possible in most of the hill stations in North and South India, from gentle ambles through town to more serious trails through the forest. As well as these leisure rides, horses are used as transport on many yatra (pilgrimage) trekking routes – see the regional chapters for details. Good places to saddle up include the following:

Himachal Pradesh Shimla (p285), Manali (p310), Solang Nullah (p317), Dalhousie (p332) and Khajjiar (p334).
Jammu & Kashmir Gulmarg (p360) and Pahalgam (p361).
Maharashtra Matheran (p821).
Northeast States Dibrugarh (Assam; p606).
Rajasthan Udapiur (p222) and Kumbalgarh (p228).
Tamil Nadu Kodaikanal (p1091) and Ooty (Udhagamandalam; p1100).
Uttarakhand Nainital (p475) and Mussoorie (p451).
West Bengal Darjeeling (p538) and Mirik (p528).

Jeep Safaris

As well as elephant rides, there are numerous jeep safaris visiting national parks, tribal villages and remote temples and monasteries. You can normally arrange a custom itinerary, either with travel agents or directly with local jeep drivers – see the regional chapters for information. Here are some popular options:

Bihar & Jharkhand Jeep tours go to spot wild beasties in Betla (Palamau) National Park (p567).
Gujarat Safari jeep travel to spot Asiatic lions in Sasan Gir Wildlife Sanctuary (p747) and wild ass and flamingos at Little Rann Sanctuary (p765).
Jammu & Kashmir Jeeps tour to mountain passes and monasteries around Ladakh and Zanskar (see p378 and p373).
Himachal Pradesh Jeep trips go to monasteries, isolated villages and mountain viewpoints from Kaza (p342) in Lahaul and Spiti.
Karnataka Jungle Lodges & Resorts (p881) offers safaris to Nagarhole National Park, Bandipur National Park and other reserves.
Kerala Wildlife-spotting jeep tours drive through the forests of Wayanad Wildlife Sanctuary (p1019).
Madhya Pradesh & Chhattisgarh Jeep safaris go tiger-spotting at Madhya Pradesh's national parks (see p710).
Northeast States Jeeps travel to tribal villages in the Northeast States from Guwahati (p598), or there are wildlife-spotting tours in Kaziranga National Park (p603) and Manas National Park (p601).
Orissa Animal-focused jeep safaris are offered in Similipal National Park (p656) and Badrama and Debrigarh Wildlife Sanctuaries (p656).
Rajasthan Spot wildlife by jeep in Ranthambore National Park (p198) and Sariska Reserve & National Park (p184) and the wildlife sanctuary at Kumbhalgarh (p228).
Sikkim Agencies in Gangtok (p574) arrange jeep tours to Buddhist villages and mountain valleys in north Sikkim.
Tamil Nadu Jeep tours are just one of several ways to spot the wildlife in Mudumalai National Park (p1104).
Uttarakhand Jeeps are used to spot tigers and deer in Rajaji National Park (p459) and Corbett National Park (p472).

The Wildlife Protection Society of India (www.wpsi-india.org/tiger) is campaigning to save tigers in the wild – see the website of listings of tiger reserves.

ADVENTURE ACTIVITIES

India is paradise for adrenaline junkies and fans of the great outdoors. Trekking is possible throughout the country, from the southern jungles to the wind-scoured valleys of the Himalaya. Among other adrenaline-charged activities, thrill seekers can scuba dive, paraglide, raft, climb, kayak and zorb. See the following sections for some suggestions. Remember to take out adequate insurance cover for any adventure activities before you travel.

Boat Tours

Boat tours are possible all over India – take your pick from slow river rides, languorous lake cruises or motorboat tours of offshore islands. Here are some options:

Andaman & Nicobar Islands Boat and ferry trips sail to outlying islands from Port Blair (p1116) and Mayabunder (p1121).

Goa Dolphin-spotting boat trips sail from Panaji (Panjim; p849), Fort Aguada and Candolim (p853), Calangute (p857), Arambol (p867), Colva (p872) and Palolem (p876).

West Bengal Boat tours to track tigers in the huge Sunderbans Tiger Reserve (p519).

Cultural Tours

Tours to tribal areas are permitted in several parts of India, providing a fascinating window onto the traditional way of life of India's Adivasis (tribal people). Some tours are quite exploitative but better tours employ tribal guides and try to minimise the effect of tourism on tribal people. Reputable tribal tours include the following:

Andhra Pradesh Tribal tours go to Adivasi communities around Visakhapatnam (p954).

Gujarat Stay with tribal Halepotra people in Gujarat's Shaam-e-Sarhad Rural Resort (p763) near Bhuj.

Jammu & Kashmir Travel agents in Leh (p373) can arrange tours and treks to tribal areas – also see the boxed text, p388.

Kerala Tours to Mannakudy tribal areas of Periyar Wildlife Sanctuary (p988).

Madhya Pradesh & Chhattisgarh There are tribal tours with the Chhattisgarh Tourism Board in Raipur (p712) and Jagdalpur (p713), and the Tola Trekking Club (p693) in Pachmarhi.

Northeast States You can arrange tours of fascinating tribal districts the northeast states with travel agencies in Guwahati (p598), Dibrugarh (p606), Kohima (p617), Aizawl (p623) and Bomdila (p621).

Rajasthan There are tours of Bishnoi tribal villages from Jodhpur (p237).

Uttarakhand Visits to Gujjar buffalo herders in Rajaji National Park through Mohan's Adventure Tours (p455) in Haridwar.

> Adivasis (tribal people) make up more than 8% of the Indian population – more than 84 million people – and 532 scheduled tribes are recognised in the Indian constitution.

Cycling & Motorcycling

There are some sensational organised bicycle or motorcycle tours, or you can rent a bike or motorcycle and set your own itinerary. For recommended motorcycle tours, see p1176; towns offering motorcycle hire are mentioned throughout the regional chapters. Top spots for pedal cycling include the following:

Goa Try the mountain-bike tours around Palolem (p876). Bike rental in Panaji (p849) and Colva (p872).

Dive India, the Andaman Islands' leading dive company, has a comprehensive list of dive sites on its website (www.diveindia.com/sites.html).

Diving, Snorkelling & Water Sports

The Andaman Islands are India's leading destination for scuba diving, with world-class dive sites on well-preserved coral reefs, particularly around Havelock Island. Visibility is clearest from December to March or April. On the far side of India, the Lakshadweep Islands offer more coral-atoll diving from mid-October to mid-May. Dive certification courses and recreational dives are also possible in Goa.

Growing numbers of surfers are discovering the breaks off the island of Little Andaman (p1110), with the best waves between mid-March and mid-May.

Andaman & Nicobar Islands India's best diving is around Havelock Island (p1110).
Goa There are numerous beach resorts offering diving courses, wind-surfing and other holiday waterspouts in Goa (p838).
Kerala There is world-class diving on the little-visited Lakshadweep Islands (p1024).

RESPONSIBLE DIVING

To help preserve the ecology and beauty of reefs, observe the following guidelines when diving:

- Never use anchors on the reef and take care not to ground boats on coral.
- Avoid touching or disturbing living marine organisms – they can be damaged by even the gentlest contact. If you must hold on to the reef, only touch exposed rock or dead coral.
- Be conscious of your fins. Even without contact, the surge from fin strokes near the reef can damage delicate organisms. Kicking up clouds of sand can smother organisms.
- Practise and maintain proper buoyancy control. Major damage can be done by divers descending too fast and colliding with the reef.
- Don't collect or buy corals or shells.
- Ensure that you take home all your rubbish and any litter you may find. Plastics in particular are a serious threat to marine life.
- Do not feed fish.
- Choose a dive company with appropriate environmental policies and practices.

Hang Gliding & Paragliding

Goa, Himachal Pradesh and Maharashtra are the flying capitals of India. You can bring your own gear or arrange courses and tandem flights. Safety standards have been variable in the past – the government of Himachal Pradesh shut down all paragliding operators from 2004–05 after a fatality – but things seem to be improving. It's still worth contacting the state tourism departments for a safety update before stepping into the blue beyond. Himachal Tourism conducts the Himalayan Hang Gliding Rally in Billing (p331) every May.

The best seasons for flying are October to June in Goa and Maharashtra and March to June, and September to December in Himachal Pradesh.

Goa There are paragliding flights at Arambol (p867) and Anjuna (p861).

Himachal Pradesh Leisure paragliding happens at Solang Nullah (p317) near Manali and Billing (p331) near Dharamshala.

Kayaking & River Rafting

Across India, mighty rivers charge down from the hills and mountains, offering some fantastic opportunities for white-water rafting. Things aren't quite as organised as in nearby Nepal, but rivers in West Bengal, Sikkim, Himachal Pradesh, Uttarakhand and Ladakh provide the best rafting in North India, and Goa and Karnataka offer rafting trips down south. Rafting seasons for the different states are as follows:

- Goa and Karnataka – October to January
- Himachal Pradesh – April to July, September to October (April to September near Shimla)
- Jammu and Kashmir – April to September (July to September in Ladakh)
- Maharashtra – July to September
- Uttarakhand – September to June
- West Bengal – September to November, March to June

Rafting is possible on at least 12 different Indian rivers, from the jagged mountains of Ladakh to the steamy hinterland of Karnataka. See www.indiarafting.com for popular options.

The level of rapids varies from modest Grade II to raging Grade IV and most rafting operators offer multiday rafting safaris as well short thrill rides. The five-day trip along the gorge of the Zanskar River in Ladakh is one of Asia's finest white-water runs. Catch these rivers while you can – India's rivers are being dammed for hydroelectric power at an alarming rate.

Himachal Pradesh White-water rafting trips on the Beas and Sutlej Rivers are organised through tour operators in Shimla (p285), Tattapani (p291), Kullu (p303), Bhuntar (p299) and Manali (p310).

Jammu & Kashmir In Leh, Splash Adventures (p372) arranges kayaking and rafting in Ladakh, including on the Zanskar River. You can arrange rafting trips on Kashmir's Lidder River through Highland Excursions (p362) in Pahalgam.

Karnataka Kayaking and rafting trips can be organised with Bangalore's Getoff ur ass (p887). White-water trips up to Grade IV are possible in Dubare Forest Reserve (p907).

Kerala Canoe trips on the backwaters of Kerala at Greenpalm Homes (p985) near Allepey.

Mumbai Rafting in Maharashtra is organised through Mumbai-based Outbound Adventure (p779) which offers rafting trips in Maharashtra from June to September.

Uttarakhand White-water rafting and kayaking trips are possible on the Ganges and Alaknanda Rivers in Rishikesh (p463), Haridwar (p455) and Joshimath (p469).

West Bengal Arrange rafting on the Rangeet and Teesta Rivers through agents in Darjeeling (p537) and Teesta Bazaar (p548).

Mark Shand's River Dog tells the diverting tale of a river journey along the Brahmaputra in Assam, in the company of a faithful hound.

Rock-Climbing & Mountaineering

For warm-weather climbers, there are some fabulous sandstone and granite climbing areas in Karnataka at Badami, Ramanagram, Savandurga and Hampi, India's premier bouldering region (see the boxed text, p924). The Kullu Valley near Manali (p310) is another popular destination for sport climbers.

Climbing is on a mixture of bolts and traditional protection. Organised climbs can be arranged but serious climbers should bring gear from home – pack plenty of nuts, hexacentrics and cams, plus spare rolls of climbing tape for jamming cracks in sharp granite.

The main areas for proper mountaineering are Himachal Pradesh, Jammu and Kashmir, Uttarakhand and Sikkim – see the boxed text below for more information. Other opportunities for climbing and mountaineering include the following:

Himachal Pradesh Mountaineering and rock-climbing trips can be organised in northern Himachal Pradesh from Manali (p310), Vashisht (p315) and McLeod Ganj (p324).

Jammu & Kashmir You can arrange mountaineering and trekking peak expeditions in Leh (p373) and Padum (p390). See also p367 and p379.

Sikkim Mountaineering and trekking expeditions can be organised in Khangchendzonga National Park in Gangtok (p574). See also the Goecha La Trek (p587).

Uttarakhand Arrange climbing and mountaineering expeditions – such as Nanda Devi Sanctuary (May to October) – in Uttarkashi (p467), Joshimath (p469), Nainital (p475), and Rishikesh (p463).

MOUNTAINEERING & CLIMBING COURSES

There are numerous private and government-run climbing organisations that offer mountaineering training courses, usually on set dates during the warmer summer months. Most include simple accommodation, meals and most of the equipment you need (bring your own warm-weather clothing). Reputable organisations include the following:

Directorate of Mountaineering & Allied Sports (http://dmas.gov.in; Manali) Mountaineering courses around Himachal Pradesh from May to October (p308).

Himalayan Mountaineering Institute (www.exploredarjeeling.com/hmidarj.htm; Darjeeling) Climbing and mountaineering courses from March to December (p538).

Jawahar Institute of Mountaineering & Winter Sports (Kashmir) Summer mountaineering courses at all levels (p362).

Nainital Mountaineering Club (near Nainital) Outdoor rock-climbing courses close to Nainital (p475).

Nehru Institute of Mountaineering (www.nimindia.org; Uttarkashi) Winter mountaineering courses with a 6000m expedition (p467).

Tenzing Norgay Climbing Club (Darjeeling) Indoor and outdoor climbing courses using modern equipment (p538).

MOUNTAINEERING IN INDIA

Mountaineers need permission from the Indian Mountaineering Federation (IMF; www.indmount.org) in Delhi to climb most peaks over 6000m, and the expedition royalties are significant – from US$1500 to US$8000 per expedition, depending on the height of the peak. Many peaks lie in restricted areas near the China border and climbers must pay additional fees for inner line and restricted-area permits, plus any national park fees that apply. Discounts are available for groups who make arrangements through approved travel agents inside India – contact the IMF for more information on any aspect of mountaineering in India.

Fortunately, you don't have to be rich to climb in India. There are numerous trekking peaks that can be climbed without permits or royalties, particularly in Ladakh, Zanskar, Lahaul, Spiti and Sikkim. The four-day ascent of Stok Kangri (6121m) – see p379 – is one of the most popular treks in India, providing a taste of high-altitude mountaineering without the expense. However, you should be alert for the symptoms of Acute Mountain Sickness (see p1188) on any trek above 3000m. If you fancy some training before you embark on an expedition, there are several mountaineering courses that can start you down the path to becoming the next Reinhold Messner – see the discussion of courses above.

Skiing & Snowboarding

India's ski industry is going from strength to strength. India's premier ski resort is at Gulmarg in Kashmir, but security concerns have pushed many skiers towards the smaller resorts in Uttarakhand and Himachal Pradesh. All skiing in India takes place on high-altitude meadows, with the best snows falling from January to March. There are runs for skiers of all levels and most ski lodges provide heaters to keep out the winter chill. Prices for equipment rental and ski passes are some of the lowest on the planet, but power cuts can stop the lifts for long periods.

Jammu & Kashmir In Gulmarg (p361), chair and tow lifts plus a gondola cableway provide access to high-altitude powder. Lessons and rental are available and there are ski runs to suit all levels of experience.

Uttarakhand Auli (p470) has a gondola cableway, chairlift and rope-tow that can take you up 5km of beginner and intermediate slopes. Rental and lessons are available, and all levels of experience catered for.

Himachal Pradesh There are several small lifts and ski lodges as well as a cable car under construction in Solang Nullah (p317). Lessons and ski hire are available and there's skiing for all levels. There are also expeditions to high-altitude powder on foot or by helicopter. Narkanda (p292) has less infrastructure than at Solang Nullah, but lessons are available and there's a portable ski-lift in season.

Trekking

India offers some amazing trekking, particularly in the foothills of the Himalaya, with temples, Buddhist monasteries, remote lakes and mountain passes as popular destinations. Many peaks above 5000m can be summited by trekkers as well as mountaineers. There are also wildlife-spotting treks and jungle walks in the plains and middle hills. However, the trekking industry is not as well developed as in nearby Nepal. Trekking lodges are only found on a handful of routes and trekkers must carry everything they need, including food, tents, sleeping bags and emergency equipment. Drinking water is not always available and trails are often poorly marked, with few people around to ask directions. Acute Mountain Sickness is also a risk on any routes over 3000m above sea level, including most routes in Ladakh, Zanskar and Lahaul and Spiti – see p1188 for more information.

Most of India's peaks have been climbed, but India's highest mountain, Khangchendzonga (8598m) is off-limits as a sign of respect to local Buddhists who worship the spirit of the mountain.

Because of this, independent trekking can be risky. Most people opt for organised treks with local trekking agencies, though it is possible to hire your own porters, packhorses and guides through local tourist offices. If you do make your own arrangements, ensure that your guide speaks English and make an emergency plan for evacuation from the route. Tell someone at the trailhead where you are going and when you intend to be back, and never trek alone. On any organised trek, make sure that you have all the equipment you need and ensure that you know exactly what is included in the fee you pay. Proper travel insurance is essential – see p1139.

The following areas offer India's best trekking:

Andaman & Nicobar Islands There are bird-watching jungle treks on Havelock Island (p1118).

Himachal Pradesh You can arrange treks to mountain passes, lakes and medieval monasteries through agencies in Manali (p310), McLeod Ganj (p324), Bharmour (p337), Chamba (p336) and Kaza (p342). For popular routes see p282. Low-altitude treks are also possible in the Parvati Valley (p299) and the Great Himalayan National Park (p299) but see the boxed text, p303.

Jammu & Kashmir Treks can be organised in Ladakh and Zanskar through tour operators in Manali (p310), Leh (p373) and Padum (p390). For popular routes, see p379 and p391. Treks are also possible at Gulmarg (p360), Pahalgam (p361) and Sonamarg (p362) in Jammu and Kashmir, but check the security situation first.

Karnataka Interesting treks around Karnataka with Bengaluru- (Bangalore-) based Getoff ur ass (p887) and agents and guesthouses in Madikeri (p905).

RESPONSIBLE TREKKING

To help in the preservation of India's natural beauty, consider the following tips when trekking. Try to choose trekking agencies and tour operators that have a focus on sustainable, low-impact tourism.

Rubbish

- Carry out all your rubbish (including cigarette butts, sanitary napkins, tampons and condoms) as well as any rubbish you may find. Set a good example as well as reducing pollution.
- Never bury rubbish: digging encourages erosion and buried rubbish may be dug up and consumed by animals (this can be harmful to them).
- Take reusable containers or stuff sacks. Avoid plastic bags and plastic water bottles.
- Carry a canteen and a water-filtration or purification system in remote areas. In villages, refill your canteen with boiled water or filtered water provided by local environmental organisations.

Human Waste Disposal

- To prevent the spread of disease, use toilets where provided. If there aren't any, bury your waste. Dig a small hole (15cm) at least 100m from any watercourse (bring a lightweight trowel) and adequately cover it with soil and a rock. Use minimal toilet paper (preferably none). In snow, dig down to the soil.
- If the area is inhabited, ask locals if they have any concerns about the site you've chosen for your toilet.
- Ensure that these guidelines are applied to portable toilet tents used by trekking groups. All members (including porters) should use it.

Washing

- Don't use detergents or toothpaste in or near watercourses, even if these products are biodegradable.
- For personal washing, use biodegradable soap and a water container at least 50m away from the watercourse. Disperse the waste water widely so the soil can adequately filter it.
- Wash cooking utensils 50m away from watercourses using a scourer, sand or snow instead of detergent.

Kerala There are guided wildlife-spotting treks in Kerala's Periyar Wildlife Sanctuary (p988) and Wayanad Wildlife Sanctuary (p1019) and hill treks at Munnar (p999 and p1001).
Madhya Pradesh & Chhattisgarh Arrange guided hill walks with Tola Trekking Club (p693).
Rajasthan Mt Abu (p231) is the trekking capital of Rajasthan, with forest treks to spot wild bears. Hill treks can also be arranged in Nawalgarh (p188), Udaipur (p222) and Ranakpur (p229).
Sikkim Travel agencies in Gangtok (p574) and Pelling (p582) arrange treks around Sikkim. For popular routes, see p587 and p587.
Tamil Nadu Guided treks in the buffer zone around Mudumalai National Park (p1104), and hill and jungle treks around Indira Gandhi (Annamalai) Wildlife Sanctuary (p1093), Ooty (Udhagamandalam; p1100) and Kodaikanal (p1090).
Uttarakhand You can organise treks to glaciers, mountain villages and Himalayan viewpoints, and pilgrimage treks to the Char Dham temples in Rishikesh (p463), Haridwar (p455), Uttarkashi (p467), Joshimath (p469) and Nainital (p475). See also p445.

Clothing, Fires & Cooking

- Bring clothing for the extreme cold of the mountains – research weather conditions and seek professional advice on clothes and equipment. This will reduce the need for fires for warmth.
- Cutting wood causes deforestation – a major problem in India – so avoid open fires and stay in lodgings that don't use wood to cook or heat water where possible.
- Use a lightweight kerosene, alcohol or Shellite (white gas) stove and avoid stoves powered by disposable butane gas canisters.
- If you must light an open fire, try to use existing fireplaces and only use dead, fallen wood. Fully extinguish a fire by spreading the embers and flooding them with sand or water.

Cultural Sensitivity

- Respect local cultural practices when interacting with communities, including attitudes to modesty.
- Observe official regulations in areas you visit. Many rules are there to protect the local way of life.
- Do not hand out pens, sweets or money to children; this promotes begging. If you want to give, donate to local schools and community centres.
- Always seek permission from landowners if you intend to enter private property.
- Where possible, trek with a local guide. This way, money from tourism will directly benefit the people it affects.

Flora & Fauna

- Always stick to existing tracks. Blazing new trails will create new watercourses, contributing to erosion. Walk through rather than around mud patches and puddles – walking around the edge increases the area being degraded.
- Don't pick flowers or other plants – covering vegetation plays a vital role in keeping the topsoil in place.
- Avoid disturbing wild or domesticated animals and shut any gates you open.
- Hunting is illegal in India and it adds to the pressure on species already endangered by loss of habitat – don't do it.
- Don't feed wildlife (or leave food scraps behind). Wild animals can become dependent on handouts and random feeding can lead to attacks on humans, unbalanced animal populations and disease. Place foodstuffs out of reach while you camp (tie packs to rafters or trees).

West Bengal Various high and low treks around Darjeeling (p542), include the dramatic Singalila Ridge.

Other Adventure Activities

There are many other activities available. Some of the more interesting options include the following.

CANYONING

In Meghalaya, Cherrapunjee Holiday Resort (p611) offers unusual canyoning trips that use surreal 'living bridges' woven from living trees by local tribes.

CAVING

Millennia of torrential monsoon rains have hollowed out an amazing system of caves underneath the northeastern state of Meghalaya, including the 22km-long Krem Um Im-Liat Prah/Krem Labbit system, India's longest cave. Caving trips can be arranged through tour agents in Shillong (p607). However, this is serious caving and it's best to bring equipment from home.

ZORBING

Zorbing – rolling down mountain meadows in a giant plastic ball – is taking off in a big way in Himachal Pradesh. Balls roll throughout the summer in Solang Nullah (p317) and Khajjiar (p334), near Dalhousie.

HOLISTIC & SPIRITUAL ACTIVITIES

Not all activities in India involve hauling yourself up mountains. Travellers with an interest in spirituality or alternative therapies will find a host of courses and treatments that focus on healing body and mind – after all, this is the country that gave the world meditation, massage and mantras! Meditation, Ayurveda (Indian herbal medicine) and yoga have gained respect even in mainstream circles and there are opportunities to practise and improve your technique all over India. Here are some good places to start.

AYURVEDA

Ayurveda is the ancient science of Indian herbal medicine and holistic healing, which focuses on treating the whole organism instead of just the illness, using herbal treatments, massage and other therapies. There are clinics, resorts and colleges all over India where you can learn Ayurvedic techniques and get massages and other treatments, including the following places:

Goa Therapies and residential courses in Ayurveda, reflexology, aromatherapy, acupressure and yoga are run at the Ayurvedic Natural Health Centre near Calangute (p857).

Gujarat Ayurvedic therapy and professional courses in Ayurvedic medicine are conducted at the famous Ayurvedic University in Jamnagar (p755).

Karnataka Naturopathy classes and Ayurvedic therapies are offered in Bengaluru (p887) and Mysore (p898).

Kerala You can do various classes and study Ayurvedic therapies in Varkala (p974).

Tamil Nadu Courses in Ayurvedic massage are available in Puducherry (p1061).

Spa Treatments

If you just want to enjoy the healing effects without the study, there are spas over all India, from Ayurvedic hospitals to luxurious health centres at five-star resorts. However, be cautious of one-on-one massages by private operators, particularly in tourist towns. Paying more for a massage in an established centre is better than getting a groping by a dodgy masseur.

Recommended spots for indulgence include the following:

Delhi Get the full Ayurvedic treatment at Delhi's Ashtaang (p138).

Goa There are numerous beach resorts offering massages and other spa services at Calangute and Baga (p856), Anjuna (p861), Colva and Benaulim (p872), Arambol (p866) and other locations.

Gujarat The are upmarket hotel spas in Ahmedabad (p724), and massages, steam baths and mud therapies at the Ayurvedic University in Jamnagar (p755).

AMCHI

Tibetan Buddhist areas have their own herbal medicine tradition – amchi – based on a mixture of astrology and treatments with herbs from the Himalaya. Despite the arrival of Western medicine, amchi is still the most popular form of medicine in many parts of Himachal Pradesh and Jammu and Kashmir. You can arrange amchi treatments in McLeod Ganj (p324), Leh (p368) and Kaza (p342).

Himachal Pradesh Massages and other healing therapies are offered in Vashisht (p315), McLeod Ganj (p324) and Bhagsu (p329).
Karnataka You can get herbal rubs and scrubs in Bengaluru (p887), Mysore (p898) and Gokarna (p917).
Kerala Massages and herbal treatments at Varkala (p974), Kochi (Cochin; p1006) and therapeutic breaks at Janakanthi Panchakarma Centre (p978) and Thapovan Heritage Home (p973).
Kolkata (Calcutta) Exclusive Banyan Tree spa treatments don't come cheap at the Oberoi Grand (p505).
Maharashtra Massages, saunas and spa treatments at the Osho Meditation Resort (p827).
Mumbai The pampering of pamperings at Mumbai's finest spa – inside the ITC Hotel Grand Maratha Sheraton & Towers (p786).
Orissa There are plush resort spas in Bhubaneswar (p640) and Puri (p647).
Rajasthan There are Ayurvedic massage clinics in Jaipur (p171), Udaipur (p222) and Jaisalmer (p247).
Tamil Nadu Try the posh hotel spas in Thanjavur (p1072) and Kodaikanal (p1091), and the massage sessions in Mamallapuram (Mahabalipuram; p1048) and Puducherry (p1061).
Uttar Pradesh & Uttarakhand Get the works at the Ananda Spa (p466) near Rishikesh, Haveli Hari Ganga (p457) in Haridwar, the Hotel Madhuban (p447) in Dehra Dun, or Hotel Surya (p432) in Varanasi.

YOGA

Many places in India offer classes and courses in various types of yoga, often with meditation classes on the side. The most common yoga forms are hatha (following the shatkarma, or purification, system of postures and meditation), ashtanga (following the 'eight limbs' system of postures and meditation), pranayama (controlled yogic breathing) and Iyengar (a variation of ashtanga yoga using physical aids for advanced postures).

Yoga is one of the oldest therapies in human history, dating back 4000 years. Yoga as we know it today was kick-started in around 200 BC by the Hindu scholar Patanjali.

Yoga Courses

There are hundreds of yoga courses on offer and some outfits are more reputable than others (especially in tourist towns). Seek advice from tourist offices and other travellers and visit several to find one that suits your needs. Many ashrams (spiritual communities) also offer yoga courses – see p102, though some centres require a minimum time commitment and residents must adhere to strict rules on silence, diet and behaviour – see the boxed text, p102.

The following represent some of the many possibilities; for those that impose no fees, donations are appreciated.

Delhi Courses in various forms of meditation and yoga (hatha, asanas and pranayama) in Delhi (p138).
Goa A huge range of yoga courses are offered at hotels, spiritual centres and retreats in Anjuna (p861), Arambol (p867), Calangute (p857) and Palolem (p876).

Himachal Pradesh Various courses in hatha yoga, reiki, and other healing arts are offered in Vashisht (p315), McLeod Ganj (p324) and Bhagsu (p329).
Jammu & Kashmir There are courses and classes in meditation and yoga in Leh (p372) and Choglamsar (p380).
Karnataka World-renowned courses in ashtanga, hatha and Iyengar yoga and meditation are held in Mysore (p898), and yoga classes held in Bengaluru (p887) and Gokarna (p918).

Mumbai Classes in various styles of yoga are held in Mumbai (p780).

Rajasthan There are yoga, reiki, shiatsu and naturopathy courses in Pushkar (p194) and hatha yoga courses in Jaipur (p172) and Mt Abu (p231).
Tamil Nadu Various hatha yoga classes are available in Chennai (Madras; p1036). Various yoga classes and courses are available in Mamallapuram (Mahabalipuram; p1048) and Puducherry (p1061).
Uttar Pradesh & Uttarakhand Various classes in hatha, pranayama, Kriya and spiritual yoga are conducted in Varanasi (p432), Rishikesh (p462) and Haridwar (p462).

Ashrams

India has dozens of ashrams – places of communal living established around the philosophies of a guru (spiritual guide). Codes of conduct vary, so make sure you're willing to abide by them before committing. See the boxed text, below.

Andhra Pradesh Puttaparthi (Puttaparthi; p958) is the ashram of controversial but phenomenally popular guru Sri Sathya Sai Baba.
Kerala Matha Amrithanandamayi Mission (Alleppey; p982) is famed for its female guru Amma – 'The Hugging Mother'. Sivananda Yoga Vedanta Dhanwantari Ashram (Trivandrum; p969) is a famous yoga centre, renowned for its hatha yoga courses. Sivagiri Mutt (Varkala; p975) is the most important ashram devoted to Sree Narayana Guru.
Kolkata The Ramakrishna Mission has its headquarters at Belur Math (Kolkata; p501) with branches countrywide.
Maharashtra Brahmavidya Mandir Ashram (Sevagram; p818) was established by Gandhi's disciple Vinoba Bhave. The Osho Meditation Resort (Pune; p827) is founded and led by the teachings of the 'sex guru' Osho. Sevagram Ashram (Sevagram; p817) is the ashram established by Mahatma Gandhi.
Rajasthan The small Ashtang Yoga Ashram (Udaipur; p222) offers hatha yoga training. Brahma Kumaris Spiritual University (Mt Abu; p231) is the headquarters of the popular but proselytising Brahma Kumaris organisation.
Tamil Nadu Sri Aurobindo Ashram (Puducherry; p1061), founded by the famous Sri Aurobindo, has branches around India. The rural Isha Yoga Centre (Coimbatore; p1096) offers residential

ASHRAMS & GURUS

Many people visit India specifically to spend time at an ashram – literally a 'place of striving' – for spiritual and personal improvement. There are literally hundreds of gurus (the word means 'dispeller of darkness' or 'heavy with wisdom') offering their wisdom on the path to perfection to millions of eager followers. However, a little caution is required. Some ashrams tread a fine line between spiritual community and personality cult and there are regular reports of dodgy goings on at ashrams, frequently of a sexual nature. These allegations have touched some of the most popular spiritual communities, including the International Society for Krishna Consciousness and the International Sai Organisation of Sai Baba.

Choosing an ashram will depend on your spiritual leanings. Every guru has their own unique take on spiritual living, often with a focus on abstinence and meditation. All ashrams have a rigid code of conduct, and visitors are required to adhere to strict rules, which may include a strict dress code, a daily regimen of yoga or meditation, and charitable work at social projects run by the ashram. The diet is almost always vegetarian and you may also be asked to abstain from eggs, tobacco, alcohol, garlic, onions, and 'black drinks' – ie anything containing caffeine, including tea and coke. Sex may be prohibited or positively encouraged – make sure you are comfortable with this before you stay.

Ashrams are generally run as charitable projects – though many gurus are multimillionaires – and a donation is appropriate to cover the costs of your food, accommodation and the running costs of the ashram. Most ashrams accept new residents without advance notice, but call ahead to make sure. Gurus move around frequently so make sure the guru will be in attendance when you visit. Even if you lack spiritual conviction, it's interesting to visit an ashram for the day to see the workings of a modern-day spiritual movement.

courses and retreats. Sri Ramana Ashram (Tiruvannamalai; p1056) is the ashram founded by Sri Ramana Maharishi.
Uttarakhand There are various ashrams in Rishikesh (p462) and Haridwar (p462). The Rishikesh ashrams are generally more foreigner-orientated and less austere.
West Bengal International Society for Krishna Consciousness (Iskcon; Mayapura; p522) is the global headquarters of the Hare Krishna movement, but with a strong proselytising agenda; it has branches all over India.

BUDDHIST MEDITATION

In Buddhist areas such as Ladakh, Bihar and Himachal Pradesh, Buddhist centres offer courses, classes and retreats in vipassana or mindfulness meditation and Buddhist philosophy. Be aware that some courses require students to abide by a vow of silence and many also ban smoking, alcohol and sex. The centre for Buddhist teaching in India is McLeod Ganj (p319) – the home of the Dalai Lama. Public teachings are given by the Dalai Lama and 17th Karmapa at certain times of year.

Famous practitioners of vipassana yoga include the Dalai Lama, Richard Gere and novelist Graham Greene. See www.dhamma.org for listings of vipassana study centres around India.

Andhra Pradesh Vipassana meditation courses are held in Hyderabad (p944) and Vijayawada (p955).
Bihar & Jharkhand Various classes and longer courses are available in Buddhist philosophy and vipassana meditation in Bodhgaya (p559).
Gujarat Free meditation courses are held at Kutch Vipassana Centre (p764) in Bada.
Himachal Pradesh You can do courses in Tibetan massage and Buddhist meditation and philosophy in McLeod Ganj (p324).
Jammu & Kashmir There are various courses in vipassana meditation and Buddhist philosophy in Leh (p373) and residential retreats at the Mahabodhi Meditation Centre (p381) in Choglamsar.
Maharashtra Courses lasting 10 to 45 days are conducted here at the world's largest vipassana meditation centre at Igatpuri (p804).
Tamil Nadu There are various v*ipassana* courses in Chennai (p1036).

Food & Drink

Through its food, you'll discover that India is a banquet expressed in colours, smells, flavours and personalities. Like so many aspects of India, its food, too, is an elusive thing to define because it's made up of so many regionally diverse dishes, all with their own preparation techniques and ingredients. It's the ancient vegetarian fare of the south, the meaty traditions of the Mughals, the glowing tandoor (clay oven) of Punjab and the Euro-Indian fusions of former colonies. It's the heavenly aroma of cooking spices, the juice of exotic fruits running down your chin and rich, fiery curries that will make your tastebuds stand to attention. Indeed it's the sheer diversity of what's on offer that makes eating your way through India so deliciously rewarding.

STAPLES & SPECIALITIES

Spices

Because of the prices it can fetch, saffron is frequently adulterated, usually with safflower – dubbed (no doubt by disgruntled tourists) as 'bastard saffron'.

Christopher Columbus was actually looking for the black pepper of Kerala's Malabar Coast when he stumbled upon America. The region still grows the finest quality of the world's favourite spice, and it's integral to most savoury dishes. Turmeric is the essence of most Indian curries, but coriander seeds are the most widely used spice and lend flavour and body to just about every savoury dish, while most Indian 'wet' dishes – commonly known as curries in the West – begin with the crackle of cumin seeds in hot oil. Tamarind is sometimes known as the 'Indian date' and is a popular souring agent in the south. The green cardamom of Kerala's Western Ghats is regarded as the world's best, and you'll find it in savouries, desserts and warming chai (tea). Saffron, the dried stigmas of crocus flowers grown in Kashmir, is so light it takes more than 1500 hand-plucked flowers to yield just one gram.

Monisha Bharadwaj's The Indian Kitchen is a beautifully presented cookbook with more than 200 traditional recipes. It contains handy tips such as how to best store spices.

Just about every Indian dish is flavoured with a distinct combination of spices; there are as many masala (spice blend) recipes as there are villains in Bollywood movies.

Rice

Rice is a common staple, especially in South India. Long-grain white rice varieties are the most popular, served hot with just about any 'wet' cooked dish. Rice is often cooked up in a pilau (or pilaf; spiced rice dish) or biryani. From Assam's sticky rice in the far northeast to Kerala's red grains in the extreme south, you'll find countless regional varieties that locals will claim to be the best in India, though this honour is usually conceded to basmati, which gets its name from the Hindi 'queen of fragrance'.

Khichdi (or khichri), mostly cooked in North India, is a blend of lightly spiced rice and lentils, vaguely resembling risotto. Rarely found on restaurant menus, it's mostly prepared in home kitchens to mollify raw tummies (we recommend it for Delhi Belly) – some restaurants may specially cook it if you give them adequate advance notice.

The Indian capital has two particularly good places to sample stuffed parathas (Indian-style flaky bread): Paratha Wali Gali (p146) and Not Just Parathas (p149).

Bread

While rice is paramount in the south, wheat is the mainstay in the north. Roti, the generic term for Indian-style bread, is a name used interchangeably with chapati to describe the most common variety, the irresistible unleavened round bread made with whole-wheat flour and cooked on a tawa (hotplate). It may be smothered with ghee (clarified butter) or oil, but is eaten plain by the health conscious or those who can't afford ghee. In some places, rotis may be bigger and thicker than chapatis and possibly cooked in a tandoor.

Puri is deep-fried dough puffed up like a soft, crispy balloon. Kachori is similar, but the dough has been pepped up with corn or dhal, which makes it thicker. Flaky, unleavened paratha can be eaten as is or jazzed up with fillings such as paneer (unfermented cheese). The thick, usually tear-drop-shaped, naan is cooked in a tandoor and is especially scrummy when laced with garlic.

Thin and crispy, pappadams are circle-shaped lentil- or chickpea-flour wafers served either before or with a meal.

Dhal

While the staple of preference divides north and south, the whole of India is united in its love for dhal (lentils or pulses). You may encounter up to 60 different pulses: the most common are channa, a slightly sweeter version of the yellow split pea; tiny yellow or green ovals called moong dhal (mung beans); salmon-coloured masoor (red lentils); the ochre-coloured southern favourite, tuvar dhal (yellow lentils; also known as arhar); rajma (kidney beans); kabuli channa (chickpeas); urad (black gram or lentils); and lobhia (black-eyed peas).

Meat

While India probably has more vegetarians than the rest of the world combined, it still has an extensive repertoire of carnivorous fare. Goat (known as mutton since the days of the Raj), lamb and chicken are the mainstays; religious taboos make beef forbidden to Hindus and pork to Muslims.

Technically speaking, there is no such thing as an Indian 'curry' – the word, an anglicised derivative of the Tamil word kari (black pepper), was used by the British as a term for any dish including spices.

In northern India you'll come across meat-dominated Mughlai cuisine, which includes rich curries, kebabs, koftas and biryanis. This spicy cuisine traces its history back to the (Islamic) Mughal empire that once reigned supreme in India.

Tandoori meat dishes are another North Indian favourite. The name is derived from the clay oven, or tandoor, in which the marinated meat is cooked.

Fish & Seafood

With around 7000km of coastline, it's no surprise that fish and seafood are important staples on the subcontinent, and especially on the west coast, from Mumbai (Bombay) down to Kerala. Kerala is the biggest fishing state, Goa boasts huge, succulent prawns and fiery fish curries, and the fishing communities of the Konkan Coast – sandwiched between these two states – are renowned for their seafood creations. Few main meals in Orissa exclude fish, and in West Bengal, puddled with ponds and lakes, fish is king.

Fruit & Vegetables

Vegetables are served at every main meal, and sabzi (vegetables) is a word recognised in every Indian vernacular. They're generally cooked sukhi (dry) or tari (in a sauce) and within these two categories they can be fried, roasted, curried, stuffed, baked, mashed and combined (made into koftas) or wrapped in batter to make a deep-fried pakora (fritter).

Bengalis use the pith of the banana tree as a vegetable, and the nendraparram (a large reddish-coloured banana) of Kerala is used as a vegetable when raw.

Potatoes are ubiquitous and popularly cooked with various masalas, with other vegetables, or mashed and fried for the street snack aloo tikka (mashed potato patties). Onions are fried with other vegetables, ground into a paste for cooking with meats and used raw in relishes or as garnish. Heads of cauliflower are usually cooked dry on their own, with potatoes to make aloo gobi (potato-and-cauliflower curry), or with other vegetables such as carrots and beans. Fresh green peas turn up stir-fried with other vegetables in pilaos and biryanis and in one of North India's signature dishes, the magnificent mattar paneer (peas and unfermented cheese in gravy). Baigan (eggplant/aubergine) can be curried or sliced and deep-fried. Also popular is saag (a generic term for leafy greens), which can include mustard, spinach and fenugreek. Something a little more unusual is the bumpy-skinned karela (bitter gourd) which, like bhindi (okra), is commonly prepared dry with spices.

You'll find fruit fashioned into a chatni (chutney) or pickle, or flavouring kulfi (firm-textured ice cream) or other sweet treats. Citrus fruit such as oranges (which are often yellow-green in India), tangerines, pink and white grapefruits, kumquats and sweet limes are widely grown. Himachal Pradesh produces delicious apples in autumn, while luscious strawberries abound in Kashmir during summer. Along the southern coast you'll find wonderful tropical fruits such as pineapples, papayas and mangoes.

India has more than 500 varieties of mangoes, and supplies almost 60% of the world with what is regarded as the king of fruit.

Pickles, Chutneys & Relishes

No Indian meal is really complete without one, and often all, of the above. A relish can be anything from a roughly chopped onion to a delicately crafted fusion of fruit, nuts and spices. One of the most popular accompaniments is raita (mildly spiced yogurt, often with shredded cucumber, carrot or diced pineapple; served chilled), which makes a refreshing counter to spicy meals. Chatnis can come in any number of varieties (such as sweet and salty) and can be made from many different vegetables, fruits, herbs and spices. But proceed with caution before polishing off that pickled speck on your thali; it'll quite possibly be the hottest thing you've ever tasted.

Dairy

Milk and milk products make a staggering contribution to Indian cuisine: dahi (curd/yogurt) is commonly served with meals and is great for countering heat; paneer is a godsend for the vegetarian majority; lassi (yogurt-based drink) is one in a host of nourishing sweet and savoury drinks; ghee is the traditional and pure cooking medium; and the finest sweets are made with milk.

Sweets

Each year, at least 13 tonnes of pure silver are converted into the edible foil that's added to Indian sweets for decoration.

India has a colourful jumble of, often sticky and squishy, mithai (sweets), most of them sinfully sweet. The main categories are barfi (a fudgelike milk-based sweet), halwa (made with vegetables, cereals, lentils, nuts or fruit), ladoos (gram flour and semolina sweetmeats, usually ball-shaped) and those made from chhana (unpressed paneer) such as rasgulla (sweet cream-cheese balls flavoured with rose-water). There are also simpler – but equally scrumptious – offerings such as jalebis (orange-coloured whorls of deep-fried batter dunked in syrup) that you'll see all over the country.

Kheer (called payasam in the south) is one of India's favourite desserts. It's a creamy rice pudding with a light, delicate flavour, and might be flavoured with cardamom, saffron, pistachios, flaked almonds, cashews or dried fruit.

PAAN

Meals are often rounded off with paan, a fragrant mixture of betel nut (also called areca nut), lime paste, spices and condiments wrapped in an edible, silky paan leaf. Peddled by paan-wallahs, who are usually strategically positioned outside busy restaurants, paan is eaten as a digestive and mouth-freshener. The betel nut is mildly narcotic and some aficionados eat paan the same way heavy smokers consume cigarettes – over the years these people's teeth can become rotted red and black.

There are two basic types of paan: mitha (sweet) and saadha (with tobacco). A parcel of mitha paan is a splendid way to finish a satisfying meal. Pop the whole parcel in your mouth and chew slowly, letting the juices secrete around your gob.

Gulab jamuns are deep-fried balls of dough soaked in rose-flavoured syrup. Kulfi is a firm-textured ice cream made with reduced milk and flavoured with any number of nuts (often pistachio), fruits and berries.

Sweet-tooths will love The Book of Indian Sweets by Satarupa Banerjee, which contains a lip-smacking array of regional recipes, from Bengali rasgullas to Goan bebinca.

REGIONAL SPECIALITIES

North India

PUNJAB

You're probably familiar with the hearty food of Punjab because many of its staple dishes have come to represent Indian food internationally. A paste of onions, garlic and ginger forms the basis of most dishes. Chillies, tomatoes, cumin, garam masala, dried fenugreek leaves and kalonji (a black seed similar to caraway; also called onion seed) are added in varying combinations. The main meal of the day might consist of hot rotis with dollops of unsalted butter, a bowl of dhal and a vegetable dish such as the favourite saag, or aloo gobi, baigan bharta (roasted eggplant fried with onions and tomatoes) or aloo mattar (a curry made with potatoes and green peas). An integral part of Punjabi cooking is the tandoor, open at the top and fired by charcoal below, that turns out piping-hot naan and a gamut of kebabs: sheekh (mincemeat on iron skewers), tangri (plump chicken drumsticks), boti (spicy bite-sized bits of boneless lamb), chicken tikka (succulent chunks of chicken) and, of course, the ubiquitous tandoori chicken.

Punjab, affectionately dubbed India's bread-basket, contributes around 60% of the country's wheat and 40% of its rice.

RAJASTHAN

The largely arid landscape of Rajasthan has led to a spicy cuisine derived from meagre resources. Boosted with limited fresh vegetables, fruits or fish, Rajasthanis make the most of cereals, pulses, spices and milk products to produce a surprisingly elaborate cuisine. Wheat flour is used to make rotis, puris, parathas and the state's most remarkable dish, bati (baked balls of wholemeal flour). Along with bati goes churma (fried whole-wheat flour balls pounded with sugar and nuts) to make the classic Rajasthani combination, dhal bati churma. Besan (gram or chickpea flour) is another staple, and is used to make salted snacks. In the stark deserts of Jaisalmer, Jodhpur and Bikaner, meats are often cooked without water, using milk, curd, buttermilk and plenty of ghee. Murg ko khaato (chicken cooked in a curd gravy), achar murg (pickled chicken) and kacher maas (dry lamb cooked in spices) are classic Rajasthani desert dishes.

The Chef's Special series has excellent (light-weight) cookbooks showcasing various regional cuisines. Titles include Bengali Kitchen, Delhi Kitchen, Goan Kitchen, Gujarati Kitchen, Kashmiri Kitchen, Punjabi Kitchen and South Indian Kitchen.

KASHMIR

Many migrants from Kashmir have moved to Delhi and other Indian cities, where you can sample their unique cuisine, identified by its spice mixes and the fact that meats are usually cooked in curd or milk, which gives them a whitish colour and smooth texture. Chilli is sometimes added to give curries a fiery red tinge.

UTTAR PRADESH & UTTARAKHAND (UTTARANCHAL)

Uttar Pradesh and Uttarakhand showcase a variety of cuisines, including pure Hindu vegetarian, majestic Nawabi and simple hill fare. Places of pilgrimage such as Varanasi are predominantly vegetarian; a standard meal comprises phulkas (small puffed chapatis), dhal chawal (dhal and rice) and seasonal vegetable dishes. Lucknow, Varanasi's Islamic counterpart, is associated with the most majestic Nawabi cuisine and is famous for its kebabs made with mincemeat or meat paste (while the kebabs in Punjab and Delhi come from the barbecue tradition of skewered bits). The shami kebab (boiled mincemeat, ground with chickpeas and spices) is popular in Uttar Pradesh homes.

WEST BENGAL

The people of West Bengal are fiercely proud of their cuisine, which they believe is the epitome of refined taste. A plethora of fish is found in the rivers and ponds of Bengal and it is fried, curried in onions, stewed lightly with vegetables or made into spicy jhaal (fish with ground mustard seeds and chillies). Bengali sweets are among the finest in India; the best known is rasgulla.

BIHAR

Bihar's cuisine is rustic and wholesome. Sattu (roasted chickpea flour) is the unifying theme; it's cheap, filling and nutritious. Its preparation ranges from the absolutely coarse to the subtly refined – a labourer carries it knotted in his gamchha (handloom towel) and mixes it with onion and chilli for a makeshift meal, while a middle-class housewife may dip Bihar's most well-known food, littis (balls of spiced sattu covered in dough and baked on coals), in a bowl of warm ghee before serving them.

Primarily used in North India in powdered form, pomegranate seeds add a sour tang to dishes.

SIKKIM

Like much of Sikkimese culture, local cuisine is reminiscent of Tibet's and Nepal's. Thukpa (hearty noodle soup), momos (steamed or fried dumplings stuffed with vegetables or meat) and gyakho (stew) are ubiquitous foods. Salt-butter tea is fun to make using the photogenic, traditional sudah plunger-churn. No trip to Sikkim is complete without trying tongba, a Himalayan millet beer (see the boxed text, p576).

NORTHEAST STATES

The variety of the Northeast States' cuisines is enormous, with each tribe or community developing its own signature dishes. In Assam they're particularly fond of sour tastes and, like the Thais, use lots of lime and lime leaves in their cooking. Tenga, the favourite Assamese fish stew, is made of pieces of sweet-tasting rohu (a type of carp), lightly sautéed with onions and simmered in a watery gravy that's zested with lemon juice. The major community in Meghalaya, the Khasis, specialises in rice-based dishes such as putharo (rice-batter crepe), pukhen (sweet fried rice cakes) and pusla (steamed rice cakes wrapped in leaves). In Tripura, the locals are passionately fond of both fresh and dried-fish dishes, such as nona ilish paturi (salted pieces of hilsa fish, wrapped in an edible leaf and fried) and pithali (dried-fish stew). Shidol (a fermented preserve made of tiny freshwater fish) is quintessentially Tripuri and a mainstay of every kitchen. Fish is equally important in Manipur, and the fish preserve made here is known as ngari. Nagas have a taste for pork, and several other similarities exist with Chinese food such as the use of spring onions, garlic, ginger and monosodium glutamate (MSG). You'll come across many typical Tibetan dishes in Arunachal Pradesh, including momos, churpee (chewy bits of dried yak cheese) and thukpa.

The word 'balti' (of the ubiquitous-in-England 'balti house') was created as a marketing ploy by clever restaurateurs – balti is the northwestern name for the common Indian wok, better known as a kadhai.

MADHYA PRADESH

The food of Madhya Pradesh is typically North Indian, with broad divisions between 'nontribal' and 'tribal' styles. The food in the dry belt that runs from Gwalior to Indore, known as the Malwa cuisine, is grain- and dhal-based, with few vegetables and a lot of oil and ghee. The capital Bhopal, however, has a long tradition of Islamic rule, and korma, rizala (a chilli-flavoured, greenish-white mutton dish), ishtu (spicy stew), achar gosht (a famous picklelike meat dish of Hyderabad) and kebabs are cooked in most Muslim homes.

GUJARAT

Vegetarians constitute almost 90% of Gujarat's population, largely due to the number of Jains who call this state home. A typical Gujarati thali is arguably the most balanced and nutritious meal in India. The meal generally consists of rice, chapati, a salad (could be finely diced tomatoes and cucumbers) or vegetable relish (shredded cabbage or bean sprouts with grated coconut), raita, a dry vegetable (such as stir-fried beans), a curried vegetable (such as potatoes and eggplant), dhal, kadhi (a sour dhal-like dish made of curd and besan), pickle and mithai. All the items are served at once and savoured a little at a time.

The legendary Madhur Jaffrey has written best-selling cookbooks including A Taste of India; her fascinating memoir, Climbing the Mango Trees, includes 32 family recipes.

South India

Though it would be a travesty to lump all South Indian cuisine together, there are common culinary themes – the predominant use of rice and the unfailing regularity of sambar (dhal with cubed vegetables and purée) and rasam (dhal-based broth flavoured with tamarind) – although each staple is made differently in each state.

Dosas, a family of large rice-flour crepes, usually served with a bowl of hot sambar and another bowl of cooling coconut chatni, are a South Indian breakfast speciality that can be eaten at any time of day. The most popular is the masala dosa (stuffed with spiced potatoes), but there are also other dosa varieties – the rava dosa (batter made with semolina), the Mysore dosa (like masala dosa but with more vegetables and chilli in the filling) and the pessarettu dosa (batter made with mung-bean dhal) from Andhra Pradesh.

Idlis are another popular South Indian snack; low-cal and highly nutritious, they provide a welcome alternative to oil, spice and chilli. Idlis are spongy, round, white fermented rice cakes that you dip in sambar and coconut chatni. Other widely eaten snacks include vadas (doughnut-shaped deep-fried lentil savouries) and appams or uttappams (crisp-collared rice-flour and coconut-milk pancakes).

In the south, coconut is called shrifal (the fruit of the gods) and is used in Hindu ceremonies as a reminder that we should all strive to make our lives full and rewarding.

The fiery cuisine of the Karnatakan coastal city of Mangalore deserves special mention because it has carved a name for itself nationwide, particularly for its flavour-packed seafood dishes. Mangalorean cuisine is characterised by its liberal use of chilli and fresh coconut.

MAHARASHTRA

Much of the Deccan Plateau, the heart of Maharashtra, is arid and barren, giving rise to a simple diet based on pulses and grains. Marathi Brahmin food is the epitome of minimalist cuisine; probably nowhere else in India is dhal quite so simple – it's boiled with salt and turmeric and then flavoured with a hint of ghee, asafoetida and jaggery. Vegetables, too, are just tossed with mustard seeds, curry leaves and grated coconut. Fish is the staple of nonvegetarian Marathi food; Maharashtra's favourite fish is bombil, or Bombay duck, a misnomer for this slimy, pikelike fish, which is eaten fresh or sun-dried. The snack most synonymous with Maharashtra, particularly Mumbai, is bhelpuri, a riotous mix of sweet, sour, hot, soft and crunchy sensations. Tossed up on a leaf plate or a square of newspaper are puffed rice, slivers of boiled potatoes, chopped onions, peanuts, fine hairlike besan sticks, sweet tamarind chatni, a piquant green-coriander-and-chilli chatni and a generous squeeze of lime.

The Anger of Aubergines: Stories of Women and Food by Bulbul Sharma is an amusing culinary analysis of social relationships interspersed with tempting recipes.

ANDHRA PRADESH

In Andhra Pradesh, you'll find most of India's Muslim-created specialities, with a unique Andhra twist, often in the form of heat or spice. Hyderabad's oven-baked biryani, with layers of vegetables, meat, nuts and spices, is quite different to North Indian biryanis. Andhra Pradesh's other major cuisine, that of the Andhras, is made up of a wide variety of lentil, vegetable, meat and fish preparations. A sour touch, provided by tamarind, is added to most dishes.

ORISSA

In Orissa, fish is given pride of place – it can be fried, curried with onions or cooked with a mustard-and-curd paste. Ambul is a popular mustard fish preparation that derives its tang from the inclusion of dried mangoes. Tamarind adds a lovely sour touch to dishes and okra is often cooked in a sour gravy of tamarind and tomatoes.

GOA

The unique cuisine of coast-hugging Goa evolved from the intermingling of the highly developed Goan culture and around 450 years of Portuguese rule. It's little wonder that seafood is the Goan staple, which includes many varieties of freshwater and saltwater fish and succulent prawns. A typical Goan lunch may start with a mildly spicy side dish such as caldeen (fish simmered in coconut milk, ginger and cumin). The Portuguese influence usually shows up more prominently in the evening meal, when the main course might be assado de bife (roast beef) or a hot pork vindaloo (spicy pork curry). Goans specialise in elaborate puddings, cakes and sweet snacks; don't miss the famous bebinca (the layered 40-egg sweet, rich with ghee and coconut milk). The cuisine of the western coast of Karnataka, the Konkan Coast, is reminiscent of Goan fare, with plenty of fish and coconut.

Copra (dried coconut flesh) is pressed and made into coconut oil, a very popular cooking medium in Kerala.

KERALA

Seafood is also a favourite in Kerala, and virtually every meal will include it in a fried or curried form – favourites include meen pollichathu (fish cooked in banana leaves) and molee (fish or seafood cooked in coconut milk and spices). Most food is cooked in coconut oil, and dishes are abundantly garnished with freshly scraped coconut or coconut milk. Vegetables are rarely overcooked, and are simply steamed or stir-fried to retain their natural flavours and nutrients.

The highest-quality Darjeeling tea is graded as SFTGFOP, which stands for Special Fine Tippy Golden Flowery Orange Pekoe.

DRINKS

Nonalcoholic Drinks

Chai (tea), the much-loved drink of the masses, is made with copious amounts of milk and sugar. A glass of steaming, frothy chai is the perfect antidote to the vicissitudes of life on the Indian road; the disembodied voice droning 'garam chai, garam chai' (hot tea, hot tea) will become one of the most familiar and welcome sounds of your trip.

While chai is the choice of the nation, South Indians have long shared their loyalty with coffee. In recent years, though, the number of coffee-drinking North Indians has skyrocketed, with swanky coffee chains such as Barista and Café Coffee Day widely found in what were once chai strongholds.

Masala soda is the quintessentially Indian soft drink that's available at many drinks stalls. It's a freshly opened bottle of soda, pepped up with lime, spices, salt and sugar. Jal jeera is perhaps India's most therapeutic and refreshing indigenous drink, made of lime juice, cumin, mint and rock salt.

Karnataka is the largest producer of commercial coffee in India; as a whole, though, India contributes only 3% of the global output of coffee.

Sweet and savoury lassi is very popular nationwide and is another wonderfully rejuvenating beverage. Falooda is a rose-flavoured drink made with milk, cream, nuts and strands of vermicelli, while badam milk (served hot or cold) is flavoured with almonds and saffron.

On the streets there are multitudes of fresh-fruit vendors; if the juice is ridiculously cheap, then it may have been adulterated and you might just get a combination of water, ice and essence. Some restaurants think nothing of adding salt and sugar to juice to intensify the flavours; ask the waiter to leave them out if you don't want them.

For information about safely drinking water in India, see the boxed text, p1187.

Alcoholic Drinks

An estimated three-quarters of India's drinking population quaffs 'country liquor' such as the notorious arak (liquor distilled from coconut-palm sap, potatoes or rice) of the south. The same stuff comes with names such as Amanush (Inhuman) and Asha (Hope) in the north. This is the poor-man's drink and millions are addicted to the stuff. It's cheap, gives an instant high and tastes, well, pretty ghastly. Each year, hundreds of people are blinded or even killed by the methyl alcohol in illegal arak.

A portal to websites about Indian wine, www.indianwine.com has notes on manufacturers, information on growing regions and more.

About a quarter of India's drinks market comprises Indian Made Foreign Liquors (IMFLs), made with a base of rectified spirit. Recent years have seen a rise in the consumption of imported spirits, with more and more city bars and restaurants flaunting both domestic and foreign labels.

A local drink is a clear spirit with a heady pungent flavour called mahua, distilled from the flower of the mahua tree. It's brewed in makeshift village stalls all over central India during March and April, when the trees bloom. Mahua is safe to drink as long as it comes from a trustworthy source. There have been cases of people being blinded after drinking mahua adulterated with methyl alcohol.

Rice beer is brewed all over east and northeast India. In the Himalaya you'll find a grain alcohol called raksi, which is strong, has a mild charcoal flavour and tastes vaguely like scotch whisky.

Toddy, the sap from the palm tree, is drunk in coastal areas, especially Kerala. Feni is the primo Indian spirit, and the preserve of laid-back Goa. Coconut feni is light and unexceptional but the much more popular cashew feni – made from the fruit of the cashew tree – is worth a try.

Beer is widely guzzled around India with the more upmarket bars and restaurants stocking an impressive selection of Indian and foreign brands (Budweiser, Heineken, Corona and the like). Most of the domestic brands are straightforward Pilsners around the 5% alcohol mark; travellers champion Kingfisher.

Solan beer from Himachal Pradesh is brewed in the highest-altitude brewery in the world – 2440m.

Wine-drinking culture in India is steadily on the increase, despite the domestic wine-producing industry still being at its infancy stages – there is a long way to go before the industry is globally competitive. It's estimated that current wine consumption in India per capita is a drop above half a teaspoon per year, clearly indicating that the majority of India's drinking population is yet to jump on the wine bandwagon. Nevertheless, the favourable climate and soil conditions in certain parts of the country have spawned some admirable Indian wineries, such as Chateau Indage (Maharashtra), Grover Vineyards (Karnataka) and Sula Vineyards (Maharashtra; also see the boxed text, p804). Domestic offerings include Chardonnay, Chenin Blanc, Sauvignon Blanc, Cabernet Sauvignon, Shiraz and Zinfandel.

TIP FOR BEER DRINKERS

Indian beer often contains the preservative glycerol, which can cause headaches. To avoid a thumping head, open the bottle and quickly tip it upside down, with the top immersed, into a full glass of water. An oily film (the glycerol) descends into the water – when this stops, remove the bottle and enjoy a glycerol-free beer.

CELEBRATIONS

Although most Hindu festivals have a religious core, many are also great occasions for spirited feasting. Sweets are considered the most luxurious of foods and almost every special occasion is celebrated with a mind-boggling range. Karanjis, crescent-shaped flour parcels stuffed with sweet khoya (milk solids) and nuts, are synonymous with Holi, the most rambunctious Hindu festival, and it wouldn't be the same without sticky malpuas (wheat pancakes dipped in syrup), barfis and pedas (multicoloured pieces of khoya and sugar). Pongal (Tamil for 'overflowing') is the major harvest festival of the south and is most closely associated with the dish of the same name, made with the season's first rice, along with jaggery, nuts, raisins and spices. Diwali, the festival of lights, is the most widely celebrated national festival, and some regions have specific Diwali sweets; if you're in Mumbai dive into delicious anarsa (rice-flour cookies).

See p1136 for details of India's major festivals.

Ramadan is the Islamic month of fasting, when Muslims abstain from eating, drinking or smoking between sunrise and sunset. Each day's fast is often broken with dates – considered auspicious – followed by fruit and fruit juices. On the final day of Ramadan, Eid al-Fitr, an extravagant feast celebrates the end of the fast with nonvegetarian biryanis and a huge proliferation of special sweets.

Rice is used to symbolise purity and fertility in Hindu wedding ceremonies and is often used as puja (offerings) in temples.

WHERE TO EAT

India has oodles of restaurants – or 'hotels' – their signage often identifying them as either 'veg', 'pure veg' or 'nonveg'. Most midrange restaurants serve one of two basic genres: South Indian (which usually means the vegetarian food of Tamil Nadu and Karnataka) and North Indian (which comprises Punjabi/Mughlai food). You'll also find the cuisines of neighbouring regions and states. Indians frequently migrate in search of work and these restaurants cater to the large communities seeking the familiar tastes of home.

Not to be confused with burger joints and pizzerias, restaurants in the south advertising 'fast food' are some of India's best. They serve the whole gamut of tiffin (snack) items and often have separate sweet counters. Many upmarket hotels have outstanding five-star restaurants, usually with pan-Indian menus so you can explore regional cuisines. Although they're not cheap, they're within splurging reach of most travellers. Some of India's more cosmopolitan cities, such as Mumbai, Delhi and Bengaluru (Bangalore), have a flourishing restaurant scene with menus sporting everything from Indian and Italian to Chinese and Mediterranean – see the Eating sections of those chapters for more details.

Most cities and larger towns have good bakeries, cafés, sweet shops and juice bars and the ubiquitous milk shop, which sells a wide range of dairy goodies. Dhabas (snack bars; literally 'wayside eateries') are oases to millions of truck drivers, bus passengers and sundry travellers going anywhere by road.

The original dhabas dot the North Indian landscape, but you'll find versions of them throughout the country. The rough-and-ready but lip-smacking food served in these happy-go-lucky shacks has become a genre on its own known as 'dhaba food'.

Street Food

Whatever the time of day, food vendors are frying, boiling, roasting, peeling, juicing, simmering, mixing or baking some type of food and drink to lure peckish passers-by. Small operations usually have one special that they serve all day, while other vendors have different dishes for breakfast, lunch and dinner. The fare varies as you venture between neighbourhoods, towns and regions; it can be as simple as puffed rice or peanuts roasted in hot sand, as unexpected as a fried-egg sandwich, or as complex as the riot of different flavours known as chaat (snack food seasoned with chaat – spiced fruit and vegetable – masala).

Street Foods of India by Vimla and Deb Kumar Mukerji gives recipes of some of the subcontinent's favourite munchies, from samosas and bhelpuri to jalebis and kulfi.

Devilishly delicious deep-fried fare is the staple of the streets, and you'll find enticing samosas (pyramid-shaped pastries filled with spiced vegetables and less often meat), and bhajia (vegetable fritters) in varying degrees of spiciness, along with puris and kachoris. Sublime kebabs doused in smooth curd and wrapped in warm bread are most commonly found in neighbourhoods with a large Muslim community.

Platform Food

One of the thrills of travelling by rail is the culinary circus that greets you at every station. Roving vendors accost arriving trains, yelling and scampering up and down the carriages; fruit, namkin (savoury nibbles), omelettes and nuts are offered through the grills on the windows; and platform cooks try to lure you from the train with the sizzle of fresh samosas. Frequent rail travellers know which station is famous for which food item: Lonavla station in Maharashtra is known for chikki (nut and jaggery toffee), Agra for peitha (crystallised pumpkin) and Dhaund near Delhi for biryani.

STREET FOOD DOS & DON'TS

You should exercise caution when eating street food but as long as you use your common sense you should be fine. Remember, fortune favours the brave.

- Give yourself a few days to adjust to the local cuisine, especially if you're not used to spicy food.
- You know the rule about following a crowd – if the locals are avoiding a particular vendor, you should too. Also take notice of the profile of the customers – any place frequented by women and families will probably be your safest bet.
- Check how and where the vendor is cleaning the utensils, and how and where the food is covered. If the vendor is cooking in oil, have a peek to check it's clean. If the pots or surfaces are dirty, there are food scraps about or too many buzzing flies, don't be shy to make a hasty retreat.
- Don't be put off when you order some deep-fried snack and the cook throws it back into the wok. It's common practice to partly cook the snacks first and then finish them off once they've been ordered. In fact, frying them hot again will kill any germs.
- Unless a place is reputable (and busy), it's best to avoid eating meat from the street.
- Juice stalls are widespread and they're usually safe if the vendor presses the juice in front of you. Never have what is stored in the jug.
- Don't be tempted by glistening presliced melon and other fruit, which keeps its luscious veneer with the regular dousing of (often unfiltered) water.

WHERE TO DRINK

Gujarat is India's only dry state but there are drinking laws in place all over the country, and each state may have regular dry days when the sale of alcohol from liquor shops is banned. To avoid paying high taxes, head for Goa, where booze isn't subject to the exorbitant levies of other states.

You'll find good watering holes in most major cities such as Mumbai, Bengaluru, Kolkata (Calcutta) and Delhi, which are usually at their liveliest on weekends. The more upmarket bars serve a very impressive selection of domestic and imported beverages as well as draught beer. Many bars turn into music-thumping nightclubs anytime after 8pm although there are quiet lounge-bars to be found in some cities. In smaller towns the bar scene can be a seedy, male-dominated affair – not the kind of place thirsty female travellers should venture into alone. For details about a city's bars, see the Drinking sections of this book's regional chapters.

India has the world's biggest whisky market with an annual growth rate of around 10%.

Stringent licensing laws discourage drinking in some restaurants but places that depend on the tourist rupee may covertly serve you beer in teapots and disguised glasses – but don't assume anything, at the risk of causing offence. Very few vegetarian restaurants serve alcohol.

VEGETARIANS & VEGANS

India produces some of the best vegetarian food you'll find anywhere on the planet. There's little understanding of veganism (the term 'pure vegetarian' means without eggs), and animal products such as milk, butter, ghee and curd are included in most Indian dishes. If you are vegan your first problem is likely to be getting the cook to completely understand your requirements.

For further details see the Vegan World Network website at www.vegansworldnetwork.org – click on the Directory link, then on India (the India section contains other useful web links).

HABITS & CUSTOMS

Three main meals a day is the norm in India. Breakfast is usually fairly light, maybe idlis and sambar in the south, and parathas in the north. The health-conscious (mostly the upper echelons of society) may restrict breakfast to fruit and/or cereal. Lunch can be substantial (perhaps the local version of the thali) or light, especially for time-restricted office workers. Dinner is usually the main meal of the day. It's generally comprised of a few different preparations – several curried vegetable (maybe also meat) dishes and dhal, accompanied by rice and/or chapatis. Dishes are served all at once rather than as courses. Desserts are optional and most prevalent during festivals or other special occasions. Fruit often wraps up a meal. In many Indian homes dinner can be a late affair (up to 10pm or even 11pm) depending on personal preference and possibly the season (eg late dinners during the warmer months). Restaurants usually spring to life after 9pm.

Legend says that Buddha, after falling asleep during meditation, decided to cut his eyelids off in an act of penance. The lids grew into the tea plant, which, when brewed, banished sleep.

Food & Religion

For many in India, food is considered just as critical for fine-tuning the spirit as it is for sustaining the body. Broadly speaking, Hindus avoid foods that are thought to inhibit physical and spiritual development, although there are few hard-and-fast rules. The taboo on eating beef (the cow is holy to Hindus) is the most rigid restriction. Devout Hindus (and Jains) also avoid alcohol and foods such as garlic and onions, which are thought to heat the blood and arouse sexual desire. You may come across vegetarian restaurants that make it a point to advertise the absence of onion and garlic in their dishes for this reason. These items are also banned from most ashrams.

Food which is first offered to the gods then shared among devotees is known as prasad.

EATING INDIAN-STYLE

Most Indians eat with their right hand. In the south, they use as much of the hand as is necessary, while elsewhere they use the tips of the fingers. The left hand is reserved for toilet duties and other unsanitary actions such as removing grotty shoes. You can use your left hand for holding drinks and serving yourself from a communal bowl, but it shouldn't be used for bringing food to your mouth. Before and after a meal, it's good manners to wash your hands.

Once your meal is served, mix the food with your fingers. If you are having dhal and sabzi (vegetables), only mix the dhal into your rice and have the sabzi in small scoops with each mouthful. If you are having fish or meat curry, mix the gravy into your rice and take the flesh off the bones from the side of your plate. Scoop up lumps of the mix and, with your knuckles facing the dish, use your thumb to shovel the food into your mouth.

Indian children grow up with spicy food so there are rarely separate menus for them in restaurants. However there are plenty of dishes that don't have a spicy kick – roti, rice, dhal, curd, soup, cheese sandwiches etc – just ask if you're unsure. Small portions may be available at some restaurants.

Some foods, such as dairy products, are considered innately pure and are eaten to cleanse the body, mind and spirit. Ayurveda, the ancient and complex science of life, health and longevity, also influences food customs (see the boxed text, p975).

Pork is taboo for Muslims and stimulants such as alcohol are avoided by the most devout. Halal is the term for all permitted foods, and haram for those prohibited. Fasting is considered an opportunity to earn the approval of Allah, to wipe the sin-slate clean and to understand the suffering of the poor.

Buddhists and Jains subscribe to the philosophy of ahimsa (nonviolence) and are mostly vegetarian. Jainism's central tenet is ultra-vegetarianism, and rigid restrictions are in place to avoid even potential injury to any living creature – Jains abstain from eating vegetables that grow underground because of the potential to harm insects during cultivation.

India's Sikh, Christian and Parsi communities have few or no restrictions on what they can eat.

If you're interested in exploring the captivating science of Ayurveda, there are loads of books available but none better than Ayurveda: Life, Health & Longevity by Dr Robert E Svoboda.

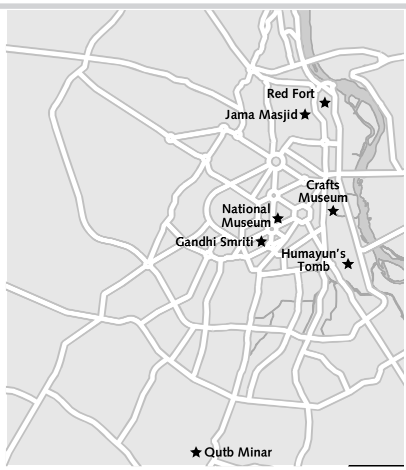
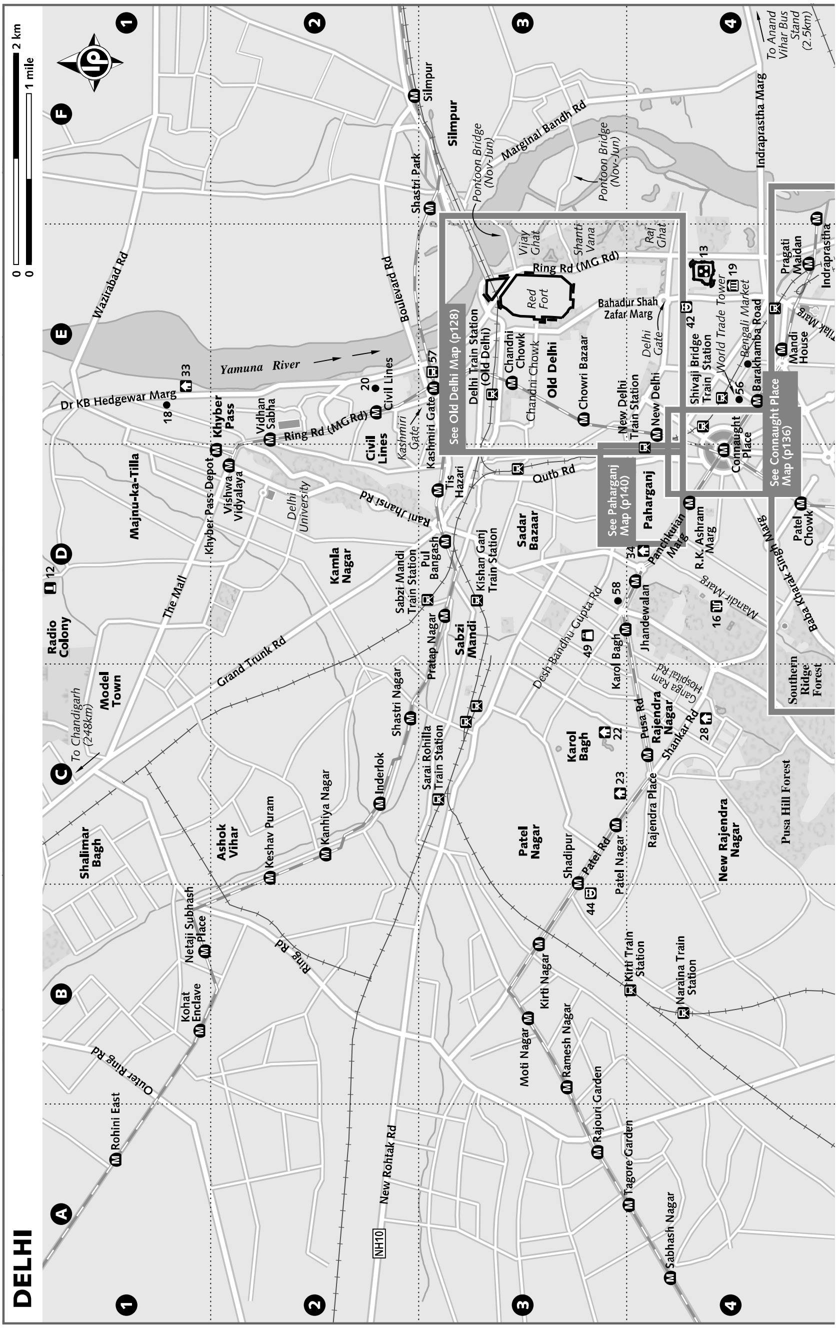
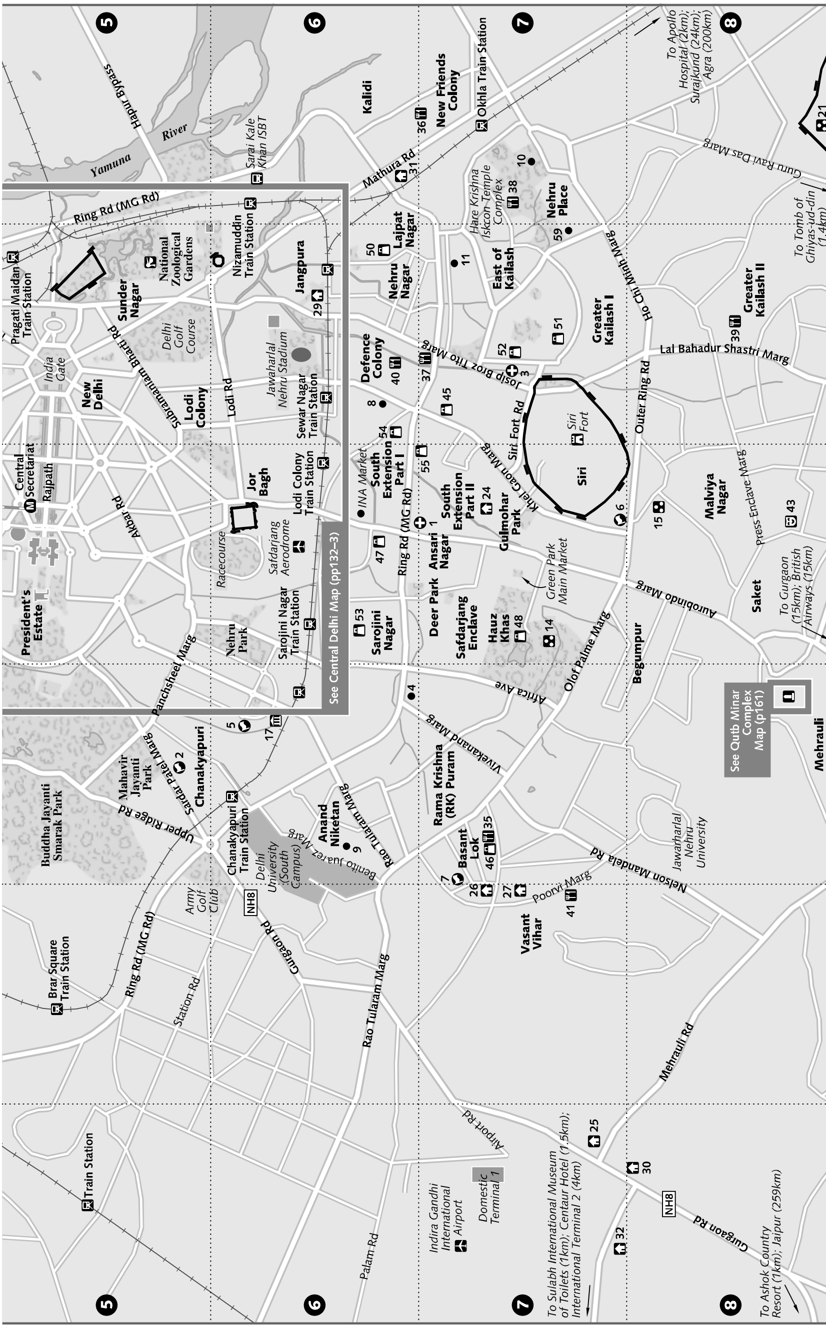
Delhi



Delhi – with its tenacious touts and crush of mechanical and human traffic – can be downright confronting and confounding for the first-time visitor. But don't let petulant first impressions muddy the plus points of this truly multidimensional metropolis. Scratch beyond the gritty surface and you'll swiftly discover that India's capital is sprinkled with glittering gems: captivating ancient monuments, magnificent museums, a vivacious performing-arts scene and some of the subcontinent's yummiest places to eat.



A vibrant melting pot, you'll hear a jumble of vernaculars spoken in Delhi, the most common being Hindi, English, Punjabi and Urdu. In terms of its layout, Delhi encapsulates two very different worlds, the 'old' and the 'new', each presenting deliciously different experiences. Spacious New Delhi was built as the imperial capital of India by the British; rambunctious Old Delhi served as the capital of Islamic India. Visitors can easily dip into both, spending half the day immersing themselves in history at the dramatic Red Fort, Jama Masjid and medieval-flavoured bazaars of Old Delhi, and the other half reviving themselves over frothy cappuccinos or frosty cocktails at one of New Delhi's swanky cafés and bars. Furthermore, Delhi's recent global cuisine revolution means that hungry travellers can now feast on everything from meaty Mughlai curries and plump South Indian idlis (rice cakes), to crispy wood-fired pizzas and squishy sashimi.



For those here to catch a flight home there are some glorious last-minute shopping opportunities, with handicrafts from all around India – a real blessing if you regret not buying that twinkling mirrorwork bedspread in Rajasthan or striking Madhubani painting in Bihar.

HISTORY

Delhi hasn't always been India's capital, but it has played a pivotal part in Indian history as it has always been a gateway city, built on the plains initially near a fording point on the Yamuna River and on the route between western and central Asia and Southeast Asia. It's also believed to be the site of the fabled city of Indraprastha, which featured in the Mahabharata over 3000 years ago, but historical evidence suggests that the area has been settled for around 2500 years.

At least eight known cities have been founded around modern Delhi, the last of which was the British Raj's New Delhi. The first four cities of Delhi were to the south, around the area where the Qutb Minar now stands. The fifth Delhi, Firozabad, was at Firoz Shah Kotla in present-day New Delhi, while Emperor Sher Shah created the sixth at Purana Qila, also in New Delhi. The Mughal emperor, Shah Jahan, constructed the seventh Delhi in the 17th century, thus shifting the Mughal capital from Agra to Delhi; his Shahjahanabad roughly corresponds to Old Delhi today and is largely preserved. The Chauhans seized control in the 12th century and made Delhi the most significant Hindu centre in northern India. But when Qutb-ud-din occupied the city in 1193, he ushered in more than six centuries of Islamic rule. In 1803, the British captured Delhi and promptly installed a British administrator. Delhi wasn't the capital of India at the time, but it was a critical commercial centre.

In 1911, the British announced the shifting of their capital from Kolkata (Calcutta; Bengal was ardently championing independence) and proceeded to build New Delhi as though the sun would never set on the Raj. Construction wasn't completed, and the city officially inaugurated, until 1931. However, only 16 years after the grand inauguration, the British were booted out of India and Delhi became the capital of an independent India.

Since Independence, Delhi has prospered as the capital of modern India, with its population spiralling upwards due to rapid economic expansion and increased job opportunities. The downside of this boom – apart from growing pressure on the city's groaning infrastructure – is chronic overcrowding, traffic congestion, ballooning child labour, housing shortages and pollution.

ORIENTATION

Although Delhi is spread out, the areas of interest to travellers are relatively easy to navigate. In Old Delhi there's the main Inter State Bus Terminal (ISBT) and, to the south, the New Delhi train station. Near this station, acting as a sort of buffer zone between the old and new cities, is Paharganj, jam-packed with cheap accommodation.

New Delhi can be further subdivided into the business and residential areas around Connaught Place (the city's core) and the government areas around Rajpath to the south. Running south from Connaught Place is Janpath, which has the tourist office, hotels and a shopping strip.

The domestic terminals of the Indira Gandhi International Airport are 15km southwest of the centre and the international terminal is a further 8km away.

Urban sprawl – in the form of shanty settlements and affluent residential pockets – is rife.

The prosperous satellite city of Gurgaon, around 25km south of the centre, is a prominent multinational outsourcing hub that's largely characterised by ultramodern office blocks and snazzy shopping malls.

Tourist Information

Beware of the many (profit-driven, usually substandard) travel agencies and others posing as 'tourist information centres' in Delhi. Do not be fooled – the only official one is India Tourism Delhi, listed below. Touts may (falsely) claim to be associated with this office.

For contact details of Indian regional tourist offices ask at India Tourism Delhi, or dial the operator on ☎ 197.

Their special branch investigates tourism-related complaints.

DANGERS & ANNOYANCES

Lonely Planet receives many reports from travellers who have been victim to at least one of a number of scams operating in Delhi. Most scams involve touts, usually around tourist hubs such as Connaught Place, Paharganj and the New Delhi train station. These pushy fellows will try to cart you off to shops, travel agencies or 'official' tourist offices (the only official tourist office is India Tourism Delhi, above), where they earn commission at your expense. If you're being pestered by touts or face other problems, seek out the 'tourist police', who have clearly marked jeeps stationed at tourist centres including the international airport, New Delhi train station and Janpath.

Always exercise caution with travel agencies, as scores of travellers have reported being hoodwinked by unscrupulous agents. To avoid grief, always shop around to gauge exactly what's on offer and choose agents who are members of accredited associations such as the Travel Agents Association of India and the Indian Association of Tour Operators. Finally, before parting with your hard-earned cash, insist on getting what you've been promised in writing – this will be invaluable if you need to lodge a complaint with the tourist office or police.

More and more travellers are being sweet-talked by Delhi travel agents and touts into taking tours to Kashmir, either as part of a 'special package' or stand-alone trip. Once in Kashmir most travellers discover they've been given a very raw (often dodgy) deal, with far less delivered than promised. Given the number of complaints we've received, it's probably best not to book tours to Kashmir from Delhi; also read p352 and p357.

For shopping scams, see p1132. Women should read p1161.

DODGING THE DODGY

Touts may come in the form of taxi-wallahs, especially at the international airport; sneaky drivers may insist you need to confirm your hotel booking before actually arriving – complete hogwash! With this scam, either the driver phones your hotel (or so you think), or, you're whisked off to an office where someone else calls the hotel on your behalf. You're inevitably told that you don't have a reservation when in reality you've been talking to someone in cahoots with the driver. You're then dropped off at another hotel (often in Karol Bagh) where the driver receives a fat commission and you get an inflated room rate. Another scam involves the driver frightening you into thinking there are riots in Delhi with the hidden agenda of bundling you off to a hotel of his choice in an allegedly safe area (again, where he receives commission). Alternatively, the driver may claim that he's lost and stop at a travel agency for directions. The agent (also in on the scam) supposedly dials your hotel and informs you that your room is double-booked. The seemingly concerned agent promptly finds you another hotel, where he and the taxi driver both earn commission. Autorickshaw drivers are also often knee-deep in the commission racket, so politely decline offers to visit hotels or shops of their choice. It also pays to double-check that your driver has indeed taken you to the hotel/shop you requested, as some cunningly try to offload passengers at places where they receive commission – don't pay the fare until you are sure you're at the right destination.

Train stations also attract rapacious tricksters who feed off the tourist traffic. At the New Delhi train station touts may try to stop you from booking tickets at the upstairs International Tourist Bureau and divert you to one of the (overpriced and often unreliable) travel agencies over the road. Make the assumption that the office is never closed (outside official opening hours; see p157), isn't being renovated and hasn't shifted. Other swindlers may insist your ticket needs to be stamped/checked (for a hefty fee) before it's valid. Some may try to convince wait-listed passengers that there's a charge to check their reservation status – don't fall for it. Once out of the station, avoid overpriced conveyance by heading for the car park's prepaid autorickshaw and taxi booths.

The 'shit on the shoe' scam in Connaught Place has declined but not vanished. A shoeshiner grabs your attention by pointing to a gooey splotch on your shoe that wasn't there seconds ago. The shoeshiner (who is actually responsible for it) offers to remove it (for a ridiculously high amount). Look out for these tricksters in advance – they have minimal equipment whereas genuine shoeshiners have a box full of shoe-cleaning products, often laid out on the footpath, and charge around Rs 25 for a polish. If your shoes get poo-splotched, seek out a genuine shoeshiner.

Steer clear of young men lurking about (often around Connaught Place), some of whom humbly claim they're students merely wanting to improve their English – 99% are commission tricksters.

Finally, it's a good idea to always carry small denominations (i.e. anything below Rs 50 notes), as drivers seem to have a perpetual lack of small change.

SIGHTS

Delhi's major sights are predominantly found in Old Delhi and in the vicinity of New Delhi's Connaught Place.

Shuttling between attractions is quickest on Sunday, when there's less traffic – you'll usually beat the crowds if you arrive as close to opening times as possible. Note that many sites are shut on Monday and that US-dollar admission charges are payable in the rupee equivalent.

Behave and dress conservatively whenever visiting places of worship.

Old Delhi

Unruly Old Delhi has a wonderfully raw and unique charm. Set aside at least half a day to do this fascinating area justice. All of the attractions in this section feature on Map p128.

The old walled city of Shahjahanabad stretches west from the Red Fort and was at one time surrounded by a sturdy defensive wall, only fragments of which now exist. The Kashmiri Gate, at the northern end of the walled city, was the scene of desperate fighting when the British retook Delhi during the 1857 Indian Uprising. West of here is the British-erected Mutiny Memorial, dedicated to the soldiers who died during the Uprising. Near the monument is an Ashoka Pillar; like the one in Firoz Shah Kotla, it was brought here by Firoz Shah.

RED FORT (LAL QILA)

This massive fort (Indian/foreigner Rs 10/US$2, video Rs 25; ⏰ 9am-6pm Tue-Sun) stands rather forlornly, a sandstone carcass of its former self. When Emperor Shah Jahan paraded out of the fort atop an elephant into the streets of Old Delhi, though, he and the fort that he built were a grandiose display of pomp and power.

The walls of the fort extend for 2km and vary in height from 18m on the river side to 33m on the city side. Shah Jahan began construction of the massive fort in 1638 and it was completed in 1648. Shah Jahan never completely moved his capital from Agra to his new city of Shahjahanabad in Delhi because he was deposed and imprisoned in Agra Fort by his sly son Aurangzeb.

The Red Fort dates from the very peak of Mughal power. The Mughal reign from Delhi was a short one, however; Aurangzeb was the first and last great Mughal emperor to rule from here.

The 10m-deep moat, which has been bone-dry since 1857, was originally crossed on creaky wooden drawbridges, but these were replaced with stone bridges in 1811.

You can purchase tickets to the fort from the ticket kiosk opposite Lahore Gate (the main gate).

Since Independence, many landmark political speeches have taken place at the fort and every year on Independence Day (15 August) it hosts the prime minister's address to the nation.

Lahore Gate

The fort's main gate takes its name from the fact that it faces towards Lahore, now in Pakistan. It's a potent symbol of modern India, because during the fight for independence from British rule, there was a nationalist aspiration to see the Indian flag flying over the gate – the dream became reality in 1947.

You enter the fort through here and immediately find yourself in the vaulted arcade known as the Chatta Chowk (Covered Bazaar). The arcade of shops here once sold items that the royal household might fancy – silks, jewellery and gold.

The arcade leads to the Naubat Khana (Drum House), where musicians once performed for the emperor. There's an Indian War Memorial Museum (admission Rs 2) upstairs. The open courtyard beyond the Drum House formerly had galleries along either side, but these were removed by the British army when the fort was used as its headquarters.

Diwan-i-Am

The Hall of Public Audiences was where the emperor would hear disputes from his subjects. His alcove in the wall was marble panelled and set with precious stones, many of which were looted following the Indian Uprising. The hall was restored following a directive by Lord Curzon, the viceroy of India between 1898 and 1905.

Diwan-i-Khas

The Hall of Private Audiences, constructed of white marble, was the luxurious chamber where the emperor would hold private meetings. The centrepiece was once the magnificent solid-gold and jewel-studded Peacock Throne, but it was taken out of India by Nadir Shah in 1739. In 1760 the Marathas also removed the silver ceiling from the hall, so today it's only a pale shadow of its former glory.

Royal Baths

Next to the Diwan-i-Khas are the hammams (baths) – three large rooms surmounted by domes, with a fountain in the centre – one of which was set up as a sauna. The floors were once inlaid with pietra dura (marble inlay work), and the rooms were illuminated through panels of coloured glass in the roof.

Shahi Burj

This modest, three-storey, octagonal tower located at the northeastern edge of the fort was once Shah Jahan's private working area.

From here, water used to flow south through the Royal Baths, the Diwan-i-Khas, the Khas Mahal and on to the Rang Mahal.

Moti Masjid

Built in 1659 by Aurangzeb for his own personal use and security, the small and totally enclosed Pearl Mosque, made of marble, is next to the baths. One curious feature of the mosque is that its outer walls are oriented exactly in symmetry with the rest of the fort, while the inner walls are slightly askew, so that the mosque has the correct orientation with Mecca.

Other Features

The Khas Mahal, south of the Diwan-i-Khas, was the emperor's private palace. It was divided into rooms for worship, sleeping and living.

The Rang Mahal (Palace of Colour), further south again, took its name from its painted interior, which is now gone. This was once the residence of the emperor's chief wife and is where he dined. On the floor in the centre there's an exquisitely carved marble lotus. The water flowing along the channel from the Shahi Burj used to end up here.

Relics from the Mughal era are displayed at the Museum of Archaeology (admission Rs 2) in the Mumtaz Mahal, still further south along the eastern wall.

Sound-&-Light Show

Each evening (except Monday) this one-hour show (admission Rs 50; ⌚ in English 7.30pm Nov-Jan, 8.30pm Feb-Apr & Sep-Oct, 9pm May-Aug) re-creates events of India's history, particularly those associated with the Red Fort. Tickets are available from the fort's ticket kiosk or from the Indian Tourism Development Corporation (ITDC) counter at the India Tourism Delhi office (p125).

CHANDNI CHOWK

Old Delhi's backbone is the chronically congested Chandni Chowk which has narrow lanes snaking off it. At the eastern (Red Fort) end of Chandni Chowk, there's the 16th-century Digambara Jain Temple (remove shoes and leather before entering). The bird hospital (donations appreciated; ⌚ 10am-5pm) here is run by the Jains, who believe in the preservation of all life.

The western end of Chandni Chowk is marked by the mid-17th-century Fatehpuri Masjid.

SUNEHRI MASJID

Just south of the Red Fort is the Sunehri Masjid. In 1739 Nadir Shah, the Persian invader, stood on the roof of this mosque and macabrely watched his soldiers conduct a bloody massacre of Delhi's inhabitants.

JAMA MASJID

This stunning mosque (camera/video each Rs 150; ⌚ non-Muslims 8.30am-12.30pm & 1.45pm-30min before sunset, closed noon-2pm Fri) is the largest in India and the final architectural magnum opus of Shah Jahan. Construction of the mosque began in 1644, but it wasn't completed until 1658. It has three gateways, four angle towers and two minarets standing 40m high, and is constructed of alternating vertical strips of red sandstone and white marble. The main entry point is Gate No 3. The mosque's courtyard can hold a mind-blowing 25,000 people.

For Rs 20 it's possible to climb the southern minaret (women must be accompanied by a male; sometimes unaccompanied men may also not be permitted), where the views are superb. From the top of the minaret, you can see one of the features that architect Edwin Lutyens incorporated into his design of New Delhi – the Jama Masjid, Connaught Place and Sansad Bhavan (Parliament House) are in a direct line.

Visitors should remove their shoes at the top of the stairs (pay the shoeminder Rs 5 upon collection). Beware of fake guides insisting there's a charge to enter the mosque (admission is free). If you wish to hire a guide, ask to see accreditation.

RAJ GHAT

South of the Red Fort, on the banks of the Yamuna, a simple square platform of black marble marks the spot where Mahatma Gandhi was cremated following his assassination in 1948.

Jawaharlal Nehru, the first Indian prime minister, was cremated just to the north, at Shanti Vana (Forest of Peace), in 1964. Nehru's daughter, Indira Gandhi, who was assassinated in 1984, and grandsons Sanjay (who died in 1980) and Rajiv (died 1991) were also cremated in this vicinity.

The Raj Ghat area is now a beautiful park. The National Gandhi Museum (☎ 23311793; admission free; ⌚ 9.30am-5.30pm Tue-Sun) contains assorted memorabilia, mostly photos.

Central Delhi

All of the attractions in this section feature on Map pp132–3.

RAJPATH

Broad Rajpath (Kingsway) is another focus of the Raj-appointed English architect Edwin Lutyens' New Delhi. It hosts the spectacular Republic Day parade every 26 January and the Beating of the Retreat on 29 January.

At the eastern end of Rajpath is India Gate, while at the western end is Rashtrapati Bhavan, which is flanked by two large Secretariat buildings. These three buildings sit upon a small rise, known as Raisina Hill.

India Gate, a 42m-high stone memorial arch, pays tribute to around 90,000 Indian army soldiers who died in WWI, the Northwest Frontier operations of the same time and the 1919 Afghan fiasco.

The official residence of the president of India, the palacelike Rashtrapati Bhavan (President's House), was completed in 1929. To its west, the Mughal gardens occupy 130 hectares, open (admission free; photography prohibited) to the public for several days in February/March – for dates contact India Tourism Delhi (p125).

Pre-Independence, Rashtrapati Bhavan was the viceroy's residence. At the time of Mountbatten, India's last viceroy, the number of servants needed to maintain its 340 rooms and gardens was colossal. There were 418 gardeners alone, 50 of whom were boys employed to chase away birds.

The north and south Secretariat buildings are on either side of Rajpath on Raisina Hill. These imposing buildings, topped with small domes, now house government ministries.

Standing at the end of Sansad Marg is Sansad Bhavan (Parliament House). The building is a circular, colonnaded structure 171m in diameter.

HUMAYUN'S TOMB

This must-see tomb (Indian/foreigner Rs 10/US$5, video Rs 25; ⌚ dawn-dusk), off Mathura Rd, is a brilliant example of early Mughal architecture. It was built in the mid-16th century by Haji Begum, the Persian-born senior wife of the second Mughal emperor Humayun. Elements in its design – a squat building with high arched entrances that let in light, topped by a bulbous dome and surrounded by formal gardens – were to be refined over the years to eventually create the magnificence of Agra's Taj Mahal. Haji Begum is buried in the red-and-white sandstone and black-and-yellow marble tomb.

The octagonal tomb of Isa Khan is through a gate to the left of the entrance and is a fine example of Lodi architecture.

PURANA QILA

With massive walls and three gateways, Purana Qila (Old Fort; ☎ 24353178; Mathura Rd; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/US$2, video Rs 25; ⌚ dawn-dusk) was the site of ancient Indraprastha (p45). The Afghan ruler, Sher Shah, who briefly interrupted Mughal sovereignty by defeating Humayun, completed the fort during his reign (1538–45), before Humayun regained control of India.

Entering from the south gate you'll see the small, octagonal, red-sandstone tower, the Sher Mandal, later used by Humayun as a library. It was while descending the stairs of this tower in 1556 that he slipped and sustained injuries from which he later died. Just beyond it is the Qila-i-Kuhran Mosque, or Mosque of Sher Shah.

There's a small archaeological museum (admission free) just inside the main gate.

GANDHI SMRITI

Paying tribute to the Father of the Nation, this poignant memorial (☎ 23012843; 5 Tees January Marg; admission free, camera/video free/prohibited; ⌚ 10am-1.30pm & 2-5pm Tue-Sun, closed every 2nd Sat of month) is where Mahatma Gandhi was shot dead by a Hindu zealot on 30 January 1948. Concrete footsteps represent Gandhi's final steps and lead to the spot where he died, which is marked by a small pavilion known as the Martyr's Column. Gandhi's last words were 'Hey Ram' (Oh God).

The impressive indoor museum runs a short animation film and has a riveting multimedia exhibition that includes the 'Pillar of Castelessness', which lights up when people join hands. In another section of the museum is a series of glass-encased minifigurines depicting scenes from Gandhi's life, including his 1931 meeting with the king at Buckingham Palace.

The room where Gandhi spent his final 144 days is also open to the public. On display are his walking stick, spectacles, spinning wheel, chappals (sandals) and other personal items.

SUPREME COURT OF INDIA MUSEUM

Showcasing India's judicial history, this small museum (☎ 23388942; Supreme Court of India, Tilak Marg; admission free; 10am-5pm Tue-Sun), which is accessed from Mathura Rd (opposite Appu Ghar Gate), contains two interesting galleries. One gallery has a focus on the evolution of India's justice system, which harks back to the Indus Valley civilization (3500 BC). The second gallery is dedicated to the Federal and Supreme Courts with exhibits including an early-20th-century judge's chair, portraits of Raj-era judges and original manuscripts of landmark cases including the assassination case of Mahatma Gandhi. Photography is prohibited.

CRAFTS MUSEUM

Near Pragati Maidan is this delightful tree-shaded, exhibit-packed museum (☎ 23371641; Bhairon Marg; admission free; 10am-5pm Tue-Sun) and craft stalls where artisans sell direct to buyers. It's part of a contrived, yet enjoyable, 'village life' complex and is certainly a soothing escape from the city madness.

Peruse the well-presented galleries which house more than 20,000 exhibits from around India, including metalware, woodwork, old silver jewellery, tribal masks, paintings and terracotta figurines. There's also a huge 18th-century wooden jharokha (elaborate balcony) from Gujarat. The on-site shop sells quality crafts.

Photography is only allowed with prior permission.

NATIONAL MUSEUM

Thousands of historic artefacts are on display in the spacious galleries of this excellent museum (☎ 23019272; Janpath; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/300, foreigner price includes audio-guides in English/Hindi/French/Japanese/German; camera Indian/foreigner Rs 20/300; 10am-5pm Tue-Sun). Exhibits include rare relics from the Harappan Civilisation, Central Asian antiquities (including silk paintings from the 1st century AD), Indian textiles, tribal masks, sculptures, musical instruments, old coins (including Portuguese, Dutch and Danish), miniature paintings and weapons (including a battle-axe from AD 1739). Give yourself at least a few hours – preferably a half-day – to explore this museum, one of India's finest.

When collecting audio-guides, you'll have to deposit some form of personal identification which will be returned when you give back the headsets. Video cameras are prohibited.

Next door is the Archaeological Survey of India (☎ 23010822; Janpath; 9.30am-1pm & 2-6pm Mon-Fri) which stocks publications about India's main sites.

GURDWARA BANGLA SAHIB

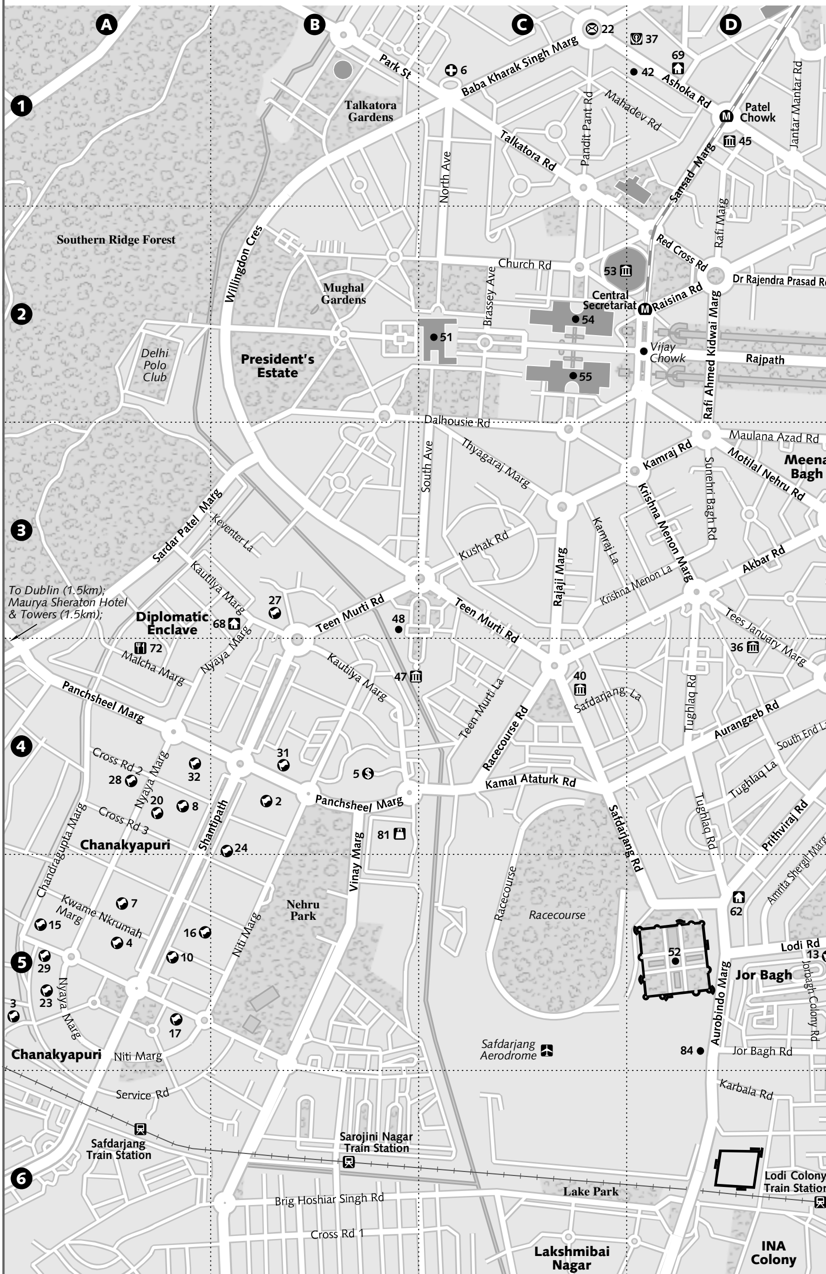
Topped with gold domes, the Gurdwara Bangla Sahib (Ashoka Rd; 4am-9pm) was constructed at the site where the eighth Sikh guru, Harkrishan Dev, spent several months in 1664. This guru dedicated most of his time to helping the destitute and sick and was revered for his healing powers; a tank on the premises of the gurdwara (Sikh temple) contains water said to have curative properties. Soul-warming kirtan (devotional songs) often drift from the temple.

SAFDARJANG'S TOMB

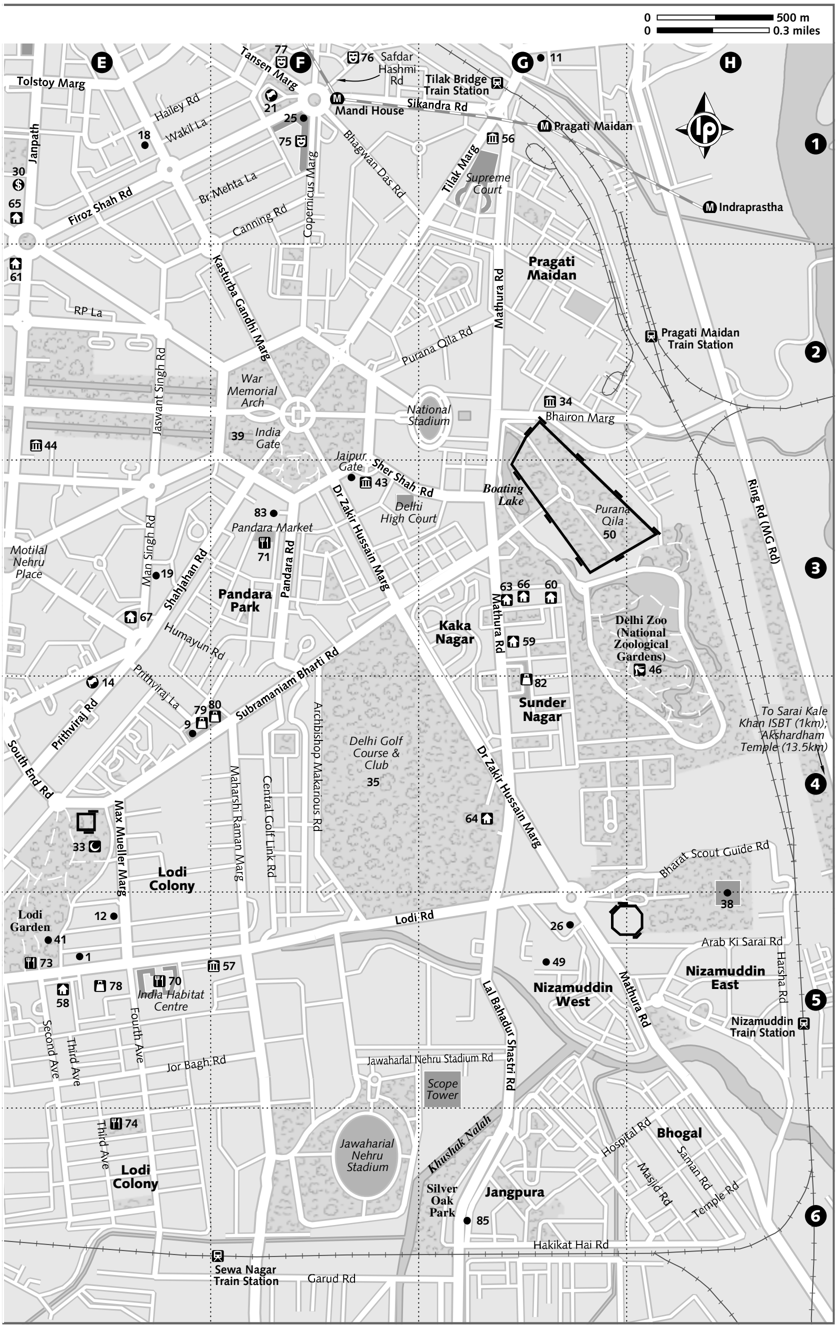
Built by the Nawab of Avadh for his father, Safdarjang, this mid-18th-century tomb (Aurobindo Marg; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/US$2, video Rs 25; dawn-dusk) is one of the last examples of Mughal architecture before the final remnants of the great empire collapsed.

INDIRA GANDHI MEMORIAL MUSEUM

The former residence of Indira Gandhi is now a museum (☎ 23010094; 1 Safdarjang Rd; admission free; 9.30am-4.45pm Tue-Sun), displaying some of her personal belongings, including the blood-stained sari she was wearing when she was assassinated in 1984. There are also newspaper clippings, letters and photos. On the way



URBAN JUNGLE RETREATS



Raucous Delhi, with its suffocating crowds, snarling traffic and bothersome touts, can be incredibly frazzling. Thankfully there are some scenic spots to steal solace. During the cooler months, retreat to the pleasant grounds of Humayun's Tomb (opposite), Qutb Minar (p161), Safdarjang's tomb (above), Lodi Garden (p134), Hauz Khas (p137), Raj Ghat (p129) and India Gate (opposite).

If you're in town during summer, top-end hotels (p144) – with their igloo-cold air-conditioning and lavish interiors – are rejuvenating spots to recharge your batteries, most with 24-hour coffee shops. Air-conditioned comfort can also be found at Delhi's modern cineplexes (p151).

Another great escape from the rat race is the Crafts Museum (above), where you can casually peruse the galleries and watch visiting artisans turn mud into masterpieces.

out, you'll pass an enclosed crystal pathway which is where Gandhi walked moments before being fatally shot by two of her Sikh bodyguards – the clear glass portion marks the spot she fell. For events that sparked Gandhi's assassination, read p52.

NIZAM-UD-DIN'S SHRINE

Across from Humayun's tomb is the shrine (24hr) of the Muslim Sufi saint, Nizam-ud-din Chishti, who died in 1325, aged 92. The construction of Nizam-ud-din's tank ignited a dispute between the saint and the constructor of Tughlaqabad (p161). Other tombs include the later grave of Jahanara, the daughter of Shah Jahan and the renowned Urdu poet, Amir Khusru. Qawwali (Urdu devotional singing) occasionally takes place at the shrine (inquire directly).

LODI GARDEN

This well-tended garden (Lodi Rd; 6am-8pm) is a popular place for a morning/evening stroll or jog. Within the grounds are the crumbling tombs of the Sayyid and Lodi rulers, including the 15th-century Bara Gumbad.

Avoid visiting on Sunday, when crowds can mar the garden's serenity.

NATIONAL PHILATELIC MUSEUM

Located in the Dak Bhavan post office, this museum (☎ 23036727; Sadar Patel Chowk, Sansad Marg; admission free; ⌚ 10am-5pm Mon-Fri) exhibits more than 1700 post-Independence stamps. Photography is prohibited.

NATIONAL GALLERY OF MODERN ART

NEHRU MEMORIAL MUSEUM & PLANETARIUM

Teen Murti Bhavan, the former residence of Jawaharlal Nehru (India's first prime minister), just off Teen Murti Rd, has been converted into a museum (☎ 23016734; admission free; ⌚ 9am-5.15pm Tue-Sun). Its photographs and newspaper clippings offer perceptive insights into the Independence movement.

In the grounds is a planetarium (☎ 23014504; 45min show Rs 15; ⌚ in English 11.30am & 3pm).

TIBET HOUSE

Tibet House has a small museum (☎ 24611515; 1 Lodi Rd; admission Rs 10; ⌚ 9.30am-1pm & 2-5.30pm Mon-Fri) with ceremonial items brought out of Tibet when the Dalai Lama fled following Chinese occupation. Pieces include sacred manuscripts, sculptures and old thangkas (Tibetan paintings on cloth). Photography prohibited.

On the 1st floor is a bookshop that specialises in Buddhist titles and sells Buddhist chanting CDs, prayer flags and katas (sacred Tibetan scarves).

NATIONAL ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS

Popular with families and courting couples, the well-kept zoo (☎ 24359825; Mathura Rd; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/50, video Rs 50; ⌚ 9.30am-4pm Sat-Thu) is a welcoming green retreat from the concrete jungle. There's a bevy of beasts such as big jungle cats (including rare white tigers), Himalayan black bears, rhinos, hippos, wolves, elephants, giraffes and some truly spectacular birds – don't miss the crowned crane and great Indian hornbill. Arrive early for maximum tranquillity.

Connaught Place Area

CONNAUGHT PLACE

The heart of New Delhi is the vast traffic circle of Connaught Place (CP; Map p136) and the seven streets that radiate from it, which are divided into blocks. It has an architecturally uniform series of colonnaded buildings devoted to shops, banks, restaurants, hotels and offices.

Often creating confusion, the outer circle is technically called 'Connaught Circus' (divided into blocks from G to N) and the inner circle 'Connaught Place' (divided into blocks from A to F). There's also a 'Middle Circle'. In 1995 the inner and outer circles were renamed Rajiv Chowk and Indira Chowk respectively, but these names are rarely used.

Touts are especially rampant in Connaught Place (read p125).

JANTAR MANTAR

Comprised of curious terracotta-red structures, Jantar Mantar (Map p136; Sansad Marg; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/US$2; ⌚ 9am-dusk) was one of Maharaja Jai Singh II's observatories, constructed in 1725. It's dominated by a huge sundial and houses other instruments plotting the course of heavenly bodies.

Other Areas

BAHAI HOUSE OF WORSHIP (LOTUS TEMPLE)

This eye-catching temple (Map pp120-1; ☎ 26444029; Kalkaji; ⌚ 9.30am-5.30pm Tue-Sun), poetically shaped like an unfurling white lotus, was completed in 1986 and is flanked by well-manicured lawns. The Bahai philosophy revolves around universal peace and the elimination of prejudice. Adherents of all faiths are welcome to pray or meditate silently according to their own religion.

Refrain from speaking in the temple and note that photography inside is prohibited.

AKSHARDHAM TEMPLE

Located on Delhi's outskirts is the mammoth and elaborate Akshardham Temple (www.akshardham.com; Noida turning, National Hwy 24; ⌚ 9am-6pm Tue-Sun), a recently built structure (inaugurated in 2005) made of pink sandstone and white marble. Part of the Hindu Swaminarayan Group, this extraordinary temple reflects traditional Orissan, Gujarati, Mughal and Rajasthani architectural elements and has exquisite domes and pillars. It contains around 20,000 carved deities.

Allow at least half a day to do justice to this sprawling temple complex (weekdays are less crowded) as there's lots to see (the website has more details).

LAKSHMI NARAYAN TEMPLE (BIRLA MANDIR)

West of Connaught Place, with soaring domes, the Orissan-style Lakshmi Narayan Temple (Map pp120-1; Mandir Marg; 6am-9pm) was erected in 1938 by the wealthy industrialist BD Birla. The main temple is dedicated to Lakshmi, the goddess of wealth, and her consort, Narayan the Preserver.

NATIONAL RAIL MUSEUM

Trainspotters will relish this museum (Map pp120-1; ☎ 26881816; Chanakyapuri; admission Rs 10, video Rs 100; 9.30am-5pm Tue-Sun Oct-Mar, to 7pm Apr-Sep) which has intriguing indoor and outdoor sections. On site are almost 30 locomotives and old carriages as well as assorted railway memorabilia. Exhibits include an 1855 steam engine, still in working order, and various oddities including the skull of an elephant that charged a train in 1894, and lost.

On Sunday between 2.30pm and 4.30pm you can ride the coal-run monorail (Rs 20).

HAUZ KHAS VILLAGE

This urban 'village' (Map pp120–1) surrounded by parkland was once the reservoir for the second city of Delhi – Siri – which is situated slightly to the east. Today, Hauz Khas is a posh suburb known for its upmarket boutiques and art galleries.

Hauz Khas is also the site of the crumbling Firoz Shah's tomb.

SHANKAR'S INTERNATIONAL DOLLS MUSEUM

Boasting one of the planet's biggest collections of dolls, this museum (Map pp120-1; ☎ 23316970; Nehru House, Bahadur Shah Zafar Marg; admission Rs 10; 10am-5.30pm Tue-Sun) has 6500 dolls from around 85 countries. Apart from the noteworthy international collection, which includes dolls from Europe, Asia, Africa and the Middle East, there are brightly costumed Indian dolls, including brides.

CORONATION DURBAR SITE

North of Old Delhi, in a desolate field, stands a lone obelisk (Map pp120–1) – this is where, in 1877 and 1903, the great durbars, featuring Indian nobility, paid homage to the British monarch. In 1911, it was here that King George V was declared emperor of India.

FIROZ SHAH KOTLA

The ruins of Firozabad (the fifth city of Delhi), erected by Firoz Shah in 1354, can be found at Firoz Shah Kotla (Map pp120-1; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/US$2, video Rs 25; dawn-dusk), just off Bahadur Shah Zafar Marg. In the fortress/palace is a 13m-high sandstone Ashoka Pillar inscribed with Ashoka's edicts (and a later inscription).

SULABH INTERNATIONAL MUSEUM OF TOILETS

Get up-close-and-personal with toilets at this quirky museum (☎ 25053646; www.sulabhtoiletmuseum.org; Sulabh Complex, Mahavir Enclave, Palam Dabri Rd; admission free; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) southwest of the centre. It houses a mind-boggling collection of toilet-related paraphernalia dating from 2500 BC to modern times. A guided tour (free) brings the loos to life.

Delhi Golf Club (Map pp132-3; ☎ 24362768; Dr Zakir Hussain Marg; weekdays/weekends US$45/60, caddies Rs 120; 6am-5pm) Scenic grounds; weekends can get crowded.

TOURS

Delhi is a spread-out city so taking a tour makes sense, although they can be hurried. Avoid Monday when many sites are shut. Site admission fees and camera/video charges aren't included in tour prices below and rates are per person. Book several days in advance as minimum numbers may be required.

India Tourism Delhi (p125) can arrange multilingual, government-approved guides (from Rs 350/500 per half-/full day).

Ashok Travels & Tours (ITDC; Map p136; ☎ 23412336; L-Block, Connaught Place; 🕒 6am-8pm) It's also possible to book tours at the India Tourism Delhi office or any ITDC hotel. Tours include a morning (8am to 1pm) excursion of New Delhi and an afternoon (2pm to 5.15pm) tour of Old Delhi; each Rs 210. A tour of Old and New Delhi is Rs 315 (8am to 5.15pm). Same-day trips (Saturday to Thursday) to Agra are Rs 1000 (includes breakfast).

Delhi Tourism & Transport Development Corporation (DTTDC); Baba Kharak Singh Marg (Map p136; ☎ 23363607; 🕒 7am-9pm); domestic airport (☎ 25675609; 🕒 5am-11pm); international airport (☎ 25691213; 🕒 24hr); N-Block (Map p136; ☎ 23315322; 🕒 10am-6pm Mon-Sat); New Delhi train station (no phone; 🕒 8am-8pm). Same-day trips to Agra (Rs 850) run thrice-weekly while three-day tours of Agra and Jaipur (Rs 3400) operate twice-weekly.

Hotel Broadway (Map p128; ☎ 23273821; 4/15 Asaf Ali Rd; Rs 495) Two-hour 'heritage walking tours' of Old Delhi that include lunch at Chor Bizarre (p146).

Old Delhi Walks (Intach; ☎ 24641304; intachdelhi@rediffmail.com; Rs 30) This walking tour (approximately two hours) is with an expert guide and explores places of historic, spiritual and architectural interest. Customised tours are also possible. Advance bookings of at least a week are requested.

Salaam Baalak Trust (Map p140; ☎ 23681803; www.salaambaalaktrust.com; Chandiwalan, Paharganj; Rs 200) This praiseworthy charitable organisation (p1156) offers 'street walks' with a twist – your guide is a former (Trust-trained) street child, who will show you first-hand what life is like for inner-city homeless kids. The walk takes around two hours and the money goes to the Trust to further assist children. For details contact Shekhar at the above number or on ☎ 9873130383.

SLEEPING

It's wise to book a room in advance as Delhi's most salubrious places can fill up in a flash, leaving new arrivals easy prey for commission sharks (read p125). Most hotels offer pick-up from the airport (p158) with advance notice.

Be warned that street din can be diabolical – to snooze soundly, request a quiet room and keep earplugs handy. Also, room quality within budget and midrange hotels can radically vary so try to inspect a few rooms first.

Long-term stayers should consider renting a furnished apartment – to find out what's currently on offer flick through the latest Delhi City Guide and Delhi Diary (p124) as well as local newspapers. It's also worth surfing the net: two good websites are www.speciality-apartments.com and www.delhiescape.net.

For details about staying with an Indian family contact India Tourism Delhi (p125); doubles start at around Rs 1000.

Hotels with a minimum tariff of Rs 500 charge 12.5% luxury tax and some also whack on a service charge (5% to 10%). Taxes aren't included in this chapter unless indicated and all rooms have private bathrooms unless otherwise stated. Most hotels have a noon check-out and luggage storage is usually possible (sometimes for a small charge).

Budget

Delhi's budget bunch is decidedly dreary and the service is patchy. Most rooms are typically small and screaming for a fresh lick of paint and bathroom blitz. On the upside, rooms aren't as expensive as they could be for a capital city.

Most backpackers head for hyperactive Paharganj, a touristy pocket near the New Delhi train station that has some of the city's cheapest beds.

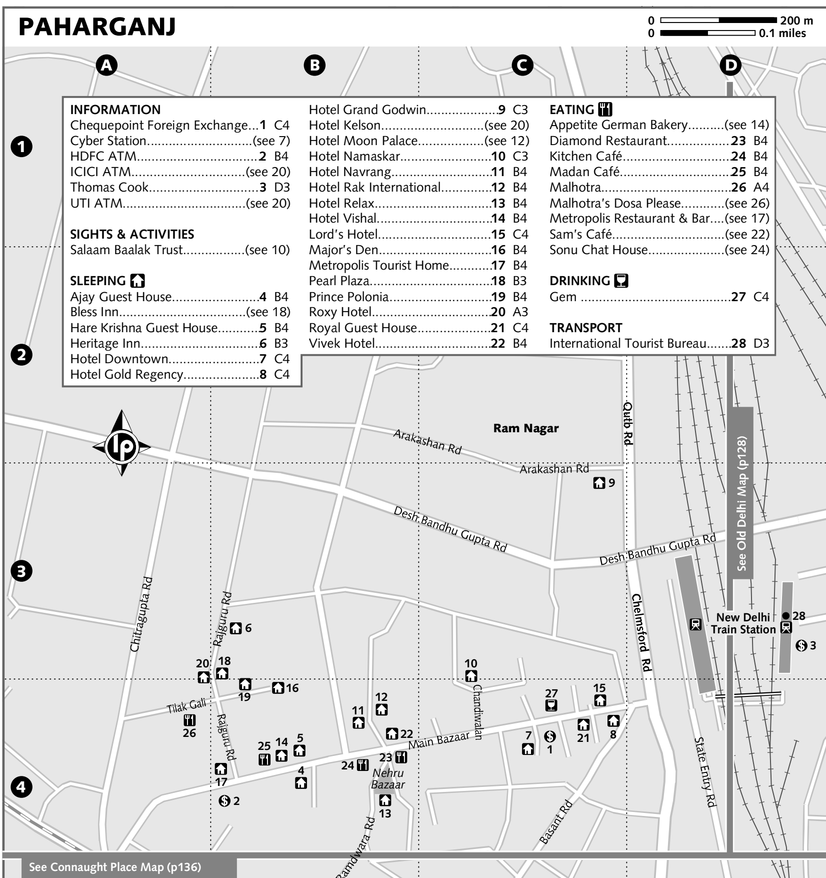
In the following budget listings, only the cheapest, non-AC room rates have been provided; AC rooms, where available, will be several hundred rupees higher.

NORTH DELHI

Old Delhi

Few travellers stay in teeming Old Delhi and solo women are likely to be viewed with curious disdain.

Hotel New City Palace (Map p128; ☎ 23279548; s/d Rs 250/350;) Tight-fit and simply furnished rooms, but a reasonable option if the below hotel is full.



Hotel Bombay Orient (Map p128; ☎ 23242691; s/d Rs 300/450;) One of the old city's best budget bets, but request one of its newer rooms.

Paharganj Area

Bumper-to-bumper with budget lodgings, Paharganj – with its seedy reputation for drugs and dodgy characters – isn't everyone's cup of tea. On the plus side, it's walking distance from the New Delhi train station – convenient if you've got an early-morning departure – and it's the place to tap into the backpacker grapevine. Although Paharganj has some of Delhi's cheapest places to sleep, be prepared for cooped-up, sun-starved rooms with insipid interiors.

Most hotels are in the main drag of Main Bazaar, with many freckling the numerous (nameless) alleys that tentacle off it. Since Main Bazaar is overbearingly congested during the day, taxi-wallahs may (understandably) refuse to deposit you right at your hotel's doorstep; however this isn't a problem, as most are a short walk away. All of the accommodation listed below features on Map p140.

Hotel Namaskar (☎ 23583456; www.namaskarhotel.com; 917 Chandiwalan, Main Bazaar; s/d Rs 200/300;) This old-time favourite is run by two amiable brothers, Surinder and Rajinder. The 32 rooms are sparsely furnished but the colour scheme is bound to tickle you pink. Car hire can be arranged.

Hotel Vishal (☎ 23562123; vishalhotel@hotmail.com; 1575 Main Bazaar; s/d Rs 200/300;) A labyrinth of a place with scrawny cats creeping through the corridors, Vishal's rooms are a real mixed bag, some larger (and with cleaner sheets) than others.

Hotel Downtown (☎ 41541529; 4583 Main Bazaar; s/d Rs 250/300) The rooms are smallish and minimally furnished but this hotel is still in better shape then many of its budget brothers.

Ajay Guest House (☎ 23583125; ajay5084@hotmail.com; 5084 Main Bazaar; s/d Rs 250/350;) Attracts travellers for its chilled-out vibe, not its ragged rooms, many with flaky walls and peculiar odours.

Vivek Hotel (☎ 51541435; reservation@vivekhotel.com; 1534-1550 Main Bazaar; s/d Rs 300/350;) Rooms are small and sparingly furnished, but still a cut above many Paharganj offerings, plus it boasts Sam's Café (p146).

Heritage Inn (☎ 23588222; Rajguru Rd; d Rs 350;) You certainly won't be able to rumba in the poky rooms, but at least you get smooth marble floors, a TV and bearable bathroom.

Major's Den (☎ 23589010; s/d Rs 290/365;) Away from the madness of Main Bazaar, the Den has threadbare rooms but is a drug- and hype-free place. The retired Major, a sprightly septuagenarian, lives on site with his family. The two (pricier) rooftop rooms enjoy more sunbeams.

Hotel Rak International (☎ 23562478; Tooti Chowk, Main Bazaar; s/d Rs 300/400;) The modest rooms at this popular hotel all have marble floors, tiled bathrooms, TVs, wardrobes, small dressing tables and, importantly, windows. Stock up on midnight snacks at nearby Raghu's Cookies World.

Royal Guest House (☎ 23586176; royalguesthouse@yahoo.com; Main Bazaar; s/d Rs 490/590;) Royal they're not, but the small rooms do have clean sheets, TVs, fridges, bedside tables and tiled floors.

Other possibilities:

Hotel Navrang (☎ 23581965; Tooti Chowk, Main Bazaar; s/d Rs 100/120) Elementary cell-like rooms (especially the singles) but you're paying peanuts!

Hotel Moon Palace (☎ 23587638; Tooti Chowk, Main Bazaar; s/d Rs 200/250;) Pint-sized and nondescript rooms, but not bad at this price.

Hare Krishna Guest House (☎ 41541341; 1572 Main Bazaar; s/d Rs 200/250) Scuffed but cheap, inhabitable rooms.

Bless Inn (☎ 23688400; narang_kelson@hotmail.com; Rajguru Rd; d Rs 350;) Rooms are oversized shoe-boxes but you can guzzle free coffee and tea round-the-clock.

Hotel Kelson (☎ 41541020; narang_kelson@hotmail.com; Rajguru Rd; d Rs 400;) Small themeless rooms but the floors are marble and there's 24-hour free coffee and tea. Adjoining is its (similar) sister property, the Roxy Hotel.

Lord's Hotel (☎ 23588303; 51 Main Bazaar; s/d Rs 350/450;) Rather gloomy rooms but with cool marble floors and TVs.

Majnu-ka-Tilla

Just the antidote for anyone who's got the big-city blues, this mellow enclave (aka Tibetan Colony) certainly isn't as centrally located as Paharganj but has better-value rooms. Here you'll rub shoulders with maroon-clad Buddhist monks, curio vendors and local residents all going about their daily business.

There have been unconfirmed reports that authorities may shut down some of this area's commercial lodgings, so do check ahead.

Peace House (Map pp120-1; ☎ 23939415; d 4th/3rd/2nd/1st fl Rs 175/275/335/325) The rooms are plain but neat and the kitchen makes good momos (stuffed dumplings).

Wongdhen House (Map pp120-1; ☎ 23816689; wongdhenhouse@hotmail.com; s/d with shared bathroom Rs 225/250, with private bathroom Rs 375/450;) The pick of the Majnu-ka-Tilla bunch, happy-go-lucky Wongdhen welcomes weary travellers with basic but good-sized, clean rooms. The restaurant rustles up everything from banana pancakes to Tibetan noodles.

CENTRAL DELHI

Connaught Place Area

If you choose to stay here you're essentially paying for the central location, not the room quality or service, which is, frankly, so-so. The following feature on Map p136.

Central Court Hotel (☎ 23315013; N-Block; s/d incl tax Rs 1020/1260;) It may be frayed around the edges, but this half-a-century-old hotel has a certain time-warped appeal. The lacklustre rooms have high ceilings, TVs and fridges – some can be noisy so choose prudently. More dosh buys you more space and character; some rooms have gingham bedspreads and old-fashioned light-fittings.

YWCA International Guest House (☎ 23361561; www.ywcaindia.org; 10 Sansad Marg; s/d incl tax & breakfast Rs 1300/1660;) Like many Ys, this place has a semi-institutional flavour. The rooms are underwhelming but they're adequately comfortable.

Hotel Metro Park (☎ 23329589; hotelmetropark@yahoo.com; 50 B-Block; s/d Rs 1400/1700;) The smallish rooms don't have much oomph but are reasonably well-furnished; angle for one of the big-windowed rooms.

YMCA Tourist Hostel (☎ 23361915; ymcath@ndf.vsnl.net.in; Jai Singh Rd; s/d with shared bathroom Rs 915/1705, with private bathroom Rs 1385/2410;) This busy Y (men and women) has the whiff of a boarding house and some lemon-lipped staff. However the rooms aren't bad, although some have more charm then others – inspect a few first. The large pool (open April to November) sparkles, but the Rs 150 charge to get wet is very uncool. All rates include tax, breakfast and dinner.

Hotel Bright (☎ 41517766; www.hotelbrightdelhi.com; 1st fl, 85 M-Block; d incl breakfast from Rs 1800;) Part of a 1930s building, Bright's decent rooms sport high ceilings and some even boast ornamental fireplaces. Renovations are planned so the rooms should be shining even brighter by the time you read this.

The following are crusty to the core but cheap for Connaught Place:

Ringo Guest House (☎ 23310605; ringo_guest_house@yahoo.co.in; 17 Scindia House, Connaught Lane; dm Rs 90, s/d with shared bathroom Rs 125/250, with private bathroom Rs 300/400)

Sunny Guest House (☎ 23312909; sunnyguesthouse.123@hotmail.com; 152 Scindia House, Connaught Lane; dm Rs 90, s/d with shared bathroom Rs 170/250, d with private bathroom Rs 350)

HK Choudhary Guest House (☎ 23322043; harsh@del3.vsnl.net.in; 35/3 H-Block; s with shared bathroom Rs 300, s/d with private bathroom Rs 550/650;)

AIRPORT AREA

Hotel Tarra (Map pp120-1; ☎ 26783677; A-72, St 2, Mahipalpur Extn, National Hwy 8; s/d Rs 450/495;) Hallelujah! Budget travellers have somewhere respectable to stay if their flight departs at a silly hour. Tarra has eight ordinary but comfy rooms arranged around a small garden courtyard. Its location, in a quiet (unpaved) lane, means you can sleep like a baby.

Passengers departing within 24 hours of arriving by plane, can avail of the retiring rooms of the domestic terminal (☎ 25675126; per person Rs 505) and the international terminal (☎ 25652011; dm Rs 100;) at the Indira Gandhi International Airport.

Midrange

NORTH DELHI

Old Delhi

Hotel Broadway (Map p128; ☎ 23273821; www.oldworldhospitality.com; 4/15 Asaf Ali Rd; s/d incl breakfast Rs 1450/2495;) Semiluxurious Broadway, which straddles the old and new cities, is this area's best midrange bet. The three-star hotel has slightly dated rooms but is otherwise good, with modernish amenities. Broadway runs the popular 'heritage walking tour' (p139) and is home to the highly regarded Chor Bizarre restaurant (p146).

Paharganj Area

Paharganj's midrange properties have about as much charisma as a kitchen sponge, but are exonerated for their proximity to Connaught Place and the New Delhi train station. For an overview of Paharganj, see p140. The following listing are featured on Map p140.

Metropolis Tourist Home (☎ 23561794; metravel@bom9.vsnl.net.in; 1634 Main Bazaar; d incl tax Rs 1000;) Rooms (some with tight balconies) here are simple and characterless but come with smooth tiled floors, small TVs and fridges. One of the redeeming features is the rooftop restaurant (p146).

Pearl Plaza (☎ 23585544; narang_kelson@hotmail.com; Rajguru Rd; d Rs 1000;) PP has some of Paharganj's most likeable (but still far from scintillating) rooms, with wrought-iron bed-heads, sofas, TVs, marble floors and complimentary round-the-clock tea and coffee.

Hotel Grand Godwin (☎ 23546891; www.godwinhotels.com; 41 Arakashan Rd, Ram Nagar; s/d Rs 900/1100;) North of Main Bazaar in Ram Nagar, this is the area's finest midrange choice, with a snazzy lobby and glass-capsule lift. The tidy rooms all have marble floors, wardrobes, fridges, full-length mirrors and TVs.

Hotel Relax (☎ 23562811; vidur109@hotmail.com; Nehru Bazaar; d Rs 1200;) Set over several airy floors, the rooms are dowdily decorated but comfortable, all with TVs and fridges. There's a small open-air courtyard.

Other possibilities:

Prince Polonia (☎ 23581930; polinter@del3.vsnl.net.in; 2325 Tilak Gali; s/d incl tax Rs 900/1000;) Rooms are tired-looking and small, but otherwise satisfactory.

Hotel Gold Regency (☎ 23562101; www.goldregency.com; 4350 Main Bazaar; s/d incl breakfast Rs 950/1200;) The drab rooms struggle to excite, but are clean-ish and spacious.

CENTRAL DELHI

Connaught Place Area

Although CP properties lack the 'wow' factor, they're unbeatably central. These listings feature on Map p136.

Hotel Fifty Five (23321244; www.hotel55.com; 55 H-Block; s/d Rs 1800/2300;) Found up a flight of stairs, this modest one-star hotel has simply decorated but adequately comfortable rooms, some better (and quieter) than others. There's a small open-air terrace.

Prem Sagar Guest House (23345263; premsagar delhi@hotmail.com; 1st fl, 11 P-Block; s/d Rs 2000/2500;) Mrs Singh, the courteous owner, keeps this place shipshape, making it a reliable choice. The rooms aren't flash, but they're clean, with TV, fridge and wardrobe. There's a pot-plant filled outdoor area.

York Hotel (23415769; www.hotelyorkindia.com; K-Block; s/d Rs 2150/2950;) Harking back to the 70s, York's rooms aren't as swinging as they once were, but they're good sized and clean, some with wood-panelled floors and satiny bedcovers. Try to avoid the noisy, street-facing rooms.

Hotel Alka (23344328; www.hotelalka.com; P-Block; s/d Rs 2100/3200;) Alka's space-deprived standard rooms won't make you jump for joy but at least they have contemporary comfort, some with smart wood-panelled walls. More money buys more pizzazz, including grrrroovy leopard-skin-themed rooms. There's a good vegetarian restaurant.

Jukaso Inn Downtown (23415450; www.jukaso.com; L-Block; s/d Rs 2700/3500;) Small but modern-style rooms (some superior), many with corporate-style carpets and upholstery. There's a round-the-clock coffee shop.

Corus (23315903; www.thecorus.com; 49 B-Block; d Rs 4000;) One of the newest kids on the block, this is a super choice, with 28 fairly spacious rooms. The standard rooms (wooden or marble floors) are contemporarily furnished and have flat-screen TVs. Deluxe rooms are bigger, with a small sitting area and tasteful scatter rugs.Also recommended:

Janpath Home (9910444634; anniejessyus@yahoo.com; 86/17 Janpath; s/d with shared bathroom Rs 2500/3500;) Low-key apartment with three rooms around a small open-air courtyard. Advance bookings essential.

Hotel Marina (23324658; 59 G-Block; s/d incl breakfast Rs 5000/5500;) Kitsch but comfortable.

Connaught (23742842; www.hotelconnaughtdelhi.com; 37 Shaheed Bhagat Singh Marg; d incl breakfast Rs 6000;) Rooms are dated but cosy.

West of Connaught Place

If you like home-style lodgings you'll love these hassle-free places (on Map pp120–1), but they can fill up fast – book ahead.

Ess Gee's (25814419; www.essgees.net; 12/9 East Patel Nagar; s/d incl breakfast Rs 800/850;) A mellow guesthouse – which may bring back fond memories of grandma's place – with unfussy rooms that all have TVs, writing desks and wardrobes. There's no signboard outside the white residential building – a nearby landmark is the Hotel Siddharth.

Master Guest House (28741089; www.master-guesthouse.com; R-500 New Rajendra Nagar; s/d with shared bathroom Rs 1300/1400;) Run by an obliging couple, this suburban residence has five nicely-furnished rooms (two clean communal bathrooms) and a sweet little rooftop terrace. The ever-calm Ushi is a Reiki Master and her hubby, Avnish, runs tours.

Yatri House (23625563; www.yatrihouse.com; 3/4 Panchkuian Marg; s/d from Rs 1700/2000;) Centrally located yet astonishingly serene, Yatri is fronted by a small secluded garden and also has a pleasant open-air courtyard with wrought-iron furniture. There are six clean and comfy rooms with an uncluttered charm, all with light quilts and fresh flowers. The reliable owner, Sanjay, can arrange car hire and his wife, Parul, has her finger on Delhi's entertainment pulse.

Bajaj Indian Home Stay (25736509; www.indianhomestay.com; 8A/34 WEA Karol Bagh; s/d incl tax & breakfast Rs 2661/3403;) This home-style – yet professionally-run – residence has 10 immaculate and thoughtfully-decorated rooms, all differently themed (see website). Room amenities include safes, fridges and hairdryers. The tariff includes complimentary tea/coffee, local telephone calls and airport transfers. There's a rooftop restaurant.

Chanakyapuri & Ashoka Road

Youth Hostel (Map pp132-3; 26116285; yhostel@del2.vsnl.net.in; 5 Nyaya Marg, Chanakyapuri; dm without/with AC Rs 90/270, d without/with AC Rs 350/750;) The dormitory is good value for members (non-members pay an extra Rs 50/250 per day/year), but the staff can be impersonal.

YWCA Blue Triangle Family Hostel (Map pp132-3; 23360133; ywcadel@yahoo.co.in; Ashoka Rd; s/d incl tax & breakfast Rs 1136/1975;) Despite having a somewhat institutional vibe and hint of eau de mothball, this Y is centrally located and has fairly good rooms. It's open to both genders.

SOUTH DELHI

Home Away from Home (Map pp120–1; ☎ 26560289; permkamte@sify.com; 1st fl, D-8 Gulmohar Park; s/d incl breakfast from Rs 1375/1575;) This stylish apartment, in a classy suburb, is home to Mrs Kamte and she keeps the place in tip-top condition. There are just two rooms, each very tastefully decorated and with small balconies. Hush and Puppy, the pet basset hounds, thrive on affection.

One Link Road (Map pp120-1; ☎ 41824083; 1 Link Rd, Jangpura; www.onelinkroad.com; s/d incl taxes & breakfast Rs 1900/2300;) Near the Defence Colony Flyover, this elegant guesthouse is situated on the ground floor of an apartment complex. It has four cared-for and spacious rooms, with marble floors, wardrobes and writing tables.

Jorbagh 27 (Map pp132-3; ☎ 24698647; guesthouse27@hotmail.com; 27 Jorbagh; s/d Rs 2200/2600;) A rambling guesthouse in a leafy suburb that has 18 renovated rooms in an old-style building. The comfy standard rooms have an unpresumptuous charm, while the nicer deluxe rooms offer more space and personality.

Lutyens Guest House (Map pp132-3; ☎ 24625716; www.lutyensguesthouse.com; 39 Prithviraj Rd; s/d incl tax & breakfast Rs 3000/3500;) This easy-going guesthouse is a green oasis in dusty Delhi and even has its own (splendid) pool. The rooms are well-kept and homy, with summery furnishings. Guests can sip tea in the relaxing, large garden where Looney and his canine chums chase squirrels and parrots. Lutyens has no signboard – look for '39Amar Nath' (there's a small garden-pottery shop on site).

Icon Villa (Map pp120-1; ☎ 41669766; www.icon-ysf.com; F-75 Poorvi Marg, Vasant Vihar; d incl breakfast Rs 3500;) Especially good for long-term stayers, Icon is in an elite suburb, southwest of the centre. The 15 well-presented rooms have balconies, writing desks, TVs, marble floors and complimentary cookies. Some rooms can absorb sporadic traffic din, but overall this villa scores top marks.

Icon Towers (Map pp120-1; ☎ 46016611; www.icon-ysf.com; 46 Paschimi Marg, Vasant Vihar; d incl breakfast US$170;) Not far from Icon Villa, and its boutique sister property, Icon Towers' rooms are very elegantly furnished and equipped with modern facilities. It's especially popular with business travellers.

The Manor (Map pp120-1; ☎ 26925151; www.themanordelhi.com; 77 Friends Colony (West); d incl breakfast US$175;) This sleek boutique hotel, in a renovated old-style building, is off Mathura Rd (near Friends Club) in a tree-loving locale. The streamlined beige-and-tan rooms have opulent touches such as silk drapes, Italian marble, wood-panelling and hand-knotted carpets. There's a stylish restaurant and sun-warmed terrace.

Sunder Nagar

Posh Sunder Nagar has a clutch of comfortable moderately-sized guesthouses, but the spiralling tariffs, vis-à-vis room quality and service have left some travellers slightly cheesed off. The following guesthouses feature on Map pp132–3.

Maharani Guest House (☎ 24359521; www.myma harani.com; 3 Sunder Nagar; s/d Rs 2650/3250;) The jaded rooms are comfortable enough – if a smidgen small – and the price is competitive for this area.

Ten (☎ 24355047; 10 Sunder Nagar; d Rs 5000;) Fronted by a pretty garden, Ten has just five rooms, all with caramel-brown marble floors, thick bedcovers and lovely antique furnishings. Its recently renovated 1st- floor rooms are best.

Shervani (☎ 24354771; www.shervanihotels.com; s/d incl breakfast Rs US$160/170; 11 Sunder Nagar;) Boutiquish Shervani is unquestionably Sunder Nagar's most impressive place to stay. The 19 smart rooms have wooden floors, LCD TVs, cocoa-brown furniture, electronic safes, tea-and-coffee-making facilities and fridges. There's a café on site.

Other options:

La Sagrita Tourist Home (☎ 24358572; www.lasagrita.com; 14 Sunder Nagar; d Rs 3690;) The soothing garden gets kudos, but the standard rooms could do with a facelift – the penthouses (Rs 4890) are much better, especially No 302.

Jukaso Inn (☎ 24350308; www.jukasohotels.com; 50 Sunder Nagar; s/d Rs 6000/7000;) A mixed bag of comfortable but overpriced rooms. The planned renovations should make them better value for money.

Top End

Maidens Hotel (☎ 23975464; www.oberoihotels.com; Sham Nath Marg; d from US$175;) Set in a 3.2-hectare garden, this 1903-built Oberoi property has period-styled, but modern-equipped, rooms.

Shangri-La Hotel (Map pp132-3; ☎ 41191919; www.shangri-la.com; Ashoka Rd; s/d US$325/345;) Shangri-La's rooms have plenty of froufrou – bouncy beds with sugar-white sheets, scatter cushions, LCD TVs and touches of Oriental design. They do a jolly good afternoon tea (Thursday/Friday) and offer de-stressing massages, body-wraps and herbal baths.

Le Meridien (Map pp132-3; ☎ 23710101; www.starwoodhotels.com; Janpath; s/d US$350/388;) This glassy monolith has gingery-toned and comfort-packed rooms, kitted out with the usual five-star trappings: stuffed minibars, fluffy bathrobes and ample minisized shampoos, body gels and other bathroom goodies.

Taj Mahal Hotel (Map pp132-3; ☎ 23026162; www.tajhotels.com; Man Singh Rd; s/d US$375/400;) High-brow artwork, Persian rugs and rich silk furnishings are a hallmark of this ritzy hotel. The luxuriously-appointed rooms have all the five-star frills, while amenities include fine restaurants, a fitness centre and Rick's bar (p150).

our pick Imperial (Map p136; ☎ 23341234; www.theimperialindia.com; Janpath; d US$425;) The inimitable Imperial amalgamates multiple design styles – from classic Victorian to colonial to Art Deco – and houses sublime artwork. Gracefully appointed, this sophisticated Raj-era property has hosted everyone from princesses to pop stars. The high-ceiling rooms have it all, from French linen and puffy pillows, to deep marble baths and finely-crafted furniture. The suites are seriously sumptuous.

Maurya Sheraton Hotel & Towers (☎ 26112233; www.itcwelcomgroup.in; Sardar Patel Marg; d US$425;) Premium rooms with all the creature comforts you'd expect at this price tag, even an exclusive ladies'-only floor. Snuggle into marshmallow-soft beds, consult the in-house astrologer and dine at a clutch of sterling restaurants including award-winning Bukhara, which does dynamite dhal.

Other five-star beauties:

Park (Map p136; ☎ 23744000; www.theparkhotels.com; 15 Parliament St; s/d US$300/350;) Not as bombastic as its five-star cousins, but with a hushed luxury.

Oberoi (Map pp132-3; ☎ 24363030; www.oberoihotels.com; Dr Zakir Hussain Marg; s/d US$350/375;) Superlative rooms with views over Humayun's tomb, the pool or golf course.

Airport Area

Ashok Country Resort (☎ 25064590; www.ashokcountryresort.com; Rajokri Rd; s/d US$135/155;) Set in sprawling verdant grounds, the Ashok may not be of the five-star ilk, but it has an unclaustrophobic appeal and comfortably-appointed rooms.

Radisson Hotel (Map pp120-1; ☎ 26779191; www.radisson.com/newdelhiin; National Hwy 8; s/d incl breakfast US$275/290;) The urbane rooms have every conceivable comfort including orthopedically certified beds with tightly tucked-in sheets. On site is the popular Great Kebab Factory restaurant.

Uppal's Orchid (Map pp120-1; ☎ 25061515; National Hwy 8; www.uppalsorchidhotel.com; s/d US$325/350;) Peacefully positioned on 4 hectares of manicured gardens, this boutique-style and environmentally-conscious hotel doesn't have particularly huge rooms, but they're supersuave and furnished in soporific tones. The patisserie bakes creative creamy delights.

EATING

Delhi delights diners with some of India's best places to eat, from ramshackle roadside kebab stalls, to multicuisine restaurants replete with crisp white tablecloths, dim lighting and mood music.

Travellers pining for familiar fast food will find ever-multiplying chains, including McDonald's, Pizza Hut, Subway and TGI Friday's.

Most midrange and all upmarket restaurants charge a service tax of around 10%, while drinks taxes can suck a further 20% (alcoholic) or 12.5% (nonalcoholic) from your moneybelt. Taxes haven't been included in this chapter unless indicated.

Telephone numbers have been provided for restaurants where reservations are recommended, especially on weekends.

North Delhi

OLD DELHI

The following eateries feature on Map p128.

Restaurants

Moti Mahal (☎ 23273661; 3704 Netaji Subhash Marg, Daryaganj; mains Rs 80-220; 11am-midnight) This family-oriented restaurant has been wooing diners with its Indian food for some six decades. Don't miss the butter chicken. There's live Qawwali Wednesday to Monday (from around 8pm).

Karim's (☎ 23269880; mains Rs 80-300; noon-3pm & 6pm-midnight) Down a lane across from the Jama Masjid's south gate, Karim's ambience is distinctly masculine, but it's been delighting Delhiites with divine Mughlai cuisine since 1913. The chefs prepare brutally good (predominantly nonveg) fare including tasty tandoori burra (clay-oven-roasted mutton). During Ramadan it only opens after sunset.

Chor Bizarre (☎ 23273821; Hotel Broadway, 4/15 Asaf Ali Rd; mains Rs 150-325, veg/nonveg Kashmiri thalis Rs 325/395; 7.30-10.30am, noon-3.30pm & 7.30-11.30pm) Dimly-lit and with an eclectic décor – from the 'buffet bar' vintage car to the four-poster bed table – Chor Bizarre specialises in Kashmiri and Mughlai cuisine. Its signature dish, sharabi kababi tikka masala (brandy-flamed chicken) gets a round of applause, as does the phirni (semolina pudding).

Quick Eats

Haldiram's (Chandni Chowk; samosas/pakoras Rs 6) High turn-over Haldiram's is deservedly popular for a salty or sugary snack on the dash.

Paratha Wali Gali (parathas Rs 10-35) A foodstall-lined lane off Chandni Chowk specialising in parathas (traditional flat bread) fresh off the tawa (hotplate). The stuffed varieties include aloo (potato), murli (white radish), smashed pappadams and crushed badam (almond), all served with a splodge of tangy pickles.

Jalebiwala (Dariba Corner, Chandni Chowk; jalebis per kg Rs 160) Calories schmalories! Century-old Jalebiwala does Delhi's – if not India's – finest jalebis (deep-fried 'squiggles'), so pig out and worry about your waistline tomorrow. Luring everyone from taxi-wallahs to Bollywood stars, you'll quickly see what all the fuss is about once you've taken your first crunchy-yet-oh-so-syrupy bite.

Ghantewala (Chandni Chowk; mithai per kg Rs 200) Near the Sisganj Gurdwara, this simple sweetery has been churning out traditional mithai (Indian sweets) since 1790.

PAHARGANJ AREA

Yielding wobbly results, Paharganj's menus are of the bamboozling have-a-go-at-anything variety, from Israeli to Italian, Mughlai to Mexican. The eateries are nothing fancy but are inexpensive and always abuzz with chattering travellers.

The following places are along, or just off, Main Bazaar (Map p140).

Madan Café (mains Rs 20-45; 7am-11pm) Cash crisis? Tuck into a tasty thali for just Rs 25 at this basic veg café.

Sonu Chat House (mains Rs 25-100; 8am-11.30pm) Pleasing South Indian fare – by golly, there's even a chocolate banana dosa (a travesty according to dosa traditionalists; you decide) – as well as Chinese and Continental dishes.

Malhotra (mains Rs 35-240; 7am-11pm) Malhotra gets kudos for its hearty Indian, Continental and Chinese food with possibilities including stuffed tomatoes, cheese macaroni and rajma (curried kidney beans). Breakfast options include papaya curd, jam pancakes, masala omelettes and banana porridge. Or maybe fried eggs with greaselicious chips is more your thing? Next door is Malhotra's southern sister, Malhotra's Dosa Please, with dosas from Rs 30.

Kitchen Café (Hotel Shelton, 5043 Main Bazaar; mains Rs 45-100; 8am-11.30pm) With cane furniture scattered around a pot plant–strewn terrace, this cheap and cheerful multicuisine rooftop restaurant is a relaxing place to kill time over scrambled eggs, enchiladas, spaghetti carbonara, chicken masala and more.

Appetite German Bakery (mains Rs 45-105; 7am-11pm) Dive into mushrooms on toast for breakfast, moussaka for lunch and roast chicken for dinner, or just drop by for a cup of lemongrass tea. Multicuisine Appetite adjoins the Hotel Vishal.

Diamond Restaurant (mains Rs 50-250; 7.30am-11.30pm) Diamond shines when it comes to pasta, however its stab at other world cuisines produces haphazard results. Servings are generous.

Sam's Café (Vivek Hotel, 1534-1550 Main Bazaar; mains Rs 70-160; 8am-11pm) Located on Vivek Hotel's ground floor and (more atmospheric) rooftop, Sam's does cracking breakfasts and equally good postbreakfast fare – avocado salad, cannelloni, chicken stew, thalis and more. The cakes (Rs 35 per slice) are baked daily.

Metropolis Restaurant & Bar (Metropolis Tourist Home, 1634 Main Bazaar; mains Rs 125-375; 8am-11pm) The tables at this rooftop restaurant may be tightly-packed, but this humming travellers' haunt has a great variety of international food (and beverages – see above), from tandoori chicken to spaghetti bolognaise. There are also good nibbles such as paneer (unfermented cheese) tikka and potato wedges.

Central Delhi

CONNAUGHT PLACE AREA

The following eateries appear on Map p136.

Restaurants

Saravana Bhavan (46 Janpath; dosas from Rs 45, thalis Rs 90; 8am-10.30pm) Massively popular, Saravana does dosas, idlis and other southern specialities with aplomb, most served with lovely fresh chutneys. It also has inventive sweets such as the cucumber-seed ladoos (sweetmeat balls). There's a first-in-first-served policy – arrive early! Branch at 15 P-Block, Connaught Place.

Sagar Ratna (15 K-Block; dosas from Rs 45; 8am-10.30pm) Another dosa dreamland, with expertly-prepared uttapams (savoury pancakes) and other southern goodies.

Banana Leaf (12 N-Block; dosas Rs 50-80, thalis Rs 85; 11am-11pm) First-rate South Indian standards as well as some more obscure options such as bath masala dosa (dosa stuffed with lemon rice). The dahi idli is a cool yogurty elixir – just the thing for Delhi Belly–ravaged tummies.

Host (8 F-Block; mains Rs 100-395; 10am-11.30pm) With a faded charm, the Host's stern-faced waiters serve satisfying Indian and Chinese fare to diners deep in discussion. The mattar paneer (unfermented cheese and pea curry) and egg curry are good.

United Coffee House (15 E-Block; mains Rs 115-300; 11am-11pm) Oozing old-world charm, this classic 1940s restaurant is a splendid spot to slow the pace. Popular with travellers and Delhi denizens alike, its menu has oodles to choose from – soups, grilled sandwiches, sizzlers, pastas and scrummy Indian cuisine; the haryali paneer kofta (stuffed dumplings) is delish, especially with garam garam naan.

Kwality (Regal Bldg, Sansad Marg; mains Rs 115-375; noon-11pm) Feeding Delhi for around seven decades, Kwality squeezes in the tables but the food (especially Indian) deserves praise – the murgh malai (clay-oven-cooked chicken) kebab is a favourite.

Embassy (11 D-Block; mains Rs 130-350; 10am-11.30pm) Embassy has a mishmash of Indian and Continental creations, from chicken stroganoff and chutney sandwiches to rogan josh (rich, spicy lamb curry) and chicken masala. It's also an offal aficionado – anyone for brain cutlets and fries?

Zen (25 B-Block; mains Rs 140-485; noon-midnight) A quintessentially Chinese menu, but with Japanese and Thai dishes making a cameo appearance. The crispy sesame lamb and Szechwan beancurd are both good.

Parikrama (☎ 23721616; 22 Kasturba Gandhi Marg; mains Rs 150-450; lunch 12.30-3.30pm, snacks 3.30-7pm, dinner 7.30-11pm) A revolving 24th-floor restaurant where you can dine on Indian and Chinese food while spinning oh-so-slowly (one revolution takes 1½ hours). The views are glorious, especially during daylight when you can identify landmarks.

Ruby Tuesday (48 M-Block; mains Rs 275-650; noon-11pm) Hearty American and Tex-Mex food served in a comfy bistro-style setting. The pork ribs (Rs 475/650 per half-/full rack) are fingerlicking good and perfect with a draught beer (Rs 115 per glass).

Veda (☎ 41513535; 27 H-Block; mains Rs 350-600; noon-4pm & 6-11.30pm) Indian food, with Mughlai and North-West Frontier specialities, served in an ultrachic interior featuring pietra dura tables. The veg/nonveg tandoori platter feeds two.

Also recommended:

Café 100 (20 B-Block; mains Rs 115-330; 8.30am-11pm) Easygoing and with a varied menu. Recommendations include the masala fish fingers, chicken cacciatore and chocolate mud pie.

Berco's (8 E-Block; mains Rs 125-295; 12.30-11pm) Popular with Delhiites for its flavoursome Indianised Chinese cuisine. It does a mean sweet chilli tofu and the Mongolian chicken isn't bad either.

Chinese (☎ 65398888; 14/15 F-Block; mains Rs 235-685; 12.30-11.30pm) Thoughtfully-prepared Hunan cuisine served in an imaginative interior. The gong bao ji ding (sautéed chicken) and okra in black-bean sauce are hot sellers. It's down the lane opposite Palika Bazaar's Gate No 6.

Quick Eats

Wenger's (16 A-Block; cakes/sandwiches Rs 28/35) The legendary Wenger's has been baking since 1926 – its convoluted purchasing procedure certainly harks back to ye olde days! But the rigmarole is worth it, with a rewarding pastiche of sweet and savoury treats, including a frightfully good fig tart. It also does birthday cakes, cookies, muffins, marzipan and around 30 types of homemade chocolate.

Nizam's Kathi Kabab (5 H-Block; kebabs from Rs 50) This tiny (mainly takeaway) eatery masterfully prepares kebabs and kathi rolls.

DIPLOMATIC ENCLAVE & CHANAKYAPURI AREA

Fujiya (Map pp132-3; 12/48 Malcha Marg Market; mains Rs 100-260; noon-11.15pm) Happy-go-lucky Fujiya has a Chinese menu laced with Japanese dishes. Whether it's Peking lamb, Sukiyaki pork, or just a bowl of glass noodles, diners are rarely disappointed.

Ploof (24634666; 13 Main Market, Lodi Colony; mains Rs 225-750; 12.30-3pm & 7-11pm) Near the India Habitat Centre, Ploof specialises in seafood, but the menu is a bit hit-and-miss. Deep-sea delights include Himalayan rainbow trout and baked crab.

Lodi, the Garden Restaurant (Lodi Rd; 11am-11.30pm; mains Rs 275-635) Just the place to cool your heels after a power-walking session at the nearby Lodi Garden. Park Baluchi (26859369; Hauz Khas Village; mains Rs 140-530; noon-11.30pm) Although the service gets the thumbs down, this greenery-enveloped restaurant cooks some enterprising dishes such as murg potli (barbecued chicken wrapped around minced mutton, served on a burning sword). Avoid weekends when squealing kiddies can drive you nuts.

La Piazza (Map pp120-1; 26791234; Hyatt Regency, Bhikaiji Cama Pl, Ring Rd; mains Rs 450-1200; noon-2.45pm & 7-11.30pm) Come here for quality wood-fired pizzas, exquisite potato gnocchi, succulent Australian lamb chops and authentic handmade pasta.

GREATER KAILASH

Not Just Parathas (Map pp120-1; M84 GK II; parathas Rs 40-155; noon-midnight) Master the art of eating with your hands at this chirpy cutlery-free restaurant. There are more than 120 types of paratha, including low-calorie (wholemeal, olive-oil smothered) options. Stuffings include palak (spinach), sweet corn, soyabean, mushroom and broccoli, just to name a few. For something more adventurous try the sharabi paratha (filled with alcohol-soaked dried fruit).

The googly-eyed Dragon fish in the foyer's tank are strictly ornamental.

Ego Thai (Map pp120-1; Community Centre, New Friends Colony; mains Rs 200-420; 12.30-3.30pm & 7.30-11.30pm) One of Delhi's most likeable Thai restaurants (go upstairs for more atmosphere), but skip the satay sticks.

Flavours (Map pp120-1; 51-54C Moolchand Flyover Market, Ring Rd; mains Rs 230-440; noon-11pm) Filled with diners gleefully tucking into appetizing pasta dishes and wood-fired pizzas; the fettuccine with smoked salmon and the grilled-vegetable-and-goats-cheese pizza get good reports. There are also fresh salads, gourmet sandwiches (with ciabatta) and tempting desserts.

DRINKING

Whether its espresso coffee and buttery croissants for breakfast, or beer and burgers for supper, Delhi's perky cafés and hip bars deliver.

Cafés

Caffeine addicts won't suffer withdrawal symptoms from lack of a real cup of coffee, thanks to Delhi's rockin' café scene, where cappuccinos and lattes are all the rage. Tea is beginning to turn heads though, with more and more menus flaunting everything from Earl Grey and Russian Caravan, to chamomile and rosehip.

Barista (Map p136; 16 N-Block, Connaught Place; snacks Rs 27-65; 9pm-1am) Hip and happening, Barista serves comforting café fare including smoked-tuna sandwiches, choc-chip muffins, and, of course, foamy cappuccinos. Branches include Khan Market (Map pp132–3), South Extension Part I (Map pp120–1), Defence Colony Market (Map pp120–1) and Vasant Vihar's Basant Lok complex (Map pp120–1).

Café Coffee Day (Map p136; 11 N-Block, Connaught Place; snacks Rs 35-70; 9am-midnight) This bubbly café is a fabulous place to loll around and natter over endless cups of hot brew, brownies and caramelised-walnut pie. The sandwiches and focaccias aren't bad either, while the icy granitas will quench even the most savage summer thirst. There are many city-wide branches including one at Khan Market (Map pp132–3).

Big Chill (Map pp132-3; Khan Market; mains Rs 60-350; noon-11pm) There are now two BC branches in Khan Market, equally merry and both with wall-to-wall film posters, from James Whale's Frankenstein to Alfred Hitchcock's Vertigo. Everything about the menu is magical, from the velvety smoothies and home-made ice cream (the Tobelerone is tops), to the chicken-and-blue-cheese fettuccine and baked potatoes. The cakes are impossibly delicious.

Café Turtle Greater Kailash (Map pp120-1; N8 Greater Kailash Part I); Khan Market (Map pp132-3; 2nd fl, Full Circle Bookstore, Khan Market; mains Rs 95-295; 10am-7.30pm Mon-Sat) Although some meal servings can be skimpy, the Turtle is terrific for coffee and gateau (the 'gooey chocolate cake' is a triumph). Apart from salads, sandwiches and pastas, there's also quiche, bruschetta, couscous salad and falafel wraps with hummus. Liquid delights include ice-cream sodas, milkshakes, iced teas and seasonal juice (from guava to cucumber).

Costa (Map p136; L-Block, Connaught Place; snacks Rs 25-75; 9am-11.30pm) Strong coffee, delicate teas, English-toffee milkshakes, almond croissants, tarts, white chocolate muffins, cookies, vegetable and pesto sandwiches, chicken salsa focaccias, and a damn fine date and fig cake. That's just a splash of what's on offer at this dapper downtown café.

Cha Bar (Map p136; Oxford Bookstore, Statesman House, 148 Barakhamba Rd; snacks Rs 45-105; 10am-7.30pm Mon-Sat, noon-7.30pm Sun) After browsing at the attached bookstore, pop into Cha and ponder over its long list of teas which include liquorice, peppermint and even thyme. For something more nourishing, try the milk with honey and nuts. If you've got the munchies, Cha has the usual (café) suspects – muffins, sandwiches, cakes, salads and the like.

Bars & Nightclubs

Sex on the Beach, Screwdrivers and similarly seductive beverages replace milky chai and frothy cappuccinos when Delhi gets dark. With a blossoming bar scene (most bars doubling up as nightclubs), Delhi parties hard long after the sun calls it quits. Be warned that most bars seriously pump up the music anytime after 8pm, turning civilised conversations into screaming matches. A smart-casual dress code (no shorts, scrappy singlet tops or flip-flops) applies at most places.

The fancier bars are overflowing with domestic and foreign booze, but the taxes can pack a nasty punch (alcoholic/nonalcoholic 20%/12.5%; taxes aren't included here unless stated).

What's hot and what's not can change in the blink of an eye, with five-star hotels having the city's most svelte (but wallet-wounding) bars/nightclubs.

Two uberhip hotel drinking venues during our visit:

Rick's (Map pp132-3; Taj Mahal Hotel, Man Singh Rd; 12.30pm-12.45am) An intimate bar at the Taj Mahal Hotel (p145) where you can quaff all manner of spirits and beers as well as Singapore Slings (Rs 395) and in-house concoctions such as woo woo (cranberry juice and peach schnapps; Rs 395). Pan-Asian snack menu.

Dublin (Maurya Sheraton Hotel & Towers, Sardar Patel Marg; 6pm-1am) Irish-themed, with a long wooden bar and lots of cosy nooks. A can of Kilkenny is Rs 325.

PAHARGANJ

Those nursing hangovers can get a vitamin C boost at one of the juice stalls (small/medium/large glass Rs 10/15/20) speckled throughout Main Bazaar.

The following places serve drinks until around 11pm. They're located on Map p140.

Hotel Gold Regency (4350 Main Bazaar) Cheap beer (a large Kingfisher is Rs 72 including tax) at the hotel's bar and live Indian music nightly except Tuesday.

Gem (De Gem; Main Bazaar) A bottle of Kingfisher or Foster's beer is Rs 72 (including tax), while a shot of Old Monk rum is a piddly Rs 18. Go upstairs for more character and to catch a cricket match on the wide-screen TV.

Metropolis Restaurant & Bar (Metropolis Tourist Home, 1634 Main Bazaar) This hotel's rooftop restaurant (p146) is a bit pricier than the above places, but it has more pizzazz and offers greater variety. Cocktails start at Rs 90.

The following venues are on Map p136.

Q'BA (1st fl, 42 E-block; noon-midnight) Above Greenways sari shop, this is Connaught Place's swishest watering hole, with a Q-shaped bar, leather chairs and inviting sofas. If it's been one of those days a shot of tequila (Rs 230) should do the trick, or simply swill beer (Corona, Heineken, Guinness or Kilkenny starts at Rs 250) while grazing on a mezze platter (Rs 275). This edgy split-level bar-restaurant has occasional live entertainment and happy hour falls between 3pm and 7.30pm.

DV8 (Regal Bldg; noon-midnight Mon-Sat, 4.30pm-midnight Sun) Sure to put the fizzle back into fizzled-out souls, this convivial bar, with its wide-screen TV and glossy magazines, is a relaxing spot to knock back a few drinks. Budweiser costs Rs 250, Baileys is Rs 180 and there's a good food menu. Happy hour is from 4pm to 8pm.

1911 (Imperial hotel, Janpath; 11.30am-12.45am) Named after the year in which Delhi was proclaimed British India's capital, this grand bar boasts more than 500 beverages, from killer Bloody Marys (Rs 550) to green apple martinis (Rs 600). It ain't cheap, but it's certainly stress-banishing and guaranteed to restore your sanity after madly haggling at the nearby Janpath (Tibetan) Market.

Regent's Blues (18 N-Block; noon-midnight) A dark den where the hoi polloi gather, especially during happy hour (4pm to 8pm). Thumping to the beat of cheesy muzak (Footloose was the soundtrack of choice when we beer'ed here), gritty RB is a refreshingly snob-free zone.

Spirit (34 E-Block; noon-midnight) Up a flight of stairs, this dimly-lit bar-restaurant has a cosmopolitan flavour, amicable staff and a good Lebanese-speciality food menu. A glass of domestic/imported wine is Rs 200/300.

SOUTH DELHI

The following drinking venues are on Map pp120–1.

Shalom Med Lounge Bar (18 N-Block, Greater Kailash I; noon-midnight) This loungey bar-restaurant, with its rustic wooden furniture and white-washed walls, dares you to down an 'Angry Fijian' (crème de banana, Baileys and Malibu) or other similarly exotic beverages. The 'happiness comes when you feed your soul first' menu is true to its word, with blissful Mediterranean fare such as shish taouk (spiced chargilled chicken). Entry is via a back lane.

Hookah Bar & Lounge (Basant Lok complex, Vasant Vihar; noon-midnight) A trendy lounge-bar (adjacent to the Standard Chartered Bank) where you can drink a decent gin and tonic, snack on Greek vine leaves and puff on a fruit-flavoured sheesha pipe.

Kylin (Basant Lok complex, Vasant Vihar; noon-midnight) Mega-stylish, Kylin is ideal for an unhurried drink and Cuban cigar. Twenty single-malt whiskies feature on its extensive beverage list. There's also an appealing Oriental-inspired menu, with dim sum and sushi as well as more substantial dishes – the burnt-chilli-and-orange-liqueur sliced duck is a Delhi first.

Ego Lounge (Community Centre, New Friends Colony; 7.30-11.30pm) Adjoining the Ego Thai restaurant (p149) and crammed with couches, you really can't get much loungier than this. Apart from the usual beer and spirits, there's French, Italian, Californian and Aussie wine (from Rs 275 per glass). Ego's music glides between salsa, '80s pop, hip-hop and World, depending on the clientele.

Lizard Lounge (1st fl, E5 South Extension Part II; noon-midnight) After shopping in South Extension (p153) wiggle your way to the Lizard for a revitalising drink.

Geoffrey's (Ansal Plaza, Khel Gaon Marg; 12.30pm-midnight) If you're in the area, English pub–themed Geoffrey's is recommended for a languid Long Island Iced Tea or beer on tap – perfect with lemongrass prawns or chicken tikka.

SHOPPING

From energy-zapping bazaars to chilled-out haute couture boutiques, Delhi is a shoppers' paradise. There's plenty on offer, from handicrafts, textiles, clothing and carpets, to woodwork, brassware, jewellery and leatherwork. You'll also find a sterling range of regional saris from lavish silk, chiffon and georgette varieties, to casual cottons and crepes.

Apart from the emporiums and other fixed-price shops, be prepared to haggle hard. Many taxi and autorickshaw drivers earn (via your inflated purchase price) healthy commissions, and may not take you to the most reputable stores either, making it best to politely decline their shopping suggestions.

For dependable art gallery recommendations (many of which sell exhibits), flick through First City.

Government & State Emporiums

Browse hassle-free at these fixed-price emporiums, which stock items from across the country. Although prices can be higher than elsewhere, you're assured of quality. It's sensible to scout here to get an idea of prices before hitting the markets – you can always return if you didn't find comparable products at better prices in the bazaars.

Central Cottage Industries Emporium (Map p136; ☎ 23326790; Janpath; ⏲ 10am-7pm) A multilevel Aladdin's cave of India-wide handicrafts: woodcarvings, silverware, jewellery, pottery, papier-mâché, brassware, textiles, beauty products and heaps more.

State Emporiums (Map p136; Baba Kharak Singh Marg; ⏲ 10am-6pm Mon-Sat) These side-by-side state government emporiums showcase products from right around the country. Set aside several hours to do these fabulous shops justice (some close for lunch between 1.30pm and 2.30pm).

Markets & Complexes

NORTH DELHI

Chandni Chowk (Map p128; Old Delhi; ⏲ Mon-Sat) Pure pandemonium, this is the old city's famed shopping strip, with some stores opening from around 10am to 7pm and others from noon to 9pm. Winding your way through the jumble of frenzied bazaars is a veritable assault on all senses (see the boxed text, opposite).

Main Bazaar (Map p140; Paharganj; ⏲ around 10am-9pm Tue-Sun) The backpacker-oriented spine of Paharganj has piles of bargain T-shirts, shawls, leatherware, costume jewellery, essential oil, incense, bindis and even bongs. Wood-bead necklaces, which make great gifts, start at a tiny Rs 10. Although officially closed on Monday, many shops remain open during the tourist season.

Karol Bagh market (Map pp120-1; ⏲ around 10am-7pm Tue-Sun) This middle-class market sells competitively-priced consumer goods, from kidswear to kitchenware. Get spice-happy at Roopak's (6/9 Ajmal Khan Rd) two side-by-side shops with similar spices (most around Rs 100 per 100g and well packed). Their namkin (savoury nibbles) are ideal for long train journeys – the roasted green lentils are a healthy alternative to the mostly fried varieties.

CENTRAL DELHI

Fabindia (Map p136; www.fabindia.com; 1st fl, 28 B-Block; ⏲ 10am-7pm) For details about this clothing and home-furnishings chain (Fab's mothership is in Greater Kailash) see opposite.

Janpath (Tibetan) Market (Map p136; Janpath; ⏲ 10.30am-7.30pm Mon-Sat) Beckoning tourists with its shimmering mirrorwork textiles, colourful shawls, brass oms, psychedelic T-shirts, dangly earrings and trinkets galore, is this touristy belt running north of the Imperial hotel. It has some good finds if you rummage through the junk. Haggle hard.

Khadi Gramodyog Bhawan (Map p136; Regal Bldg, Sansad Marg; ⏲ 10.30-7.30pm Mon-Sat) Best known for its khadi (homespun cloth) Indian-style clothing, but also worth a visit for its handmade paper, incense, spices and henna. There are also natural soaps that look good enough to eat, from basil and rosewater to mango and mint. The multicounter purchasing system is ludicrous – arrive early to avoid queues, especially just before the Diwali festival.

Palika Bazaar (Map p136; Connaught Place; ⏲ 11am-7.30pm Mon-Sat) A bustling underground bazaar with all sorts of consumer goods (clothing, electronics, fake wristwatches, CDs etc) aimed at Delhi's middle-class. Tourists are invariably quoted inflated prices, so don't be shy to bargain.

People Tree (Map p136; Regal Bldg, Sansad Marg; ⌚ 10.30am-7pm Mon-Sat) The blink-and-you'll-miss-it People Tree sells avant-garde T-shirts (from Rs 170) as well as skirts, dresses, shirts (men and women) shoulder bags, ethnic costume jewellery and books.

Soma (Map p136; 1st fl, 44 K-Block, Connaught Place; ⌚ 9.30am-7.30pm) Opposite PVR Plaza Cinema, Soma has brilliant block-printed textiles: oven mitts, aprons, scarves, shirts, table linen, cosmetic bags, cushion covers, children's clothing and more.

SOUTH DELHI

Ansal Plaza (Map pp120-1; Khel Gaon Marg; ⌚ 11am-9.30pm) A modern shopping mall squarely geared towards well-to-do locals, with shops selling designer clothes, foreign-brand cosmetics, fashionable costume jewellery etc.

Dilli Haat (Map pp120-1; Aurobindo Marg; admission Rs 10; ⌚ 10.30am-10pm) Opposite INA Market, this rather contrived open-air food-and-crafts market sells regional handicrafts of variable quality. The on-site food stalls cook up regionally diverse cuisine. Avoid the busy weekends.

Greater Kailash's M-Block & N-Block Markets (Map pp120-1; Greater Kailash I; ⌚ Wed-Mon) An upmarket shopping enclave best known for its awesome garment and home-furnishings store Fabindia (N-Block Market; www.fabindia.com; open 10am to 7.30pm), which has fantastic ready-made clothes that won't look odd back home. It also sells organic jams and bodycare products. Next door is Cottons (open 10.30am to 7pm), which has a smaller clothing selection but is also worth a peek.

Hauz Khas Village (Map pp120-1; ⌚ 11.30am-9pm Mon-Sat) This urban 'village' is known for its glam clothing boutiques, art galleries and furniture shops catering to Delhi's upper crust.

C.Lal & Sons (Map pp132-3; 9/172 Jor Bagh Market; ⌚ 9.30am-7.30pm) After sightseeing at Safdarjang's tomb, drop into this humble little 'curiosity shop' owned by the kindly Mr Lal. Much loved by Delhi-based diplomats for its dazzling Christmas-tree decorations, it also sells competitively priced handicrafts such as papier-mâché painted eggs, soft toy camels/elephants, carvings, silk scarves and pretty glass beads to string your own necklace.

Khan Market (Map pp132-3; ⌚ around 10.45am-7.30pm Mon-Sat) Favoured by expats and Delhi's elite, this enclave has shops devoted to fashion (including tailoring), books, sunglasses, homeware and accessories. This is also the place to find gourmet groceries, from Australian grapefruit to Italian pesto. For handmade paperware (cards, diaries, photo albums etc) check out Anand Stationers. There's a small branch of Fabindia here (see left) here. Avoid Saturday when the crowds can be exasperating.

Lajpat Nagar Central Market (Map pp120-1; ⌚ around 11am-8pm Tue-Sun) This market attracts bargain-hunting locals on the prowl for household goods, clothing and jewellery. If you've fallen in love with those colourful jangly bangles widely worn by Indian women, you can find them here.

Santushti Shopping Complex (Map pp132-3; Chanakyapuri; ⌚ around 10am-6.30pm Mon-Sat) A calm green haven sprinkled with swanky boutiques, Santushti is the antithesis of Delhi's boisterous

A BAZAAR AFFAIR

The pandemonium of Old Delhi's convoluted bazaars (Map p128) is a headspinning assault on the senses, with a mindbending array of things to see and an aromatic muddle of flowers, urine, incense, chai, fumes and frying food, all discernible in one whiff. These frenetic bazaars are busiest (and best avoided) on Monday and Friday and during other afternoons. Come at around 11.30am when most shops have opened and the jostling is bearable.

For silver jewellery (some gold) head for Dariba Kalan, near the Sisganj Gurdwara. Nearby Kinari Bazaar has a focus on bridal gear, from fancy sari borders to iridescent tinsel decorations. The cloth market, not surprisingly, sells swathes of uncut material and linen, while electrical gadgets are the speciality of Lajpat Rai Market. Chowri Bazaar is the wholesale paper and greeting-card market. Nearby, Nai Sarak deals in wholesale stationery and books and also has a portion devoted to saris.

Near the Fatehpuri Masjid, on Khari Baoli, is the nose-numbing Spice Market, ablaze with powdery piles of scarlet-red chilli powder, brown masala blends and burnt-orange turmeric, as well as pickles, tea and nuts. Being a wholesale market, spices here rarely come hermetically sealed – for these, go to Roopak's (opposite) in Karol Bagh.

bazaars. Cigar aficionados will appreciate Kastro's which has fine Cuban cigars, Davidoff mini-cigarillos etc. Meanwhile, Lotus Eaters sells sublime old gold and silver pieces including Ganesh pendants from Rs 1800, while Anokhi (branch also at Khan Market) specialises in quality block-printed textiles, from tablecloths to garments.

Sarojini Nagar Market (Map pp120-1; around 11am-8pm Tue-Sun) Good-value Western-style clothes (seek out the lanes lined exclusively with clothing stalls), that have been dumped here either because they were an export surplus or from a cancelled line. Check for holes, faulty zips, crooked seams, stains and missing buttons. Bargain hard. Avoid Sunday afternoons when Sarojini swarms with elbowing shoppers.

South Extension Market Parts I & II (Map pp120-1; around 11am-8pm Tue-Sun) This high-class market is comprised of two enclaves, on opposite sides of the road, each selling designer clothing, jewellery, shoes, handbags and sportswear. Bg's (G5 Part I) is strictly chick territory, with a glittering treasure trove of costume jewellery and flashy hairclips.

Sunder Nagar Market (Map pp132-3; around 10.30am-7.30pm Mon-Sat) Just south of Purana Qila, this genteel enclave specialises in Indian and Nepali handicrafts and 'antiques' (most are replicas). There are two outstanding teashops here: Regalia Tea House (10am-7.30pm Mon-Sat, 11am-5pm Sun) and Mittal Tea House (10am-7.30pm Mon-Sat, 10.30am-4pm Sun). They stock similar products and offer complimentary tea tastings (for most varieties). There's plenty on offer, from masala tea (Rs 50 per 100g) and Kashmiri kahwa (green tea with cardamon; Rs 90 per 100g), to hibiscus (with real petals; Rs 80 per 50g) and mango (Rs 80 per 100g); the latter two make refreshing iced teas. The white tea (Rs 340 per 40g) is said to contain even more antioxidants than green tea, while the dragon balls (Rs 75 each) are a visual thrill when brewed.

Music

These reputable outlets stock a wide range of Indian and non-Indian musical instruments:

Delhi Musical Stores (Map p128; 23276909; www.indianmusicalinstruments.com; 1070 Paiwalan, Old Delhi; 10.30am-7pm Mon-Sat) Opposite Jama Masjid's Gate No 3. The website details what's on offer.

Rikhi Ram (Map p136; 23327685; 8 G-Block, Connaught Place; 11.30am-8pm Mon-Sat) Classic/electric sitars (Rs 22,000/32,000), tablas (Rs 5500) and much more.

For competitively priced instruments, inspect the musical instrument shops (Map p128; Mon-Sat) along Neetaji Subhash Marg in Daryaganj.

MUSIC CASSETTES & CDS

Music retailers stock stacks of CDs (including East-meets-West fusion) and a limited range of cassettes – handy if you're hiring a car as most only have cassette decks. There are lots of little music shops in Connaught Place, while suburban recommendations include the following:

Music Shop (Map pp132-3; 24618464; Khan Market; 11am-8pm Mon-Sat)

Planet M (Map pp120-1; 26251620; South Extension Market Part II; 11am-8.30pm) Two well-arranged floors: 1st/2nd for English/Indian music.

Tailors

Allow a week for tailoring, although some places will sew at lightening speed.

Delhi Cloth House (Map pp132-3; 24618937; Khan Market; 10.30am-7.30pm Mon-Sat) Men's wool suits from Rs 5000 to Rs 25,000 (including material); ankle-length skirts from Rs 400 (excluding material).

New Prominent Tailors (Map p136; 23418007; 25 K-Block, Connaught Place; 11.30am-7.30pm Mon-Sat) Men's trousers (excluding material) cost Rs 300, women's skirts (with lining) cost Rs 250.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Delhi is a major international gateway. It's also a centre for domestic travel, with extensive bus, rail and air connections. Delhi's airport can be prone to thick fog in December and January (often disrupting airline schedules), making it wise not to book back-to-back flights during this period.

Air

The domestic terminals (Terminal 1) of the Indira Gandhi International Airport (Map pp120–1) are around 15km southwest of Connaught Place, and the international terminal (Terminal 2) is a further 8km away. There's a frequent (free) shuttle bus between the two terminals or you can use the Ex-Servicemen's Air Link Transport Service (p158).

For flight inquiries, call the international airport (☎ 25652011; www.delhiairport.com) or the domestic airport (☎ 25675126).

DOMESTIC

Arrivals & Departures

Check-in at the airport for domestic flights is one hour before departure. Note that if you've just arrived and have an onward connection to another city in India, it may be with Air India, the country's international carrier, rather than its major domestic carrier, Indian Airlines. If this is the case, you must check-in at the international terminal, not the domestic terminal.

Airlines

The most convenient Indian Airlines office (Map pp120-1; ☎ 23313317; F-Block, Malhotra Bldg, Connaught Place; 10am-1pm & 2-5pm Mon-Sat) is at Connaught Place. There's also a ticket office at Safdarjang airfield (Map pp132-3; ☎ 24631337; Aurobindo Marg; 7am-11pm). For Indian Airlines' recorded flight arrival and departure details, dial ☎ 1407.

INTERNATIONAL

Arrivals

The international airport's arrivals hall has 24-hour money-exchange facilities, a prepaid taxi counter and a tourist information counter. The train booking counter is only open from 8am to 8pm.

Departures

You must have your check-in bags X-rayed and sealed – don't forget to do this or you'll be sent back. At the check-in counter, ensure you collect tags to attach to hand luggage (mandatory to clear security later).

These are just some domestic air routes – for comprehensive and current details, see Excel's Timetable of Air Services Within India (Rs 45), available at newsstands and some bookshops. When making reservations request the most direct (quickest) route. Note that airline prices fluctuate and website bookings with some carriers can be markedly cheaper.

Train

For foreigners, it's easiest to make ticket bookings at the International Tourist Bureau (Map p140; ☎ 23405156; 1st fl, New Delhi train station; 8am-8pm Mon-Sat, to 2pm Sun). Do not believe anyone who tells you it has shifted, closed or burnt down – this is a rampant scam to divert you elsewhere (see the boxed text, p126). There are reportedly railway porters involved in scams, so stay on your toes and don't let anyone stop you from going to the 1st floor of the main building for bookings. When making reservations at the International Tourist Bureau, tickets must be paid for in rupees backed up by money-exchange certificates (or ATM receipts) or in US dollars, euros or pounds sterling; any change is given in rupees. Bring your passport. There's a train booking counter at the airport (p155).

There are two main stations in Delhi – (Old) Delhi train station (Map p128) in Old Delhi, and New Delhi train station (Map p140) at Paharganj; make sure you know which station serves your destination (New Delhi train station is closer to Connaught Place). If you're departing from the Delhi train station you should allow adequate time to meander through the often-snail-paced traffic of Old Delhi.

There's also the Nizamuddin train station (Map pp132–3), south of Sunder Nagar, where various trains (usually for south-bound destinations) start or finish.

Many trains between Delhi and Jaipur, Jodhpur, Bikaner and Udaipur operate to and from Sarai Rohilla train station (Map pp120–1), about 4km northwest of Connaught Place.

Railway porters should charge between Rs 20 and Rs 30 per bag.

There are many more destinations and trains than those listed in the boxed text, p159 – consult Trains at a Glance (Rs 45), available at most newsstands, or ask tourist office staff.

GETTING AROUND

Local buses can get horrendously crowded so autorickshaws and taxis are desirable alternatives. Keep small change handy for fares.

Women should read Taxis & Public Transport in the Women Travellers section (p1161).

To/From the Airport

Airport-to-city transport is not as straightforward as it should be, due to predatory taxi drivers – see p125.

Many international flights arrive at ghastly hours, so it pays to book a hotel in advance and notify it of your arrival time.

PREARRANGED PICK-UPS

There's nothing more comforting after a long-haul flight than seeing someone holding a placard with your name on it. Be aware that if you arrange an airport pick-up through a travel agency or hotel, it's more expensive than a prepaid taxi from the airport due to the airport parking fee (up to Rs 120) and Rs 60 charge for the person collecting you to enter the airport arrivals hall.

BUS

The Ex-Servicemen's Air Link Transport Service (EATS; Map p136; ☎ 23316530; F-Block, Connaught Place; 🕑 8am-10pm) has a bus service between the airport (both terminals) and its office, near Indian Airlines. The fare is Rs 50, plus Rs 10 per large piece of luggage. The bus will drop you off at most of the major hotels and, en route, at the Ajmeri Gate entrance to New Delhi train station (for Paharganj). There's no set timetable as the bus operates according to flight arrivals.

When leaving the international terminal, the counter for EATS is just to the right as you exit the building.

TAXI

Look for the Delhi Traffic Police Prepaid Taxi Booth to the right just outside the international terminal entrance. It costs about Rs 220 to Paharganj; there's a 25% surcharge between 11pm and 5am.

You'll be given a voucher with the destination on it – insist that the driver honours it and, if not, return to the booth. Never surrender your voucher until you get to your destination; without that docket the driver won't get paid.

At the domestic airport, the prepaid taxi-booking counter is inside the terminal.

Bus

The Delhi Transport Corporation runs some buses, and others are privately owned, but they all operate along the same set routes. Tickets cost a maximum of Rs 15 for travel within the city precincts. Whenever possible, try to board at a starting or finishing point, such as the Shivaji Stadium terminal (Map p136; Connaught Place), as there's more chance of a seat.

Useful buses:

Bus 101, 104 or 139 Shivaji Stadium terminal to the Red Fort.
Bus 505 Janpath to Qutb Minar.
Bus 604 or 620 Connaught Place (on Sansad Marg) to Chanakyapuri.

Car

HIRING A CAR & DRIVER

Numerous operators offer chauffeur-driven cars – for important tips read above.

The following companies get positive reports from travellers. Each has an eight-hour, 80km limit per day. All offer tours beyond Delhi (including Rajasthan) but higher charges apply for these. The rates below are only for travel within Delhi.

Cycle-Rickshaw & Bicycle

Authorities have decided to ban cycle-rickshaws (citing congestion problems) in the coming years, but they should still be around during the life of this book.

Cycle-rickshaws are banned from the Connaught Place area and New Delhi itself, but they can be handy for commuting between Connaught Place and Paharganj (about Rs 25). They're recommended in Chandni Chowk (Old Delhi), as the drivers are veritable wizards at weaving through the crowds (around Rs 50 per hour). Tips are appreciated for this gruelling work.

To purchase a pushbike, the largest range of new and second-hand bicycles can be found at Jhandewalan Cycle Market (Map pp120–1).

Metro

Delhi's outstanding Metro system has extremely efficient services with arrival/departure announcements in Hindi and English. Smoking and eating is prohibited, as is carrying firearms and travelling on the roof!

At the time of writing, three sections of the Metro system were operational: the Shahdara–Rithala phase (18 stations), the Vishwa Vidalaya–Central Secretariat route (10 stations) and the Dwarka–Barakambha Rd line (28 stations). The Metro is scheduled for completion around 2010.

Tickets (Rs 6 to Rs 22) are sold at Metro stations; there are also one-/three-day (Rs 70/200) 'tourist cards' for unlimited short-distance travel. For the latest developments (as well as route maps) see www.delhimetrorail.com or call ☎ 24369912.

Taxi & Autorickshaw

All taxis and autorickshaws are metered but you may find the meters are 'not working' or

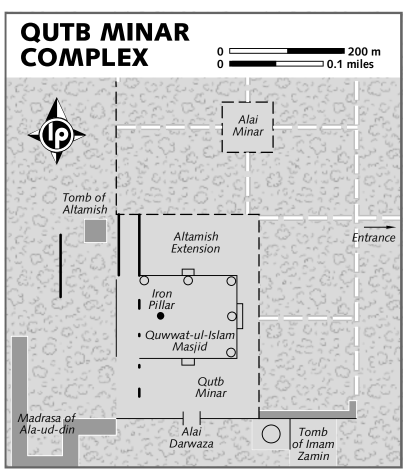
GREATER DELHI

For details about possible day trips from Delhi to neighbouring Haryana, see p277.

TUGHLAQABAD

Crumbling Tughlaqabad (Map pp120-1; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/US$2, video Rs 25; 8.30am-5.30pm) was the third city of Delhi. The walled city and fort with its 13 gateways was built by Ghiyas-ud-din Tughlaq. Its construction involved a legendary quarrel between Ghiyas-ud-din and the saint Nizam-ud-din: when the Tughlaq ruler took the workers whom Nizam-ud-din wanted for work on his shrine, the saint bitterly cursed the king, warning that his city would be inhabited only by shepherds. Today, this is indeed the situation.

The dispute between king and saint did not end with a curse. When the king prepared to take vengeance on the saint, Nizam-ud-din calmly told his followers, 'Delhi is a long way off'. Indeed it was, for the king was murdered on his way from Delhi in 1325.



From Janpath a return autorickshaw costs around Rs 165, which includes 30 minutes' waiting time (Rs 25 per extra hour).

QUTB MINAR

The imposing buildings in the Qutb Minar complex (Map p161; ☎ 26643856; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/US$5, video Rs 25; dawn-dusk) date from the onset of Islamic rule in India and are fine examples of early Afghan architecture.

The Qutb Minar itself is a soaring tower of victory that was started in 1193, immediately after the defeat of the last Hindu kingdom in Delhi. It's nearly 73m high and tapers from a 15m-diameter base to just 2.5m at the top.

The tower has five distinct storeys, each marked by a projecting balcony. The first three storeys are made of red sandstone, the 4th and 5th storeys are of marble and sandstone. Although Qutb-ud-din began construction of the tower, he only got to the 1st storey. His successors completed it and, in 1368, Firoz Shah rebuilt the top storeys and added a cupola. An earthquake brought the cupola crashing down in 1803 and an Englishman replaced it with another in 1829. However, that dome was deemed inappropriate and was removed some years later.

Today, this impressively ornate tower has a slight tilt, but otherwise has worn the centuries remarkably well. It's no longer possible to climb the tower.

The Qutb Festival takes place here every October/November (see p123).

Avoid visiting Qutb Minar on weekends, as it can get crowded.

Quwwat-ul-Islam Masjid

At the foot of the Qutb Minar stands the first mosque to be built in India, the Might of Islam Mosque. Qutb-ud-din began construction of the mosque in 1193, but it has had various additions and extensions over the centuries. The original mosque was built on the foundations of a Hindu temple, and an inscription over the east gate states that it was built with materials obtained from demolishing '27 idolatrous temples'. Many of the elements in the mosque's construction indicate their Hindu or Jain origins.

Altamish, Qutb-ud-din's son-in-law, surrounded the original mosque with a cloistered court between 1210 and 1220. Ala-ud-din added a court to the east and the magnificent Alai Darwaza gateway in 1300.

Iron Pillar

This 7m-high pillar stands in the courtyard of the mosque and it was here long before the mosque's construction. A six-line Sanskrit inscription indicates that it was initially erected outside a Vishnu temple, possibly in Bihar, and was raised in memory of Chandragupta II, who ruled from AD 375 to 413.

What the inscription does not tell is how it was made, for the iron in the pillar is of quite exceptional purity. Scientists have never discovered how the iron, which has not rusted after some 2000 years, could be cast using the technology of the time.

It is said that if you can stand with your back to the pillar and encircle it with your arms your wish will be granted; however, the pillar is now protected by a fence.

Alai Minar

When Ala-ud-din made his additions to the mosque, he also conceived a far more ambitious construction programme. He aimed to build a second tower of victory, exactly like the Qutb Minar, except it would be twice as high! By the time of his death the tower had reached 27m and no-one was willing to continue his overambitious project. The incomplete tower stands to the north of the Qutb Minar and the mosque.

Other Features

Ala-ud-din's Alai Darwaza gateway is the main entrance to the whole complex. It was built of red sandstone in 1310 and stands just southwest of the Qutb Minar. The tomb of Imam Zamin is beside the gateway, while the tomb of Altamish, who died in 1235, is by the northwestern corner of the mosque. The largely ruined madrasa of Ala-ud-din stands at the rear of the complex.

There are some summer palaces in the area and also the tombs of the last kings of Delhi, who succeeded the Mughals. An empty space between two of the tombs was intended for the last king of Delhi, who died in exile in Yangon, Burma (Myanmar), in 1862, following his implication in the 1857 Indian Uprising.

Catch bus 505 (Rs 15) from the Ajmeri Gate side of New Delhi train station or from Janpath.

From Janpath, a return autorickshaw costs around Rs 140, including 30 minutes' waiting time (Rs 25 per extra hour).

Rajasthan

From the cackle of its colour-charged cities to the luminous splendour of its sun-kissed desert, Rajasthan is romantic India wrapped in gaudy royal robes. Here the fearsome Rajput warrior clans ruled with gilt-edged swords, plundered wealth and blood-thick chivalrous codes.

A vast and wonder-laced state with treasures more sublime than those of fable, the Land of the Kings paints a bold image. Compiling a must-see list in Rajasthan can cripple the fussy traveller: Meherangarh looming over bright blue Jodhpur, the giant gold sandcastle at Jaisalmer, the palaces and pageantry of Udaipur, Pushkar's reverent yet carnival charm, the storybook whimsy of Bundi and the havelis (traditional, ornately decorated residences) sprinkled through Shekhawati – see them all, and you'll see a month fly by faster than the express bound for Pakistan. Like a microcosm of Mother India, there's also abundant wildlife and warm people, glitz and camels, soulful music, glittering saris, tottering turbans and a surprisingly rich cuisine.

Yet Rajasthan's largely rural population has grown tired of its own backward-looking image. Jaipur, the dusty pink capital, has rapidly become a fast-paced, modern Indian city, and literacy has made a rapid rise in the region. While the land is invariably harsh and droughts are a constant menace, imaginations are now fixed firmly on the future.

The state is diagonally divided into the hilly southeastern region and the barren northwestern Great Thar Desert, which extends across the border into Pakistan – now accessible via train. The highest point is reached at the pleasant hill station of Mt Abu.

History

This diverse state is home to the Rajputs, warrior clans who claim to originate from the sun, moon and fire, and who have controlled this part of India for more than 1000 years. While they forged marriages of convenience and temporary alliances, pride and independence were always paramount, with the result that much of their energy was spent squabbling among themselves. The resultant weakness eventually led to the Rajputs becoming vassals of the Mughal empire.

Nevertheless, the Rajputs' bravery and sense of honour were unparalleled. Rajput warriors would fight against all odds and, when no hope was left, chivalry demanded jauhar (ritual mass suicide by immolation). It's unsurprising that Akbar persuaded Rajputs to lead his army, nor that subsequent Mughal emperors had such difficulty controlling this part of their empire.

With the Mughal empire declining, the Rajputs gradually clawed back independence – at least until the British arrived. As the British Raj inexorably expanded, most Rajput states allied with the British, which allowed them to continue as independent states, subject to certain political and economic constraints.

These alliances proved to be the beginning of the end for the Rajput rulers. Consumption took over from chivalry, so that by the early 20th century many of the maharajas spent much of their time travelling the world with scores of retainers, playing polo and occupying entire floors of expensive Western hotels. While it suited the British to indulge them in this respect, the maharajas' profligacy was economically and socially detrimental. When India gained its independence, Rajasthan had one of the subcontinent's lowest rates of life expectancy and literacy.

At Independence, India's ruling Congress Party was forced to make a deal with the nominally independent Rajput states to secure their agreement to join the new India. The rulers were allowed to keep their titles and their property holdings, and they were paid an annual stipend commensurate with their status. It couldn't last forever though, and in the early 1970s Indira Gandhi abolished the titles and the stipends, and severely sequestered rulers' property rights.

In their absence Rajasthan has made headway, but the state remains very poor. The strength of tradition here means that women have a particularly tough time in rural areas, where they're often condemned to a life of drudgery and subject to elaborate strictures. However, literacy stood at 61% in 2001, a massive rise from 8.02% in 1951 and 38.55% in 1991 (although the gender gap remains India's widest, and the literacy rate is still below the national average of 65.38%). In 2006, the Rajasthan Directorate of Literacy and Continuing Education was awarded a Unesco gong for its commitment to improving literacy rates.

EASTERN RAJASTHAN

JAIPUR

0141 / pop 2.63 million

Jaipur, the City of Victory, is chaotic and congested, though it still has a habit of tickling travellers pink. Stunning hilltop forts and glorious palaces fit like footprints from a rich royal past, candyfloss-bright turbans blaze a trail through brilliant bargain-filled bazaars, and fluttering saris catch the eye like butterflies.

As the gateway to the desert state of Rajasthan, however, it's also a city permanently under siege. Package tourists are captivated by (and offloaded on) the bustling bazaars, world-class hotels and clammy sophistication, while camel carts and cows waddle through diesel-soaked streets, rampaging rickshaw drivers hustle and burn past businessmen and tourists, and scores of street children beg outside huge jewellery shops and palatial hotels.

Jaipur beams boldest at dusk – when it's well worth walking to Amber – and, much like its founder, Jai Singh II, the Pink City is both proud and resilient.

There's the Elephant Festival in March, Gangaur is celebrated in March/April and Teej celebrations occur in August; see p166 for details.

History

The city owes its name, founding and planning to the great warrior-astronomer Maharaja

RAJASTHANI TRIBES

Groups of Adivasis (tribal people) were the first inhabitants of this region, and today they form 12% of the population – the national average is 8%. The main tribes are the Bhils and the Minas. The Bhils inhabited the southwestern part of the state, and were regarded as splendid warriors, helping the Rajputs combat the Marathas and Mughals. The Minas live in eastern Rajasthan. Originally a ruling tribe, their downfall began with the rise of the Rajputs, and in 1924 the British declared the Minas to be criminals, a label only removed after Independence. Smaller tribes include the Sahariyas, Damariyas, and the Rajput Garasias and Gaduliya Lohars.

Jai Singh II (1693–1743). In 1727, with Mughal power on the wane, Jai Singh decided the time was right to move from his cramped hillside fort at nearby Amber. He laid out the city, with its surrounding walls and rectangular blocks, according to principles set down in the Shilpa-Shastra, an ancient Hindu architectural treatise. In 1728 he built Jantar Mantar, Jaipur's remarkable observatory.

In 1876, Maharaja Ram Singh had the entire old city painted pink, a colour associated with hospitality, to welcome the Prince of Wales (later King Edward VII), and the tradition has been maintained – the current maharaja is a great polo chum of Britain's Prince Charles.

Orientation

Once the initial shock has subsided, travellers find Jaipur surprisingly easy to negotiate. The bazaar-lined old city is in the northeast of Jaipur, the new parts spread to the south, and the more subdued Bani Park is to the west.

There are three main interconnecting roads in the new part of town: Mirza Ismail (MI) Rd – where the majority of restaurants are found – Station Rd and Sansar Chandra Marg. Many tourist facilities are along or just off these roads.

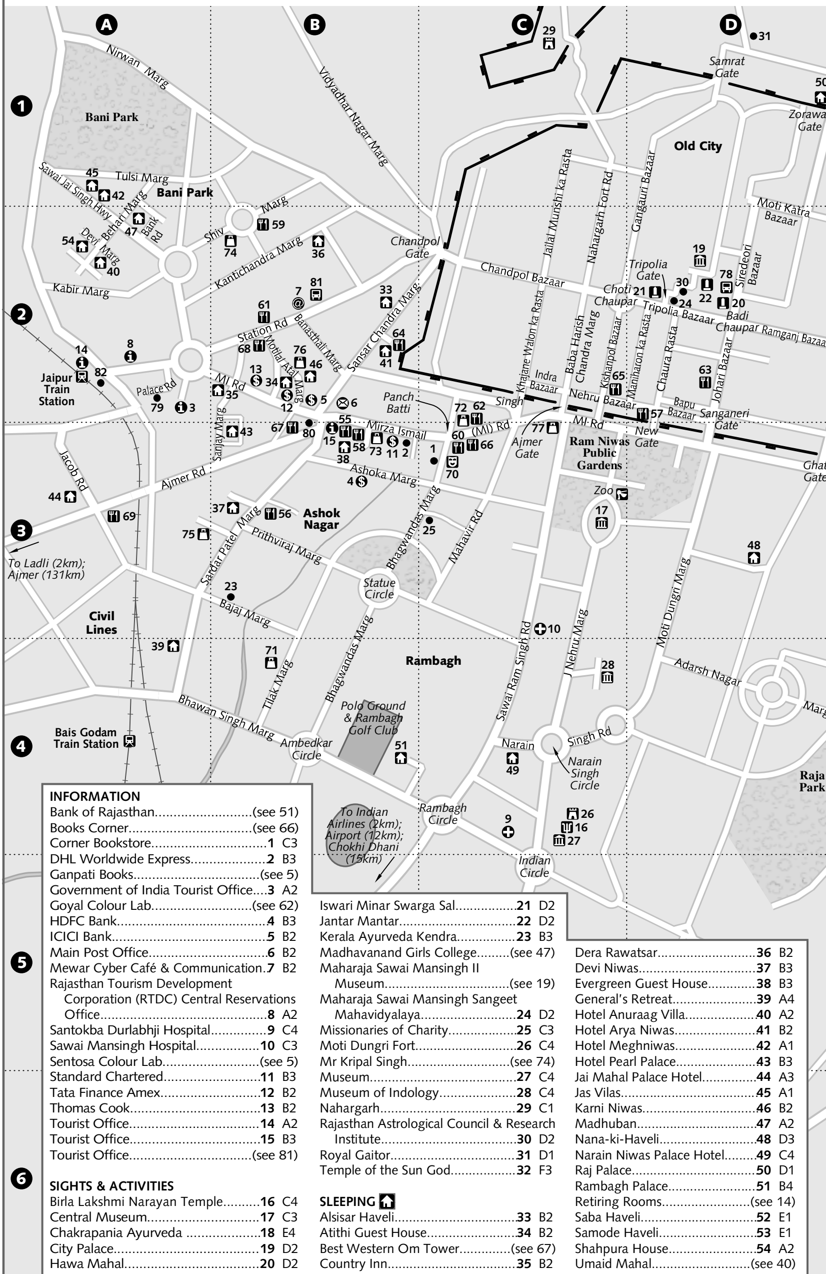
Sights

OLD CITY (PINK CITY)



The old city is partially encircled by a crenellated, battle-scarred wall, and the major gates of Chandpol, Ajmer and Sanganeri have been carefully restored. The entire city is a feat of town planning; avenues divide the Pink City into neat rectangles, each one specialising in different crafts (see p176). The main bazaars include Johari, Tripolia, Bapu and Chandpol Bazaars. At sunset, the buildings bask in a magical pink and gold glow.

A handy reference point among the chaos is Iswari Minar Swarga Sal (Heaven Piercing Minaret; admission Rs 5, camera/video Rs 10/20; 9am-4.30pm) near Tripolia Gate. The minaret was erected by Jai Singh's son, Iswari, who later killed himself rather than face the advancing Maratha army. As the ultimate act of Rajput loyalty, 21 wives and concubines committed jauhar on his funeral pyre. You can climb to the top of the minaret for excellent views over the old city. The entrance is around the back – follow the alley that's 50m west of the minaret along Chandpol Bazaar.

Hawa Mahal

Jaipur's most distinctive landmark, Hawa Mahal (Palace of the Winds; admission Rs 5, Indian/foreigner camera Rs 10/30, video Rs 20/70; 9am-4.30pm Sat-Thu) is a remarkable, delicately honeycombed, pink sandstone structure. The five-storey building was constructed in 1799 by Maharaja Sawaj Pratap Singh to enable ladies of the royal household to watch the life and processions of the city. It's an amazing example of Rajput artistry, and remains a great place for people-watching from behind the small broken shutters. The top offers stunning views over the Jantar Mantar and the City Palace in one direction, and over Siredeori Bazaar in the other.

Entrance to the Hawa Mahal is from the back. To get there, return to the intersection on your left as you face the Hawa Mahal, turn right and then take the first right again through an archway.

City Palace

This palace (☎ 2608055; www.royalfamilyjaipur.com; Indian/foreigner adult Rs 35/180, 5-12yr Rs 20/100, camera Rs 50/free, video Rs 100/200; 9.30am-5pm) is impressive – a vast complex of courtyards, gardens and buildings. The outer wall was built by Jai Singh, but other additions are much more recent, some dating from the early 20th century. Today the palace is a blend of Rajasthani and Mughal architecture. Beyond the main courtyard is the seven-storey Chandra Mahal, the maharaja's residence (off limits to visitors).

There are two entrances: the main entrance, approached through Virendra Pol, and an entrance through Udai Pol near Jaleb Chowk.

Entering through Virendra Pol, you'll see the Mubarak Mahal (Welcome Palace), a reception centre for visiting dignitaries. Built in the late 19th century by Maharaja Sawai Madho Singh II, it's a heady combination of Islamic, Rajput and European architecture. It now forms part of the Maharaja Sawai Mansingh II Museum, which contains a collection of royal costumes and superb shawls, including Kashmiri pashmina (wool shawls). One remarkable exhibit is Sawai Madho Singh I's clothing. He was a cuddly 1.2m wide, weighed 250kg and, appropriately for such an excessive figure, had 108 wives.

The armoury is housed in the former apartments of the maharanis (wives of the maharajas). As visitors enter, fearsome daggers spell out their welcome. Many of the ceremonial weapons are beautifully engraved and inlaid, as are lethal weapons such as the two-bladed daggers that, at the flick of a catch, become scissors inside their victims. If you're not into bloody weaponry, the mirrored and gold-inlaid ceilings are well worth a gaze.

Contained in the Diwan-i-Am (Hall of Public Audience) is an array of exhibits, including a touching collection of illustrated manuscripts showing everything from scenes from everyday life to the tales of the gods. The miniature copies of Hindu scriptures were small enough to hide in case Aurangzeb, the Mughal ruler, attempted to destroy them. Between the armoury and the art gallery is the Diwan-i-Khas (Hall of Private Audience), with a marble-paved gallery in which you can see enormous silver vessels 1.6m tall (reputedly the largest silver objects in the world); Maharaja Madho Singh II, as a devout Hindu, used these vessels to take holy Ganges water to England.

Don't miss the gates of the courtyard Pitam Niwas Chowk, representing spring, summer, autumn and winter – and above all the gorgeous bas reliefs of the peacock gate. Beyond this is the private palace, the Chandra Mahal.

Admission to the palace also gets you in to Jaigarh Fort (p180); it's valid for two days.

Jantar Mantar

Near the City Palace is Jantar Mantar (admission Rs 10, free Mon, Indian/foreigner camera Rs 20/50, video Rs 50/100; 9am-4.30pm), an observatory begun by Jai Singh in 1728, which at first glance looks like a collection of mammoth, bizarre sculptures. If sensing you've stepped into Alice's Adventures in Wonderland is not enough, the Rs 150 guided tour (30 minutes to one hour) is worthwhile. Guides provide fascinating explanations of how each of the instruments work, and how through watching, recording and meticulous calculation, Jai Singh measured time by the place the sun's shadow fell on the huge sundials and charted the annual progress through the zodiac. Each construction has a specific purpose, such as calculating eclipses. The most striking instrument is the sundial, with its 27m-high gnomon; the shadow this casts moves up to 4m per hour.

Before constructing the observatory, Jai Singh sent scholars abroad to study foreign constructs. He built five in total, and this is the largest and best preserved (it was restored in 1901). Others are in Delhi (p135), Varanasi (p431) and Ujjain (p697). The fifth, the Muttra observatory, is gone.

CENTRAL MUSEUM

This dusty but memorable collection (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/30, free Mon; 10am-4.30pm Sat-Thu) is housed in the spectacularly florid Albert Hall, south of the old city, and displays a fine, if carelessly exhibited, array of tribalware, decorative arts, costumes, drawings and musical instruments. Photography is prohibited.

NAHARGARH

Built in 1734 and extended in 1868, sturdy Nahargarh (Tiger Fort; ☎ 5148044; Indian/foreigner Rs 15/20, camera/video Rs 20/70; 10am-5pm) overlooks the city from a sheer ridge to the north. An 8km road runs up to the fort through the hills from Jaipur, or it can be reached along a zigzagging 2km footpath. There are some interesting furnished rooms in the fort and glorious views – it's a popular picnic spot on weekends, and the perfect place to catch the sunset.

ROYAL GAITOR

The site of the royal cenotaphs (admission free, Indian/foreigner camera Rs 5/10, video Rs 10/20; 9am-4.30pm), just outside the city walls, is an appropriately restful place to visit, and still feels remarkably undiscovered. Surrounded by a straggling village, the monuments bear much beautiful, intricate carving. The marble cenotaph of Maharaja Jai Singh II is particularly impressive.

The cenotaphs of the maharanis of Jaipur (Amber Rd; admission free) are midway between Jaipur and Amber.

GALTA

The seductive Temple of the Sun God at Galta – also known as the Monkey Temple (monkeys converge here at dusk) – is 2.5km to the east of Jaipur, just beyond Surajpol Bazaar. On arrival, it's a steady 200m climb through a rocky, barren gorge, but there are spectacular views over the surrounding plains, and it's often packed with bathing pilgrims. Donations are sometimes insisted upon, and women travellers have reported feeling uncomfortable walking up here alone, particularly in the evening.

The beautiful Dhammathali Vipassana Meditation Centre (see p172) is about 3km from Jaipur city centre on the Sisodiarani Baug–Galtaji road. A rickshaw will cost around Rs 80 return.

OTHER SIGHTS

The ramshackle, dusty treasure-trove of the Museum of Indology (Indian/foreigner incl guide Rs 20/40; 8am-6pm) is an extraordinary private collection of folk-art objects – there's everything from a manuscript written by Aurangzeb to a glass bed (for a short queen). The museum is signposted off J Nehru Marg, south of the Central Museum.

Further south is the small fort of Moti Dungri (J Nehru Marg), which is closed to the public. At its foot is the modern Birla Lakshmi Narayan Temple (J Nehru Marg; dawn-dusk), with splendid marble carving. Free guides explain aspects of the temple. Next to the temple there's a small museum (admission free; 8am-noon & 4-8pm), which houses everyday objects from the industrially renowned Birla family.

Activities

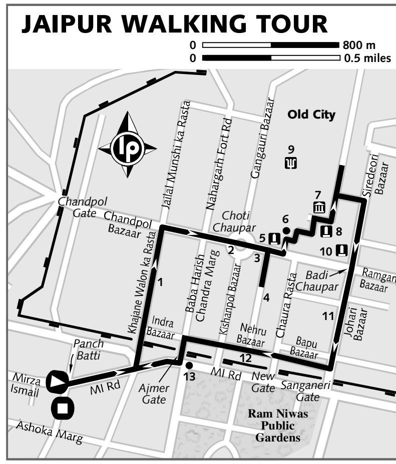
AYURVEDIC MASSAGE

A sure-fire cure for the big-city blues can be found at swanky Kerala Ayurveda Kendra (☎ 5106743; www.keralaayurvedakendra; Bajaj Marg; 8am-8.30pm), where an hour's massage costs Rs 500. Or try Chakrapania Ayurveda (☎ 2624003; www.chakrapaniayurveda.com; Adarsh Nagar Marg; 9am-2pm & 3-7pm Mon-Sat, 9am-1pm Sun), where a body-type analysis costs Rs 200, and a massage Rs 650.

ASTROLOGY

Dr Vinod Shastri is the medal-laden general secretary of the Rajasthan Astrological Council & Research Institute (☎ 2663338; Chandani Chowk, Tripolia Gate; consultations 9am-8pm). He will prepare a computerised horoscope if you have your exact time and place of birth, or will read your palm. Though he should know when you're arriving, it's best to make an appointment.

Walking Tour



Start at Panch Batti, beneath the statue of Maharaja Sawai Jai Singh.

Head north along MI Rd, then turn left at Gopinath Marg and enter the walled city. Once inside, walk straight towards Khajane Walon ka Rasta (1), where you'll see fine marble craftsmenship. Turn right at Chandpol Bazaar and continue until you reach the intersection of Choti Chaupar and Kishanpol Bazaar (2), where textile artisans design their bandhani (tie-dye) and loharia (literally 'waves'; tie-die technique creating a striped or zigzagged effect) pieces.

After crossing Choti Chaupar, you'll reach Tripolia Bazaar (3), home to an array of iron trinkets and kitchen utensils. Tucked away to the right is Maniharon ka Rasta (4), the domain of the lac (resin) bangle makers. To the north of the bazaar is the soaring Iswari Minar Swarga Sal (5; p167).

WALK FACTS

Start Panch Batti
Finish Panch Batti
Distance 3km
Duration one hour

About 50m from the minaret is Tripolia Gate (6), the three-arched main entrance to the City Palace, though only the maharaja's family is permitted to enter via its portals. The public entrance is to the left, via Atishpol, or Stable Gate. From here, you can visit the City Palace (7; p169), the Jantar Mantar (8; opposite) and, to the north of the City Palace, the impressive Govind Devji Temple (9), surrounded by gardens.

Come out of the complex through the Jalebi Chowk (you may need to ask). To your right is the Hawa Mahal (10; p167), and bustling Siredeori Bazaar. A few yards away is the large square, Badi Chaupar, and further south is Johari Bazaar (11), known for its gold and silversmiths. Many of the grand havelis shading the street belong to wealthy cotton merchants. Of particular interest here are the enamel workers, the meenakari. This highly glazed and intricate work in shades of ruby, bottle green and royal blue is a speciality of Jaipur.

If you turn right before Sanganeri Gate, you'll reach Bapu Bazaar, then further west is Nehru Bazaar (12), which extends between Chaura Rasta and Kishanpol Bazaar on the inside of the southern wall. Brightly coloured fabrics, camelskin shoes and perfumes make this area hugely popular with local women. At the end of Nehru Bazaar, to your left, is Ajmer Gate. Come out of the gate and the road you see is MI Rd (13) – great for restaurants and for general Jaipur hubbub. Time it for sunset when the buildings turn pink. Turn right from here, and walk straight and you will come back to Panch Batti crossing.

You're not immune to prolonged stops at emporiums along the way, so be prepared. Book at the RTDC Tourist Hotel Swagam Campus (7am-8pm) in front of the RTDC Central Reservations Office.

Sleeping

Autorickshaw drivers besiege travellers who arrive by train or bus. If you take their suggestions, chances are you'll pay a huge commission to the hotel owner. To avoid such shenanigans, go straight to the prepaid autorickshaw stands at the bus and train stations. Alternatively, most hotels will pick you up (usually free of charge) if you ring ahead.

From May to September, most midrange and top-end places will offer bargain rates, dropping prices by 25% to 50%.

BUDGET

Evergreen Guest House (☎ 2363446; evergreen34@hotmail.com; Chameliwala Market; s/d Rs 225/300;) Backpacker world meets student-union mess hall at this place with 100 stuffy dormlike rooms. The restaurant is a good place to meet other travellers though. Non-guests can use the pool for Rs 100.

There's a small dairy on site, various seasonal crops (including 10,000 amla trees) and a bevy of beehives. Volunteer teachers are welcome at the nearby primary school.

Hotel Arya Niwas (☎ 2372456; www.aryaniwas.com; s/d Rs 700/800, with AC Rs 800/930;) Just off Sansar Chandra Marg, this reliable Jaipur institution is well run (though impersonal), and attracts a broad spectrum of short- and long-term clientele. There's a long soothing terrace facing a peaceful grassy patch, and it has a good self-service veg restaurant. Rooms are clean, although those on the ground floor are a bit claustrophobic (check out a few). The autorickshaw squad at the end of the road is easily avoided.

MIDRANGE

Bani Park

The Bani Park area is relatively green and leafy. It's a 1.5km rickshaw ride from the old city.

Hotel Anuraag Villa (☎ 2201679; www.anuraagvilla.com; D249 Devi Marg; r Rs 500-1200;) This ice-cream-cone-coloured rectangular building is surprisingly serene, with an extensive front lawn and simple, well-appointed rooms. The meals are plentiful and management is sharp.

General's Retreat (☎ 2377539; www.generalsretreat.com; 9 Sardar Patel Marg; s/d Rs 990/1200) A good-value option set around the sprawling greenery of Chomu estate, with 10 smart, if slightly poky, rooms; one room has its own kitchenette.

Umaid Mahal (☎ 2201952; reservation@umaidmahal.com; C20B/2, Behari Marg; s/d Rs 1300/1600) Wing Commander Bhim Singh Rathore ably runs this lofty heritage 'castle' in a quiet backstreet. It's all polished faux-marble floors, colourful curtains and blinding tiled interiors (especially in the foyer). Rooms are spotless, and most have balconies.

Madhuban (☎ 2200033; www.madhuban.net; D237 Behari Marg; s Rs 1300-1800, d Rs 1400-1900, ste Rs 2400-2700;) Madhuban is the premier midrange hotel in Jaipur, run by the indefatigable Dicky, whose family once ruled Patan. It's surrounded by head-high plants and decorated with bright frescoes. The rooms are fully decked out, the restaurant is smart and versatile, and there's a small walled-in pool. It's completely hassle free.

Hotel Meghniwas (☎ 2202034; www.meghniwas.com; C9 Sawai Jai Singh Hwy; s/d/ste Rs 1300/1500/2200;) In a 1950s building constructed by Brig Singh and run by his friendly descendants, this place has modern rooms with traditional carved-wood furniture and leafy outlooks. Nos 201 and 209 are like miniapartments – good for long-termers. The pool is in a pleasant lawn area.

Dera Rawatsar (☎ 2200770; www.derarawatsar.com; D194, Vijay Path; s/d/ste Rs 1400/1800/4500;) Situated off the main drag, this quiet hotel is managed by a gracious Bikaner noble family. It has nicely decorated rooms, sunny courtyards, fantastic home-style Indian meals and a story-telling matriarch.

Jas Vilas (☎ 2204638; www.jasvilas.com; C9 Sawai Jai Singh Hwy; s/d Rs 2000/2300;) Built by a military man in 1950, this excellent choice is run by a charming family, and offers welcoming, eager-to-please service and a sparkling pool in a romantic courtyard. There are nine classy rooms, and it has a lovely sheltered, quiet feel. A superb breakfast costs Rs 150.

Shahpura House (☎ 2203069; www.shahpurahouse.com; D257 Devi Marg; s/d/ste Rs 2000/2300/3500;) Owned by the Shekhawat Rajput clan, this is a good option, though it lacks a family-run feel. It's built in elaborate traditional style, and offers immaculate rooms, some with balconies, and even a durbar (royal court) hall with a huge chandelier. The swimming pool is magnificent.

Elsewhere

Nana-ki-Haveli (☎ 2615502; www.dbr.nu/nana-ki-haveli; Fateh Tiba; r Rs 1200-1800) This tranquil, tucked-away place with attractive rooms decorated in traditional style is run by a lovely family for whom nothing is too much trouble. It's off Moti Dungri Rd.

Alsisar Haveli (☎ 2368290; www.alsisarhaveli.com; Sansar Chandra Marg; s/d/ste Rs 2400/3000/3650;)

This gracious 19th-century mansion is set in beautiful, green gardens, with quaintly furnished, elegant rooms with lots of arches. It would take first prize, but nearby construction work appears never-ending.

Narain Niwas Palace Hotel (2561291; Narain Singh Rd; s/d/ste Rs 2595/3650/4950;) This doozy has an old-fashioned veranda and dusty, though charm-filled, rooms – pay a few more bucks for a suite. There's a secluded pool and lush garden. Make your own way there to avoid a monstrous commission.

Best Western Om Tower (2366683; ommljaipur@yahoo.com; Church Rd; s/d/ste Rs 3850/4400/7700;) This worrying precursor to future Jaipur rises high above the city like a chunky space rocket that tragically crash-landed. Rooms are average at best, and the glitz-and-beige design may not be everyone's bag. Come for the spectacular revolving restaurant (see opposite), and the rooftop pool in the adjacent building.

Country Inn (510330; reservation.jaipur@cisindia.com; Khasa Kothi Circle, MI Rd; s/d Rs 4500/5000) A crisp hotel from the Carlson Group featuring 100 streamlined, ultramodern rooms, an impressive spa and health club, and an excellent 24-hour restaurant.

TOP END

Saba Haveli (2630521; 477 Gangapol; d/ste Rs 4645/5830;) This 200-year-old haveli near Zorawar Gate is the latest of these ornate residences to be fully converted. Suites are suitably decadent, and the double rooms are good value for the bracket, though service is a bit sloppy.

Samode Haveli (2632370; www.samode.com; s/d US$185/220, ste US$252-315;) This classic in the northeast corner of the old city was once the town house of the rawal of Samode, the prime minister of Jaipur. The suites get high romance points, with big carved beds, private terraces and twinkling, intricate mirrorwork, though the ordinary rooms are ordinary value. The gorgeous pool has huge canopied double beds at one end. Prices halve from May to September.

Jai Mahal Palace Hotel (2223636; www.tajhotels.com; Jacob Rd; s/d US$220/230;) Run by the Taj Group, this grand hotel is set in 18 acres of land with beautifully manicured Mughal gardens, which most of the swish, comfortable rooms overlook. There's a gorgeous circular pool. The 18th-century building was once the residence of Jaipur's prime minister.

Raj Palace (2634077; www.rajpalace.com; s/ste US$275/475; Zorawar Gate, Amber Rd;) This stunning palace is almost over-the-top-end, with an antique-crockery museum, an enormous crystal chandelier, decadent paintings and a stellar list of royal guests, but the service is reassuringly intimate. The standard rooms are properly palatial, and the suites (especially Khaas Mahal and Durbar) are heavenly.

Rambagh Palace (2211919; www.tajhotels.com; Bhawani Singh Marg; d US$565, ste US$1225-1845;) This Taj Group special once belonged to the maharaja of Jaipur. The 47 acres sport superb views across immaculate lawns; rooms are, hmm, expensive. The Polo Bar is great for a sundowner (p176).

Raj Vilas (2680101; www.oberoihotels.com; Goner Rd; r US$600, luxury tents US$700-1500, villas US$2000-3300;) About 8km from the centre, Raj Vilas is Jaipur's most sophisticated hotel. Run by Oberoi, it has 71 rooms, yet retains a boutique feel. Its terracotta domes are set in more than 32 shady orchard- and fountain-filled hectares. Rooms have sunken baths and are subtly and gorgeously decorated, and each villa has its own pool. You ride from place to place in golf buggies.

Eating

RESTAURANTS

Places tend to get lively at around 9pm.

MI Road

Natraj Restaurant (MI Rd; mains Rs 50-180) This classy, two-level vegetarian restaurant has an extensive menu featuring North Indian, Continental and Chinese cuisine. The stuffed-tomato dish is divine, and the bomb curry will blow you away. Otherwise there's a good selection of thalis (Rs 100 to 160), but the South Indian food is oily and bland.

Handi Restaurant (MI Rd; dishes Rs 60-200; noon-3.30pm & 6.30-11.30pm) This old stalwart is opposite the main post office, behind Maya Mansions, and offers scrumptious barbecue dishes, and tandoori and Mughlai cuisine. In the evenings it sets up a cheap kebab stall at the entrance to the restaurant.

Copper Chimney (Maya Mansions; dishes Rs 65-200; noon-3.30pm & 6.30-11.30pm) Near Handi Restaurant, Copper Chimney is a smart, classy place with a gruff waiter army and a rollicking horse mural. It offers top-to-bottom Indian and Chinese food in a cool, pleasant setting, with a window over the mayhem of MI Rd.

Niro's (☎ 2374493; restaurant@nirosindia.com; MI Rd; mains Rs 80-290) Niro's has been on duty for more than 50 years, and still pumps out classic Indian fare and piped muzak. Under a mirrored roof, masses tuck into veg and nonveg dishes. The murg malai (chicken and cheese) kebabs and began bharta (aubergine) still head the list.

OM (☎ 2366683; ommljaipur@yahoo.com; Church Rd; dishes Rs 90-290; noon-3.30pm & 7-11pm) The rocket-shaped icon of Jaipur houses a revolving restaurant that leaves you dining 56m up among the smog-sheltered stars. The surrounds are glitzy, and the hard-core veg – and booze-free – menu is superb. A revolution takes 45 minutes, but service is invariably quicker. Keep your hands off the buffet – it doesn't match the à la carte. It's off MI Rd.

Around MI Road

Jai Shankar Pavitra Bhojnalaya (☎ 25102541; 12 Sindhi Camp Bus Stand, Station Rd; dishes Rs 10-50) Close to the main bus station, this popular veg place does especially good Indian breakfasts. Limited English, but it's fast, fresh and delicious.

Ice Spice (☎ 2370586; Ashok Marg; mains Rs 45-65) A short stroll south of Evergreen Guesthouse, this locals' place does a roaring trade in Rajasthani thalis (Rs 65), and a good side business in South Indian dishes.

Four Seasons (D43A Subhas Marg; mains Rs 45-170; noon-3.30pm & 6.30-11pm) This smart, vastly popular place – expect to wait on weekends – is on two levels, with a glass wall to the kitchens. It's a bit out of the way but has hearty vegetarian food and a great range of Rajasthani dishes. Try the mutter paneer (peas and unfermented cheese) or a thali (Rs 85 to 100).

Gayatri's (AC4 Gayatri Sadan, Sawai Jai Singh Hwy, Bani Park; mains Rs 60-90) Close to Madhuban hotel, this pleasant, clean multicuisine restaurant whips up superb curries in healthy portions. The Kashmiri dam aloo (a traditional Kashmiri dish made with potatoes and spices) is a winner.

Mediterraneo (9 Khandela House; dishes Rs 65-195) This Italian restaurant offers wood-fired pizzas and pasta dishes – even Italians recommend it. It's on the candlelit rooftop, and offers a rare chance to eat outside in Jaipur. It's behind Amber Tower.

Jaipur Inn (B17 Shiv Marg, Bani Park; buffet Rs 150; 7-11pm) This guesthouse has a rooftop restaurant with stupendous views over Jaipur. The scrumptious Indian veg buffet dinner is sociable and superb (nonguests book in advance).

Spice Court (☎ 2220202; Hari Bhawan, Achrol House, Jacob Rd, Civil Lines; mains Rs 90-200) This relaxed clubhouse restaurant, with a blue tiled roof and a splendid evening courtyard, is an excellent place to escape the hum of the city (but not the hum of Hindi pop). The food is fresh, the kitchen spotless, and the kebab platter is serious business.

Old City

Mohan (144-5 Nehru Bazaar; dishes Rs 8-55) This popular chow pit is grubby on the outside, but prepares freshly cooked food on the inside. The name is in Hindi and it's on the corner of the street, a few steps down from the pavement.

Ganesh Restaurant (Nehru Bazaar; dishes Rs 10-100) This pocket-sized outdoor restaurant is in a fantastic location on the old city wall. There's no English menu and not much English spoken, but if you're looking for a local eatery with fresh tasty food you'll love it. It's near New Gate, between two tailors.

LMB (Lakshmi Misthan Bandar; Johari Bazaar; mains Rs 55-210; 11.30am-3.30pm & 7-11pm) LMB is heart-warming stuff – an Art Deco–meets-disco sattvik (pure vegetarian) restaurant going strong since 1954. The menu includes a warning from Krishna about people who like putrid and polluted food (tamasic). All meals are made with pure ghee (clarified butter), and puri (flat dough that puffs up when fried) snacks such as kachori (puris pepped up with corn or dhal) and gol gappas (Indian-style breakfast of puris and vegetables) are the best in town. Aside from the thali, paneer tikka (unfermented cheese cooked in spices and dry roasted) stuffed with fennel is a scrummy choice.

Palace Café (☎ 2616449; City Palace; mains Rs 80-250) A welcome respite from the tourist shuffle, Palace Café has classy Indian food, measured service, and a no-nonsense team of chefs who won't be hurried. It's better at night, when it's cool enough for alfresco dining.

QUICK EATS

Mr Beans (E141A Sardar Patel Rd) India's premier coffee chain still has the best cuppa in this town; you'll find the Jaipur branch opposite the Raj Mahal Hotel.

Lassiwala (MI Rd; lassis Rs 10-20) This milky institution is a simple little place that whips up fabulous, creamy lassis (yoghurt and iced-water drink). Will the real Lassiwala please stand up? It's the one that says 'Since 1944', directly next to the alleyway; imitators (some pretty good) spread to the right as you face it.

Jal Mahal (MI Rd; ice creams Rs 12-110) This packed little takeaway ice-cream parlour has some inventive concoctions, from the earthquake to the after ate.

Chic Chocolate (MI Rd) Around the corner from Atithi Guest House, this pastry shop serves excellent cheese toast (with onion and peppers, Rs 25). It also bakes its own bread and cakes.

For great Indian sweets – including Jaipur's own sticky ghevar (a honeycomb-shaped cake made from flour and dhal and covered in ghee and milk) topped with flaked almonds – head to the mobbed Rawat Kachori (Station Rd; sweets Rs 5-10, lassis Rs 22); a delicious milk crown should fill you up for the afternoon. Across the road is Kanji (Station Rd; sweets per kg Rs 110-300), with a similarly fabulous array.

Drinking

Jaipur isn't traditionally a late-night party town; MI Rd has sprouted a few drinking dens, while the top-end hotels all have slick bars, none of which get particularly wild.

B2B (Country Inn, Kasa Kothi Circle; 7pm-1am) This hit-and-miss nightclub, in the Country Inn basement, is an ideal place to witness Jaipur's new upward mobility in mid-swing. It has the requisite 'couples-only' dance floor, and an impressive range of cocktails.

Polo Bar (Rambagh Palace Hotel, Bhawani Singh Marg; 11am-midnight) The pick of the gin joints, with arched, scalloped windows overlooking perfect lawns. A bottled beer costs Rs 360.

Steam (7pm-late) In the same complex as Polo Bar, Steam is perhaps the only genuine late-night venue in town, and definitely the only one built inside a steam engine.

Entertainment

Raj Mandir Cinema (☎ 2379372; Rs 25-100; sessions 12.30pm, 3.30pm, 6.30pm, 9.30pm) The number-one Hindi cinema in India, world-famous Raj Mandir is an icon of Jaipur. Opened in 1976, the meringue-shaped auditorium is so ugly it's almost beautiful, while the cream-puff exterior looks ready to orbit outer space or get gobbled up by a passing sweet-toothed ogre. It's usually full, despite its immense size, but bookings can be made one hour to seven days in advance (open 10am to 6pm) at Windows 7 and 8. Alternatively, sharpen your elbows and join the queue when the current booking office opens 45 minutes before the curtain goes up.

Chokhi Dhani (☎ 2225001; adult/3-9yr incl meal Rs 190/100) Located 15km from Jaipur, this reconstructed village provides a fantastical, magical evening. It's pretend ethnicity, but don't let that put you off. Stroll through gardens lit by glimmering lamps and dine on traditional Rajasthani thalis. Then take in some offbeat entertainment, ranging from the bizarre to the more bizarre: traditional tribal dancers setting fire to their hats, small children balancing on poles, and dancers dressed in lion costumes lurking in a wood. It's hugely popular with middle-class Indian familles, and you can stay here in luxurious mud huts (huts Rs 4449, suites Rs 6449).

Shopping

Jaipur is shopping heaven, and Rajasthani crafts adorn its pearly gates. Bargain your pants off though, or you might go home without them. Tourist traps around the City Palace and Hawa Mahal tend to be pricier. At some shops, such as the government emporium and some fancy stores, prices are fixed, but often on the high side. For useful tips on bargaining, see p1148.

Most of the larger shops can pack and send your parcels home for you – although it'll be cheaper if you do it yourself (see p167 for postal services).

Jaipur is famous for precious and semi-precious stones. Many shops offer bargain prices, but you do need to be able to recognise both your gems and your charlatans. The main gem-dealing area is around the Muslim area of Pahar Ganj. Here you can see stones being cut and polished in workshops tucked off narrow backstreets. Johari and Siredeori Bazaars are where many jewellery shops are concentrated, selling gold, silver and fine, highly glazed enamelwork known as meenakari.

The old city is still loosely divided into traditional artisans' quarters. Bapu Bazaar is lined with saris and fabrics, and is a good spot to buy trinkets. For fabrics, you might find better deals along Johari Bazaar, where many merchants specialise in cotton. Kishanpol Bazaar is famous for textiles, particularly bandhani. Nehru Bazaar sells fabric, as well as jootis (traditional pointy-toed shoes), trinkets and perfume. MI

Rd is another good place to buy jootis. The best place for bangles is Maniharon ka Rasta.

Factories and showrooms are strung along the length of Amber Rd between Zorawar Gate and the Holiday Inn to catch the tourist traffic. Here you'll find block prints, blue pottery, carpets and antiques, but the emporia are used to busloads swinging in to blow their cash, so you'll need to wear your bargaining hat.

Rickshaw-wallahs, hotels and travel agents will be getting a hefty cut from any shop they take you to. Steer clear of friendly young men on the street trying to take you to their uncle's/brother's/cousin's shop – commission is the name of their game too.

Rajasthali (MI Rd; ⌚ 11am-7.30pm Mon-Sat) The state-government emporium, opposite Ajmer Gate, is packed with good-quality Rajasthani artefacts and crafts, but has an air of torpor that doesn't make shopping much fun. The best reason to visit is to scout out prices before launching into the bazaars.

Anokhi (2 Tilak Marg; ⌚ 10am-7pm) This classy, upmarket boutique is well worth visiting, with high-quality textiles such as block-printed fabrics, tablecloths and clothes. The pieces are produced just outside Jaipur at an unusually ethical factory built on the grounds of an organic farm.

Pratap Sons (☎ 2575421; Saraogi Mansion) This professional setup is perfect for tailor-made Western suits that somehow appear before your eyes, and pricey but glamorous salwar kameez (long dresslike tunic worn over baggy pants).

Kripal Kumbh (☎ 2201127; B18A Shiv Marg, Bani Park; ⌚ 9am-5pm) This is a showroom in a private home – it's a great place to buy the famous blue pottery produced by the renowned, multi-award-winning potter Mr Kripal Singh. Now in his eighties, he is an accomplished artist and has some stunningly beautiful artworks for sale. Ceramics go for anything from Rs 10 (for a paperweight) to Rs 10,000 (for a large vase). You can also learn how to paint or make blue pottery here (see p172). Touts might take you elsewhere and claim that someone else is K Singh, or even tell you that he is dead, so make sure you are taken to the right place (near the Jaipur Inn).

Mojari (Bhawani Villa, Gulab Path, Chomu House; ⌚ 11am-6pm Mon-Sat) This place sells fabulous footwear for between Rs 400 and 800. Named after the traditional decorated shoes of Rajasthan, Mojari is a UN-supported project that helps 3500 rural leatherworkers' households. It's fit for shoe fetishists, but not for large feet. Find it off Sadar Patel Marg.

Juneja Art Gallery (6-7 Laksmi Complex, MI Rd; ⌚ 10am-8pm) This gallery has some striking pieces of contemporary art by Rajasthani artists (prices from Rs 100 to 50,000).

Samanvai Art (☎ 5114400; www.samanvaiart.com; No 351, 3rd fl, Ganpati Plaza, MI Rd) This place also has edgy paintings.

Ratan Textiles (☎ 2222526; www.ratantextiles.com; Jain Paprimal Cottage, Ajmer Rd) Popular with Indian shoppers, this is a 25-year-old design studio that specialises in interior decorations, with some very creative staff. It has a huge selection of blankets and linen.

WARNING – GEM SCAMS

A disturbingly large number of travellers continue to get bedazzled by gem deals. These too-good-to-be-true con tricks might involve buying gems for resale at a supposedly huge profit, or getting paid by wealthy dealers to cart gems then suddenly coming up against 'customs problems' that mean you have to shell out huge amounts, or some other cunning ploy.

The con artists are invariably charming, often taking travellers to their homes and insisting on paying for meals. Mistaking a smooth operator for someone showing genuine Indian hospitality, the unsuspecting traveller begins to trust his or her new-found friend. The proposed moneymaking scheme a few days later seems too good to be true – and it is. If you buy gems for resale, they are usually worth a fraction of the price paid (or, if you agreed to have them sent, they never arrive, even if you see them posted in front of you). Hard-luck stories about an inability to obtain an export licence or having to pay huge taxes are not your problem. Testimonials from other happy gem-dealing punters are easy to fake. Don't let the promise of easy money cloud your judgment.

You can book domestic flights at Rajasthan Travel Service (☎ 2365408; Ganpati Plaza, MI Rd) or Crown Tours (☎ 2363310; Palace Rd). For international flights, Air India (☎ 2368047; Shop 101, Ganpati Plaza, MI Rd) is in the city centre.

BUS

Rajasthan State Transport Corporation (RSTC) buses all leave from the main bus station (Station Rd), also picking up passengers at Narain Singh Circle. There is a left-luggage office here (Rs 10 per bag for 24 hours), as well as a prepaid autorickshaw stand. Deluxe buses all leave from Platform 3, tucked away in the right-hand corner of the bus station, and they may be booked in advance from the reservation office (☎ 2205790) at the bus station.

There are regular buses to many destinations, including the following:

Destination	Fare (Rs)	Duration (hr)	Frequency
Agra	174	5½	12 daily
Ajmer	140	2½	7 daily
Bharatpur	95	4½	4 daily
Bikaner	125	8	hourly

Mt Abu	312	13	daily
Nawalgarh	71	4	half-hourly
Sawai Madhopur	85	6	3 daily
Udaipur	202	10	5 daily

Prices are for non-AC buses. For long journeys, private buses can be more comfortable, though the RSTC Silverline luxury services are pretty good. Private buses also often provide sleeper buses (at extra cost) over long distances, where you can lie down – ensuring far better sleep than on a chair service.

CAR

The RTDC charges Rs 5.5 per kilometre in an Ambassador (non-AC), with a daily minimum of 250km; the overnight charge starts at Rs 100. Private taxis charge from Rs 4.5 per kilometre for a non-AC car, with the same minimum. Remember you'll have to pay for the driver's return journey.

TRAIN

The efficient railway reservation office (☎ 135; 8am-2pm & 2.15-8pm Mon-Sat, 8am-2pm Sun) is to your right as you exit the main train station. It's open for advance reservations only. Join the queue for 'Freedom Fighters and Foreign Tourists' (Counter 769). For same-day travel, buy your ticket at the train station. For enquiries call ☎ 131. See opposite for details of routes and fares. The Jaipur–Udaipur line should have reopened at the time of publication.

Getting Around

TO/FROM THE AIRPORT

There are no bus services from the airport. An autorickshaw/taxi costs at least Rs 150/250 for the 15km journey into the centre.

AUTORICKSHAW

There are prepaid autorickshaw stands at the bus and train stations. If you want to hire an autorickshaw for local sightseeing, it should cost around Rs 200/300 for a half-/full day (including a visit to Amber but not Nahargarh); be prepared to bargain.

CYCLE-RICKSHAW

You can do your bit for the environment by flagging down a lean-limbed cycle-rickshaw rider. A short trip costs about Rs 20.

of town, Amber was once the ancient capital of Jaipur state.

Construction of the fort (Indian/foreigner Rs 10/50, camera/video Rs 75/150; 9am-4.30pm) was begun in 1592 by Maharaja Man Singh, the Rajput commander of Akbar's army. It was later extended by the Jai Singhs before the move to Jaipur.

You can climb up to the fort from the road in about 10 minutes (cold drinks are available at the top). A seat in a jeep up to the fort costs Rs 150 return. Riding by elephant is popular at Rs 500 return (each can carry up to four people), but it's just as easy to walk, and treatment of the animals is suspect. Help in Suffering (see p1159) is lobbying the government to speed up plans to build better facilities for the elephants. If you want to help, you can send a letter of support.

Hiring a guide (Rs 150 to 200 for 1½ hours, maximum four people) at the entrance is an asset here, as there are few signs.

Otherwise, after leaving the ticket office, stick to the right of the main stairs, and ascend the narrower stairs; the silver door of the small Kali Temple (6am-noon & 4-8pm) lies at the top. From the 16th century to 1980 (when it was banned), a goat was sacrificed here daily. Photography is not permitted.

To the left of the temple, the main stairway leads to the Diwan-i-Am (Hall of Public Audience), with a double row of columns and latticed galleries above.

The maharaja's apartments are on the higher terrace; you enter through a gateway decorated with mosaics and sculptures. The Jai Mandir (Hall of Victory) is noted for its inlaid panels and mirrored ceiling. Carved marble relief panels around the hall are fascinatingly delicate and quirky, with cartoonlike insects and sinuous flowers.

Opposite the Jai Mandir is the Sukh Niwas (Hall of Pleasure), with an ivory-inlaid sandalwood door, and a channel that once carried cooling water right through the room. From the Jai Mandir you can take in the fine views from the palace ramparts over the lake below. The zenana (areas where women were secluded) surround the fourth courtyard, linked by a common passageway for the maharaja's discreet nocturnal visits.

Continuing past Amber Fort you'll find the newly opened Anokhi Museum of Handprinting (Anokhi Haveli, Kheri Gate, Amber; 10.30am-5pm Tue-Sat, 11am-4.30pm Sun), which superbly documents the recent resurgence in hand-block printing, and runs hands-on demonstrations. The haveli, reached up cobblestone pathways, is itself worth the visit, and the exhibitions are regularly updated. A café serves excellent coffee and there's also a gift shop.

There are frequent buses to Amber from near the Hawa Mahal in Jaipur (Rs 8, 25 minutes).

Jaigarh

A scrubby green hill tumbles down above Amber, topped by imposing Jaigarh (Indian/foreigner Rs 15/20, camera/video Rs 20/100, car Rs 50; 9am-5pm), built in 1726 by Jai Singh. The stern fort, punctuated by whimsical-hatted lookout towers, was never captured and has survived intact through the centuries. It's an uphill walk (about 1km) from Amber and offers great views from the Diwa Burj watchtower. The fort has reservoirs, residential areas, a puppet theatre and the world's largest wheeled cannon, Jaya Vana. Admission is free with a ticket to the City Palace (p169).

Abhaneri

About 95km from Jaipur on the Agra road, this remote village, surrounded by rolling wheat fields, is the unlikely location for one of Rajasthan's most awe-inspiring baoris (stepwells). An incredible geometric sight, Chand Baori (admission free; dawn-dusk) has around 11 visible levels of zigzagging steps and is 20m deep. Both the crumbled palace and the warm orange sandstone Harshat Mata Temple were built by King Chand, ruler of Abhaneri and a Rajput from the Chahamana dynasty.

From Jaipur, catch a bus to Sikandra (Rs 20, 1½ hours), from where you can hire a jeep for the 10km trip to Abhaneri (Rs 250 return, including a 30-minute stop). Alternatively, take a bus to Gular, from where it's a 5km walk to Abhaneri. If you have your own transport, this is a worthwhile stop between Jaipur and Bharatpur or Agra.

Balaji

The extraordinary Hindu exorcism temple of Balaji (dawn-dusk) is about 3km off the Jaipur–Agra road. People bring their possessed loved ones here to have bad spirits exorcised through prayer and rituals. Most exorcisms take place on Tuesdays and Saturdays. At these times the street outside feels like it's hosting a Hindu rave, and the only people who can get inside the temple are the holy men and the victims – services are relayed to the crowds outside on crackly video screens. The possessed scream, shout, dance and shake their heads.

If you wait until the service has finished, you will be able to look inside the temple. You may want to cover your head with a scarf as a mark of respect. No photography is permitted. The often disturbing scenes at this temple may upset some.

From Jaipur there are numerous buses to Balaji (local/express Rs 32/50, 2½/two hours).

BHARATPUR

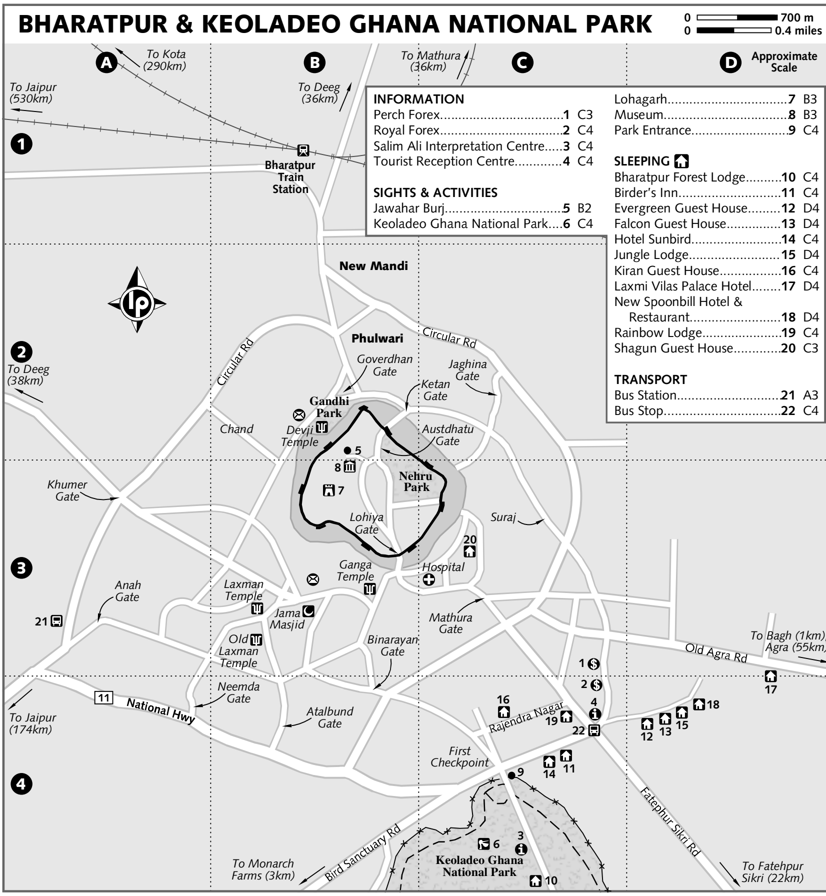
Bharatpur is home to the World Heritage–listed Keoladeo Ghana National Park (p182), one of the world's prime bird-breeding and feeding grounds. This peaceful sanctuary is hard-core twitcher (bird-watcher) territory, and boasts a whopping 364 species within its 29-sq-km marshlands, including many threatened aquatic birds on migratory routes from Central Asia.

In the 17th and 18th centuries, Bharatpur was an important stronghold of the Jats, who retained their autonomy through their prowess in battle and marriage alliances with Rajput nobility. They successfully opposed the Mughals on several occasions, and their 18th-century fort here withstood an attack by the British in 1805 and a long siege in 1825. This siege led to the signing of the first treaty of friendship between the northwest Indian states and the East India Company. The Jat influence and the town's position next to the border with Uttar Pradesh means that it resembles the towns in the neighbouring state rather than those in Rajasthan.

The fort's sturdy defences remain, but Bharatpur itself has lost its charm.

Bring mosquito repellent.



Sights

Lohagarh, the early 18th-century 'Iron Fort', occupies the entire small artificial island in the town centre. Maharaja Suraj Mahl built two towers within the ramparts – the Jawahar Burj and Fateh Burj – to commemorate his victories over the Mughals and the British. The austere structure contains three decaying palaces. One of them, centred on a tranquil courtyard, houses a little-visited museum (admission Rs 3, free Mon, camera/video Rs 10/20; 10am-4.30pm Sat-Thu) with Jain sculptures, paintings, weapons and dusty animal trophies. Most spectacular is the palace's original hammam (Turkish bath).

Shagun Guest House (232455; s/d with shared bathroom Rs 80/90) Down a lane inside Mathura gate, this place is the only reasonable choice in the dusty town. Rooms are basic, cell-like and dusty, but it's cheap and fronted by a little tree-shaded courtyard with primitive grass huts. The friendly owner, Rajeev, is knowledgeable about the park, and offers village tours.

BUS

There are regular buses heading to destinations including Agra (local/express Rs 40/55, 1½/two hours), Fatehpur Sikri in Uttar Pradesh (Rs 12, one hour), Jaipur (Rs 90, five hours), Deeg (Rs 15, one hour) and Alwar (Rs 43, four hours). Buses depart from the bus station but they'll also stop at the crossroads beside the Tourist Reception Centre.

TRAIN

The Janata Express (Nos 9023/4) leaves New Delhi at 1.45pm and arrives in Bharatpur at 6.20pm. It leaves Bharatpur at 8.05am, arriving in the capital at 12.50pm (2nd class/sleeper Rs 68/121). There are about six trains daily to Sawai Madhopur (2nd class Rs 78, four hours, 182km), which continue to Kota (2nd class/sleeper Rs 43/121, six hours, 258km).

Getting Around

Auto- or cycle-rickshaws from the bus station to the tourist office and most hotels should be about Rs 25; from the train station, Rs 30.

KEOLADEO GHANA NATIONAL PARK

By far the best time to visit this park (Indian/foreigner Rs 25/200, video Rs 200; 6am-6pm Apr-Sep, 6.30am-5pm Oct-Mar) is October to February, when you'll see many migratory birds. At other times, it can be dry and relatively bird-free.

The best times for bird-spotting are either early morning or evening. Expect to see Saras cranes (and its spectacular courtship dance), herons, egrets, geese, owls, cormorants and kingfishers. Pythons are most commonly seen in the winter, when they come out from underground to sunbathe. The southern reaches are a web of deserted, tangled paths, and are officially closed, as a tigress is rumoured to roam the area.

The sanctuary was once a vast semiarid region, filling with water during the monsoon season but drying up afterwards. To prevent this, the maharaja of Bharatpur diverted water from a nearby irrigation canal and soon birds began to settle in vast numbers.

Yet in a 2006 report, Unesco urged that a permanent backup source of water for the park be established, as drought (along with unchecked cattle grazing) had caused serious damage. The previous year, a government attempt to divert water from the nearby Panchana dam came up against strong opposition from local villagers.

Admission entitles you to one entrance per day; if you want to spend the day inside, get your hotel to provide a packed lunch. Carry drinking water, as bird-watching is thirsty work.

One narrow road (no motorised vehicles permitted) runs through the park, with countless embankments leading off into the greenery. Only the government-authorised cycle-rickshaws (recognisable by the yellow plate bolted onto the front) are allowed inside. You don't pay admission for the drivers, but they charge Rs 100 per hour. A guide costs Rs 150 per hour.

An excellent way to see the park is to hire a bike (around Rs 40 per day), either at the entrance or from your hotel.

Built by Suraj Mahl in the mid-18th century as a summer resort for the Bharatpur rulers, Deeg was also the second capital of Bharatpur state. The town held a famous battle in which the maharaja's forces withstood a combined Mughal and Maratha army of 80,000 men.

Deeg is now famous for the Suraj Mahl's Palace (Gopal Bhavan; admission Rs 100; 10am-5pm Sat-Thu), one of India's most beautiful and delicately proportioned buildings. It is splendidly preserved and feels like a time capsule – it was used by the maharajas until the early 1970s, and rooms contain their original furnishings, from faded, spilling sofas to huge swing fans. Built in a combination of Rajput and Mughal architectural styles, the 18th-century palace fronts a large tank (reservoir), the Gopal Sagar, and is flanked by two exquisite pavilions. Outside, the gardens continue the extravagant theme, with monsoon pavilions engineered to mimic the sound of thunder when it rains. The Keshav Bhavan (Summer Pavilion) has hundreds of fountains, which are turned on for local festivals, when paint is used to colour the water. The fountains are worked by hand – plugs are pulled from a rooftop reservoir, creating the water pressure that powers the fountains.

Deeg's massive walls (up to 28m high) and 12 vast bastions, some with their cannons still in place, are also worth exploring – you can walk up to the top of the walls from the palace.

Frequent buses run to/from Alwar (Rs 30, 2½ hours) and Bharatpur (Rs 15, one hour, half-hourly). There is one direct bus to Agra (Rs 50).

☎ 0144 / pop 260,245

Dusty Alwar has a fine palace and some colourful bazaars. It was once an important Rajput state, emerging in the 18th century under Pratap Singh, who pushed back the rulers of Jaipur to the south and the Jats of Bharatpur to the east, and who successfully resisted the Marathas. It was one of the first Rajput states to ally itself with the fledgling British empire, although British interference in Alwar's internal affairs meant that this partnership was not always amicable.

It's the nearest town to Sariska Reserve.

Sights & Activities

BALA QUILA

This imposing fort, with its 5km of ramparts, stands 300m above the city, its walls clinging to the steep incline. Predating the time of Pratap Singh, it's one of the few forts in Rajasthan built before the rise of the Mughals. Unfortunately, the fort now houses a radio transmitter station and can only be visited with permission from the superintendent of police (SP). However, this is easy to get – just ask at the SP office in the City Palace complex.

CITY PALACE COMPLEX

Below the fort sprawls the delicately coloured, complicated City Palace complex, its massive gates and tank lined by a beautifully symmetrical chain of ghats (steps or landings on a river) and pavilions. There's an interesting government museum (admission Rs 3, free Mon; 10am-5pm Sat-Thu) hidden away in the former City Palace. The museum's exhibits evoke the extravagance of the maharajas' lifestyle, with stunning weapons, royal ivory slippers, miniatures and old musical instruments.

Sleeping & Eating

Several hotels, owned by brothers, ring a central courtyard set back from Manu Marg, about 500m east of the bus stand.

Ashoka (2346780; off Manu Marg; s/d from Rs 250/300) Offers good rooms, some of which have been freshly painted. The cheaper rooms are less appealing; the priciest have groovy geometric murals and freshly tiled bathrooms.

Alwar Hotel (2700012; 26 Manu Marg; s/d Rs 400/700, with AC Rs 800/1000;) Helpful staff run this place, with spacious, snazzy rooms set in leafy grounds. There's a good restaurant, and you can eat in the garden.

Neemrana Fort Palace (246007; www.neemranahotels.com; s/d Rs 1100/2200;) If you have your own transport, treat yourself and stay 75km north of Alwar in this magnificent parchment-coloured fort-palace mounted on a fortified plateau. The fort rises an amazing 10 levels and is in a setting of 25 acres, among the Aravalli hills.

Prem Pavitra Bhojnalaya (Old Bus Stand; dishes Rs 20-80) Alwar's best restaurant is in the heart of the old town (though there's also another branch) and serves up fresh, tasty pure-veg food.

Getting There & Away

From Alwar there are buses to Sariska (local/express Rs 12/14, 1½/one hours, half-hourly from 5.15am to 8.30pm), which go on to Jaipur (Rs 68/73, four/five hours). There are also frequent (bumpy) services to Bharatpur (Rs 43, four hours), and Deeg (Rs 27, 2½ hours). Buses to Delhi (Rs 81, half hourly) travel via either Tijara (four hours to Delhi) or Ramgarh (five hours to Dehli).

For train travel, the Shatabdi (Nos 2015/6) passes through Alwar. It departs for Ajmer (chair Rs 440, four hours) at 8.35am and stops at Jaipur (chair Rs 315, two hours) at 10.40am. For Delhi it departs at 7.28pm (chair/1st class Rs 350/670, 2½ hours).

The Mandore Express leaves at 11.43pm, arriving in Jodhpur (sleeper/3AC Rs 226/578, 465km) at 8am. The Jaisalmer Express, leaving at 8.50pm, goes all the way to Jaisalmer (sleeper/3AC Rs 251/705, 16 hours, 759km).

A return taxi to Sariska Reserve & National Park (with a stop at Siliserh) will cost you around Rs 750.

SARISKA RESERVE & NATIONAL PARK

Lying in a wooded valley, a tangle of greenery against red clay, Sariska Reserve & National Park (Indian/foreigner Rs 25/200, jeep Rs 125, video Rs 200; 7am-4pm Oct-Mar, 6am-4.30pm Apr-Sep) has been at the centre of controversy since 2005 when the WWF produced a damning report that suggested that the tigers had been poached – a sad indictment of Project Tiger (who've been in charge here since 1979) and the sanctuary.

The sanctuary is still worth visiting though – the 800 sq km (including a core area of 498 sq km) is home to sambars (deer), chitals (spotted deer), wild boars and lots of birdlife. It also has some fascinating, beautiful sights within and around its boundaries, including the spectacular hilltop Kankwari Fort (22km from the Forest Reception Office), and Bhangarh, a deserted, well-preserved 17th-century city that's famously haunted. If you take a longer tour then you can ask to visit one of these sights, or Bhangarh can be reached by a bus that runs through the sanctuary to nearby Golaka village (Rs 25).

However, without the big draw of the tigers, safaris here are overpriced, and the park's popularity with tourists is suffering.

Unlike most national parks, Sariska opens year-round, although the best time to spot wildlife is November to March. You'll see most wildlife in the evening.

It's possible to go by private car into the park, but these are only allowed on sealed roads. The best way is to visit is by jeep. Diesel/petrol jeeps cost Rs 800/1000 for three hours, or Rs 1700/2000 for a full day, and take a maximum

TIGER TROUBLE

It's unofficially official – there are no tigers left in Sariska reserve.

In one of India's worst-kept environmental secrets, the tiger population at one of the country's leading wildlife reserves has been eliminated due to organised poaching and apparent mismanagement. Project Tiger, the body in charge of tiger protection in India since 1979, has come under serious criticism in the media, though it maintains that the government did not adequately compensate local farmers for their loss of land.

In September 2006, in an effort to ease pressure on existing wildlife, steps were taken to relocate (and compensate) 15 entire villages situated within Sariska's boundaries. A month earlier, in a belated bid to monitor traffic inside the park, the state government banned entry to pilgrims wishing to visit the ancient temple of Neelkantheshwar.

Sadly though, it seems the fate of the big cats lay in the black market. Tiger parts are highly valued for their use in Chinese medicine – tiger claws are used to treat insomnia and tiger fat to combat rheumatism – and a dead tiger can fetch up to US$40,000. Even the gruesome prospect of tiger farming has been suggested as a way to combat this highly profitable illicit trade.

The recent arrest of notorious smuggler Sansar Chand and murmurs of an increased military presence within India's nature reserves has critics holding their breath. So too does a proposed breeding program in conjunction with Rajasthan's last tiger stomping ground, Ranthambore National Park. But as Ranthambore itself is struggling to properly maintain tiger numbers, and similar political rhetoric has in the past failed to address the problem, any assurances that the animal will return in force to this state are met with reluctant scepticism.

of five people. Bookings can be made at the Forest Reception Office (☎ 2841333). Note that you'll also have to pay an admission charge for the jeep. The park is free for Indians visiting the Hanuman temple on Tuesdays and Saturdays (8am to 3pm), but this policy is under review. Chances are it will still be busy on these days.

RTDC Hotel Tiger Den (☎ 2841342; dm Rs 50, s/d from Rs 600/700; ❄) is in a quasi-Soviet block, but is backed by a green, rambling garden. Rooms are drab, but have balconies. Bring a mosquito net or repellent.

Sariska Tiger Heaven (☎ 224815; r with/without Rs 1800/1500; ❄) is an isolated place about 5km west of the bus stop; it offers free pick-up. Rooms have big beds and windowed alcoves, and are set in five acres of peaceful grounds. It's a tranquil, if overpriced place, to stay. It arranges jeeps and guides to the park.

There are frequent buses from Alwar (local/express Rs 12/14, 1½/one hour, at least hourly); these head on to Jaipur (local/express Rs 55/65). Buses stop in front of the Forest Reception Office.

Shekhawati is a semiarid dreamscape of dazzling fields, fluttering fabrics and open-air picture galleries. A short skip from Jaipur, the region is crisscrossed by narrow near-country roads that lead to half-forgotten villages and wholly hidden havelis. Each stop on the hop-along highways offers secret treasures (some slowly sinking in the sand) lacquered in rich and varied hues.

Shekhawati was formerly a wealthy but lawless land on the trade route between the ports of the Arabian Sea and the fertile Ganges Valley. The Shekhawat thakurs (noblemen), who once were noted for their indulgence in quarrelling among themselves, began to flourish in the mid-18th-century British East India Company when merchants imposed some semblance of order. A century later the British used the skills of local merchants or Marwaris (they'd long since left Marwar, today's Jodhpur) to improve trade. While the Marwaris settled in the new coastal cities, they built havelis for their families back home.

Until 1947 these mansions were symbols of their success and homes in which their families could live the good life; these days they remain one of Rajasthan's better-kept secrets.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Access to Shekhawati is easiest from Jaipur or Bikaner. Sikar (gateway to the region, but with no notable havelis) and Fatehpur are on the main Jaipur–Bikaner road. The last bus from Mandawa to Bikaner (3½ hours, eight daily) leaves at 4.15pm.

Churu is on the main Delhi–Bikaner railway line, while Sikar, Nawalgarh and Jhunjhunu have passenger-train links with Jaipur and Delhi.

GETTING AROUND

The Shekhawati region is crisscrossed by narrow bitumen roads, and towns are well served by government or private buses. However, north–south roads are usually far smoother than those running east–west.

The local services to the smaller towns can get crowded and riding 'upper class' (on the roof!) is acceptable – and often necessary.

A great option is to hire a taxi (or even an autorickshaw) to tour the area. Prices start from about Rs 900 per day.

Ramgarh

The town of Ramgarh was founded in 1791 by the powerful Poddar merchant family, who had left the village of Churu following a disagreement with the thakur. Ramgarh boomed in the mid-19th century and was one of the richest towns of the area.

Ram Gopal Poddar Chhatri, near the bus stand, has brilliantly coloured paintings inside its dome. The Poddar Havelis, near Churu Gate, are also densely frescoed, with subjects ranging from soldiers to fish.

Fatehpur

Established in 1451 as a capital for Muslim nawabs (ruling princes), Fatehpur was taken over by the Shekhawati Rajputs in the 18th century. It's a busy little town, with masses of havelis, many of which are in a sad state of disrepair.

Haveli Nadine Prince (☎ 01571-231479; www.cultural-centre.com; adult/child Rs 100/50; 9am-6pm) has been brightly restored to its former glory. The 1802 building is owned by French artist Nadine Le Prince, who has turned it into a gallery and cultural centre and has done much to publicise the plight of Shekhawati. Long-term artist residencies are available. The Art Café (dishes Rs 25-80) has appealing snacks.

Some other Fatehpur highlights are Mahavir Prasad Goenka Haveli (often locked, but with superb paintings); Geori Shankar Haveli, with mirrored mosaics on the antechamber ceiling; Nand Lal Devra Haveli, with red and blue paintings; Harikrishnan Das Sarogi Haveli, with a colourful façade and iron lacework; and Vishnunath Keria Haveli, which depicts Radha and Krishna in flying gondolas.

Fatehpur makes a convenient base for visits to nearby Ramgarh and Mahansar, but accommodation here is woeful. RTDC Hotel Haveli (☎ 01571-230293; dm Rs 60, s/d from Rs 250/350, with AC Rs 650/750;) is the best of a bad bunch. Rooms are nothing special but it's friendly, and has the requisite gloomy dining hall and reasonable food (dishes Rs 10 to 75). It's about 500m south of the bus stand.

Mandawa

Mandawa is the preferred base for travellers to Shekhawati. Settled in the 18th century and fortified by the dominant merchant families, it remains a lovely, subdued little market town, though the infrastructure is starting to stretch, and touts are starting to hover.

Binsidhar Newatia Haveli (now the State Bank of Bikaner & Jaipur premises) has curious paintings on its outer eastern wall – a boy using a telephone, a European woman in a chauffeur-driven car, and the Wright brothers attempting flight. The Gulab Rai Ladia Haveli, southwest of the fort, has some defaced erotic images. The unused half of Castle Mandawa has some interesting frescoes. There are also some fine baoris scattered around town.

Hotel Shekhawati (☎ 223036; hotelshekwati@sify.com; near Mukungarh Rd; r Rs 300-700;) is a budget option run by a retired bank manager and his hard-working son (who's also a registered tourist guide). Bright murals give the pleasant, clean rooms a welcome splash of colour, and tasty meals are served on the peaceful rooftop. Confirm your exact check-out time.

AN OUTDOOR GALLERY

Most havelis (traditional, ornately decorated residences) are entered through an archway into an outer courtyard where there is often a meeting room, complete with punkahs (cloth fans swung by pulling a cord), where the men may do business; opposite is a stable and coach house. Another arch leads via a dogleg passage (to ensure privacy) to one or more inner courtyards – the private domain of the family and run by the women. Galleries around the upper floors provide access to the often small individual rooms, and there is usually a roof terrace. This is a common arrangement far outside Shekhawati, where it serves male-dominated families and sets a premium on female privacy. Together with the thick walls, it provides deep shade to cool the inner rooms, a necessity in this sun-scorched land.

But the unique feature of the Shekhawatis havelis is their painted decorations. The artists belonged to the caste of kumhars (potters), and were both the builders and painters, and they used the fresco technique (applying natural pigment to the wet top layer of plaster) to remarkable effect. (After about 1900 the artists began to paint on to dry plaster instead, allowing greater intricacy but losing the original urgency of the work.) The outside walls, particularly around the entrance, the outer and inner courtyards and sometimes some of the rooms are painted from the ground to the eaves. Typically the paintings mix depictions of the gods and their mythical lives with everyday scenes, often featuring modern inventions such as telephones, trains and aeroplanes, which were painted by artists who had never seen them. The two worlds often merge, so Krishna and Radha are seen in flying motorcars.

Some havelis are officially open, but most are inhabited by the remnants of the families who built them, or caretakers. Take your chance: stand close by and look hopeful. You will often be invited in, either freely or for a small tip. Photography is generally allowed.

One detrimental aspect of the tourist trade is the desire for antiques. A few towns have antique shops chock-a-block with items ripped from the havelis, particularly doors and window frames. Investing in these antiques perpetuates this desecration.

RAJASTHAN

Hotel Rath Mandawa (☎ 223892; hotelrath@rediffmail.com; Dhigal Rd; r Rs 1200-1800; 🏊), a red-washed building on the outskirts of Mandawa, has beautifully decorated rooms at much cheaper prices than in town. The swimming pool, still under construction at the time of research, looks promising, and the orange orchard and adjoining gardens are most inviting. Management is keen to please.

Near the main bus stand is Hotel Heritage Mandawa (☎ 223742; www.hotelheritagemandawa.com; r Rs 1200-1750, ste Rs 3200), an attractive old haveli with a mixture of rooms, some gloomy and jarringly decorated, others more stylish. The courtyard is a godsend.

Opposite the main bus stand, Singhasan Haveli (☎ 223137; www.singhasanhaveli.com; Goenka Chowk; r without AC Rs 1200, with AC Rs 2300, ste Rs 4000; ❄) is a very smart, meticulously run hotel with bright, slightly gaudy rooms, and a touristy, though memorable, sand-dunes dinner. The memorial hall is kaleidoscopic.

Close to Sonathia Gate, Hotel Mandawa Haveli (☎ 223088; r Rs 2200-3250) is in a glorious 19th-century restored haveli where rooms surround a painted courtyard. It's worth splashing out on a romantic suite filled with arches, window seats and countless small windows.

Hotel Castle Mandawa (☎ 223124; www.castlemandawa.com; s/d Rs 2550/3250) is Mandawa's big hotel. Located in a converted castle, the hotel's building is fantastic (and easy to get lost in), but the rooms are overrated and staff can be difficult to rouse. The same group also runs Hotel Mandawa Desert Resort (☎ 223123; r Rs 2800-5500, ste Rs 8000-13000; ❄ 💻 🏊), built atop a magnificent sand dune with a striking vista of the desert. The service again is a bit shabby and some rooms need rewiring, but it's still ideal for those hot velvet nights.

Bungli Restaurant (☎ 200084; Goenka Chowk; dishes Rs 50-150) is a popular travellers' eatery near the main bus stand that serves fantastic, piping-hot tandoori and very cold beer. Service can be a little slow though, and bugs here tend to bite.

Restaurant Pawaana (☎ 223223; Main Market; mains Rs 60-200) is a timely new venture hidden behind high walls and set around a spotlit courtyard. The traditional Rajasthani food is excellent, and the bustling street noise makes a welcome soundtrack.

Nawalgarh

This is another great base, with quietly humming streets leading out from the banyan-shaded centre. The town has been disfigured somewhat by modern additions, but it still retains a genuine charm, especially in and around the 250-year-old fort. Havelis of interest include the Aath Haveli, Hem Raj Kulwal Haveli, Bhagton-ki-Haveli and Khedwal Bhavan.

The Dr Ramnath A Podar Haveli Museum (admission Rs 75; 8am-6pm), built in the 1920s on the eastern side of town, has been colourfully restored, and has vibrant murals and displays on Rajasthani culture.

All hotels can arrange bike hire, treks, tours and lessons in Hindi and music.

Near Maur Hospital, Ramesh Jangid's Tourist Pension (01594-224060; s/d Rs 350/450), now run by genial Rajesh, Ramesh's son, offers homy, clean accommodation in spacious rooms with big beds. It's a real family atmosphere, and scrumptious meals made with organic ingredients are available (vegetable thalis Rs 70).

Four kilometres east of the bus stand is Shekhawati Guest House (2224658; s/d Rs 400/600;), a splendid choice run by a friendly Rajput couple, Kalpana and Gajendra Singh. They have six beautifully decorated bargain rooms with private bathrooms and hot showers. A fantastic organic garden keeps up the town's ecotrend.

Apani Dhani (01594-222239; www.apanidhani.com; s/d Rs 700/950) is a ground-breaking, award-winning ecological resort, as well as a wonderfully relaxing place to stay. Rooms are in traditional, cosy mud huts with comfortable beds, set around a bougainvillea-shaded courtyard. The adjoining organic farm supplies delicious ingredients for meals, and alternative energy is used wherever possible. It's near the TV tower on the west side of the Jaipur road. Multilingual Ramesh Jangid runs the show, and is also president of Les Amis du Shekhawati, an organisation aiming to preserve the havelis.

About 1km north of the fort is Roop Niwas Palace (01594-222008; s/d Rs 1700/1900;), a converted palace with a back-to-the-Raj feel, lovely grand grounds and old-fashioned rooms.

Lohargal

Situated 30km southwest of Nawalgarh, the sacred hillside town of Lohargal is a dramatic and worthwhile detour. When the Pandawas won the battle of Mahabharata, they took a dip in the holy waters, only to see their weapons disintegrated, though they remained unharmed (Lohargal literally means 'That Which Melts Iron'). It doesn't seem to stop the pilgrims from diving in – a supposedly perennial holy stream trickles from the Aravalli hills and into the town's lake, Suraj Kund. Lohargal is raucous on weekends, but tourists are rare. Lohargal is also famous for chachar pickle, the wincingly sour Indian condiment.

There are six beautiful temples within hiking distance of Lohargal, including Malket, Barkhandi and Gyan Bawari. The nearest bus station to Lohargal is at Golyana (5km); from there you'll need a driver, or a map, or both.

Parsurampura

This little village, 20km southeast of Nawalgarh, has some of the best-preserved and oldest paintings in Shekhawati. The detailed paintings inside the Chhatri of Thakur Sardul Singh dome date from the mid-18th century. There is also the Shamji Sharaf Haveli, decorated with a mixture of Hindu gods and Europeans, and the small Gopinathji Mandir, a finely painted temple constructed in 1742 by Sardul Singh.

Jhunjhunu

Shekhawati's district headquarters, Jhunjhunu is bigger and busier than other places in the region. Founded by the Kaimkhani nawabs in the mid-15th century, it was taken over by the Rajput ruler Sardul Singh in 1730.

It was in Jhunjhunu that the British based their Shekhawati Brigade, a troop formed in the 1830s to try to halt the activities of the dacoits (bandits), who were largely local petty rulers who were also adept at thieving.

The Tourist Reception Centre (232909; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) is just out of the town centre, at the Churu bypass, but staff are out of the loop.

SIGHTS & ACTIVITIES

The Khetri Mahal is a minor palace dating from around 1770. Although run-down, it's one of Shekhawati's most sophisticated buildings, with sensational views. The Bihariji Temple is from a similar period and contains some fine, though worn, murals.

Jhunjhunu is famous for the huge, wealthy, multilayered Rani Sati Temple – it's dedicated to the patron goddess of the merchant class, a woman who committed sati (ritual suicide of a widow on her husband's funeral pyre) in 1595.

The frescoed Modi Havelis and the Kaniram Narsinghdas Tibrewala Haveli are both in the main bazaar.

SLEEPING & EATING

Hotel Shekhawati Heritage (☎ 237134; Station Rd; shekhawati_heritage@yahoo.com; s/d Rs 400/500) Near Hotel Sangam, this place with kindly management is a quiet achiever. The bright rooms are well decorated and have leafy outlooks.

Hotel Shiv Shekhawati (☎ 01592-232651; www.shivshekhawati.com; d Rs 400-800;) This hotel, east of the centre, is a modern place around a central inner courtyard. It has squeaky-clean, plain rooms.

Hotel Fresco Palace (☎ 395233; Station Rd; fresco_palace@yahoo.com; r Rs 500/800) This smart choice next door to Hotel Shekhawati Heritage represents great value, with a range of spotless, colourful rooms and a delightful manager.

Hotel Jamuna Resort (☎ 232871; s/d Rs 600/700, with AC from Rs 1000/1200;) This charming, welcoming place, perched on a hilltop overlooking the eastern edge of town, is popular with Delhi residents. Run by Laxmi Kant Jangid (who also runs Shiv Shekhawati), it has rooms decorated with paintings, a sizable pool and serene garden. You can stay here for free if you study painting and help with the decorative upkeep. It also runs cookery packages that include field visits (around €1000 for two weeks).

Mahansar

This quaint, slow-moving, untouristy village contains the mid-19th-century, haveli-like Raghunath Temple, the gold paintings of Sonaki-Dukan Haveli (admission Rs 100) and the Sahaj Ram Poddar Chhatri. Mahansar is also famous for a homemade liquor that resembles Greek ouzo.

Narayan Niwas Castle (☎ 01595-264322; r Rs 600-900), in the old fort, dates from 1768 and feels evocatively uncommercial. Rooms are dusty but atmospheric, some with paintings covering the walls. The food gets excellent reports and the hotel offers local guides.

Hotel Surajgarh Fort (☎ 25889516; www.surajgarh.com; s/d from Rs 2000) is a good-value midrange place 20km southeast of Pilani, an interesting university town and home of the industrial giants Birla.

Jagged, pale blue hills hide the calm waters of Ana Sagar and the bustling, friendly Muslim pilgrimage city of Ajmer. Due largely to the pull of Pushkar, the fascinating shrine of Khwaja Muin-ud-din Chishti is, sadly, overlooked by most foreign visitors to Rajasthan.

Sacked by Mohammed of Ghori on one of his periodic forays from Afghanistan, and later favoured by the mighty Mughals, Ajmer once had considerable strategic importance. One of the first contacts between the Mughals and the British occurred in Ajmer, when Sir Thomas Roe met Jehangir here in 1616. Later the Scindias took the city, and in 1818 it was handed over to the British, becoming one of the few places in Rajasthan that they directly controlled.

The British set up Mayo College here in 1875, a prestigious school on sprawling grounds, exclusively for the Indian nobility. Today it's open to all boys (whose parents can afford the fees).

Sights & Activities

ANA SAGAR

This large lake, created in the 12th century by damming the River Luni, is set against a blue grey hilly spine that merges into its surface. On its bank are two delightful parks, Dault Bagh and Subash Bagh, containing a series of marble pavilions erected in 1637 by Shah Jahan. There are good views back towards Ajmer from the hill beside the Dault Bagh, particularly just before sunset. Pedalos and motorboats can be hired from the Fun N Joy Boat Club at the edge of the lake.

DARGAH

Located in the old part of town, this is one of India's most important Muslim pilgrimage sites. The dargah (5am-9pm Jul-Mar, 4am-9pm Apr-Jun, closed for services 3-4pm & 2.30-3.30pm Thu) is the tomb of a Sufi saint, Khwaja Muin-ud-din Chishti, who came to Ajmer from Persia in 1192 and lived here until 1233. Construction of the shrine was completed by Humayun and the gate was added by the nizam (ruler of Hyderabad). Akbar used to make the pilgrimage to the dargah from Agra every year.

You must cover your head in certain areas, so don't forget a scarf or cap – you can buy one in the bazaar leading to the shrine.

The first gate is the Nizam Gate, up some steps to protect it from the rains; it was built in 1915. The green and white mosque, Akbari Masjid, on the right was constructed by Akbar in 1571.

In the second courtyard is a mosque built by Shah Jahan. Beyond this, in the inner courtyard, the large iron cauldrons (one donated by Akbar in 1567, the other by Jehangir in 1631) are for offerings for the poor, and are called the degs.

The saint's tomb is in the inner courtyard. It has a marble dome and the tomb inside is surrounded by a silver platform. Pilgrims believe that the saint's spirit will intercede in matters on their behalf, so the notes and holy string attached to the railings are often personal requests.

At the entrance khadims (servants of god) wielding donation books will ask you for cash (there are 4000 khadims in Ajmer!). It's likely you'll be asked for still more money inside, where you might be blessed with the edge of the tomb blanket. It's good to visit in the evening, when there are Qawwali (rhymed Urdu devotional singing with musical accompaniment) singers and it's decorated in twinkling lights.

Pilgrims and Sufis come from all over the world on the anniversary of the saint's death, the Urs, in the seventh month of the lunar calendar. The saint retired to his cloister for a long meditation, and when it was opened six days later he was dead (hence the festival lasts six days). It's an interesting time but the crowds can be suffocating. Many pilgrims also come here in the month of Ramadan.

ADHAI-DIN-KA-JHONPRA & TARAGARH

Beyond the Dargah, on the town's outskirts, are the extraordinary ruins of the Adhai-din-ka-Jhonpra (Two-and-a-Half Days) mosque. According to legend, its construction in 1153 took 2½ days. Others say it was named after a festival lasting 2½ days. It was built as a Sanskrit college, but in 1198 Mohammed of Ghori seized Ajmer and converted the building into a mosque by adding a seven-arched wall in front of the pillared hall.

It's a gramd piece of architecture with soaring domes, pillars and arched screens, largely built from pieces of Jain and Hindu temples.

About 3km from the town and a steep 1½-hour climb beyond the mosque, the ancient Taragarh (Star Fort; admission free; dawn-dusk) commands a superb view over the city; it's also accessible by car. It was built by Ajaipal Chauhan, the town's founder, and saw lots of military action during Mughal times. It was later used as a British sanatorium.

AKBAR'S PALACE

Akbar built this imposing palace in 1570 – partly as a pleasure retreat, but mainly to keep an eye on pesky local chiefs. It houses the government museum (admission Rs 3, free Mon, camera/video Indian Rs 5/10, foreigner Rs 10/20; 10am-4.30pm Sat-Thu), which has a small collection of stone sculptures, weapons and miniature paintings.

NASIYAN (RED) TEMPLE

The Jain Red Temple (Prithviraj Marg; admission Rs 3; 8.30am-5.30pm, to 5pm winter) is amazing. Its double-storey hall is filled with golden models depicting the Jain concept of the ancient world, with 13 continents and oceans, the golden city of Ajodhya and flying-swan and flying-elephant gondolas.

Sleeping

Bhola Hotel (☎ 2432844; Prithviraj Marg; d Rs 250) Southeast of Agra Gate, this friendly hotel has five nondescript but clean and comfortable rooms. Tasty thalis cost Rs 50.

Haveli Heritage Inn (☎ 2621607; Kutchery Rd; r Rs 400-1000) Set in a 100-year-old haveli, this is a good choice in the city centre. Though the high-ceilinged rooms are large, they're a bit run-down and the bathrooms look tired. Still, there's a pleasant, grassy courtyard and a warm, family atmosphere, complete with yummy home-cooked meals.

Hotel Ajmeru (☎ 2431103; www.ajmeru.com; Khailand Market; s/d from Rs 450/550, with AC Rs 800/1100;) Five-hundred metres from the train station, this colourful, renovated hotel has brightly furnished rooms.

Hotel Omni Palace (☎ 2428503; Jaipur Rd; r Rs 800-1500) This modern place is professionally run, and offers the usual three-star spin (though the beds are more like four star!). The suite rooms are spacious, and the standard rooms represent good value.

Badnor House (☎ 2627579; Civil Lines; d incl breakfast Rs 1800) This provides a welcome opportunity to stay with a delightful Indian family. The erudite hosts are well informed about Ajmer and beyond (Sonny is a travel writer) and their down-to-earth hospitality includes self-contained living quarters with luxurious a double bed and a private courtyard.

Mansingh Palace (☎ 2425956; Circular Rd; s/d Rs 3000/4000) Overlooking Ana Sagar, Mansingh Palace is Ajmer's only top-end hotel. It's a modern place, rather out of the way, but has attractive, comfortable rooms, some with views and balconies. There's a pleasant garden, bar and restaurant.

Mango Masala (Sadar Patel Marg; dishes Rs 25-100; 11am-11pm) With dim, barlike lighting and crèche-style décor, this is where Ajmer's hip crowd hangs out. There's an imaginative menu of pizzas, Chinese, and North and South Indian vegetarian food, and an attached sweet shop with cakes, ice cream and floats.

Madina Hotel (dishes around Rs 40) Opposite the train station, this simple, open-to-the-street eatery cooks up cheap veg and nonveg fare.

Elite Restaurant (Station Rd; thalis Rs 45) Next door to Honeydew, Elite has the town's top thali – and don't the locals know it!

Honeydew Restaurant (Station Rd; dishes Rs 40-180) This soothingly staid place has long been Ajmer's best, and it's still the restaurant of choice for Mayo College students' midterm treat. There's a good selection of veg and nonveg Indian, Chinese and Continental food.

There are no tourist quotas for many Ajmer trains, so book early; go to Booth 5 at the reservations office (🕑 8am-2pm & 2.15-8pm Mon-Sat, 8am-2pm Sun). Midway Tours & Travels (☎ 2628744; Station Rd; 🕑 8am-8pm) will prebook sleeper/upper-class berths for you for Rs 17/28.

Most trains stop here, as Ajmer is on the Delhi–Jaipur–Ahmedabad–Mumbai line. The Shatabdi (Nos 2016/5, Thursday to Tuesday) runs between Ajmer and Delhi (chair/executive class Rs 660/1250) via Jaipur (chair/executive class Rs 270/545). It leaves Delhi at 6.10am and arrives in Ajmer at 12.45pm. The other way, it leaves Ajmer at 3.50pm, arriving in Jaipur at 5.45pm and Delhi at 10.20pm. There's also the 2957 Rajdhani Express to Delhi, leaving Ajmer at 12.35am (1st/2nd class with AC Rs 910/1570, seven hours).

The Delhi–Ahmedabad Mail (Nos 9105/6), departs Ajmer at 8.28pm and arrives in Delhi at 5.20am (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 200/531/753, 442km). Heading for Gujarat, the train leaves Ajmer at 7.40am and arrives in Ahmedabad at 5.30pm (2nd class Rs 215, 492km).

Getting Around

There are plenty of autorickshaws (anywhere in town should cost around Rs 25) as well as cycle-rickshaws and tongas (two-wheeled horse carriages).

PUSHKAR

Brahma dropped a lotus flower on the earth – so say the epics – and Pushkar floated to the surface. This pond-sized Hindu pilgrimage town is a magical desert-edged place, with one of the world's few Brahma temples. Rows of sacred ghats front a mystically magnetic lake, where hundreds of milky-coloured temples and weather-touched domes sit beneath a shifting, pale grey sky.

Smooth operators abound though, as dodgy priests try to outwit pious pilgrims who are intoxicated by God or bhang (marijuana) but are either way enchanted by this much feted low-rent paradise. Try to play the part in Pushkar – no booze, meat, eggs or kissing – or risk offending what you came here to admire.

Puskhar is 11km from Ajmer, but is separated from it by the winding Nag Pahar (Snake Mountain).

Orientation & Information

The town clusters around Pushkar Lake, with a maze of streets spreading out from Sadar Bazaar Rd. It's small and tourist-friendly, and easy to find your way around. Cash and travellers cheques can be easily changed, and internet (around Rs 40 per hour) cafés are everywhere.

PUSHKAR PASSPORTS & PUSHY PRIESTS

Priests, some genuine, some not, will approach you near the ghats and offer to do a puja (prayer) for which you'll receive a 'Pushkar passport' (a red ribbon around the wrist). Others proffer flowers. In either case you'll be asked to tot up your family members – alive and dead – whose happiness is surely worth multiple Rs 100s. You could always try denying your family, or massively exaggerating their number to get a reduction on bulk purchase. However, you may choose to avoid encouraging these pushy, unprincipled 'priests' altogether – they can become unpleasantly aggressive. At least don't be bullied and agree on a price beforehand.

On the other hand, you can head to the Brahma Temple, where there are simply donation boxes. Here you can offer flowers and sacred sweets for the happiness of friends, family, everyone you've ever known – and still have change for a masala chai (spiced tea).

Post office (Sadar Bazaar Rd; 9.30am-5pm)
State Bank of Bikaner & Jaipur (Sadar Bazaar Rd; 2772006; 10am-4pm Mon-Fri, 10am-12.30pm Sat) Changes travellers cheques and currency, but is slow.
Tourist Information Centre (2772040; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat, closed 2nd & 4th Sat of month) In the grounds of Hotel Sarovar; gives out a free map.

Sights

TEMPLES

Pushkar has hundreds of temples, though few are particularly ancient, as they were mostly desecrated by Aurangzeb and rebuilt. Most famous is the Brahma Temple (Sadar Marg; dawn-dusk), said to be one of the few such temples in the world. Apparently Brahma wanted to perform a yagna (self-mortification) at the lake, and when his wife Savitri didn't attend, he married another woman on a whim. Savitri, understandably annoyed, vowed that Brahma would not be worshipped anywhere else. It's marked by a red spire, and over the entrance gateway is the hans (goose symbol) of Brahma.

The one-hour trek up to the hilltop Savitri Temple (dawn-dusk) overlooking the lake is best made before dawn, though the views are fantastic at any time of day. The views from the closer Pap Mochani Temple (dawn-dusk), known as Gayatri Temple to locals, reached by a track behind the Marwar bus stand, are also worth the climb.

Approximately 8km southwest of the town (past the turn-off to Savitri Temple) are a collection of Shiva temples. They make for a great trip by motorbike (or bike if you're fit and start early in the day) through the peaceful hills and quiet villages. Be warned – the track is hilly and rocky. Another Shiva temple is about 8km north, tucked down inside a cave.

GHATS

The lake is surrounded by 52 bathing ghats, where pilgrims bathe in the sacred waters. Some have particular importance: Vishnu appeared at Varah Ghat in the form of a boar, Brahma bathed at Brahma Ghat, and Gandhi's ashes were sprinkled at Gandhi Ghat (formerly Gau Ghat). If you wish to join the pilgrims, do it with respect; remember, this is a holy place. Remove your shoes and don't smoke, kid around or take photographs.

Activities

CAMEL TREKS

For longer camel treks, Pushkar makes for a convenient starting point. Trips start at around Rs 500 per day, and head out to Jodhpur (six to seven days) and Jaisalmer (10 to 12 days). See p248 for general details about camel treks. Numerous operators line Panchkund Rd.

REFLEXOLOGY

Dr NS Mathur (2641185; Shri Raghu Nathji Temple; 10.30am-6.30pm) provides a toe-challenging reflexology session (Rs 150), which will certainly take your mind off the rest of your body. He also teaches reiki (courses I/II Rs 1000/2000).

Courses

MUSIC

The excellent Saraswati Music School (2773124; Mainon ka Chowk; 10am-10pm) teaches classical tabla, flute, singing and Kathak (dance). Birju, who's been playing for over 15 years, charges Rs 200 for two hours and, for an intensive bout, you can live in for Rs 100 to 250 a night. He often conducts evening performances (8pm or 9.30pm), and also sells instruments.

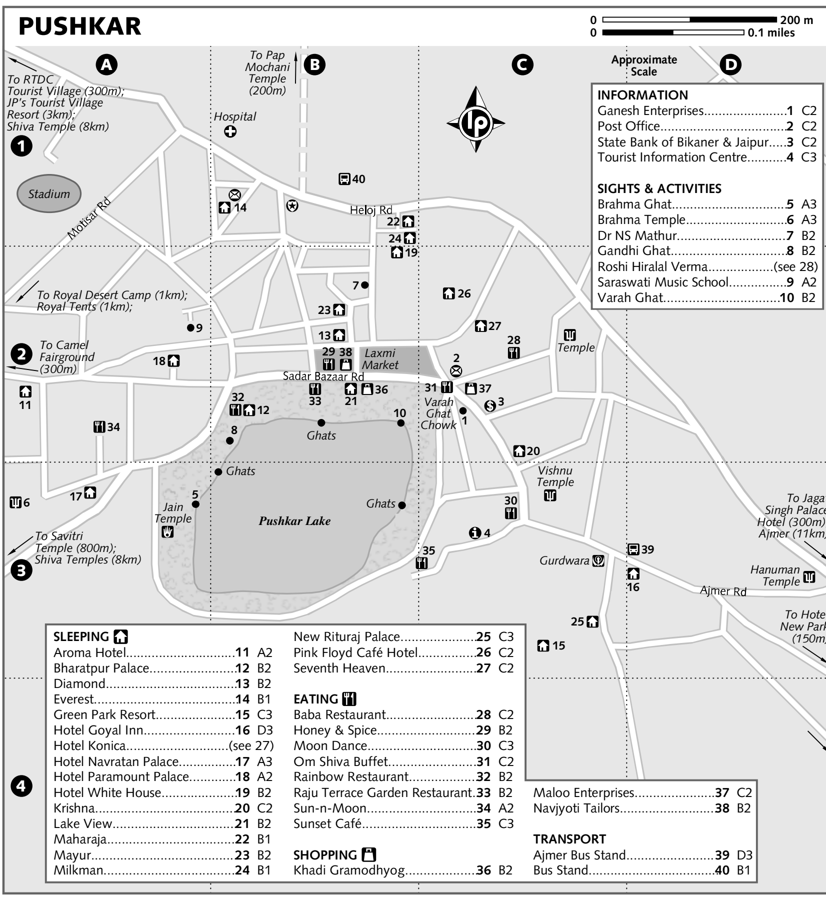
COOKING

The multitalented Deepa runs cooking and henna classes from behind her Ayurvedic shop, Bahar. She is also connected to the Saraswati Music School (☎ 2773124; Mainon Ka Chowk; ⏰ 10am-10pm).

YOGA & HEALING

For a fix of reiki, yoga and shiatsu, Reiki Master Roshi Hiralal Verma is based at Baba Restaurant (☎ 2772858). Prices are charged according to the duration and the nature of your session.

Similarly, Dr Kamel Pandey offers recommended yoga classes and naturopathic consultations. He's based at the Old Rangji Temple, and on Panchkund Rd.



Sleeping

Most Pushkar hotels are basic, clean and whitewashed, with lovely rooftops; there are a lot more budget options than midrange here. At the time of the Camel Fair, prices multiply five to 10 times; it's best to book ahead at this time.

BUDGET

PUSHKAR CAMEL FAIR

Come the month of Kartika, the eighth lunar month of the Hindu calendar and one of the holiest, Thar camel drivers spruce up their ships of the desert and start the long walk to Pushkar in time for Kartik Purnima (full moon). Each year around 200,000 people converge here, bringing with them some 50,000 camels and cattle. The place becomes an extraordinary swirl of colour, sound and movement, thronged with musicians, mystics, tourists, traders, animals and devotees. It's camel-grooming nirvana, with an incredible array of corn rows, anklets, embroidery and pompoms.

Trading begins a week before the official fair (a good time to see the serious business), but by the time the fair starts, business takes a back seat and the bizarre aspects of the fair jostle into life (musicians, snake charmers, children balancing on poles etc). Even the tourist board's cultural programme is bizarre: to whit, how many people can you balance on a camel? Or dancing on hot coals…

It's hard to believe, but this seething mass is all just a sideshow; Kartik Purnima is when Hindu pilgrims come to bathe in Pushkar's sacred waters. The religious event builds in tandem with the Camel Fair in a wild, magical crescendo of incense, chanting and processions to dousing day, the last night of the fair, when thousands of devotees wash away their sins and set candles afloat on the holy lake.

It's crowded, touristy, noisy (light sleepers bring earplugs) and tacky. Those affected by dust and/or animal hair should bring appropriate medication. However, it's a grand epic, and not to be missed if you're anywhere within camel-spitting distance. It usually takes place in November; check with the RTDC for this year's dates.

piece feels about as old as Brahma himself, but the rooftop views are still unsurpassed and the blue-and-white walls keep it feeling fresh. Interiors might be running down fast, but the proximity to the lake still makes it great value.

Pink Floyd Café & Hotel (☎ 2772317; Choti Basti; r Rs 100-350) Though its lyrical motto, Whatever You Need We Have, may be a tad presumptuous, this offbeat venue has basic but cheap rooms, all named after Pink Floyd albums, with a hip hard-core fan who runs the show. The rooftop 'bar' is one of the most congenial in Pushkar, filled with factory-line 1980s memorabilia. Movies are shown nightly at 8pm.

Aroma Hotel (☎ 2772729; www.aroma-hotel.com; Badi Basti; Kapaleshwar Rd; r Rs 100-500) Aroma is ideal for yogic shenanigans and other wholesome pursuits, with blindingly white and sparsely furnished rooms, a sunset-sucking rooftop, and a charismatically 'centred' owner.

Hotel Paramount Palace (☎ 2772428; d Rs 200-650) This place has fine views and a formidable reputation for value and service. At the time of research, not even major renovations could keep it quiet.

Hotel White House (☎ 2772147; hotelwhitehouse@hotmail.com; r Rs 250-650) This is a spotless place, with airy, somewhat cramped, rooms and fine views from the plant-filled rooftop restaurant. It's efficiently run by a tenaciously businesslike mother-and-son team. Book ahead or be shunted elsewhere.

Hotel Navratan Palace (☎ 2772981; s/d Rs 350/400; pool icon) This businesslike hotel has a world-class pool (nonguests Rs 100), but stagnant service and uninspiring rooms. Did we mention the pool?

Bharatpur Palace (☎ 2772320; Sadar Bazaar Rd; s/d from Rs 300/600) On the upper levels of the western ghats, this hotel is a good 'un, though management is oddly unaware. Room 1 is the best place to wake up – it's surrounded on three sides by the lake. Room 9 is also good, with three doors opening onto the lake.

Other good cheapies:

New Rituraj Palace (☎ 2772875; r Rs 80-100) Pleasant garden and good home-cooked food.

Mayur (☎ 2772302; mayurguesthouse@hotmail.com; s/d Rs 100/120) Courtyard, simple rooms and a cheerful welcome.

Milkman (☎ 2773452; vinodmilkman@hotmail.com; Mali Mohalta; s/d Rs 100/250) Backstreet, family house, peaceful rooftop.

Krishna (☎ 2772461; Sadar Bazaar Rd; r Rs 100-300) Elaborate building with simple rooms.

Everest (☎ 2773417; behind Head Post Office; r Rs 150-300) Clean and cheap.

CAMEL FAIR TOURIST VILLAGE

During the Camel Fair, the RTDC and many private operators set up a sea of tents near the fairground. It gets cold at night, so bring something warm. A torch (flashlight) may also be useful. You're advised to book ahead. Apart from the dorm tents, all the listed accommodation have private bathrooms.

RTDC Tourist Village (☎ 2772074; tents dm Rs 200-350, s Rs 2900-5800, d Rs 3200-6350, huts s Rs 3200-6350, d Rs 3450-6350) This option has stinky dorm and standard tents, and upmarket Swiss tents and deluxe huts. Meals are included in the price for all accommodation options except the dorm tents. Full payment must be received two months in advance.

Royal Desert Camp (☎ 2772957; tents US$125) This camp is further away from the fairground than Royal Tents, but is a good option. You can also book at Hotel Pushkar Palace (☎ 2772001).

Royal Tents (tents incl full board US$250) Owned by the maharaja of Jodhpur, these are the most luxurious (and most expensive) tents in the tourist village. Reservations should be made in advance at Jodhpur's Balsamand Palace (☎ 0291-2571991).

MIDRANGE

Several of these are a bit out of town.

Seventh Heaven (☎ 5105455; www.inn-seventh-heaven.com; Chotti Basti; r Rs 300-700, ste Rs 900-1500) This lovingly converted haveli is the perfect place to chill out, with traditionally crafted furniture (including swing chairs on the main court), galleries and a rooftop restaurant. The cool tiled rooms have gorgeously pretty individual touches, and blissfully comfy beds. Asana (Rs 1500) is one step closer to heaven, and Bagheera (Rs 900) isn't far behind. The rooftop restaurant has wonderful views and scrummy food. If full, the tiny Hotel Konica (rooms Rs 150 to 250) is in the same building.

Hotel New Park (☎ 2772464; Panch Kund Rd; s/d Rs 450/550, with AC Rs 650/750; ❄ 🏊) This quiet, modern place is ageing fast, but it still has country-fresh rooms with balconies overlooking an inviting pool, plus chrysanthemum gardens and a backdrop of hills.

Hotel Goyal Inn (☎ 2773991; Near Gurudwara, Ajmer Rd; s/d Rs 500/600, with AC Rs 1100/1500; ❄ 💻) On the way out of town, this slick hotel has all the mod cons, plus motivated staff, and a welcome noon check out.

JP's Tourist Village Resort (☎ 2772067; d Rs 750-1200; 🏊) About 3km out of town, JP's has atmospheric reed-roofed cottages with elaborate wooden furniture. In the shady gardens is a tree house (for the brave), a pint-sized pool and a restaurant.

Green Park Resort (☎ 2773532; www.greenparkresort.com Vaam Dev Rd; s/d Rs 1450/1600; ❄) This midrange place has 10 spiffy rooms with marble floors, solar heating and cable TV, and a rooftop restaurant. It's a 10-minute stroll to town through the Tuscanyesque meadows of Rose Valley.

Jagat Singh Palace Hotel (☎ 2772953; d low/high season Rs 2420/2970; ❄ 🏊) This heritage hotel is Pushkar's finest top-end option (although competition is scant). A new but traditional building, it has meekly romantic rooms, with carved wooden furniture, balconies and nice bathrooms, overlooking lush gardens and a gorgeous pool (Rs 250 for nonguests) with mountain views. Service can be rigid.

Eating

Pushkar has plenty of atmospheric restaurants, though hygiene standards are sometimes lacking. Strict vegetarianism, forbidding even eggs, limits ingredients; some cooks make up for this with imagination. Western-style dishes are hit and miss.

Sunset Café (dishes Rs 10-110; 🕑 7.30am-midnight) Right on the eastern ghats, this café has sublime lake views, but uninspiring food. The lakeshore setting is perfect at sunset.

Honey & Spice (Laxmi Market; dishes Rs 20-75) This has delicious homemade banana cakes (Rs 20), sandwiches (Rs 35), tofu salad (Rs 45) and tofu steak (Rs 75), and is run by a friendly couple who learned their skills in Europe. Oh, and the South Indian coffee (Rs 25) is the real deal.

Sun-n-Moon (dishes Rs 25-180) This neohippy haunt attracts all kinds for its exquisite Italian menu – preorder homemade gnocchi the morning before your dinner – and friendly management. The lovely courtyard surrounds a bodhi tree, a shrine and happy tortoises. Breakfast for the homesick includes hash browns and hot chocolate, while for others there are sustaining lassis and masala chai (spiced tea).

Raju Terrace Garden Restaurant (Sadar Bazaar Rd; dishes Rs 25-90) This long-standing rooftopper has fairy lights, potted plants and tremendous views, plus reasonable 'homesick food' such as baked potatoes and pizza. The Indian fare is middling though, and service is beyond relaxed.

Moon Dance (dishes Rs 25-140) Trust the energy in this twinkly garden restaurant. The Indian, Mexican and Italian food is ace.

Baba Restaurant (☎ 2772858; dishes Rs 30-70) Baba bakes a mean pizza, and this chilled streetside restaurant is pretty good value too.

Rainbow Restaurant (Sadar Bazaar Rd; mains Rs 35-110) Set on a small rooftop with a lovely view over the lake, and decorated with coloured light bulbs, the Rainbow hums with satisfied customers. The pasta is excellent, and the ice-cream sundaes overflow with sugary goodness. The hummus with fresh pita is pretty darn authentic.

Om Shiva Buffet (☎ 2772647; buffets Rs 50) The best of the all-you-can-eat merchants; it's relatively fresh and regularly busy.

Shopping

Pushkar's narrow trance-banging Sadar Bazaar is lined with absorbing little shops. Good buys include silver and costume jewellery, glass lamps, embroidery and wall hangings, CDs and Indo-Western clothes.

Much of the stock comes from the Barmer district south of Jaisalmer, and other tribal areas of Rajasthan. As Pushkar is a touristy place, you'll have to haggle. Bookshops in the main bazaar sell a tremendous range of secondhand novels, and they'll usually buy them back for around 50% of what you pay.

Pushkar is also a good place to get clothes made. One reliable place, with reasonable prices, is Navjyoti Tailors (Sadar Bazaar Rd). Also recommended is Maloo Enterprises (Varah Ghat Chowk), opposite the post office.

Khadi Gramodhyog (Sadar Bazaar Rd) is almost hidden on the main street. It's a fixed-price shop selling traditional hand-woven stuff – mainly men's shirts, plus scarves and shawls.

Getting There & Away

Buses for Ajmer leave from the road heading eastwards out of town; other buses leave from the station to the north. There are frequent buses to/from Ajmer (Rs 10/8). The difference is the road toll to Ajmer; for cars the toll is Rs 25.

Local travel agencies sell tickets for private buses – shop around. These buses generally leave from Ajmer, but the agencies should provide you with free connecting transport. Those that leave from Pushkar usually stop for an hour or more in Ajmer anyway. Be warned that some buses (particularly those via Jodhpur) don't go all the way; in spite of promises, they'll involve a change of bus and an extra fare. Destinations and fares include the following:

Destination	Fare (Rs)	Duration (hr)
Agra	non-AC/AC 165/265	9
Delhi	non-AC/AC 200/270	10½
Jaipur	100	4
Jaisalmer	280	10½
Jodhpur	107	5
Udaipur	150	8

For around Rs 50 some agencies will book train tickets for services out of Ajmer (including free transfer to Ajmer). See p192 for details of trains from Ajmer.

Getting Around

There are no autorickshaws, but it's a breeze to get around on foot. Another good option is to hire a bicycle (Rs 10/30 per hour/day) or a scooter/motorbike (Rs 200/350 per day). A wallah can carry your luggage on a hand-drawn cart to/from the bus stand for around Rs 15.

Infamous, spectacular Ranthambore National Park (Indian/foreigner Rs 25/200; ⏰ Oct-Jun) is 1334 sq km of wild jungle scrub hemmed in by rocky ridges. At its centre is the 10th-century Ranthambore Fort, and scattered nearby are ancient temples and mosques, crocodile-filled lakes, chhatris (cenotaphs) and hides. The park was a maharajas' hunting ground till 1970 – a curious 15 years after it had become a sanctuary.

Ranthambore is the only place to spot wild tigers in Rajasthan, but each year the odds are reduced by mismanagement and poaching. Project Tiger has been in charge of the animals' welfare since 1979, but the project's difficulties were thrown into sharp relief when government officials were again implicated in poaching in 2005. Getting an accurate figure on the number of tigers comes down to who you believe – an April 2006 report in the Indian journal Frontline estimated the figure to be as low as 15.

Aside from the enormous Ganesh mela (fair) every August, traffic into the park is highly restricted. Still, the remaining tigers are so used to being observed that they're not scared away by jeeps and canters (large, open-topped trucks seating 20); being sociable animals, they are even intrigued by visitors.

Seeing a tiger is just a matter of luck, but the park is also worth visiting for the scenery alone, particularly if you walk up to the fort. There are also more than 300 species of birds in the park.

Orientation

It's 10km from Sawai Madhopur to the first gate, where you pay admission, and another 3km to the main gate and Ranthambore Fort. Accommodation is stretched out along the road from the town to the park. The train station is in the heart of Sawai Madhopur, just south of the main bazaar. Sawai Madhopur old city, a residential area, lies about 2km southeast of the train station.

Activities

The best time to take a wildlife safari in the national park is between October and April. Safaris take place in the early morning and late afternoon. If you are taking photos, it's worth bringing some ISO 400 or ISO 800 film, as the undergrowth is surprisingly dark in places. The mornings can be cold, so bring warm clothes.

The best way to travel is by jeep, which takes five people. You still have a good chance of seeing a tiger from a canter, though sometimes passengers can be rowdy, and the engine tends to roar. Guides will lead you down one of eight allocated routes – negotiating an alternative route with your driver takes clever diplomacy.

Seats in both jeeps and canters are allocated on a first-come-first-served basis. Demand outstrips supply because the number of motorised vehicles is restricted – only 15 jeeps and 15 canters are allowed inside per session.

A guide is compulsory and is included in the canter ticket price, but will cost an extra Rs 200 if you go by jeep. Tips are heavily encouraged.

Safaris take three hours. From October to February, canters (per person Rs 150) and jeeps (Rs 1050) both leave at 7am and 2.30pm. From March to June they leave at 6.30am and 3.30pm. Bookings for safaris are made at the RTDC Vinayak Tourist Complex (Ranthambore Rd; safari Indian/foreigner Rs 25/200, vehicle Rs 125, video Rs 200; 🕐 5am-7am & noon-2pm).

Sawai Madhopur Lodge (☎ 220541; r US$260, ste US$300;) This Taj Group lodge, 3km from the station, once belonged to the maharaja of Jaipur. The shady dining hall has a very small menu.

Sharma Hotel (Station Bazaar; dishes Rs 16-60; 6am-midnight) A basic, open-fronted, pure-veg place, this has oily but tasty dishes.

Shopping

Dastkar Craft Centre (☎ 252049; Ranthambore Rd; 10am-8pm) This place, 3km from the station, is worth a visit. The organisation empowers low-caste village women, who produce the attractive handicrafts on sale, including saris, scarves, bags and bedspreads.

SOUTHERN RAJASTHAN

☎ 0747 / pop 88,312

With narrow Brahmin-blue lanes, assorted temples, classic havelis, and a picturesque hillside lake, Bundi is the kind of effortlessly charming Indian town you wish you dreamed of – or at least stumbled upon – first. There's an air of the wonderful here – as Kipling found when he moved here to write – which is most readily felt around the fairy-tale palace looming large and cupola-clad.

Bundi is also a great place to hire a bike for day trips into the nearby countryside. Get home fast though, as the night sky fills with bats, and this discreetly spiritual town closes up shop soon after sundown.

Bundi was the capital of a major princely state during the Rajputs' heyday. Although its importance dwindled with the rise of Kota during Mughal times, it remained independent until incorporation into Rajasthan in 1947.

From January to March, delicate pink poppies fill surrounding fields, while in October/November the festivals of Bundi Ustav and Kashavrai Patan inject some evening energy into an otherwise daydreamy town. In August, the town hosts celebrations for Teej. See p166 for details of the festivals.

Information

The small tourist office (☎ 2442697; 🕑 10am-5pm Mon-Fri), near Ranji-ki-Baori, offers free maps. Mukesh Mehta, at the Haveli Braj Bhushanjee (p202) is a terrific source of information; his brother's website (www.kiplingsbundi.com) is also useful.

The small moneychanger south of the palace changes various currencies, and travellers cheques, depending on his mood. The only ATM in town is an unreliable SBBJ branch that accepts international cards. There are increasing numbers of places to check your emails, including Cyber Dream (per hr Rs 40; 🕑 9am-9pm) and Shri Balaji.com (Nahar ka Chuhata; per hr Rs 40; 🕑 9am-9pm).

Sights & Activities

TARAGARH

The vine-strewn, magnificent Taragarh (Star Fort; admission free) was built in 1354, and is great to ramble around – but take a stick to scare away the monkeys! Take the path up behind the Chitrasala, east along the inside of the ramparts, then left up the steep stone ramp just before the Dudha Mahal, a small disused building 200m from the palace. Inside the ramparts are huge rock-carved reservoirs, fleet-footed reptiles and the Bhim Burj, the largest of the battlements, which supports a famous cannon. Views over the town and surrounding countryside are magical, especially at sunset.

BUNDI PALACE

The palace (admission Rs 50, camera/video Rs 50/75; 🕑 8am-5pm) is an extraordinary decaying edifice with fabulous fading turquoise-and-gold murals. It's reached from the bazaar's northwestern end. Previously shut up and left to the bats, the maharaja leased it to a private company to clean it up and it's now open to the public. Knowledgeable guides hang around the ticket office.

You enter through the huge elephant gate, built in 1607. From here you can visit the Chhatra Mahal, built in 1644, which has some of Bundi's finest murals; one room features well-preserved paintings of Krishna – one for each month. The Phool Mahal was built in 1607 and shows a huge royal procession. Of the same date, the Badal Mahal has a wonderful Chinese-inspired ceiling, divided into petal shapes and decorated with peacocks and Krishna (note his Chinese eyes).

To get to the Chitrasala (Umed Mahal; admission free; 🕑 7am-6pm), built by Rao Umed Singh in the 18th century, you exit the elephant gate and walk further uphill to the entrance. Above the garden courtyard are several rooms covered in beautiful paintings. The back room on the right is the Sheesh Mahal; it's badly damaged, but with has beautiful inlaid glass.

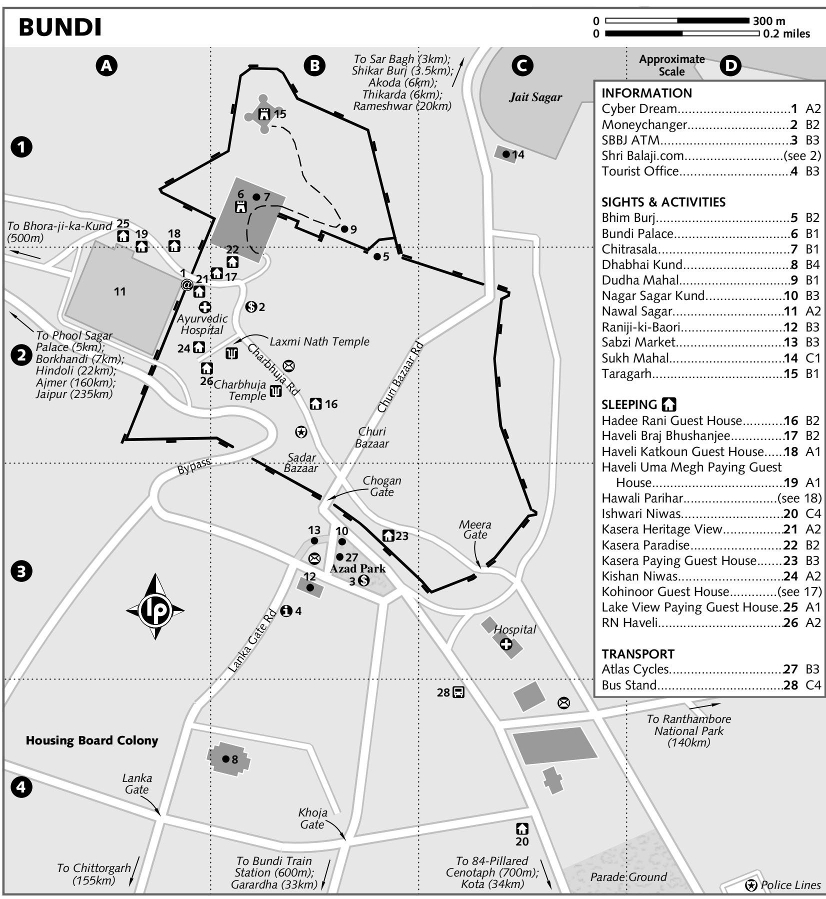
There are splendid palace and Taragar views from the south side of Nawal Sagar.

BAORIS & WATER TANKS

There are many impressive baoris in Bundi. Ranij-ki-Baori (Queen's Baori) is 46m deep and is decorated with funkily sinuous carvings. Built in 1699 by Rani Nathavatji, it is one of the largest of its kind. The Nagar Sagar Kund is a pair of matching step-wells just outside Chogan Gate.

Visible from the fort is the square artificial lake of Nawal Sagar, which tends to dry up if the monsoon is poor. In the centre is a temple to Varuna, the Aryan god of water. Other tanks also worth a look are the 16th-century Bhoraji-ka-Kund and imposing Dhabhai Kund.

OTHER SIGHTS



It's great to amble around the bazaars of the old city. Just outside the walls, the sabzi market (vegetable market), between Raniji-ki-Baori and Nagar Sagar Kund, is particularly vibrant. There are more than 200 temples here and more than 100 step-wells. Self-guided heritage-walk maps are available at Haveli Braj Bhushanjee (p202).

Bundi's other attractions are out of town, and are best visited by bike or rickshaw. The modern palace, known as the Phool Sagar Palace, has a beautiful artificial tank, good for spotting kingfishers, and gardens, several kilometres out of town on the Ajmer road. The stately Sukh Mahal (⏰ 10am-5pm) is a smaller palace, where Rudyard Kipling once stayed and wrote part of Kim. It's closer to town, on the edge of the beautiful Jait Sagar, and is now the Irrigation Rest House.The nearby, neglected Sar Bagh has a number of royal cenotaphs, some with terrific, intricate carvings. Shikar Burj is a small former royal hunting lodge, next to a water tank, on the road that runs along the north side of the Jait Sagar, and a good place for a picnic. South of town is the 84-Pillared Cenotaph, set in gardens, particularly stunning when lit up at night. It was built to honour the son of the maharaja's ayah about 600 years ago.

There are some lovely cycle excursions from Bundi, through pristine countryside. North of Bundi you can visit Akoda, a merchant's village, and Thikarda, with various potteries, around 6km from Bundi. About 20km north is a Shiva cave temple and a waterfall at Rameshwar. West of Bundi is rural Borkhandi village, around 7km distant. Twenty-two kilometres towards Jaipur is Hindoli, with a huge lake and a ruined hilltop fort.

About 33km from Bundi at the village of Garardha you can see some ancient rock paintings flanking the river, believed to be about 15,000 years old. There's a curious depiction of a man riding a huge bird, as well as some hunting scenes. It's best to come here with a local guide – ask at your hotel. A half-day trip in a jeep would cost around Rs 600 return.

Sleeping & Eating

Bundi's guesthouses are excellent, and most double as restaurants. Most guesthouses will also pick you up free of charge from the train station or bus stand if you call ahead – a good way to avoid commission tactics.

Bundi was once a dry town, so it's not a place for evening revelry; most guesthouses close their doors at 11pm.

RN Haveli (☎ 2443278; Rawle ka Chowk; r with shared bathroom Rs 100-150, r with private bathroom Rs 200) The dynamic mother-and-two-daughters team who run this little doozy often drag guests kicking and laughing on all kinds of cross-town excursions. If that's not your thing, then clean, comfortable doubles and delectable home-cooked meals are reason enough to stay.

Lake View Paying Guest House (☎ 2442326; lakeviewbundi@yahoo.com; r with shared/private bathroom Rs 125/200) This guesthouse, overseen by a kindly old man and his assorted younger relations, has a lovely lakeside spot. Some rooms have lake views and stained-glass windows – most people prefer the rooms downstairs, next to a small garden. Home-cooked meals (dishes around Rs 30) are available.

Kasera Paying Guest House (☎ 2446630; d with shared/private bathroom Rs 200/250) Run by the same family as Kasera Heritage View, this small-scale guesthouse, near Chogan Gate in the main bazaar, has small budget rooms set in a delightful, small, old haveli, and a good little rooftop restaurant (dishes Rs 30 to 35).

Haveli Uma Megh Paying Guest House (☎ 2442191; r Rs 200-550) A bona fide bargain cheapie run by friendly brothers, this has a mixed bag of rooms, with wall paintings, alcoves and some lake views – the pricier rooms are really spacious. It's peaceful and has an excellent lakeside garden restaurant for candlelit dinners (dishes Rs 30 to 55).

Hadee Rani Guesthouse (☎ 2442903; hadeeranip.g@yahoo.com; Boari Khera House, Sadar Bazaar; r Rs 200-600) This is a delightful new place with a superb rooftop restaurant and an energetic family in charge – the irrepressible Chintu will happily guide guests around town. Rooms are colourful, clean and airy.

Kasera Heritage View (☎ 2444679; r Rs 200-900) This popular establishment offers a range of rooms in an old haveli (nab the one with a palace-view balcony or the one overlooking the mosque). The rooftop restaurant sits precariously atop crippled foundations, but is nevertheless well placed for gazing at the palace.

Ishwari Niwas (☎ 2442414; in_heritage@indiatimes.com; 1 Civil Lines; r Rs 250-600) This is a family-run hotel with royal associations. The graceful old colonial building set around a courtyard has variable rooms with murals, but the location is not the best: it's away from the old city, past the bus stand.

Haveli Katkoun Guest House (☎ 2444311; raghunandansingh@yahoo.com; r Rs 250-850) Just outside the town's west gate, this is the pick of the town's accommodation, with comfortable, spotless rooms off a calm, leafy garden. The rooms upstairs open onto a communal balcony with views, and the restaurant provides good home-cooked food (and beer). Major Singh and his gracious family are friendly but unobstrusive hosts.

Kasera Paradise (☎ 2444679; r Rs 400-1500; ❄) The lovely couple at Heritage View also run this smarter hotel that has a fantastic rooftop with city and palace views. For Kasera Paradise they renovated a haveli that had lain empty for 80 years. Rooms are spacious, with lots of alcove action, and have smartly tiled bathrooms. Décor features coloured glass and dangly chandeliers.

Haveli Braj Bhushanjee (☎ 2442322; www.kiplingsbundi.com; r Rs 750-2450; ❄) This 250-year-old haveli is run by the helpful Braj Bhushanjee family (descendants of the former prime ministers of Bundi). It's an enchanting place with splendid rooftop views. It has an unrivalled range of accommodation – if a touch overpriced – ranging from old and atmospheric to modern with views. Rooms are decorated with beautiful murals on white paint, antique furniture and miniatures, and the freshly tiled bathrooms have solar-powered hot water. Meals are relatively expensive.

More and more families are opening their homes as guesthouses, including Kishan Niwas (☎ 2446110; jain_jp@hotmail.com; Nahar ka Chohtta; s Rs 80-100, d Rs 150-200), Hawali Parihar (☎ 2446675; r Rs 100-200) and Kohinoor Guesthouse (d with kitchen Rs 150).

Once a city of huge strategic importance, Kota has found its stride in modern Rajasthan as a major industrial and chemical centre, and so remains refreshingly free from tourist hustle. Still, it has a spectacular palace with an excellent museum and lovely murals. The revitalising Chambal River, filled with small crocodiles and plied by boats of all sizes, is the state's only permanent river, and sustains a wealth of mostly unexplored terrain. Kota is also famous for kota doria, exquisite saris woven with golden thread in the nearby village of Kaithoon.

Following Rajput conquest of this area in the 12th century AD, Bundi became its capital, with Kota going to the ruler's eldest son. In 1624, Kota became a separate state, remaining so until it was integrated into Rajasthan after Independence.

Building of the city began in 1264 following the defeat of the Bhils, but Kota didn't reach its present size until the 17th century, when Rao Madho Singh, a son of the Bundi ruler, was handed Kota by the Mughal emperor Jehangir.

Today Kota also serves as an army headquarters and its wide, leafy streets add a touch of welcome airs and graces.

In October, the town hosts Dussehra Mela, and thousands of pilgrims descend in the month of Kartika (October/November) for Kashavrai Patan. See p166 for details of the festivals.

Orientation

Kota is strung out along the Chambal River's east bank. The train station is well to the north; a number of hotels and the bus stand are in the centre.

There are numerous ATMs, including HDFC Bank ATMs next to Hotel Phul Plaza and on Platform 1 of the train station.

Shiv Shakti Enterprises (Rampura Rd; per hr Rs 50; 🕑 10am-10pm) Provides internet access.

State Bank of Bikaner & Jaipur (Industrial Estate) Changes travellers cheques and currency.

State Bank of India (Chawni Circle) Changes currency and Amex travellers cheques.

Sights & Activities

CITY PALACE & FORT

Beside the Kota Barrage, overlooking the river, is the complex holding the City Palace (🕑 9am-5pm) and the fort; it's one of Rajasthan's largest. Entry is from the south side through the Naya Darwaza (New Gate).

The palace houses the excellent Rao Madho Singh Museum (☎ 2385040; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/50, camera/video Rs 50/100; 🕑 10am-4.30pm Sat-Thu). You'll find all the stuff necessary for a respectable Raj existence – silver furniture, an old-time ice-cream maker, and ingenious, beautiful weapons. The oldest part of the palace dates from 1624. Amazing mirrorwork and some of Rajasthan's best-preserved miniatures decorate the small-scale apartments – the upstairs rooms dance with exquisite paintings.

The curator may offer to take you around but, if you can, look around on your own, so that you can wander at leisure.

JAGMANDIR

Between the City Palace and the Tourist Reception Centre is the picturesque artificial lake of Kishore Sagar, constructed in 1346. In the middle of the lake, on a small island amid palm trees, is the enchanting little tangerine palace of Jagmandir, built in 1740 by one of the maharanis of Kota. It's a sight that seems to mock the frantic streets either side of the lake. The palace is closed to the public.

BRIJ VILAS PALACE MUSEUM

Near the Kishore Sagar, this small government museum (admission Rs 3; 10am-4.30pm Sat-Thu) is also housed in a palace. It has a collection of some interesting 9th- to 12th-century stone idols and other sculptural fragments, and some miniature paintings.

BOAT TRIPS

A lovely hiatus from the city is a Chambal River boat trip. Once you escape the industry near the town, it's beautiful, with lush vegetation and craggy cliffs either side, and opportunities to spot birds, gharials (fish-eating crocodiles) and crocodiles (don't fall in). It costs Rs 50/25 for 3½-/1½-hour trips. Trips start from Chambal Gardens.

GARDENS

Chambal Gardens are on the riverbank south of the fort, with a murky pond stocked with crocodiles as a centrepiece. Once common all along the river, crocodiles had almost disappeared through hunting by the mid-20th century. There are also some rare gharials.

Next to the Tourist Reception Centre are the Chhattar Bilas Gardens, a collection of overgrown but impressive royal cenotaphs interspersed with carved elephants.

Sleeping & Eating

Budget accommodation in Kota is lacklustre, but the city has decent upper-end hotels. A few hotels have good restaurants (meals Rs 30 to 100), or try the early-evening snack stalls on the footpath outside the main post office.

Hotel Shree Anand (☎ 2462473; s/d from Rs 150/200) This place, in a pink building along the street opposite the train station, is useful if you're catching an early-morning train. The rooms are tiny and dingy, but pretty clean. Veg meals are available.

Hotel Phul Plaza (☎ 2329350; Civil Lines; s/d from Rs 325/425, with AC Rs 550/750;) Next door to Hotel Navrang, this option is a clean, no-nonsense business hotel. Rooms at the front are a bit noisy. There's a good veg restaurant with a wide range of dishes.

Hotel Navrang (☎ 2323294; Civil Lines; s/d from Rs 450/550, with AC Rs 750/950;) Navrang is unimpressive from the outside and in need of a makeover in the middle, but it has a modern internal courtyard and unobstrusive staff. Its excellent veg restaurant, Venue (dishes Rs 40 to 70), is a subdued business-lunch haunt where zigzag decorations add a dash of disco.

Sariswati Palace Hotel (☎ 2321861; Civil Lines; s/d Rs 600/900;) This modern hotel is efficiently run and justifiably recommended. Located close to the bus stand, Sariswati's rooms come equipped with TVs, bar fridges and a sense of impending room service.

Brijraj Bhawan Palace Hotel (☎ 2450529; s/d/ste Rs 1700/2350/2900) High above the Chambal River, this charismatic hotel has drawn exclusive guests since 1830, when the East India Company was plying its trade. It's named after the current maharaja of Kota, Brijraj Singh (who still lives here), and the enormous, classically presented rooms open onto quaint riverside terraces. If booking ahead, go for No 1 or No 4. It's off Station Rd.

Sukhdham Kothi (☎ 2320081; Station Rd; s/d Rs 1925/2200) This 100-year-old building set amongst leafy grounds is filled with foliated arches and cool arcades. The inviting rooms come with antique furniture; some open onto terraces.

Umed Bhawan Palace (☎ 2325262; off Station Rd; deluxe s/d/ste Rs 2400/2900/3600) Surrounded by sprawling gardens, this gracious palace is stuffily Edwardian. It's grander than the Brijraj Bhawan, with voluminous rooms, but they are darker and the overall feel is impersonal. The Presidential Suite (Rs 5500) is good, clean fun.

Palkiya Haveli (☎ 2327375; Mokha Para; s/d/ste Rs 2400/3000/3650;) This traditional Rajput haveli has been owned by the same Rathore family for 200 years, and is certifiably lovely. The hotel is a plant-filled oasis, and has impressive murals and appealing rooms. The family is charming and helpful, and the food is excellent.

Shopping

The bazaars around Rampura Rd sell a wide range of kota doria, or you can hunt them at their source in nearby Kaithoon, 12km from Kota; it's Rs 4 by bus or Rs 100 return in a rickshaw.

Getting There & Away

There are plenty of express bus connections, see below.

AROUND KOTA

Baroli

Baroli is a 9th-century temple complex, 56km southwest of Kota. Much was vandalised by Muslim armies, but some fantastic carving remains. Kota's Brij Vilas Palace Museum (p204) displays some statuary from here.

There are buses from Kota (Rs 24, 1½ hours, hourly); tell the driver you want to be dropped off at Baroli.

Jhalawar

Jhalawar, a small, appealing town 87km south of Kota, has some amazing, seldom-visited sights in the area surround it. Seven kilometres south is Jhalrapatan (the City of Temple Bells), which has a huge 10th-century Surya temple with impressive sculptures and one of India's best-preserved idols of Surya (the sun god). The 12th-century Shantinath Jain Temple is also worth visiting. Jhalrapatan hosts the Chandrabhaga Mela (p166) in November. Around 3km from Jhalrapatan is the lovely Chandrabaga Temple, set by a river. Gagron Fort, 10 km from Jhalawar, is also spectacular: a well-preserved, middle-of-nowhere fortress set high above the point where two rivers meet. Jhalawar has several reasonable hotels.

There are regular buses between Jhalawar and Kota (Rs 52, two hours).

CHITTORGARH

The fort at Chittorgarh (known as Chittor) is the greatest in Rajasthan, and is well worth reshuffling an itinerary to explore. The town itself is unspectacular, but the 700-acre complex standing on a rocky mountain plateau feels like the ultimate spot for a History Channel re-enactment. But there are no fallen actors here, just a series of stunning palaces, gates, temples and the startling Jaya Stambha.

History paints Chittor as strangely vulnerable – three times when it was under prolonged attack, its soldiers chose death before dishonour. The Rajput romantics actually left the compound to charge the enemy, donning saffron robes and leaving their families to the funeral pyre. Whether staying put behind the fort's rolling stone walls would have changed Chittor's fate is today a matter for academics (and TV producers) to debate.

Chittor makes a splendid day trip from Udaipur or Bundi.

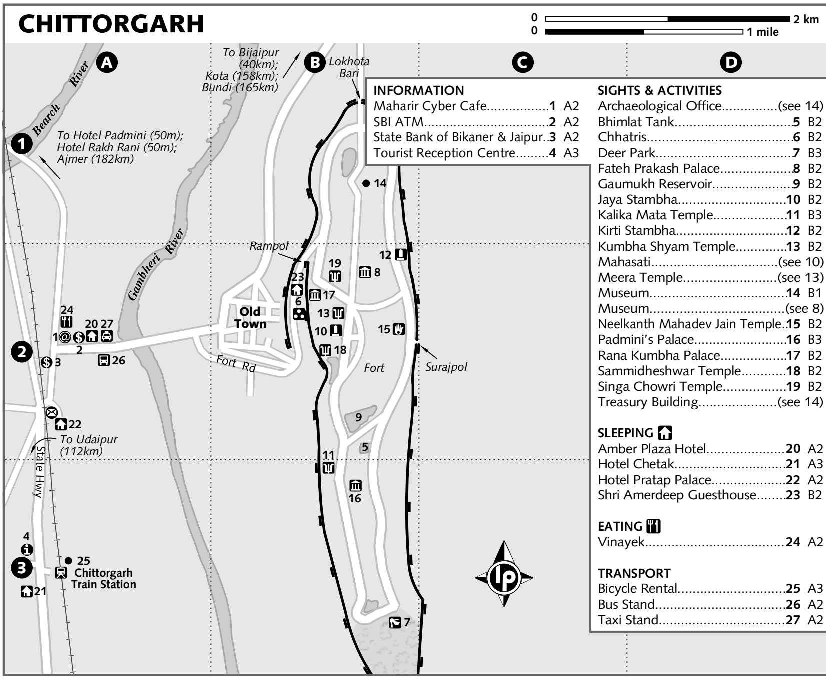
History

Chittor is mentioned in the Mahabharata – Bhim, one of the Pandava heroes, struck the ground here so hard that water gushed out to form a large reservoir. But the fort dates from the 8th century, founded by Bappa Rawal of Sisodia. Chittor's first defeat occurred in 1303 when Ala-ud-din Khilji, the Pathan king of Delhi, besieged the fort, apparently to capture the beautiful Padmini, wife of the rana's (king's) uncle, Bhim Singh. When defeat was inevitable, the men rode out to die and the Rajput noblewomen, including Padmini, committed jauhar.

In 1535 it was Bahadur Shah, the sultan of Gujarat, who besieged the fort and, once again, the medieval dictates of chivalry determined the outcome. It's thought that 13,000 Rajput women and 32,000 Rajput warriors died following the declaration of jauhar.

The final sacking of Chittor came just 33 years later, in 1568, when the Mughal emperor Akbar took the town. Once again, the odds were overwhelming, and the women performed jauhar and 8000 orange-robed warriors rode out to die. On this occasion, Maharaja Udai Singh II fled to Udaipur, where he re-established his capital. In 1616, Jehangir returned Chittor to the Rajputs. There was no attempt at resettlement, though it was restored in 1905.

Orientation & Information



The fort is roughly fish shaped, and stands on a 28-sq-km site on top of a 180m-high hill that rises abruptly from the surrounding plain. Until 1568 the town of Chittor was within the fort walls, but today's modern town, known as Lower Town, clatters to the west of the hill. A river separates it from the bus stand, railway line and the rest of the town.

There's a Tourist Reception Centre (☎ 241089; 🕒 10am-1.30pm & 2-5pm Mon-Sat) near the train station. You can change money at the State Bank of Bikaner & Jaipur. Surf the internet at Maharir Cyber Cafe (Collectorate Circle; per hr Rs 25; 🕒 9am-10pm).

Sights

All of Chittor's attractions are in the fort (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; 🕒 dawn-dusk). A zigzag ascent of more than 1km leads through seven gateways to the main gate on the western side, the Rampol (the former back entrance).

On the climb you pass two chhatris, memorials marking spots where Jaimal and Kalla fell during the struggle against Akbar – Jaimal was already fatally wounded but was carried out to fight by Kalla. The main gate on the eastern side of the fort is known as the Surajpol, and has fantastic views across the empty plains. Within the fort, a circular road runs around the ruins and there's a deer park at the southern end.

Today the fort is a deserted collection of ruined palaces and around 130 temples. The main sites can all be seen in half a day (if you're not walking; see p203 for transport info), but it's worth spending longer as this is a mellow place. Guides are available, usually at the Rana Kumbha Palace; they charge around Rs 150.

RANA KUMBHA PALACE

After entering the fort and turning right, you come to the ruins of this palace, which includes elephant and horse stables and a Shiva temple. Padmini's jauhar is said to have taken place in a now blocked cellar. Across from the palace is the museum and archaeological office, and the treasury building (Nau Lakha Bhandar). The Singa Chowri Temple is nearby.

FATEH PRAKASH PALACE

Just beyond Rana Kumbha Palace, this palace is more modern and houses a small, poorly labelled museum (admission Rs 3, free Mon; 10am-4.30pm Sat-Thu) and a school for local children (around 4000 villagers live within the fort).

JAYA STAMBHA

Heading south, you come to the glorious Jaya Stambha (Tower of Victory) – the symbol of Chittor and a particularly masculine expression of triumph. Erected by Rana Kumbha between 1458 and 1468, it rises 37m in nine exquisitely carved storeys; you can climb the narrow stairs (the interior is also carved) to the 8th floor, from where there's a good view. The dome was damaged by lightning and repaired during the 19th century.

Close to the tower is the Mahasati, an area where the ranas were cremated during Chittor's period as the capital of Mewar, the area encompassing Chittor and Udaipur. There are many sati stones here – 13,000 women committed jauhar close by in 1535. The intensely carved Sammidheshwar Temple, built in the 6th century and restored in 1427, is nearby.

GAUMUKH RESERVOIR
Walk down beyond the temple and, at the edge of the cliff, you'll see this deep tank. A spring feeds the tank from a carved cow's mouth in the cliff.

PADMINI'S PALACE
Continuing south, you reach Padmini's Palace, set beside a large pool with a central pavilion. Legend relates that, as Padmini sat in this pavilion, Ala-ud-din saw her reflection in the lake. This glimpse convinced him to destroy Chittor in order to possess her. The bronze gates to this pavilion were carried off by Akbar and can be seen in the fort at Agra.

Continuing around the circular road, you pass the deer park, the Bhimlat Tank, the Surajpol and the Neelkanth Mahadev Jain temple, before reaching the Kirti Stambha.

KIRTI STAMBHA
The 22m-high Kirti Stambha (Tower of Fame) is older (probably 12th century) and smaller than the Tower of Victory. Built by a Jain merchant, it is dedicated to Adinath, the first Jain tirthankar (revered Jain teacher), and is decorated with naked figures of the various tirthankars, indicating that it is a Digambara monument. (There are two orders of Jains: Svetembara and Digambara. Monks belonging to the first order wear thin white robes, while Digambara monks reject any form of clothing whatsoever and live naked, or 'sky-clad'.) A narrow stairway leads through the seven storeys to the top. The staircase is usually locked.

OTHER SIGHTS
Close to Kirti Stambha is the Meera Temple. Built during the reign of Rana Kumbha, it's in the ornate Indo-Aryan style and is associated with the mystic poet Meerabai – she consumed poison sent by an enemy but survived due to the blessings of Krishna. The larger temple in this same compound is the Kumbha Shyam Temple (Temple of Varah).

Across from Padmini's Palace is the Kalika Mata Temple, an 8th-century sun temple. It was damaged during the first sack of Chittor, then converted to a temple to the goddess Kali in the 14th century. At the fort's northern tip is another gate, the Lokhota Bari, while at the southern end is a small opening used for hurling criminals into the abyss.

Sleeping & Eating
Hotels are mainly dreadful and noisy in Chittor. Those near the train and bus stations are places where lone women may feel uncomfortable.

Shri Amerdeep Guesthouse (☎ 248610; r Rs 400) Near Rampol gate on the fort hill, this well-camouflaged guesthouse has poky but pleasant rooms set above a line of shops. There are tremendous fort views from the concrete rooftop, and the owners plan to build a restaurant.

Hotel Rakh Rani (☎ 249558; Bilara Rd, r Rs 300-800) This is a brash-looking new hotel near the Bearch River bridge, incongruously set in an overgrown field. Rooms are colourful, though clammy, and staff are eager to please.

Amber Plaza Hotel (☎ 249799; s/d Rs 500/700; ❄) A smart option tucked away behind Natraj Hotel, Amber is a professional setup with small, spotless rooms and appealing showers. The restaurant downstairs rents out private booths (Rs 200, including meal) for those looking for in-your-face intimacy.

Hotel Chetak (☎ 241679; s/d Rs 550/650, with AC & TV Rs 700/800; ❄) The pick of the train-station lodgings, Chetak has spotless, spacious rooms with hot water.

Hotel Padmini (☎ 241718; hotel_padmini@rediffmail.com; s/d Rs 800/1000, with AC Rs 1250/1500; ❄) This option, out of town near the Bearch River, has a garden and horses, and a shiny, bustling reception. Some rooms have balconies with views of the distant fort, but rooms are overpriced and run-down.

Hotel Pratap Palace (☎ 243563; hpratap@hotmail.com; s Rs 1150-1440, d Rs 1250-1560, superdeluxe s/d Rs 1800/2040; ❄) This is Chittor's go-to joint, with a wide range of rooms, convenient location and travel-savvy staff. The more expensive rooms have window seats and leafy outlooks, while top prices also get you a big mural (Room 208). There's a gardenside restaurant with good food – drop in for lunch, and they'll let you stash your luggage for the afternoon. Village safaris and visits to the hotel's castle in Bijaipur (see opposite) can be arranged.

Vinayek (Collectorate Circle; dishes Rs 15-60) This restaurant serves up North Indian veg dishes as well as Chinese and South Indian food. It's in a gloomy basement that enlivened by the restaurant's popularity and a sweet counter.

Getting There & Away
BUS
Express buses serve Delhi (Rs 310, 14 hours, two daily), and travel regularly to Ajmer (Rs 95, five hours), Jaipur (Rs 155, eight hours), Udaipur (local/express Rs 46/56, three/2½ hours) and Bundi (Rs 78, five hours), among other places.

TRAIN

The Udaipur–Jaipur Super Express (No 2966) leaves Chittor at 9.40pm, arriving in Jaipur (sleeper Rs 357, 324km) at 7am. For Udaipur, the No 2965 leaves at 5.40am, arriving at 7.45am (sleeper Rs 291, 115km).

Getting Around

Autorickshaws charge around Rs 150 to take you from the bus or train station, around the fort, and back (including waiting time). A rickshaw between the bus and train stations should cost Rs 20.

Bicycles can be rented near the train station (Rs 30 per day), but you may have to walk up the steep hill to the fort. Still, they're great for seeing the fort and coming back downhill.

AROUND CHITTORGARH

Bijaipur

Forty kilometres from Chittor, Castle Bijaipur (www.castlebijaipur.com; s/d Rs 1550/1850; ☒ ☒) is a fantastically set 16th-century palace, seemingly plucked from Udaipur and plumped in the countryside. Rooms are romantic and luxurious. Reservations should be made through Chittor's Hotel Pratap Palace (☎ 243563; hpratap@hotmail.com). The friendly owners organise horse and jeep safaris. There are frequent buses from Chittor to Bijaipur (Rs 10, 1½ hours). A return taxi will cost around Rs 300.

Watermarked by whimsy and splendour, the Venice of the East holds stage as one of India's truly seductive cities. Udaipur is an international destination unto itself, with splendid Lake Pichola lapping against shimmering white buildings, and the Aravalli hills closing in to savour the view.

The centrepiece of the city is the floating Lake Palace – brash enough for a Bond film (parts of Octopussy were filmed here), yet refined enough for his majesty's pleasure. Packed with princeliness and passion, Udaipur is raw Rajput dreaming, with palaces, havelis and temples at every turn.

Formerly known as Mewar, Udaipur was founded in 1559 when Maharaja Udai Singh II took flight from the final sacking of Chittor by the Mughal emperor Akbar. As Udai Singh and his contemporaries resisted Muslim might, the city grew a reputation for patriotic fervour and an aching love of independence.

In 2006 a record rainfall returned the lake to its natural splendour and restored the heart to Rajasthan's most romantic city. When the monsoon is poor though, the lake feels more like an abandoned quarry, and the swarming tourist trade of the old city goes into damage control. Don't despair though, fair traveller; the surrounding countryside is an untapped Rajasthan highlight.

Udaipur celebrates the Mewar Festival (p166) in April.

Orientation

The old city, bounded by the remains of a city wall, is on the east side of Lake Pichola. The train station and bus stand are both just outside the city wall to the southeast. Like most Indian cities, Udaipur has an urban sprawl that goes beyond the city's original boundaries.

LAKE PICHOLA

Placid Lake Pichola was enlarged by Maharaja Udai Singh II after the city was founded – he flooded nearby Pichola village by building a masonry dam, known as the Badipol. The lake is now 4km long and 3km wide, but it remains shallow and dries up in severe droughts. The City Palace decorates the east bank of the lake. North of the palace you can wander along the lakeshore, where there are some interesting bathing and dhobi (clothes-washing) ghats.

The lake has two islands: Jagniwas and Jagmandir. Boat rides (adult/child 30min trip Rs 100/50, 1hr trip Rs 175/100; 9.30am-5pm) leave half-hourly from the City Palace jetty (aka Bansi Ghat) when the lake is high enough. The longer trip includes a visit to Jagmandir Island.

Jagniwas Island

Jagniwas, the Lake Palace Hotel island, is about 1.5 hectares in size, completely covered by the palace built by Maharaja Jagat Singh II in 1754. Formerly the royal summer palace, today it is the ultimate in luxury hotels (p225), with shady courtyards, lotus ponds and a pool shaded by a mango tree. Nonguests can only come over for lunch or dinner (p226); hotel launches cross to the island from the City Palace jetty.

The Lake Palace, along with the Shiv Niwas Palace and Monsoon Palace, was used in the James Bond movie Octopussy.

Behind Jagniwas is a much smaller island called Arsi Vilas, used as a helipad.

Jagmandir Island

The palace on Jagmandir Island was built by Maharaja Karan Singh in 1620, and added to by Maharaja Jagat Singh (1628–52). It is said that the Mughal emperor Shah Jahan derived some of his inspiration for the Taj Mahal from this palace after staying here in 1623–24 while leading a revolt against his father, Jehangir. Europeans were sheltered here by Maharaja Swarup Singh during the uprising of 1857.

Flanked by a row of enormous stone elephants, the island has an impressive chhatri carved from grey-blue stone, and fantastic views across the lake to the city and its golden palace.

CITY PALACE & MUSEUMS

The imposing City Palace (admission Rs 25; 7am-8pm), surmounted by balconies, towers and cupolas, and towering over the lake, is Rajasthan's largest palace, with a façade 244m long and 30.4m high. A conglomeration of buildings created by various maharajas, it still manages to retain a surprising uniformity of design. Construction was started by Maharaja Udai Singh II, the city's founder. There are fine views over the lake and the city from the upper terraces.

The palace is entered from the northern end through the Baripol (built in 1600) and the three-arched Tripolia Gate (1725). To the left, seven arches commemorate the seven times maharajas were weighed here and their weight in gold or silver distributed to the lucky locals.

The City Palace museum (adult/child Rs 50/30, camera/video Rs 200/200; 9.30am-4.30pm) includes the Mor Chowk, with its lavish mosaics of peacocks, the favourite Rajasthani bird. The Manak (Ruby) Mahal has glass and mirrorwork, while Krishna Vilas has a remarkable collection of miniatures (no photography allowed). In the Bari Mahal there is a pleasant central garden. The Moti Mahal has beautiful mirrorwork and the Chini Mahal is covered in ornamental tiles. More wall paintings can be seen in the Zenana Mahal. There's a large tiger-catching cage near the Zenana Mahal entrance.

Enter the museum from the north side (up the hill from the Jagdish Temple), otherwise there's an extra Rs 25 visitor fee. A guide (Rs 100 for up to five people) is worthwhile.

There's also a government museum (admission Rs 3, free Mon; 10am-5pm Sat-Thu) within the complex. Exhibits include a freaky monkey holding a lamp, as well as more serious stuff, such as sculptures, and maharaja portraits with a spectacular array of moustaches.

In the large courtyard outside the City Palace museum are pricey handicraft shops, a World Wide Fund for Nature (9.30am-5.30pm) shop, Thomas Cook, a post office and banks.

The rest of the palace fronts the lake and has been partly converted into two luxury hotels: Shiv Niwas Palace (p225) and the Fateh Prakash Palace (p225). There's a stunning crystal gallery (adult/child incl soft drink Rs 325/165; 10am-1pm & 3-8pm) at the Fateh Prakash Palace Hotel, though the admission charge is becoming rather exclusive. Maharaja Sajjan Singh ordered this rare crystal from F&C Osler & Co in England in 1877; he died before it arrived, and all the items stayed packed up in boxes for 110 years. The extravagant, unused collection includes crystal chairs, sofas, tables and even beds. Photography is prohibited.

Palace ladies once used the crystal gallery to observe the grandiose durbar hall, which was used for official occasions such as state banquets and meetings. This durbar hall, built in 1909, is undoubtedly one of India's most impressive, with outrageously huge chandeliers. The illustrious Mewar rulers who deck the walls come from supposedly the oldest ruling dynasty in the world, spanning 76 generations. The durbar hall holds hundreds and can be hired for special functions.

JAGDISH TEMPLE

Only 150m north of the City Palace entrance, this fantastically carved Indo-Aryan temple (5am-2pm & 4-10.30pm) was built by Maharaja Jagat Singh in 1651. It enshrines a black stone image of Vishnu as Jagannath, Lord of the Universe. A brass image of Garuda is in a shrine in front of the temple.

BAGORE-KI-HAVELI

This gracious 18th-century haveli (admission Rs 25; 10am-7pm), on the water's edge in the Gangaur Ghat area, was built by a former prime minister and has been carefully restored. There

CLOTHES THAT SPEAK

The colours of everyday Rajasthani life dazzle against the desert – top-heavy turbans (safas, paags or pagris); fluttering scarlet, sunflower yellow and saffron saris; glittering traditional Rajasthani skirts (lehangas or ghagharas); and headscarves (odnis or dupattas).

These are not just decorative, but speak a language of their own, tied up with the strictures of society.

Turban colour may signify caste, religion and occasion. Rajputs traditionally wear saffron, signifying chivalry. Brahmins wear pink, Dalits brown and nomads black. Jubilantly multicoloured turbans are for festivals. White, grey, black or blue turbans are worn by Hindus to signify sadness, but these colours are also worn by Muslims. The way a turban is tied further indicates the wearer's social class and origin.

As Hindus believe some shades of blue, green and white to be mournful colours, they tend to be worn by widows, while wives and single women wear more cheery pinks, reds and yellows. These embody more signs: one red-and-yellow combination may only be worn by women who've borne a son. Hindu married women are carefully marked off limits by chudas (arm bangles), bichiyas (toe rings) and a dash of vermillion in their hair parting.

are 138 rooms set around courtyards. Some have been arranged to evoke when the house was inhabited, others have cultural displays, including the world's (rather saggy) biggest turban! The haveli also houses an interesting art gallery, with contemporary and folk art, and world-famous monuments lovingly carved out of polystyrene. The upper courtyard makes an atmospheric setting for fabulous Rajasthani dance performances at 7pm (see p227).

FATEH SAGAR

North of Lake Pichola, this lake – which dries up if the monsoon has been poor – is ringed by hills and is a hang-out for lovestruck locals. It was originally built in 1678 by Maharaja Jai Singh but, after heavy rains destroyed the dam, it was reconstructed by Maharaja Fateh Singh. At its centre is Nehru Park, a garden island. An autorickshaw from the old city costs Rs 30 (one way).

BHARTIYA LOK KALA MUSEUM

This small, private museum (☎ 2529296; Indian/foreigner Rs 15/25, camera/video Rs 20/50; ⏲ 9am-5.30pm) shows dolls, masks, tribal jewellery, musical instruments, paintings and puppets.

SAHELIYON-KI-BARI

In the north of the city is the Saheliyon-ki-Bari (Garden of the Maids of Honour; admission Rs 5; ⏲ 8am-7pm) is. This small, quaint ornamental garden was laid out for 48 women attendants who came as part of a princess's dowry, and has fountains (water shortages permitting), kiosks, marble elephants and a delightful lotus pool.

SHILPGRAM

Shilpgram (Indian/foreigner Rs 15/25, camera/video Rs 10/50; ⏲ 11am-7pm) is a crafts village 3km west of town that hosts the fantastic Shilpgram festival each December – check with the Tourist Reception Centre (p219) or at Bagore-ki-Haveli (opposite) for details. The rest of the year sees excellent demonstrations by traditional performers and artisans from Rajasthan, Gujarat, Goa and Maharashtra, but it can feel somewhat staged.

Shilpi Restaurant is next door (p226); it has a swimming pool (admission Rs 100; ⏲ 11am-8pm).

A return autorickshaw trip (including a 30-minute stop) between the old city and Shilpgram costs Rs 100.

AHAR

About 2km east of Udaipur are over 250 restored cenotaphs of the maharajas of Mewar; it's a spectacular city of snowy domes built over a period of 350 years. Nearby you can visit the patchy remains of the Sisodias' ancient capital, and a museum (admission Rs 3; ⏲ 10am-5pm) housing accompanying artefacts, some over 5000 years old.

SAJJAN GARH (MONSOON PALACE)

Perched on the top of a distant mountain range like a fairy-tale castle, this neglected late-19th-century palace was constructed by Maharaja Sajjan Singh. Originally an astronomical centre, it later became a monsoon palace and hunting lodge. Now government-owned, it's open to the public after lengthy closure, but there is not much to see inside. Come for the breathtaking sunset views.

You pay Rs 80/20 per person/rickshaw at the foot of the hill to enter the Sajjan Garh Wildlife Sanctuary. Autorickshaw return costs Rs 150 (including waiting).

OTHER SIGHTS

The maharajas' Vintage & Classic Car Collection (☎ 2420979; Garden Hotel; admission Rs 100; 9-11am & 2-6pm) is fascinating, with 22 splendid vehicles including a 1938 Cadillac complete with a system for purdah (custom among some Muslims and Hindus of keeping women secluded) to the beautiful 1934 Rolls-Royce Phantom used in Octopussy. The maharaja's 'sun-smart' car is also housed here.

Sunset Point (admission Rs 5) is a lovely sunset spot. There's a musical fountain here (drought permitting), which plays each evening.

Almost 5km beyond Shilpgram is Badi ka Talab (Tiger Lake), a mammoth artificial lake flanked by hills. It's usually full, and makes a pleasant picnic spot. Crocodiles lurk in parts of the lake, so swimmers beware!

Sleeping

Many Udaipur guesthouse owners are slowly realising the value of sound environmental practice. Aside from the obvious issue of water conservation in a city desperate to maintain a full lake, across the skyline you'll see solar-heating panels popping up faster than satellite dishes. Even the maharaja recently got in on the act by investing in a state-of-the-art solar-powered rickshaw as an example of the city's commitment to positive tourism.

One of the catalysts for this ecoawakening is an organisation called Shikshantar (☎ 2451303; www.swaraj.org/shikshantar; 21 Fatehpura), an Udaipur-based community action group that is working towards a 'zero-waste Udaipur'. To this end, it has created 'green-leaf' hotel rating system to help guests and tour operators make more informed decisions about where to stay. The rating is based on 14 criteria, including waste management, energy usage and food preparation. Results are currently on display at Bagore-ki-Haveli and on the website.

Staying close to the lakeshore is most romantic. You can either head west of the Jagdish Temple, or to the quieter and less touristy Hanuman Ghat on the other side of the lake. Ask for a lake-facing room (usually more expensive). Most places offer off-season discounts.

To bypass rapacious rickshaw drivers working on commission, use the prepaid autorickshaw stands outside the train and bus stations. If you do have any complaints (about rickshaw drivers – note the registration number – or hotels), contact the police (☎ 2412693; Surajpol) or the Tourist Reception Centre (☎ 2411535; Fateh Memorial Bldg; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat, closed 2nd & 4th Sat of month).

Old Jheel Guest House (☎ 2421352; 56 Gangaur Ghat Rd; d Rs 200-350) Old Jheel Guest House is in an old haveli. Accommodation ranges from basic back rooms to a room with a small balcony and three lake-facing windows.

Lake View Guest House (☎ 2420527; Sahib ki Haveli; r Rs 200-400) Thorough renovations have made Lake View a leading budget option. Rooms are reasonably well maintained and spacious, some with reach-out-and-touch-it temple views, and the restaurant does cracking breakfasts.

Ratan Palace (☎ 2561570; 1, Lal Ghat; r Rs 200-400) The Soni family manages this welcoming place with excellent views, clean rooms with stained glass, and a busy little restaurant. The affable owner plays (and teaches) a mean sitar. It's behind Jagdish Temple.

Anjani Hotel (☎ 2421770; www.anjanihotel.com; 77 Gangaur Ghat Rd; r Rs 300-800;) This well-run hotel has 21 rooms with black-and-white checked floors, lots of stained-glass windows and elaborate wall paintings – the top-floor rooms have fantastic city views. The pool is well maintained, and the restaurant is excellent (though service can be slow). There's an art shop in the lobby.

Hotel Udai Niwas (☎ 5120789; www.hoteludainiwas.com; Gangaur Ghat Rd; r Rs 300-1000;) This has excellent, spotless rooms, painted white and decorated by puppets and wall hangings – the cheapest rooms are a real bargain.

Hanuman Ghat

Dream Heaven Guest House (☎ 2431038; 22 Bhim Permashever Marg; r Rs 120-450) This place is deservedly popular. All rooms are fitted with wall hangings and paintings – nab a room with a balcony. The food at the rooftop restaurant overlooking the lake and Udaipur is fresh and tasty.

Panorama Guest House (☎ 2431027; krishna 2311@rediffmail.com; Hanuman Ghat; r Rs 150-300) Smart and well kept by the attentive Krishna, this is a lovely choice overlooking a small local square. The rooms are clean and kitschy, and the relaxing rooftop restaurant is a proud patron of great coffee and pancakes.

Garden Hotel (☎ 2418 881; s/d/ste Rs 2500/3000/4000) This HRH hotel, opposite the Sajjan Niwas Gardens, is more relaxed than many in this category. Rooms are a touch same-same, but the family suite, with two levels and two bathrooms, is amazing value. There are two

TOP END

City Palace

Shiv Niwas Palace Hotel (☎ 2528016; crs@udaipur.hrhindia.com; r US$275, terrace ste US$575, royal ste US$750-1000;) This hotel, in the former guest quarters of the maharaja, has high-end furnishings but middle-class value. Fountains and silver aside, the cheapest rooms are more like ageing drag queens. Go for one with a terrace, or just go for a swim in the gorgeous marble pool (nonguests Rs 300).

Fateh Prakash Palace Hotel (☎ 2528008; sales@zudaipur.hrhindia.com; r from US$350;) An early-20th-century stomping ground for Maharaja Fateh Singh, this is palatial, but classy. The cheapest double rooms are not in the main palace wing.

Lake Palace Hotel (☎ 2528800; www.tajhotels.com; d US$450, with lake view US$500, ste US$630-1330;) The icon of Udaipur, this romantic palace rising from the depths of the lake is extraordinary, with open-air courtyards, lotus ponds and a small, tree-shaded pool. Rooms are hung with silk and filled with carved wood furniture. The cheapest (US$450) overlook the lily pond or terrace, rather than the lake.

Elsewhere

Devi Garh (☎ 02953-289211; Delwara; www.devireSorts.com; ste US$400-1300;) This outstanding hotel, 28km northeast of Udaipur amid dramatic Aravalli hills, is a showcase of 21st-century Indian design. It's housed in a beautiful 18th-century palace, but has been decorated in a wonderfully contrasting contemporary style using traditional motifs, marble, metals and semiprecious stones. The best suites have private pools.

Udaivilas (☎ 2433300; www.oberoihotels.com; r US$600-700, ste US$2770;) Udaivilas' butter-sculpture domes are breathtaking. It's a luxury boutique hotel that doesn't spare the glitz and gold leaf – the Kohinoor Suite costs a whopping US$3300. Suites have their own pools, and there are two excellent restaurants (p226), Surya Mahal and Udai Mahal.

Eating

Udaipur has scores of sun-kissed rooftop cafés, many with mesmerising lake views, as well as fine dining at the top-end hotels. Indian food is usually a better bet than Western-style dishes. If you like a drink, the local liquor duru – a heady mixture of saffron, cardamom and aniseed – may appeal to your brainbuds!

Many budget restaurants show contemporary movies or endless reruns of Octopussy nightly.

Sunrise (cnr Lal Ghat & Gangaur Ghat Rd; dishes Rs 10-80) Sunrise does a breakfast of champions, plus delicious home-cooked Indian dishes. The friendly family will happily join in a spot of people-watching.

Café Edelweiss (Gangaur Ghat Rd; snacks Rs 15-70; 7.30am-7.30pm) The Savage Garden crowd have got the café set covered with this little piece of Europe that appeals to both homesick and discerning travellers. The cake tray turns over fast, and it's tough to get a seat. The coffee is superb.

Maxim's Café (Jagdish Temple Rd; dishes Rs 20-90) This has a small, two-level, sparkling clean terrace overlooking the street. The pure-vegetarian food freshly cooked.

Berry's (Chetak Circle; dishes Rs 35-240) An icy cool restaurant with an impressive brass front door, Berry's is a better bet in the evening, when the trade is busy and the white-tablecloth service comes to the fore. The cooking is classy veg and nonveg, with the usual Indian trade plus great burgers.

Natraj Lodge (Bapu Bazaar; thalis Rs 40; 10am-3pm & 6.30-11pm) Justifiably famous throughout town for its delicious all-you-can-eat Gujarati thalis, this place is permanently busy with locals.

Bawarchi Restaurant (6 Delhi Gate; thalis Rs 45) A jumping local thali joint where you can eat well and be merry for not a lot of money.

Shilpi Restaurant (dishes Rs 42-110) Next to Shilpgram (p221), 3km west of town, this is a pleasantly open restaurant serving the usual range of cuisines. It also has a pool (admission Rs 100; open 11am to 8pm).

Ambrai (dishes Rs 40-200; 12.30-3pm & 7.30-10.30pm) At water level, looking across to Lake Palace Hotel and Lal Ghat, Ambrai feels like a French park, with its wrought-iron chairs and dusty ground. The food at this scenic restaurant is nothing to rave about, but after a couple of sunset drinks, the mattar rajputana will do the trick.

Parkview Restaurant (www.parkviewrestaurant.com; dishes Rs 50-190) A celebrated local restaurant with a surprisingly low tourist quota, Parkview does a solid spread of Indian staples in a 90-seater elongated room with fuzzy red seats, and well-dressed waiters.

Whistling Teal (Bhattiyani Chohtta; dishes 50-180) A brilliant restaurant with superlative curries and exemplary service. Set in a putting-green-perfect garden, the Whistling Teal has walls covered with grainy photos, and you can drink cocktails in saddles at the bar. The jazz soundtrack is classy, and the coffee menu extensive (from Rs 40).

Jagat Niwas Palace Hotel (☎ 2420133; 23-25 Lal Ghat; dishes Rs 50-200; 7-11am, noon-3pm & 6.30-10.15pm) This is a delightful, peaceful restaurant with wonderful lake views, and particularly good fish dishes and biryani (steamed rice with meat or vegies). It's wise to book ahead in the evening. Breakfast is average.

Lotus Café (Bhattiyani Chohtta) This Anglo-Indian enterprise plucks out fabulous chicken dishes and is ideal for meeting-and-greeting other travellers. Loads of games are available, and there's plenty of funky background noise.

Savage Garden (22 Inside Chandpol; dishes Rs 85-140; 11am-10pm) This place, near Chandpol, is still doing it right. It's unusually atmospheric, with deep-blue walls, bowls of flowers, and tables in alcoves or in a pleasant courtyard. The starters are sublime – try the stuffed pappadam rolls. The bar is slick, and the service slicker.

Udai Kothi (dishes Rs 90-240) This glorious terrace restaurant has tables or cushioned alcoves around the edge of a pool. The tandoori fish is excellent, and the saffron chicken with cashews is a hit. The staff seem saturated by the evening romance though, fussing over everything bar the clientele. Musicians play in the evenings (October to April).

Trident Hilton (☎ 2432200; buffets Rs 500; guests 6am-11pm, nonguests 11am-11pm) The service and multicuisine buffet at this slick top-end hotel are worth the short trek out here.

Surya Mahal (Udaivilas; dishes around Rs 500; noon-3.30pm & 7-10.30pm) This is an expensive, though hip, '30s-style eatery, with delicious Continental and Asian cuisine in a high-ceilinged opulent interior.

Udai Mahal (Udaivilas; dishes around Rs 500; noon-3.30pm & 7-10.30pm) This restaurant specialises in the most refined Rajasthani and North Indian food.

Lake Palace Hotel (☎ 2528800; buffets Rs 2000; 7.30-10.30pm) This Udaipur institution will never live up to its hype, but where else can you eat in such surrounds? The price of the sumptuous buffet dinner has been catapulted to Rs 2000, house wine to Rs 2500. Reservations are mandatory, and you've got to iron your shirt.

Drinking

Paanera Bar (Shiv Niwas Palace Hotel; 11am-11pm) Plush poolside spot with soft sofas.

Sunset View Terrace (City Palace complex; 11am-11pm) On a terrace overlooking Lake Pichola, this is the place to be at sunset – it's perfect gin-and-tonic territory. But the food is overpriced and nothing special.

Entertainment

Dharohar (Gangaur Ghat; adult/child Rs 60/30, camera/video Rs 10/50; show 7pm) Perhaps the best (and most convenient) chance to see world-class classical dancing in Rajasthan. At the beautiful Bagore-ki-Haveli, the brilliant performers wow big crowds with moves your mother can't make.

Shopping

Udaipur has masses of little shops selling jumbles of things ranging from cloth lanterns to antique jewellery.

The town is known for its local crafts, particularly its miniature paintings in the Rajput-Mughal style; shops line Lake Palace Rd and around Jagdish Temple, but finding an authentic artist takes a collector's eye. Silver jewellery pitched at Western tastes, and leather-bound books and handmade paper (from Jaipur) are other popular buys in this area.

Textile shops also line Lake Palace Rd, and shops along here also sell beautiful, brightly painted, small wooden Hindu gods.

Interesting, less-tourist-focused bazaars spread out from the clock tower, east of Ganjaur Ghat, and buzz loudest in the evening. Bara Bazaar sells silver and gold, as well as saris and fabrics. Traditional shoes are sold on Mochiwada, more silver on Battiyanni Chohtta, and Mandi Market is the centre for spices.

Be prepared to bargain hard, as most places have ridiculously inflated prices for tourists.

Rajasthali Chetak Circle (10.30am-7pm Mon-Sat); near Jagdish Temple (10am-6.30pm) The government fixed-price emporium is worth dropping into to gauge handicraft prices.

Sadhna (2454655; www.sadhna.org; Mangi Kee Baudi, Kasaron Ki; 10am-7pm) This is the outlet for Seva Mandir, an NGO set up in 1969 to help rural women. The small shop sells attractive fixed-price textiles; profits go to the artisans and towards community development work.

Gallery Pristine (2423916; gallerypristine@yahoo.com; 60 Bhattiyanni Chohtta) More showroom than gallery, this collection proves that Shahid Parvez and friends are the pick of Udaipur's rich crop of contemporary artists.

Getting Around

TO/FROM THE AIRPORT

The airport is 25km from the city. A taxi will cost at least Rs 250; there's no airport bus.

AUTORICKSHAW

These are unmetered, so you should agree on a fare before setting off – the standard fare anywhere in town is around Rs 20 to 25. There are prepaid autorickshaw stands at the bus and train stations. It costs Rs 250 to hire an autorickshaw for a day of local sightseeing.

The commission system is in place, so tenaciously pursue your first choice of accommodation. Unless your rickshaw is prepaid, ask for the Jagdish Temple when arriving, as it's a good place to start looking for accommodation.

BICYCLE & MOTORCYCLE

You can hire bicycles for around Rs 25 per day. Heera Cycle Store (☎ 2523525; ⏰ 7.30am-9pm), near Hotel Udai Niwas, hires out bicycles/mopeds/motorcycles for Rs 25/150/300 per day.

AROUND UDAIPUR

Kumbalgarh

An incredible stone fort compound, Kumbalgarh (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; ⏰ 8am-6pm) is situated 1100m skyward in the Aravalli hills. Built by Maharaja Kumba in the 15th century, the colossal structure practically touches the sky, summoning up the might of Rajput imagination.

It was the most important Mewar fort after Chittor, and rulers, sensibly, used to retreat here in times of danger. Unsurprisingly it was taken only once in its history, and even then it took the combined armies of Mughal emperor Akbar and of Amber and Marwar to breach its defences, and they only managed to hang on to it for two days.

The fort walls stretch some 36km and enclose around 360 temples, as well as palaces, gardens, baoris and 700 cannon bunkers.

If you stay in Kumbalgarh, you can trek from your hotel to the fort, a dramatic way to approach and reinforce the sense of its impenetrability.

The big wildlife sanctuary (Indian/foreigner Rs 10/100; ⏰ dawn-dusk) here is known for its wolves. Other wildlife includes chowsinghas (four-horned antelope), leopards and sloth bears. The period from March to June, when water is scarce, is the best time to see animals. You need permission from the forest department in nearby Kelwara to enter. All hotels can arrange three-hour horse or jeep safaris – Shivika Lake Hotel (☎ 02934-285078; shivikalake@rediffmail.com) in Ranakpur arranges jeep tours at a cost of Rs 600 per person, which covers all admission fees.

Karni Palace Hotel (☎ 02594-242033; Bus Stand Rd, Kelwara; s/d from Rs 500/750, ste Rs 1500/2000) Backing onto lovely cornfields, this hotel has slopped on the paint, but it's squeaky clean and popular with groups.

Kumbhal Castle (☎ 02594-242171; www.kumbhalcastle.com; s/d Rs 1500/1800), 3km from the fort, has plain, good-value rooms with bright bedspreads, window seats, shared balconies and good views.

Aodhi Hotel (☎ 02594-242341; crs@udaipur.hrhindia.com; s/d Rs 3000/3500; ❄ 🏊), about 5km from the fort, is an appealing, blissfully tranquil hotel, with an inviting pool and winter campfires.

There are several RSTC buses to/from Udaipur (Rs 35, 3½ hours). Some stop in Kelwara, 7km away, some at the Aodhi Hotel, from where it's a 2km walk to the fort. Hiring a taxi from Udaipur means you can visit both Ranakpur and Kumbalgarh in a day – many travellers ask around to fill the car and share the expense (Rs 1050).

Ranakpur

Ninety kilometres north of Udaipur, Ranakpur (admission free, camera/video Rs 50/100; ⏰ Jains 6am-7pm, non-Jains noon-5pm) is another incredible feat of Jain devotion. Carved, as always, using milk white marble, the complicated series of 29 halls, supported by a forest of 1444 pillars (no two alike), is the finest in Rajasthan, and one the most important in India. The devotion of its builders is encapsulated in the loving carving, and the pale interior has an unparalleled sense of space and harmony.

The main temple is called the Chaumukha Mandir (Four-Faced Temple); it's dedicated to Adinath and was built in 1439. Within the complex are two other Jain temples to Neminath and Parasnath, and a Sun Temple. About

With small, cosy cottages set amid leafy, pretty gardens, Shivika Lake Hotel (☎ 02934-285078; shivikalake@rediffmail.com; r Rs 400-1200;) is an undisturbed, rustic place to stay. The knowledgeable family arranges forest safaris and guides for short or longer treks. There's a restaurant (dishes Rs 40 to 100).

A classy new resort situated deep in mango country, Ranakpur Hill Resort (☎ 02934-286411; www.ranakpurhillresort.com; Ranakpur Rd, Post Sadri; s/d from Rs 1500/1800, tents Rs 1800;) has an inviting pool and enormous restaurant. Rooms are generously proportioned, with shiny bathrooms and bouncy beds.

Sixty-five kilometres northwest of Udaipur is Aranyawas (☎ 9829699413; www.aranyawas.com; Maga Village; r Rs 1800/2500), a secluded and stunning chalet buried deep among fruit trees and forests. Panthers and bears roam the nearby woods, and most rooms – with balconies and sleep-inducing beds – overlook a stream running through a valley. The restaurant serves cheap and tasty food.

The Maharani Bagh Orchard Retreat (☎ 02934-285105; balsamand@sify.com; s/d Rs 2400/3000;), 4km from Ranakpur and set within a lush mango orchard, offers accommodation in wood-furnished cottages with terraces, surrounded by green lawns.

Lots of buses run to from Udaipur to Ranakpur (Rs 35, three hours, hourly), but it's hard to visit both Ranakpur and Kumbalgarh by public transport in a day; a taxi taking in both from Udaipur costs around Rs 1050.

Jaisamand Lake

Located 48km southeast of Udaipur, this startlingly huge artificial lake (88 sq km) is one of Asia's largest. Created by damming the Gomti River, it was built by Maharaja Jai Singh in the 17th century. There are beautiful marble chhatris around the 330m-long, 35m-high embankment, and Udaipur maharanis' summer palaces are dotted on surrounding hilltops.

Jaisamand Island Resort (☎ 0294-2431401; www.lakend.com; s/d from Rs 1800/2700; Oct-Feb;) is a modern but somewhat shabby hotel in a wonderful, secluded location 20 minutes by boat across the lake. The pool has a brilliant setting but isn't always full. Discounts are often available. A return boat ride to the resort costs Rs 150, while a small/medium/large circuit of the lake costs Rs 30/50/80.

There are frequent buses from Udaipur (Rs 20, 1½ hours, hourly).

Dungarpur

About 110km south of Udaipur, splendid Dungarpur, the City of Hills, was founded in the 13th century. You can visit the wonderful deserted old palace, Juna Mahal (admission Rs 100; 9am-5pm). It has lots of murals (including the Kamasutra hidden discreetly in a cupboard), and even willow-pattern plates embedded in the walls. The former royal hunting lodge, on a nearby hilltop, has sensational views. Buy tickets from Udai Bilas Palace (below).

The beautiful Deo Somnath Temple, about 25km out of town, dates from the 12th century.

Hotel Pratibha Palace (☎ 02964-230775; Shastri Colony; d Rs 100-150) has tiny, quite good rooms that are nothing flash but OK value for money.

Udai Bilas Palace (☎ 02964-230808; www.udaibilaspalace.com; s/d/ste Rs 2750/3500/4000;), set on sparkling Gaib Sagar, is a fantastic place to stay – a lakeside palace partly converted into a hotel. It's built around the extraordinary Ek Thambia Mahal (One-Pillared Palace), and rooms retain their original Art Deco and 1940s furnishings; some have a lakeview balcony. The gorgeous pool is designed so that it seems to merge with the lake.

Frequent RSTC buses travel to and from Udaipur (Rs 50, three hours, hourly). There's also a snail's-pace train to and from Udaipur (2nd/1st class Rs 21/154, four to five hours, 114km).

MT ABU

Mt Abu rises high above southern Rajasthan, cool on the heels of the baking desert plains. It's a welcome hill station retreat, nestled along pedolo-filled Nakki Lake, which attracts hordes of weekenders from neighbouring Gujarat. The tremendous wooded valleys that line the winding drive to the summit lend some longed-for Alpine beauty to a Rajasthan excursion, and house wildlife including bears, wild boars, langoors (wild donkeys), Indian civets, hyenas and sambars. There are also plenty of botanical delights on offer, most notably a number of rare orchids, and excellent trekking opportunities for all levels of fitness.

Mt Abu is more widely known as a pilgrimage centre, particularly for Jains, and the clusters of once stately summer retreats – and damp brick hotels – are often filled with the seasonally devout. The extraordinary Jain Dilwara temples rival most in India though, and the humble presence of Brahma Kumaris followers gives Mt Abu its place in the eternal sun.

It's organised mayhem around Diwali, and best avoided; May sees the Summer Festival (p166), while December is the time of the Winter Festival (p166). Note that evening temperatures can catch you cold, so remember to pack something warm.

Orientation & Information

Mt Abu is on a hilly plateau about 22km long by 6km wide, 27km from the nearest train station (Abu Rd). The main part of the town extends along the road from Abu Rd down to Nakki Lake.

There's a Tourist Reception Centre (☎ 235151; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat, closed 2nd Sat of month), opposite the bus stand, that has a free map. The Bank of Baroda (Rajendra Rd; 10am-3pm Mon-Fri, 10am-12.30pm Sat) changes travellers cheques and currency, and does credit-card advances. There's an SBBJ ATM near Hotel Samrat International. Shree Krishna Telecommunications (Main Market; per hr Rs 40; 8am-10pm) is a reliable internet café.

NAKKI LAKE

Scenic Nakki Lake is a big attraction and the town's focus. It's so-named because, according to legend, it was scooped out by a god using his nakh (nails). It's a pleasant stroll around the perimeter – look for the strange rock formations. The best-known, Toad Rock, looks just like it's about to hop into the lake. The 14th-century Raghunath Temple (dawn-dusk) stands beside the lake. You can hire a pedalo or a more romantic shikara (gondala-like boat) at the edge of the lake near the temple; a two-person shikara costs Rs 100 for 30 minutes, while a two-/four-person pedalo costs Rs 50/100.

VIEWPOINTS

Sunset Point is a popular and lovely place to watch the setting sun. Other viewpoints include Honeymoon Point and the Crags. You can follow the white arrows along a path to the summit of Shanti Shikhar, west of Adhar Devi Temple, where there are panoramic views.

The best view over the lake is from the terrace of the maharaja of Jaipur's former summer palace, now Jaipur House (see p233).

DILWARA TEMPLES

These temples (Jains dawn-dusk, non-Jains noon-6pm) rank among India's finest temple architecture. The artisans were paid according to the amount of dust they collected, encouraging them to carve ever more intricately. Whatever their inducement, there are two temples in which the work is dizzyingly intense, a collection of delicate milky kaleidoscopes, with carving so fine you want to break it off and eat it.

The older of the temples is the Vimal Vasahi, started in 1031 and dedicated to the first tirthankar, Adinath. It took 14 years to build and cost Rs 180.5 million. The central shrine has an image of Adinath, while around the courtyard are 52 identical cells, each enclosing a cross-legged open-eyed tirthankar. Forty-eight pillars form the courtyard entrance. In front of the temple stands the House of Elephants, with a procession of elephants marching to the temple entrance, some damaged by marauding Mughals.

The later Luna Vasahi is dedicated to Neminath, the 22nd tirthankar, and was built in 1230 by the brothers Tejpal and Vastupal for a mere Rs 125.9 million. Like Vimal, they were government ministers. Here the marble carving took 2500 workers 15 years to create. The filigree is so fine that, in places, the marble becomes almost transparent. In particular, the many-layered lotus flower that dangles from the centre of the dome is an astonishing piece of work.

The temple is remarkably well preserved, employing several full-time stone carvers to maintain the work.

There are another three temples in the enclosure – Bhimashah Pittalhar (built 1315–1433), with a four-ton, five-metal statue, Mahaveerswami (1582), a small shrine flanked by painted elephants, and the three-storey Khartar Vasahi – but none compete with Luna and Vimal Vasahi.

Photography is not allowed (though photographs are sold). As at other Jain temples, leather articles (belts as well as shoes) have to be left at the entrance and menstruating women are warned away.

You can stroll out to Dilwara from the town in less than an hour, or take a shared taxi (see p233).

BRAHMA KUMARIS SPIRITUAL UNIVERSITY & MUSEUM

The number of white-clad people around town is not just a coincidence – they're studying at Brahma Kumaris Spiritual University (www.bkwsu.com) This organisation teaches that all religions lead to God and are equally valid, and that the principles of each should be studied. The university's aim is the establishment of universal peace through 'the impartation of spiritual knowledge and training of easy raja yoga meditation'. For many, the teachings are intensely powerful; there are over 4500 branches in 70 countries. For others, it gives off a spooky New Age–sect vibe. You can decide for yourself. An introductory course takes a minimum of three days. There's no charge – the organisation is supported by donations.

There's a Brahma Kumaris museum (☎ 223260; admission free; ⏲ 8am-8pm) in the town, the entrance labelled Gateway to Paradise. It outlines the university's teachings, and attempts answers to teasers such as 'How can world peace be established?'.

If you walk past the museum you'll find Adhar Devi Temple, a cave temple reached via a steep staircase. Early morning services are powerful and popular, and well worth the climb.

TREKKING

Charles from Mt Abu Treks (☎ 91-9414154854; Hotel Lake Palace) arranges superlative, tailor-made treks ranging from gentle village visits to longer, wilder expeditions into Mt Abu Wildlife Reserve. He's passionate and extremely knowledgeable about the local flora and fauna. Prices vary from Rs 380 per person for a half-day trek or Rs 530 for a full day (including lunch) to Rs 1250 for an overnight village trek (including all meals).

The staff at Shri Ganesh Hotel (☎ 235062; lalit_ganesh@yahoo.co.in) also organise treks into the hills – one in the morning and one to see the sunset. The routes vary and the level of difficulty depends on the fitness of the group.

It's common to spot bears as well as other wildlife. It's unsafe to wander unguided in the hills, as travellers have been mugged.

Tours

The RTDC has five-hour tours of the main sites, leaving from the bus stand at 8.30am and 1.30pm (later in summer). Tours cost Rs 55 excluding admission and camera fees. The afternoon tour finishes at Sunset Point. Reserve at the enquiries counter (☎ 235434) at the bus stand.

Sleeping

The town of Mt Abu mostly consists of hotels. The high season lasts from mid-April to June, during and after Diwali (October/November, when you need to book way ahead, prices become ridiculous, and you cannot move for crowds), and from Christmas to New Year. Many midrange and top-end places offer off-season discounts (30% to 50%).

Most hotels have an ungenerous 9am check-out time.

Usually there are touts working the bus and taxi stands. In the low season ignore them, but at peak times they can save you legwork, as they'll know where to find the last available room.

Shri Ganesh Hotel (☎ 235062; lalit_ganesh@yahoo.co.in; dm Rs 50, with shower Rs 100, r with shared bathroom Rs 100-300, r with private bathroom Rs 250-450; 💻) This serene place has a peaceful rooftop, loads of helpful local information, a guest kitchen and good home cooking. There's yoga on the roof in the mornings, cookery lessons, and trekking every morning and evening.

Retiring rooms (Abu Rd train station; d Rs 150) Convenient if you're catching an early-morning train.

Hotel Saraswati (☎ 238887; r Rs 150-400) Popular and efficient, this is an appealing place in a peaceful setting behind the polo ground with a good range of well-kept rooms. Prices can rise by Rs 200 at the weekend.

Mount Hotel (☎ 235150; Dilwara Rd; s/d Rs 400/800) This is a lovely, homy place with seven nicely renovated rooms, with wooden furnishings, that feel like they belong somewhere in Sweden. It's on the road to the Dilwara temples, in a tranquil location with a small lawn.

Hotel Samrat International (☎ 235173; Rajendra Rd; s with shared bathroom from Rs 170, s/d with private bathroom from Rs 450/750) This well-run hotel has a hotchpotch of rooms, from tight-fit doubles to attractive, spacious suites with sheltered balconies overlooking the polo ground (the Romance Suite is confronting). The street traffic below is hectic by Mt Abu standards.

Hotel Lake Palace (☎ 237154; r Rs 600-1200) This is a spacious, friendly place overlooking a small garden; it has unfussy, appealing rooms, some with semiprivate lake-view terrace areas. Avoid it during rainy season, when damp crawls in during the night.

Kesar Bhavan Palace (☎ 235219; Sunset Point Rd; r Rs 1600-1800, ste Rs 2850; 🚭) This heritage property is perched high up among trees and has appealing leafy views, but feels a little stark. The well-thought-out, comfortable, marble-floored rooms all have balconies, and the suites are on two levels. Better value than most.

Kishangarh House (☎ 238092; www.royalkishangarh.com; Rajendra Marg; cottages/d Rs 1700/2700) This former summer residence of the maharaja of Kishangarh has been lovingly restored into a top-notch heritage hotel. It has impressive rooms – some with marble floors – extravagantly high ceilings and a delightful, sun-filled drawing room. The big gardens are lovingly tended.

Palace Hotel (☎ 238673; Bikaner House, Delwara Rd; s/d Rs 2500/3000, ste Rs 3500/4500) Near the Dilwara temples is this huge palace, built in 1893 by Sir Swinton Jacob, which resembles a Scottish stately manor, with tree-shaded gardens, a private lake, tennis courts and a restaurant. Rooms are tasteful and massive, with bathtubs the whole family can enjoy.

Udai Garh (☎ 237018; www.udaigarh.com; Rajendra Marg; r Rs 2050-2950; ⛋) This addition to the upmarket-hotel scene has a wonderful location atop a steep incline. The rooms are flashy, but damp and a touch overpriced. The garden restaurant has the best setting in town.

Connaught House (☎ 238560; welcom@ndf.vsnl.net.in; s/d/cottages Rs 2800/3300/3500) Connaught House is a lovely, stuck-in-time colonial bungalow that looks like an English cottage, with lots of sepia photographs, dark wood, angled ceilings and a gorgeous shady garden. Suite 28 is the best pick. Newer rooms in a separate block are attractive and have good views, though they have less character. It's owned by the maharaja of Jodhpur.

Jaipur House (☎ 235176; www.royalfamilyjaipur.com; junior ste s/d Rs 2500/3500, ste Rs 4500-4900) Perched on a hilltop overlooking the lake, this was built by the maharaja of Jaipur in 1897. Opulent suites overlook the town from a suitably lofty height. If you're not really a suite person, the junior suites in the former servants' quarters verge on the simple.

Eating

Most holidaymakers here are Gujarati – tough customers when it comes to cuisine, hence the profusion of good-quality restaurants.

Kanak Dining Hall (Rajendra Rd; dishes Rs 25-55) The excellent all-you-can-eat Gujarati thalis (Rs 55) are contenders for Mt Abu's best; there's seating indoors in the busy dining hall or outside under a canopy.

Arbuda (Arbuda Circle; dishes Rs 25-75) A lovely big restaurant set on a sweeping curved open terrace that's filled with chrome chairs, this place specialises in Punjabi and South Indian food, and does a fine paneer tikka.

King's Food (dishes Rs 25-90) This busy, open-to-the-street fast-food joint has the usual have-a-go menu and offers Chinese, Punjabi and South Indian food, and good lassis. The breakfast menu is the same as the lunch menu.

Shere Punjab Hotel (dishes Rs 25-200) This place in the market has bargain Punjabi and Chinese food. There's fried brain for those in need of a protein boost.

Jaipur House (snacks Rs 60-150, dishes Rs 100-235; ⏰ noon-3pm & 7-11pm) This place has divine views over the hills, lake and the town's twinkling lights from its lovely open terrace, with food that measures up. Also a brilliant place for a drink.

Getting There & Away

As you enter Mt Abu there's a tollgate; bus and car passengers are charged Rs 10, plus Rs 10 for a car (keep change handy).

BUS

From 6am to 9pm buses make the 27km climb from Abu Rd train station up to Mt Abu (Rs 18, one hour, half-hourly). They leave from outside the bus stand, next to the ticket booth.

A direct bus from Mt Abu is usually faster and more convenient than a train from Abu Rd station. RSTC buses (☎ enquiries 235434) go to Jaipur (express/deluxe Rs 250/270, 12 hours, two daily), Udaipur (Rs 92, 4½ hours, six daily), Ahmedabad (Rs 115, 6½ hours), Jodhpur (Rs 140, seven hours, one daily), Ajmer (express/deluxe Rs 195/220, 10 hours, two daily), and Jaisalmer (Rs 227, 11 hours, one daily). Some RSTC buses go all the way to Mt Abu, while others terminate at Abu Rd train station.

Buses belonging to private bus companies leave from the private bus stand, north of the polo ground, and serve similar destinations and cost about the same.

TAXI

A taxi for up to six people into town from Abu Rd train station costs about Rs 250. Some taxi drivers claim that this is only as far as the bus stand and ask an extra fee (as much as Rs 50) to take you to your hotel.

TRAIN

Abu Rd, the railhead for Mt Abu, is on the broad-gauge line between Delhi and Mumbai via Ahmedabad. In Mt Abu, above the Tourist Reception Centre, there's a railway reservation centre (⏰ 8am-2pm), which has quotas on most of the express trains.

The Ahmedabad Mail (No 9106) leaves at 1.10pm and reaches Ahmedabad at 5.35pm (2nd class Rs 54, 185km). The Delhi Mail (No 9105) leaves Abu Rd at 2.20pm, arriving in Jaipur (2nd class Rs 104, 440km) at 11.10pm and Delhi at 5.20am (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 439/1084/1414, 749km). The Adi Jat (No 9223) to Jodhpur leaves at 3.20pm (2nd class Rs 83, five hours, 269km). For Bhuj and the rest of the Kathiawar peninsula in Gujarat, change trains at Palanpur, 53km south of Abu Rd.

Getting Around

Local buses go to various sites around Mt Abu, but it's easier to take the five-hour tour (see opposite). To hire a jeep for local sightseeing costs around Rs 450/900 per half-day/day (bargain hard and you may bring it down). For Dilwara you can take a shared taxi (jeep). These leave when full from near the market area (Rs 5 per person, or Rs 50 all to yourself).

There are no autorickshaws in Mt Abu, but it's easy to get around on foot. Unique to the town is the baba-gari, a porter-pulled handcart. They cart your luggage for Rs 15 or even one/two people for Rs 20/30.

AROUND MT ABU

Guru Shikhar

At the end of the plateau, 15km from Mt Abu, is Guru Shikhar, Rajasthan's highest point, at 1721m. A road goes almost all the way to the summit and the Atri Rishi Temple, complete with a priest and fantastic views. It's visited as part of the RDTC tour, or a jeep will cost Rs 400 return.

Achalgarh

A handful of hilltop Jain temples and an ancient Shiva temple 11km north, perched above a rural village, offer spectacular views of the countryside and are well worth a visit.

Mt Abu Wildlife Sanctuary

This 290-sq-km sanctuary (Indian/foreigner Rs 10/50, jeep Rs 100; ⌚ 8am-5pm), 5.5km northeast of Mt Abu, on a large plateau, is home to panthers, sambars, foxes, wild boars and bears. It's about a 3km walk from the Dilwara temples. Contact Mt Abu Treks (p231) to arrange an overnight stay.

WESTERN RAJASTHAN

Glorious Meherangarh fort mushrooms from beneath a huge rocky cliff to dominate the once indomitable Blue City. At dusk you feel a part of a real-life movie, as the camera-shy palace peeks over awesome stone walls, and citizens mill about in the hemmed-in chaos below. Jodhpur proper stretches beyond the 16th-century border, but it's the immediacy and grandeur of the old city, once a stop on a vital trade route, that has more and more travellers raving.

New Jodhpur is dirty and – bless those errant cows and those open sewers – smelly, but dive into the Brahmin-blue laneways of the old city to find boxes of snuff and boxed-cuff trousers (oh yes, the baggy-pants brigade started here!) bejewelled regalia and sensual spices – you name it, you can get it, half-price and giftwrapped. There's hassle here too though, particularly around the clock tower, but it's nothing a shopping expedition down Palace Rd, a foray into the nearby craft villages, or an excursion to the Mandore gardens can't cure.

Jodhpur was founded in 1459 by Rao Jodha, a chief of the Rajput clan known as the Rathores, and the city grew out of the profits of opium, sandalwood, dates and copper. Rathore kingdom was once cheerily known as Marwar (the Land of Death), but today its moustached men are more about smiling for the camera.

In October, Jodhpur holds the Marwar Festival (p166).

Orientation

The Tourist Reception Centre, train stations and bus stand are all outside the old city. High Court Rd runs from the Raika Bagh train station, past the Umaid gardens, and along the city wall towards the Jodhpur train station.

Information

There's a UTI ATM opposite Sojati Gate; there are also ICICI and IDBI ATMs on Airport Rd. For internet access, there are loads of cheap places around town, usually charging Rs 20 per hour.

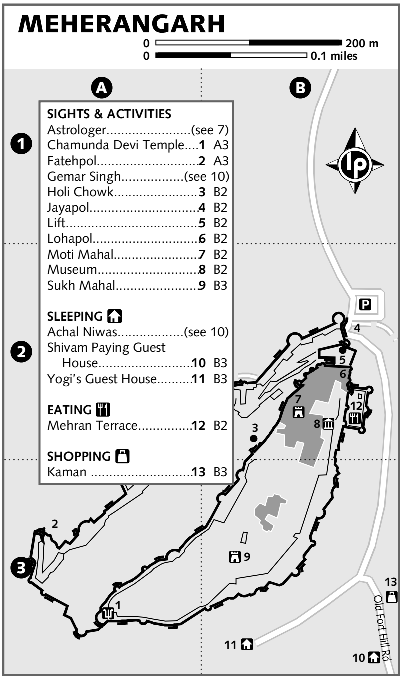
Sights & Activities



MEHERANGARH

Still run by the maharaja of Jodhpur, Meherangarh (Majestic Fort; Map p236; Indian/foreigner Rs 250, Indian camera/audio guide Rs 50/150; ⌚ 9am-5pm) is a captivating place to visit. It's sprawled across a 125m-high hill – as you approach, the height of the walls becomes apparent – a mesmerising, formidable feat of construction. Cast off your audio-tour prejudices, as this tour, covered by the foreign-visitor admission charge (which also includes camera fees), is terrific, with a mix of history, information and dramatically narrated anecdotes. It's a real treat to wander around at your leisure, taking a fix of information when you feel like it. Guides are available for around Rs 200.

The fort follows the lines of the hill. The fort's seven gates include the Jayapol, built by Maharaja Man Singh in 1806 following his victory over Jaipur and Bikaner, and the Fatehpol (Victory Gate), erected by Maharaja Ajit Singh to commemorate his defeat of the Mughals. The second gate in the fort is still scarred by cannonball hits: this was a fort that earned its keep. The final gate is the Lohapol (Iron Gate), beside which are numerous tragic tiny hand prints, the sati marks of Maharaja Man Singh's widows, who threw themselves upon his funeral pyre in 1843. They still attract devotional attention and are usually covered in red powder.

Inside the fort there is a deep-terracotta-coloured, latticed network of courtyards and palaces, beautiful examples of the asymmetry and symmetry that marks Rajput buildings. They house a museum, with a splendid collection of the trappings of Indian royalty, including some amazing howdahs (seats for carrying people on an elephant's back – essential for glittering processions), miniatures, armoury and ephemera – from 19th-century ivory-inlaid ladies' dumbbells to camel-bone carpet weights.

The palaces have evocative names, such as the Moti Mahal (Pearl Palace), Sukh Mahal (Pleasure Palace) and Phool Mahal (Flower Palace) – the latter is beautifully decorated, using a curious concoction of gold leaf, glue and cow's urine. The inner courtyard, Holi Chowk, was used for the Holi festival; the women were able to view the festival from above. The small marble seat here was used for coronations from the 17th century.

At the southern end of the fort, old cannons look out from the ramparts over the sheer drop to the old town beneath. There are magical views, and you can clearly hear voices and city sounds swept up by the air currents. The peaceful Chamunda Devi Temple, dedicated to Durga, stands at this end of the fort.

A lift will whisk up disabled or weary travellers for Rs 15. There's even a fort astrologer (☎ 2548790, ext 39; 9am-1pm & 2-5pm); Mr Sharma charges Rs 150/300 for a 15-/30-minute (basic/detailed) consultation.

JASWANT THADA

This milky white marble memorial (Map p235; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/20, camera Rs 25 9am-5pm) to Maharaja Jaswant Singh II is an array of whimsical domes – it's a welcome, peaceful spot after the hubbub of the city, and the view across to the fort is superb. The cenotaph, built in 1899, was followed by the royal crematorium and three other cenotaphs that stand nearby. Look out for the memorial to a peacock that flew into the funeral pyre. There are some beautiful jalis (carved marble lattice screens), and it's the definitive tomb with a view.

CLOCK TOWER & MARKETS

The clock tower (Map p235) is an old city landmark, surrounded by the vibrant Sardar Market. Heading westwards from here, you get deep into the old city's commercial heart, with alleys leading to bazaars selling vegetables, spices, sweets, silver and handicrafts.

UMAID BHAWAN PALACE

Sometimes called the Chittar Palace (Map p235) because of the local Chittar sandstone used, this immense pink-and-white monster was begun in 1929. It was designed by the president of the British Royal Institute of Architects for Maharaja Umaid Singh, and took 3000 workers 15 years to complete. This was apparently a royal job-creation programme during a time of severe drought – very philanthropic.

Maharaja Umaid Singh died in 1947; his successor still lives in part of the building. The rest has been turned into a hotel (see p239).

UMAID GARDENS & SADAR GOVERNMENT MUSEUM

The Umaid gardens contain the Sadar Government Museum (Map p235; admission Rs 3 ⌚ 10am-4.30pm Sat-Thu), which feels charmingly frozen in time. The ill-labelled exhibits include weapons and 6th- to 10th-century sculptures.

Courses

Parul's Kathak Dance Academy (☎ 2759355; preciousparul@rediffmail.com) offers intensive one-on-one courses in classical Kathak, including an audio recording so you can keep in step after class. Prices vary depending on level and duration.

Tours

The Tourist Reception Centre (p234) runs four-hour city tours (Rs 90, excluding admission fees) from 9am to 1pm, and 2pm to 6pm. The tours take in the Umaid Bhawan Palace, Meherangarh, Jaswant Thada and Mandore gardens.

Jodhpur is known for its village safaris – trips by jeep to local Bishnoi villages, potters and dhurrie (rug) weavers. The Bishnoi are a tribal sect whose belief in the sanctity of the environment, and the need to protect trees and animals dates from the 15th century. It's a well-worn trail, so it can feel touristy – your enjoyment depends on how good your guide is. Just about every hotel organises similar excursions; all are farily similar, and charge around Rs 450 to 550 per person for a half-day trip, including lunch. Marwar Eco Cultural Tours & Travels (☎ 5123095; www.nativeplanet.org/tours/india) is a recommended private operator.

Alternatively, friendly Chhota Ram Prajapat (☎ 2696744; chhotaramprajapat@rediffmail.com) offers simple hut accommodation (per person including dinner Rs 500) for up to eight guests in nearby Salawas, the main artistan village.

Gemar Singh (☎ 2619688; gemar@rediffmail.com; Shivam Guest House) arranges homestays, camping, desert walks and camel safaris to Osiyan and surrounding Rajput and Bishnoi villages. The cost is around Rs 700 per person per day (minimum two people).

Sleeping

As usual, if a rickshaw driver is clamouring to take you somewhere, it's probably because he is going to receive a juicy commission. You can avoid this by getting dropped at the tower and walking the rest of the way (note: there's only one clock tower). As many travellers arrive by train or bus late at night, it helps to arrange a pick-up service with your hotel.

The places around Navchokiya in the old city are quieter and infinitely more interesting.

BUDGET

Cosy Guest House (Map p235; ☎ 2612066; cosyguesthouse@yahoo.com; Navchokiya; rooftop Rs 60, tents Rs 150, s/d with shared bathroom Rs 200/250, d with private bathroom Rs 350-650; ❄) Filled with young adventurers (or the young at heart), this is a happening place in the heart of the old city. It's a 500-year-old blue-coloured house with several levels of higgledy-piggledy rooftops and a mix of rooms, some monastic, others decked out with AC. If you've got heavy bags, don't attempt the steep climb. Ask the rickshaw for Navchokiya Rd, from where the guesthouse is signposted, or call genial Mr Joshi.

Shivam Paying Guest House (Map p236; ☎ 2610688; shivamgh@hotmail.com; s/d with shared bathroom Rs 125/150, s/d with private bathroom from Rs 175/200) Near the clock tower, this is a quiet, hassle-free option run by a gentle, helpful family, with cosy rooms and a lovely little rooftop restaurant.

Durag Niwas Guest House (Map p235; ☎ 2512385; www.durag-niwas.com; 1 Old Public Park; r Rs 150-650; ❄) This is a friendly, family-run place set away from the hustle of the old city. Good home-cooked veg dishes are available, and there's a cushion-floored, sari-curtained area on the roof for hanging out. There's also a fabulous deal for long-termers: a spacious double room costs Rs 4500 per month, including full board. The Maharaja Room (Rs 650) is not for the prudish – it sleeps eight people.

Blue House (Map p235; ☎ 2621396; bluehouse36@hotmail.com; Moti Chowk; r Rs 150-750) This popular place has been overhauled in recent times, with some death-defying extensions. The two rooms with a shared bathroom and small seating area facing the fort are still the pick, though most of the rest of the rooms are cramped and difficult to access.

Achal Niwas (Map p236; ☎ 2618004; r Rs 200-500) Around the corner from Shivam Paying Guesthouse, this mellow place is a smart budget option with a romantic, quiet rooftop, and some rooms with excellent fort views.

Yogi's Guest House (Map p236; ☎ 2643436; s/d with shared bathroom Rs 200/250, r with private bathroom Rs 650) Yogi's is a classic travellers' hang-out, situated at the base of the fort walls. Set in the 500-year-old Rajpurohitji-ki-Haveli, rooms are smart, spacious and, more often than not, full. The charming and chatty owner operates at a million miles an hour, so be prepared for an authentic Indian experience. There's a stunning rooftop restaurant with panoramic fort views and good food (try the egg curry). It's well signposted off the lanes leading to the fort.

Krishna Prakash Heritage Haveli (Map p235; ☎ 2633448; Nayabas, Killikhana; r Rs 200-1200) This heartily decorated heritage hotel is a good choice, with impressive suites, big bathrooms, a relaxing terrace, and pleasant, professional staff. The Marwar thali is amazing.

Durag Villas Guest House (Map p235; ☎ 2512298; 1 Old Public Park; r Rs 250-800;) Next door to Durag Niwas, this has simple, good-value rooms – the more expensive rooms are worth the investment. It's a quiet, relaxed place set around a leafy courtyard.

Haveli Guest House (Map p235; ☎ 2614615; Makrana Mohalla; r Rs 250-850;) This 250-year-old building inside the walled city is a popular place. Many rooms have semibalconies and fort views. The rooftop vegetarian restaurant (dishes Rs 30 to 60) is unimaginative, but has excellent views. Rickshaws sometimes take travellers to copycat places so check you're in the right place; this one faces a stagnant step-well.

MIDRANGE

Saji Sanwri Guest House (Map p235; ☎ 2440305; www.sajisanwri.com; d Rs 200-950;) This is a gorgeous, busily decorated 350-year-old haveli run by the warm-hearted Indu. It has 10 delightful, flowery rooms with spotless private bath-

MYSTICAL MUSIC

Rajasthan is a living study in ethno-musicology. Songs are often inspired by daily life – the drawing of precious water, or the preparation of a hearty meal – though Rajashthanis will at times turn to the haunting ballads of Moomal Mahendra, Dhola-Maru and other legendary lovers and heroes.

There are two traditional classes of musicians in Rajasthan: the langas of western Rajasthan, who are favoured mostly by Muslim audiences and have a distinct Sufi flavour, and the manganiars, whose breaks possess a more Hindustani bent.

Then there are the sapera snake charmers who blow into two-tubed poongas, and the bhopas, priestlike singers who play the village circuit in times of sickness or poor harvest. The mirasis and jogis of Mewar are famed for their gurgling voices – jogis sing without accompaniment – while the maand are highly sophisticated folk singers, once heard only in royal courts.

Where there is song, there is also dance, and Rajasthanis are never backward in shuffling forward. Aside from the Holi festival staple the ghooma gait – a series of gentle, graceful pirouettes – there is the teerah taali of the Kamad community in Pokaran, a boisterous dance in honour of the theft deity Baba Ramdeo. It's an unusual spectacle where men play a four-stringed instrument called a chau-tara while the women move with dozens of manjeeras (small cymbals) tied to their bodies. Similarly remarkable is the chari dance, popular in the Kisherigarh region, which is performed with an illuminated clay pot nursed on the dancer's head.

In Shekhawati, the kacchi ghodi is skilfully performed on horses. Holding naked swords aloft, the riders move to the beating of drums while a singer narrates the exploits of notorious bandits. In Bikaner, Jasnathis, revered for their Tantric powers, dance on flaming coals until the music peaks and the dancers fall into a trance, while the drum dance of Jalore sees five men with huge drums strapped around their necks accompany a sword-swallower who simultaneously juggles.

From rustic resonators to thunderous kettledrums, Rajasthani instruments are equally unusual. Handcrafted by the musicians themselves, they include the morchang, a handheld trumpet that plays fast in-and-out sounds; the sarangi, a popular bowed instrument; and the kamayacha, a 16-stringed langa speciality that is played with a long wooden bow made of horse-tail hair. The kharta (a metal castanet) is a favourite with saints and seers, while the algoza of the Ajmer region is the equivalent of a South Asian bagpipe.

Concerts are held regularly for tourists in all major cities, usually in upmarket hotels. For the more adventurous, tour operators will arrange a visit to the villages themselves – particularly in the west – and an unforgettable backstage pass to rhythmic Rajasthan.

rooms and the corner room (Rs 750) is sun-filled. The family still lives here, and can show you their small sitting-room museum.

Govind Hotel (Map p235; ☎ 2622758; www.govindhotel.com; r Rs 350-900) This unfussy place is well set up for travellers, with helpful management (who refuse to pay commission) and a location just a five-minute walk from the Jodhpur train station. All rooms are tiled and fairly smart, with excellent bathrooms; there's also a rooftop restaurant with fort views (an oasis in this area).

Singhvi's Haveli (Map p235; ☎ 2624293; Ramdevji ka Chowk, Navchokiya; r Rs 200-1200) This family-run, beautiful red-sandstone haveli with exquisitely carved jalis is an understated gem. Rooms have been recently upgraded, and range from the simple to the magnificent Maharani Suite with 10 windows and a fort view (Rs 1200). The romantic restaurant on the rooftop has home-cooked dishes (Rs 20 to 100) and is decorated by sari curtains and floor cushions.

Indrashan (☎ 2440665; 593 High Court Colony; r Rs 900) Bhavna and Chandrashekar Singh run this wonderful homestay situated 10 minutes by rickshaw from the clock tower. They have five rooms – more are planned – and the food is highly recommended (lunch or dinner Rs 225). They can also organise homestays in other cities in Rajasthan.

Devi Bhawan (☎ 2511067; devibhawan@satyamonline.com; 1 Ratanada Area; s/d/ste Rs 850/1200/1500; ❄ 🏊) This welcome green oasis is excellent value, though a bit out of the way. There's a good restaurant here (veg thali Rs 150) and a swimming pool here.

Newtons Manor (☎ 2430686; www.newtonsmanor.com; 86 Jawahar Colony, Ratanada; r Rs 1095-2195; 💻) Strictly Victorian in manner, Newtons Manor has 10 elegant rooms decorated with lots of antique furniture in a fussy, old-colonial style, and a good-sized billiard table. The management also has a 9-acre resort on the Madore Hwy that has offers safaris and has a swimming pool.

Ratan Vilas (Map p235; ☎ /fax 2614418; ratanvilas_jod@rediffmail.com; Old Loco Shed Rd, Ratanada; s/d Rs 1400/1650; ❄) Built in 1920 by the great polo player Maharaj Ratan Singhji of Raoti, this beauty from a bygone era is the real deal. It's quintessential colonial India, with manicured lawns, spacious villas and exceptional staff who prepare wonderful home-cooked meals.

Pal Haveli (Map p235; ☎ 2439615; www.palhaveli.com; Gulab Sagar; r Rs 1550-2250) Set around a courtyard and built by the thakur of Pal in 1847, this is the only original haveli in the old city. There are 12 charming rooms, mostly large and decorated in traditional heritage style.

Karni Bhawan (Map p235; ☎ 2512101; Palace Rd; r Rs 1650-2300, ste Rs 2950; ❄ 🏊) This place is a remodelled colonial bungalow that feels creepily modern, but is still ideal for families thanks to the peaceful lawns and fabulous new poolside restaurant. Rooms are heavy with dark wooden, traditional furnishings, but are clean and spacious.

TOP END

Ranbanka Palace (Map p235; ☎ 2512801; Airport Rd; r incl breakfast Rs 3500-4500; ❄ 💻 🏊) This slick setup next to Ajit Bhawan is much better value, but a lot less polished (although the vinyl shines bright). Still, rooms are well decked out, with Persian rugs and four-poster beds, and the restaurant is first rate.

Ajit Bhawan (Map p235; ☎ 2511410; www.ajitbhawan.com; Airport Rd; r Rs 4500-6000, tents Rs 7000, both incl breakfast; ❄ 🏊) Ajit Bhawan is the pick of Jodhpur. It's set well back from dusty Airport Rd in splendidly kept gardens, and behind the gracious main heritage building there is a series of stone cottages with dark wood furnishings. There's a world-class restaurant, sensational swimming pool (nonguests Rs 250) and gift shop. Other services include a wonderful collection of vintage cars that you can rent, such as a 1939 Chevrolet convertible.

Taj Hari Mahal Palace (Map p235; ☎ 2439700; fax 2624451; 5 Residency Rd; r US$185-325; 🏊) This flashy Taj number uses hybrid Marwar-Moghul design to good effect. Centred on a courtyard with a big lush swimming pool, it's the most exclusive place in Jodhpur, but pretty good value for a cheeky weekend.

Umaid Bhawan Palace (Map p235; ☎ 2510101; r US$375-600, ste US$1000-3500; ❄ 🏊) This monster 20th-century palace took 3000 artisans some 14 years to carve from red sandstone. It's like a grand parliament building with beds, and is well worth a visit, if not a night of decadence in a remote palace wing. It has a tennis court, indoor swimming pool, lush lawns and several restaurants (p240). Décor is somewhere between Art Deco and non-ironic 1970s gangster chic. Prices continue to soar, so it might be worth waiting for the off-season discount.

Eating & Drinking

While you're in Jodhpur, try a glass of makhania lassi, a filling saffron-flavoured variety of that milky goodness.

RESTAURANTS

Hotel Priya & Restaurant (Map p235; 181-2 Nai Sank, Sojati Gate; dishes Rs 15-60) If you can stomach the wasps and the petrol fumes, this street-facing place has a cheerful sense of hubbub, and serves up reliable North and South Indian cuisine. The thalis are good and there are sweets, too.

Mid Town (Map p235; Station Rd; dishes Rs 18-70) Mid Town is middle-class dining at its finest, with a choice of seating and good veg food. It serves some Rajasthani specialities, including some particular to Jodhpur, such as chakki-ka-sagh (wheat dumpling cooked in rich gravy) and kabuli (vegetables with rice, milk, bread and fruit).

Kalinga Restaurant (Map p235; Station Rd; dishes Rs 50-160) This AC-injected restaurant near the train station is smart and popular, with a dim ambience and yellow, segmented walls. There's a well-stocked bar, and tasty veg and nonveg Indian dishes – try the butter-soaked chicken – plus excellent pizza.

On the Rocks (Map p235; dishes Rs 50-260; 10am-2am, lunch noon-3pm, dinner 7.30-11pm) This is far and away the most jumping joint in Jodhpur. There's a garden restaurant (candlelit in the evening), frequented by families, that serves tasty Indian cuisine (try the mutter rogan josh Rs 130), including lots of barbecue options. There's also a small playground, an excellent bakery (pastries Rs 15), and a fabulous, partly open-air bar with a dance floor (and actual dancing!).

Bollygood (☎ 2514513; Ratananda; dishes Rs 60-300) Run by same owner as On the Rocks, this themed restaurant is brightly lit and overstaffed and – once the word spreads – will be a great place for a drink. Dishes are named after Indian movie stars, but the Bollygood veg platter (Rs 250) wins the gong.

Garden Restaurant (Map p235; Airport Rd; dishes Rs 85-170 noon-3pm & 7.30-10.30pm) Near Ajit Bhawan, this is a large, lovely garden restaurant, candlelit at night, with excellent Indian and Continental dishes.

Mehran Terrace (Map p236; ☎ 2549790; Mererangarh Fort; dishes Rs 80-180, thalis Rs 300-350; 7.30-10.30pm) Come for the location, stay for the…location. Dining on one of the fort's terraces is unsurpassably romantic, but the food and service is wholly disappointing. It's still worth a visit though, as the candlelit tables, 140m above the city, will make the rich Rajasthani thali immeasurably more palatable. Enjoy the waiters' high jinks, and don't forget to book.

Umaid Bhawan Palace (Map p235) has Pillars (6pm-11pm), a breezy informal eatery with sublime lawn views, and more upmarket Jodhpur Lancers (9am-11pm). Main dish prices at these places range from Rs 200 to 600. Or you could just have a drink at the Trophy Bar (11am-11pm).

QUICK EATS

Yummy street food is available on the streets adjoining the railway reservation office.

Omelette Shop (Map p235; eggs Rs 5-12) Just through the gate (by the inner arch – don't be fooled by imitations!) on the northern side of the square, the Omelette Shop claims to go through 1000 eggs a day – the egg man has been doing his thing for over 30 years. Two tasty, spicy boiled eggs cost Rs 10, and an oily two-egg omelette with chilli, coriander and four pieces of bread Rs 15, but it's not ideal for a queasy stomach.

Agra Sweets (Map p235; opposite Sojati Gate; sweets Rs 10, lassis Rs 12) This sweet shop sells good lassis, as well as delectable Jodhpur specialities such as mawa ladoo (milk sweet made with sugar, cardamom and pistachios, wrapped in silver leaf) and the baklavalike mawa kachori.

Janta Sweets (3 Nai Sarak, Station Rd) The 'home of sweets' comes pretty close to the money, with superb mawa ladoo (Rs 5) and mawa katchori (Rs 5), and a high customer turnover.

Shri Mishrilal Hotel (Map p235; lassis Rs 15) At the clock tower, this place is nothing fancy, but whips up the best lassis in town. A delicious glass of creamy special makhania lassi costs Rs 15.

Five Star Fruit Juice (Map p235; 112 Nai Sadak; small/large fruit juice Rs 20/30) The pick of the fruit-juice bunch, this hole-in-the-wall juice shop serves superfresh combinations in a traveller-friendly atmosphere.

Refreshment room (Map p235; 1st fl, Jodhpur train station; veg/nonveg thali Rs 20/25) There's a strangely timeless ambience here, and surprisingly palatable food.

Shopping

The usual Rajasthani handicrafts are available here, but Jodhpur is most famous for antiques. However, we recommend that you do not buy genuine antiques as the trade in antique architectural fixtures is contributing to the desecration of India's cultural heritage (beautiful old havelis are often ripped apart for their doors and window frames). Most places can make you a piece of antique-style furniture and prices aren't bad. The greatest concentration of showrooms is along Palace Rd, near Umaid Bhawan Palace. Make sure you find out how much extra customs charges will cost in your home country.

The commission racket operates here, so use your head.

Krishna Art & Crafts (Map p235; ☎ 5103348; 1st fl, Tija Mata ka Mandir) Ex-London resident Ajit Singh is in charge of this classy fixed-priced store. A great place to gain knowledge of traditional garments, it also has an incredible range of carpets and shawls, and highly professional staff.

Shri Rani Sati Cloth Store (Map p235; ☎ 2625747; 117 Sardar Market) This small store to the left of the clock tower as you enter the market is the premier choice for block-printed fabrics. Very competitive prices, and trustworthy staff.

Rani Handicrafts (Map p235; Hanuwant Colony, Circuit House Rd) Another good choice for a range of handicrafts, this place is a little off the tourist beat, and prices are very generous.

JG Art & Crafts (☎ 2636580; Sardar Market) Abhay Kumar is the proprietor of this excellent store, which has a cheap and reliable international courier service, and all kinds of handicrafts and fabrics.

Kaman (Map p236; kaman_contemporaryart@yahoo.in; Old Fort Rd, Killi Khana) This is a slick contemporary art gallery featuring the pick of the painters from western Rajasthan. Seventy percent of sales reach the artists' pockets, and the other 30% keeps the space alive.

Handloom House (Map p235; Nai Sarak; ⏲ 10am-10pm) This is a huge department store thronged with locals. Alongside some questionable clothes are mountains of fixed-price bandhani, silk saris and woollen shawls.

Around the clock tower are various spice shops, but these are mainly for tourists, with prices to match, and there have been complaints about quality; however, the hugely successful MV Spices (Map p235; ☎ 5109347; www.mvspices.com; 209B Vegetable Market; ⏲ 10am-9pm) does have genuine spices and excellent service. If you would like to buy spices at local prices, head westwards from the clock tower along Tambaku Bazaar towards Navchokiya in the old city. You will pass a small square, past which you will find some small spice shops where chilli powder will cost around Rs 90 per kilogram and real saffron around Rs 50 to 60 per gram.

The best bets for quality fake antiques are Ajay Art Emporium (Map p235; ☎ 2510269; Umaid Bhawan Palace Rd), Maharani Art Exporters (Map p235; ☎ 2639226; Tambaku Bazaar) or Rajasthan Arts & Crafts House (Map p235; ☎ 2653926; Umaid Bhawan Palace Rd). International courier rates on containers are very competitive (eg US$225 per cubic metre to Australia).

Getting Around

The airport is only 5km from the centre. It costs about Rs 60 in an autorickshaw or Rs 150 in a taxi.

There's a taxi stand near the main train station. Most taxi journeys around town should cost around Rs 80 and autorickshaws no more than Rs 30.

AROUND JODHPUR

Mandore

Situated 9km north of Jodhpur, Mandore was the capital of Marwar prior to the foundation of Jodhpur. Today, its gardens with rock terraces make it a popular local attraction. The gardens also contain a mixture of dark-red stupas (domed edifice housing Buddhist or Jain relics) and domes – the cenotaphs of Jodhpur rulers, including the soaring memorial to Maharaja Dhiraj Ajit Singh.

The 18th-century Hall of Heroes contains 15 solemn Hindu deities and local heroes carved out of a rock wall, coated with fine plaster and luridly painted.

Mandore Guest House (☎ 0291-2545210, 2571620; www.mandore.com; s/d Rs 500/850, with AC Rs 700/900;) has delightful rounded mud-walled cottages set in a leafy garden. There's good home-cooked food. It's also connected with a local NGO working to address drug addiction and provide medical services; there are short-term volunteer programmes.

Located in a former Raj hunting area, Balsamand Lake Palace (☎ 0291-2572321; www.jodhpurheritage.com; Mandore Rd; d/ste Rs 4600/11000;) is set across 70 well-kept acres. The lakeside suites are divine, stables have been generously converted into well-appointed double rooms, and the restaurant is one of Jodhpur's finest. It has a real country feel, with a plush swimming pool, lovingly tended rose gardens and, until recently, a disgruntled resident yogi.

Rohet

A heritage hotel in the small village of Rohet, 40km south of Jodhpur, Rohet Garh (☎ 02936-268231; s/d from Rs 1450/2000, ste Rs 3000;) is where Bruce Chatwin wrote The Songlines and William Dalrymple began City of Djinns. Surprising they were so diligent, as there's a gorgeous colonnaded pool, and the rooms are lovely. The hotel can organise village safaris.

Osiyan

This ancient Great Thar Desert town, 65km north of Jodhpur, was an important trading centre between the 8th and 12th centuries. It was dominated by the Jains, who left a legacy of exquisitely sculptured, well-preserved temples. Sachiya Mata Temple (6am-7.15pm) is an impressive walled complex. The Mahavira Temple (admission Rs 5, camera/video Rs 30/100; 6am-8.30pm) surrounds an image of the 24th tirthankar, said to be over 2000 years old and formed from sand and milk.

In October, Osiyan hosts the Marwar Festival (p166).

Prakash Bhanu Sharma, a personable Brahmin priest, has an echoing guesthouse (☎ 02922-274296; d Rs 300), geared towards pilgrims, near Mahavira Temple.

The Camel Camp (☎/fax 0291-2437023; tents Rs 2500-7000) offers tent accommodation perched on a secluded sand dune overlooking Osiyan. Camel safaris can be arranged. Advance bookings are essential.

There are regular buses from Jodhpur (Rs 30, 1½ hours, half-hourly). There's also a train (2nd class Rs 27, 1½ hours, 65km). A return taxi costs Rs 600.

Nagaur

Nagaur, 135km northeast of Jodhpur, has the massive, 12th-century, beautifully restored ruins of Ahhichatragarh (Fort of the Hooded Cobra; Indian/foreigner Rs 15/50, camera/video Rs 25/100; 9am-1pm & 2-5pm), which has a unique water system – every drop is recycled. At the ruins' heart is a richly painted, Rajput-Mughal palace complex.

The town hosts the Naguar Camel Fair (p166) in January/February.

Hotel Bhaskar (☎ 01582-240100; Station Rd; s/d from Rs 200/250) is friendly and has bright, but run-down, rooms.

Hotel Sujan (☎ 01582-240283; Nakash Gate; s/d Rs 200/300), near the fort, has gloomy hallways but the rooms are fine.

Royal Tents (tents US$250) are available at fair time. These fabulous tents must be booked in advance through Balsamand Lake Palace (☎ 0291-2572321; www.jodhpurheritage.com; Mandore Rd. The RTDC (s/d Rs 2000/2500) also has tents.

There are hourly buses from Jodhpur (Rs 60, three hours).

Khichan

This small village, 140km northwest of Jodhpur, is a twitcher's dream, and a regular stop on long-range camel safaris. From late August/early September to the end of March, you can witness masses of demoiselle cranes circling noisily and then descending on the surrounding fields at around 7am and 5pm to feed on grain (600kg per day!) spread around by the villagers. Ten kilometres further west is Phalodi, an old caravan centre with beautiful havelis and some reasonable places to stay, including the recommended Lal Niwas (☎ 02925-223813; Dadha's Mohalla, Phalodi; s/d Rs 2000/2200; ✥ ⛾).

There are regular buses between Phalodi and both Jodhpur and Jaisalmer (Rs 65, 3½ hours), but getting to Khichan requires a car.

Jaisalmer is a giant sandcastle with a town attached, an emblem of honour in a land of rough and tumble. The fort is a living monument to long-lost desert might, a Golden City of dreams that exceeds expectations of the most travel-sick tourist or hardened history buff. Rising high from Trikuta hill, 99 enormous bastions hide havelis of crumbling beauty, and former Raj retainers, who now raffishly run guesthouses or flog bedazzling mirrorwork and embroidery. Like a Hansel and Gretel wonderland, the enclosed palace is carved from the same near-edible golden sandstone.

But Jaisalmer is in trouble. Overcrowding and poor drainage – coupled with devastating monsoons – have seen the fort sinking into Trikuta hill. Add to that the high hassle factor for camel safaris and your precious rupees, and the atmosphere is a touch strained. Yet Jaisalmer is still the stuff of legend – as the night sky spreads thick across the scrubs and dunes of the Great Thar Desert, most travellers will find themselves happily trapped in this exotic trade route town.

The town hosts the Desert Festival (p166) in February.

History

Founded in 1156, Jaisalmer's strategic position on the camel-train routes between India and Central Asia brought it great wealth. The merchants and townspeople built magnificent houses and mansions, exquisitely carved from wood and sandstone.

Jaisalmer experienced its share of sieges and sackings, with an inevitable Rajput jauhar in the 13th century after a siege that lasted eight years. However, it escaped too much harm from the Mughals. On good terms with Delhi, the 17th-century city saw another golden age, with more grand palaces and havelis.

The rise in the importance of shipping and the port of Mumbai (Bombay) resulted in Jaisalmer's decline. Partition and the cutting of the trade routes through to Pakistan seemingly sealed the city's fate, and water shortages could have pronounced its death sentence. However, the India–Pakistan Wars of 1965 and 1971 revealed Jaisalmer's great strategic importance.

Today it's an important stop on another lucrative trade route – tourism rivals the military base as the city's economic mainstay.

Orientation

The massive fort that rises above the city is entered via the First Fort Gate. Within the fort walls is a warren of narrow, paved streets, complete with Jain temples and the old palace of the former ruler – it's small enough that you'll never get lost for long.

The main market, Bhatia Market, and most of the city's attractions and important offices surround the fort to the north.

Information

There are plenty of places to check email, both inside and outside the fort. Cost is around Rs 40 per hour, though speeds vary.

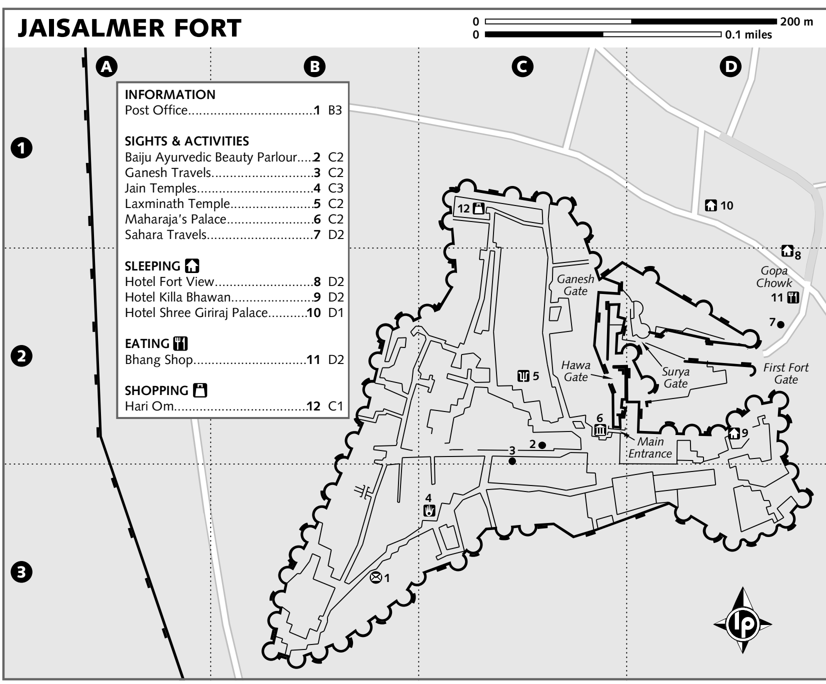
JAISALMER FORT

The fort (Map p245) is a warren of narrow streets carved from sandstone, harbouring a palace, temples, and hundreds of deceptively simple-looking havelis. Built in 1156 by the Rajput ruler Jaisala, and reinforced by subsequent rulers, the fort crowns the 80m-high Trikuta hill. About 25% of the old city's population resides within the fort walls, which have 99 bastions around their circumference. It's an extraordinary, resonant experience to wander around the lanes inside this living museum. Sadly, the tourism trade is threatening the fort – suffering from pressure of numbers and government indifference, it is on the World Monuments Watch list of the 100 most endangered sites worldwide.



Maharaja's Palace

The fort is entered through a forbidding series of massive gates leading to a large courtyard, fronted by the elegant seven-storey palace (Map p245; Indian/foreigner Rs 20/70, camera/video Rs 50/150; 8am-6pm Mar-Jul, 9am-6pm Aug-Feb). The square was formerly used to review troops, hear petitions and present extravagant entertainment for travelling dignitaries. Part of the palace is open to the public – floor upon floor of fascinating rooms that peep creepily on the outside world.

The highlights are the mirrored and painted Rang Mahal, a small gallery of finely wrought 15th-century sculptures and the spectacular 360 degree views from the summit.

Jain Temples

Within the fort walls is a mazelike, interconnecting complex of seven beautiful yellow sandstone Jain temples (Map p245; admission Rs 10, camera/video Rs 50/100), dating from the 12th to 16th centuries. Opening times have a habit of changing, so check with the caretakers. The intricate carving rivals that in Ranakpur or Mt Abu, and has an extraordinary quality because of the soft, warm stone. Chandraprabhu (7am-noon) is the first temple you come to, dedicated to the eighth tirthankar, whose symbol is the moon. Around the upper gallery are 108 marble images of Parasnath, the 22nd tirthankar. To the right of this temple is Rikhabdev Temple (7am-noon). Behind Chandraprabhu is Parasnath Temple (11am-

GOLDEN CITY BLUES

One of the world's most endangered monuments, Jaisalmer Fort is slowly self-destructing due to the pressure on the city's drainage system. One-hundred-and-twenty litres of water per head pumps through the city's aged plumbing system – 12 times the original capacity. Since 1993, three of the 12th-century bastions have collapsed.

Another mortal enemy is thoughtless building work. Ironically the fort's inhabitants may be destroying their own livelihood by not taking conservation measures seriously.

For information on saving Jaisalmer, contact the Jaisalmer Conservation Initiative (☎ 011-24631818; www.intach.org; 71 Lodi Estate, New Delhi 110 003), run by the Indian National Trust for Art and Cultural Heritage (INTACH), or the British-registered charity Jaisalmer in Jeopardy (☎ /fax 020-73524336; www.jaisalmer-in-jeopardy.org; 3 Brickbarn Close, London SW10 0TP).

noon), which you enter through a beautifully carved torana (gateway); it has a lovely, brightly painted ceiling. A door to the south leads to the Shitalnath Temple (⌚ 11am-noon), dedicated to the 10th tirthankar, with an eight-metal image. A door in the north wall leads to the beautiful Sambhavanth Temple (⌚ 11am-noon) – in the front courtyard, Jain priests grind sandalwood for devotional use. Steps lead down to the Gyan Bhandar (⌚ 10-11am), a fascinating, tiny library of ancient manuscripts, founded in 1500. The remaining two temples are Shantinath (⌚ 11am-noon), and Kunthunath (⌚ 11am-noon), below it, both built in 1536, and with plenty of sensual carving.

Laxminath Temple

This Hindu temple (Map p245) is simpler than the Jain temples, with a brightly decorated dome. Devotees offer grain, which is distributed before the temple. There is a repoussé silver architrave around the entrance to the inner sanctum, and a heavily garlanded image enshrined within.

HAVELIS

Patwa-ki-Haveli

Most magnificent of all the havelis, its stonework like honey-coloured craggy lace, Patwa-ki-Haveli (Map p244; admission Rs 20, camera/video Rs 20/20; ⌚ 9am-6pm) towers over a narrow lane. It was built between 1800 and 1860 by five Jain brothers who were brocade and jewellery merchants. It's most impressive from the outside, but the fort view from the roof is superb, and the interior richly evokes 19th-century life.

Salim Singh-ki-Haveli

This private haveli (Map p244; admission Rs 15, camera/video Rs 10/50; ⌚ 8am-6pm Oct-Apr, 8am-7pm May-Sep) has an amazing, distinctive shape – it's narrow for the first floors, then the top storey spreads out into a mass of carving, with graceful arched balconies surmounted by pale blue cupolas. It was built about 300 years ago; part of it is still occupied. Salim Singh was a fearsome prime minister when Jaisalmer was the capital of a princely state.

Nathmal-ki-Haveli

This late-19th-century haveli (Map p244; admission free; ⌚ 8am-7pm) was also a prime minister's house and is still partly inhabited. It drips with carving, and the first floor has some beautiful paintings that used 1.5kg of gold. A doorway is surrounded by 19th-century British postcards from the prime minister's time, and there's also a picture of Queen Victoria. The left and right wings were the work of two brothers, whose competitive spirit apparently produced this virtuoso work – the two sides are similar, but not identical. Sandstone elephants keep guard.

GADI SAGAR

This stately tank (Map p244), south of the city walls, was once the water supply of the city, and there are many small temples and shrines around it. Waterfowl flock here in winter. Boat hire (⌚ 8am-9pm) costs Rs 10 to 100 for 30 minutes.

The attractive Tilon-ki-Pol (Map p244) that straddles across the road down to the tank is said to have been built by a famous prostitute. When she offered to pay to have this gateway constructed, the maharaja refused permission on the grounds that he would have to pass under it to go down to the tank, and he felt that this would be beneath his dignity. While he was away, she built the gate anyway, adding a Krishna temple on top so the king could not tear it down.

MUSEUMS

Next to the Tourist Reception Centre is the Desert Culture Centre & Museum (Map p244; ☎ 252188; admission Rs 10; ⏰ 10am-5pm), which has interesting information on Rajasthani culture, as well as textiles and traditional instruments. There's a nightly one-hour puppet show (admission Rs 30, camera/video Rs 20/50) at 6.30pm. Admission to the Desert Culture Centre includes entry to the small Jaisalmer Folklore Museum (Map p244; camera/video Rs 20/50; ⏰ 8am-6pm), which has everything from camel ornaments to opium bottles. The hill nearby is a tremendous place to soak up the sunset.

The small government museum (Map p244; admission Rs 3, free Mon; ⏰ 10am-4.30pm Sat-Thu) has a limited but well-captioned collection of fossils, some which date back to the Jurassic era (160 to 180 million years ago!).

MASSAGE

Baiju Ayurvedic Beauty Parlour (Map p245; ☎ 255 730; ⏰ 10am-8pm) offers facials (Rs 300) and Ayurvedic massages (Rs 500), as well as manicures, pedicures and waxings. It's near the maharaja's palace.

Tours

Few travellers visit Jaisalmer without venturing into the desert on a camel. For details see p248.

The Tourist Reception Centre (p243) runs sunset tours to the Sam sand dunes (Rs 130 per person) at 3pm, returning after sunset. On request, the tours to Sam may stop at Kanoi, 5km before the dunes, from where it's possible to get a camel to the dunes in time for sunset (around Rs 250).

Sleeping

Staying within the fort is no longer a sustainable practice, as increased water consumption has left the fort infrastructure in danger of collapse. For this reason Lonely Planet has taken the decision not to list any hotels or restaurants within the fort. We encourage travellers to make an ethical decision when visiting Jaisalmer.

Motorised traffic is not permitted beyond the main square – anywhere further into the maze is a 10-minute walk at most. Most hotels in Jaisalmer have a stingy 9am check-out time.

Unfortunately, a few hotels are really into the high-pressure selling of camel safaris. Some offer good rooms at knockdown prices, and then turn nasty if you don't take their safari. To avoid the drama, be clear from the outset if you are not interested.

Prices fluctuate a lot. If there's a festival on, rooms are expensive and scarce; in slow times most places offer big discounts. Often guesthouses here are rented, so can alter in quality from one year to the next according to who's in charge.

BUDGET

You'll find a cluster of places north of Gandhi Chowk.

Hotel Golden City (Map p244; ☎ /fax 251664; hotel goldencity@hotmail.com; rooftop Rs 25, r Rs 145-525; ❄ 🏊) Off Gadi Sagar Rd, this busy hotel feels like a budget big spender, with modern rooms, balconies and satellite TV. The ice-cold pool (nonguests Rs 100) is surrounded by potted plants and has a prime party feel. Requests to take a camel safari can be quite persistent.

Hotel Swastika (Map p244; ☎ 252483; s/d from Rs 80/120) The yogic swastika spirals upwards towards subtle wisdom, and the kindly management here will slip in a few pearls with your complimentary morning tea. This place is well run and clean, and the only hassle you'll get is to relax. Rooms are simple and unfussy; some have balconies.

Hotel Fort View (Map p245; ☎ 252214; r Rs 100-300) This stalwart of the Jaisalmer budget scene can expect increased trade due to its namesake and its conscientious location outside the fort entrance. The best room has a fabulous fort view and balcony, and though the rest are tiny and show signs of their early-'80s construction, they still squeeze in bathrooms.

Hotel Ratan Palace (Map p244; ☎ 253615; s/d Rs 150/300) Run by the same family as Hotel Renuka (below) with the same friendly approach, this place is a better bet, with large, bright rooms.

Hotel Renuka (Map p244; ☎ 252757; hotelrenuka@rediffmail.com; r Rs 150-350) Spread over three floors, Renuka has 12 squeaky clean, slightly murky rooms with interesting photos on the walls – the best rooms have balconies and bathrooms. It's been open since 1988, so management knows its stuff, warmly accommodating guests without the camel-safari grief. The roof terrace has great fort views and a so-so restaurant.

Hotel Shree Giriraj Palace (Map p245; ☎ 252268; r Rs 200-350) This hotel has cheerful rooms in an old building, though it remains a little overpriced.

JAISALMER CAMEL SAFARIS

Trekking around Jaisalmer by camel is the most evocative and fun way to sample desert life. The best time to go is from October to February.

Before You Go

Competition between safari organisers is cut-throat and standards vary. Hotels don't have their own camels – they're independently owned – so hoteliers and travel agencies are just go-betweens.

Beware of operators who claim they run (and charge for) three-day safaris, when you actually return after breakfast on the third day – hardly value for money.

The realistic minimum price for a safari is about Rs 450 to 500 per person per day. For this you can expect breakfast of porridge, tea and toast, and lunch and dinner of rice, dhal (curry made from lentils or other pulses) and chapati (unleavened Indian bread). Blankets are also supplied. You must bring your own mineral water. Of course, you can pay for greater levels of comfort: tents, stretcher beds, better food, beer etc – but take care, because some travellers have paid extra for promised upgrades only to find out afterwards their safari was much the same as people who paid less.

Take care of your possessions, particularly on the return journey. Any complaints you do have should be reported, either to the Superintendent of Police (Map p244; ☎ 252233) or the Tourist Reception Centre (Map p244; ☎ 252406; Gadi Sagar Rd; 10am-5pm).

What to Take

Women should consider wearing a sports bra, as a trotting camel is a bumpy ride. A wide-brimmed hat (or Lawrence of Arabia turban), long trousers, toilet paper, sunscreen and a water bottle (with a strap) are also recommended. It can get cold at night, so if you have a sleeping bag bring it along, even if you're told that lots of blankets will be supplied. Snakes have been spotted, so it's worth wearing thick socks.

Which Safari?

Several independent agencies have been recommended. Ganesh Travels (Map p245; ☎ 250138; ganeshtravel45@hotmail.com), inside the fort, is owned by camel drivers and is a well-thought-out operation that gets good reports. Sahara Travels (Map p245; ☎ 252609), by the First Fort Gate, gets good reviews, and is run by Mr Bissa, alias Mr Desert – he graces lots of Rajasthan Tourism posters.

Hotel Green (☎ 252502; Dhibba Para; hotelgreen@hotmail.com; r Rs 200-800;) Run by the same crowd as Golden City (guests here can use the Golden City swimming pool), this modern hotel has depressing corridors, but bargain rooms with swish toilets, attentive service, and bouncy beds.

Artist's Hotel (Map p244; ☎ 251498; artisthotel@yahoo.com; Artist Colony, Suly Dungri; r Rs 300) Get a feel-good night's rest at this Austrian-owned establishment, which helps local musicians with school fees and emergency money. The three-storey building above a bustling artists colony gives you a taste of village life, plus there are great views of the fort from the roof (where there are regular concerts). Rooms are comfortable, and staff are keen.

Residency Centrepoint Paying Guest House (Map p244; ☎/fax 252883; s/d Rs 400/450) Near the Patwa-ki-Haveli, this friendly, family-run guesthouse has clean, spacious doubles. Room 101 has a lovely antique balcony, and the rooftop has superb fort views.

MIDRANGE

Fifu Guest House (☎ 252656; http://fifutravel.com; Bera Rd; d Rs 500-700) Spruced up to the nines in 2006, and loaded with high-powered AC and professional attitude, this thriving business (the owners also run a travel agency and another guesthouse in Khuri) gets mixed reports. The bright sandstone rooms afford a pleasant stay though, and the rooftop has tremendous fort views. Almost ideal if there were no such things as camel safaris, it's also a little out of town, so be careful walking home at night.

Shahi Palace (Map p244; ☎ 255920; www.shahipalacehotel.com; Shiv Rd; r Rs 500-1500;) Shahi Palace has lovely rooms with window seats, sand-

Satyam Tours (Map p244; ☎ 250773; ummedsatyam@yahoo.com; Gandhi Chowk) and Thar Safari (Map p244; ☎/fax 252722; Gandhi Chowk) offer variations on the usual circuit.

Remember that no place is perfect – recommendations here should not be a substitute for doing your own research.

Whoever you go for, insist that all rubbish is carried back to Jaisalmer.

In the Desert

Don't expect dune seas: the Thar desert is mostly barren scrub that is sprinkled with villages and ruins. You will often come across tiny fields of millet, and children herding flocks of sheep or goats, whose neckbells tinkle in the desert silence – a welcome change from the sound of farting camels.

Camping out at night, huddling around a tiny fire beneath the shed of stars and listening to the camel drivers' songs is magically romantic.

The reins are fastened to the camel's nose peg, so the animals are easily steered. Stirrups make the journey a lot more comfortable. At resting points the camels are unsaddled and hobbled; they limp away to browse on nearby shrubs while the camel drivers brew chai (tea) or prepare food. The whole crew rests in the shade of thorn trees.

Most safaris last three to four days and, if you want to get to the most interesting places, this is a bare minimum unless a significant jeep component is included.

More and more travellers are opting for 'nontouristic' safaris. You are driven in a jeep for around 30km or so and then head off on your steed, avoiding the major sights and avoiding encountering any other groups.

The traditional circuit takes in Amar Sagar (admission Rs 10, camera/video Rs 50/100), where there's a garden, dried-up step-wells and a Jain Temple; the deserted ruins of Lodhruva (p251); Mool Sagar (admission Rs 5), a run-down oasis with a Shiva Temple; Bada Bagh (admission Rs 20, camera/video Rs 20/20), a fertile oasis with a huge old dam and startling sandstone-sculpted royal chhatris with beautifully carved ceilings; and the dunes of Sam (p251), as well as various abandoned villages along the way.

If you're really pressed for time you could opt for a half-day camel safari (which involves jeep transfers).

The camel drivers will expect a tip or gift at the end of the trip; don't neglect to give them one.

stone walls, and carved stone or wooden beds, though management seems to have rested on past rave reviews. The elegant rooftop has a fantastic fort view and acceptable food.

Hotel Jaisal Palace (Map p244; ☎ 252717; hoteljaisalpalace@yahoo.com; s/d from Rs 600/800;) Near the Nachana Haveli is this clean, well-run place with smallish rooms. Those on the south side have fort-facing balconies.

Mandir Palace Hotel (Map p244; ☎ 252788; mandirpalace@hotmail.com; Gandhi Chowk; r Rs 1500-2000;) Just inside the town walls is this royal palace; the restored rooms are atmospheric and fabulous value. Avoid the new additions though, and service is very basic.

Hotel Nachana Haveli (Map p244; ☎ 252538; nachana_haveli@yahoo.com; Gandhi Chowk; d Rs 1950-2700;) This 280-year-old haveli-cum-hotel is a winner. Comfortable, sandstone rooms have curved ceilings, and some have bathtubs. The fireless camp courtyard comes with all the Rajput trimmings, including swing chairs and bearskin rugs.

TOP END

Jawahar Niwas Palace (Map p244; ☎ 252208; s/d Rs 2225/3300;) Like a ghostly mirage, this forlorn beauty stands 1km west of the fort in an abandoned quarry. Rooms are elegant and spacious though, with plenty of room to plan full-on fort assaults. Those upstairs at the front have the best (if distant) fort views. There's another fabulous pool.

Rang Mahal (☎ 250907; www.hotelrangmahal.com; s/d from Rs 3000/3500, ste Rs 5500-9000;) Heading west along Sam Rd, you'll find this impressive hotel with big bastions and divine suites. There's a spectacular pool (nonguests Rs 200) and an excellent restaurant. Rooms with a fort-facing veranda are the best.

Hotel Killa Bhawan (☎ 251204; www.killabhawan.com; 445 Kotri Para; r US$62-140; ❄) Built into the fort walls and presented like a World of Interiors documentary, this good-value place just passes the conscience test. It's beautifully decorated and romantic with wooden furniture, dazzling bright silks and wall hangings. The cheaper rooms don't have private bathrooms but are still luxurious. It's worth it just for the sunsets.

Heritage Inn (☎ 250901; hhijsl_jp1@sancharnet.in; 4 Hotel Complex, Sam Rd; s/d/ste Rs 3500/4500/7000; 🏊) On the high-end hotel strip, this place is sparsely staffed but relaxing, with 40 garden-facing cottages. There's a first-rate Ayurvedic service and a sparkling pool.

Fort Rajwada (☎ 253233; r Rs 3900-5450, ste Rs 9500-12000; ❄ 🏊) This is a modern place built according to the ancient Indian design principles of Vaastu – something like feng shui. All materials in the hotel are natural. An opera designer created the traditional interior, so it's suitably dramatic.

Gorbandh Palace Hotel (☎ 253801; crs@udaipur.hrhindia.com; Sam Rd; d/ste Rs 5000/7000; ❄ 🏊) This grandiose modern hotel is great top-end value, blissfully quiet and particularly good for families. It's constructed from local sandstone, and the friezes around the hotel were sculpted by local artisans. There's a superb pool (non-guests Rs 200), and the excellent breakfast makes you want to go to bed early.

Eating

RESTAURANTS

Chandan Shree Restaurant (Map p244; Hanuman Chowk; dishes Rs 15-70, thalis Rs 40) Always busy – and rightfully so – this is a popular dining hall churning out tasty, spicy all-you-can-eat Gujarati, Rajasthani, Punjabi and Bengali thalis.

Kebab Corner (Map p244; Hanuman Chowk; dishes Rs 30-140) Specialising in tandoori dishes, this has some great veg and nonveg sizzling dishes. The location is a surprisingly peaceful tent by a busy junction. The personable chef has been getting it right for some time now.

Sharma Lodge (Map p244; Gandhi Chowk; thali Rs 35; 🕐 5.30am-10.30pm) This place is a simple eatery offering equally simple thalis.

Desert Boy's Dhani (Map p244; Seemagram Campus; dishes Rs 35-100; 🕐 11am-4pm & 6.30-11pm) This is a popular, garden restaurant in an enclosed setting, with a choice of floor seating or tables. It serves yummy, good-value veg dishes.

Natraj Restaurant (Map p244; dishes Rs 40-70) This is an excellent place to eat, and the rooftop has a satisfying view of the upper part of the Salim Singh-ki-Haveli next door.

Saffron (Map p244; dishes Rs 40-140; 🕐 7am-3pm & 7-10.30pm) Run by the same family in charge of Nanchana Haveli, the veg and nonveg food here is superb, plus it has a great setting on a sandstone terrace overlooking Gandhi Chowk.

Trio (Map p244; ☎ 252733; Gandhi Chowk; dishes Rs 40-190; 🕐 noon-3pm & 6.30-10.30pm) This upmarket Indian and Continental restaurant with a romantic setting under a tented roof is still the pick of Jaisalmer. There's reliably good veg and nonveg dishes, musicians play in the evening and there's a great fort view. Flies don't mind it either.

QUICK EATS

Dhanraj Bhatia Sweets (Map p244; Sadar Bazaar; sweets Rs 5) This place in Bhatia Market has been churning out traditional sweet treats for 10 generations. It is renowned in Jaisalmer and beyond for its local specialities, such as ghotua ladoos (sweetmeat balls made with gram flour) and panchadhari ladoos (sweetmeat balls made with wheat flour) for Rs 5 each.

Mohan Juice Centre (Map p244; lassis Rs 7-20) At Bhatia Market, this has a little sitting area at the back and sells assorted interesting lassis, such as honey and makhania. It's a good place to hang out and meet other travellers.

Bhang Shop (Map p245; medium/strong lassis Rs 30/35) Bhang cookies, cakes and sweets are all sold here – some deceptively strong. Advance notice is not necessary, though it's appreciated, especially if you want tailor-made 'safari packs'. Bhang does not agree with everyone – see p1140.

Shopping

Jaisalmer has a particularly stunning array of mirrorwork wall hangings, and it's also famous for embroidery, rugs, blankets, bedspreads, oil lamps, old stonework and antiques. Watch out when buying silver items; the metal is sometimes adulterated with bronze.

There are several good khadi (homespun cloth) shops around town selling fixed-price carpets, shawls, and woven garments, including Zila Khadi Gramodan Parishad (Map p244), Khadi Gramodyog Bhavan (Seemagram; Map p244; Dhibba; 🕐 10am-6pm Mon-Sat) and Gandhi Darshan Emporium (Map p244; Gandhi Chowk; 🕐 11am-7pm Fri-Wed). You can also pop into Rajasthali (Map p244; Gandhi Chowk; 🕐 10am-8pm Mon-Sat) to check out prices.

Hari Om (☎ 255122; 275 Taloti Vyaspara) is a silversmith who makes beautiful, delicate silver rings and bracelets featuring places and Hindu gods. Visitors have commissioned personalised wedding rings here. There's a shop inside the fort (Map p245), or you can visit the home address listed here.

Getting There & Away

All foreign visitors to Jaisalmer must now pay a tourist tax of Rs 20. It can be threateningly enforced upon newcomers arriving by bus or train, so be sure you pay the right person.

AIR

The airport has been closed for some years, due to border tensions with Pakistan. If it reopens, the agent for Indian Airlines is Crown Tours (Map p244; ☎/fax 251912), about 350m west of Amar Sagar Gate.

BUS

The main Roadways bus stand (Map p244; ☎ 251541) is near the train station. Fortunately, all buses start at a more convenient bus stand (Map p244) southwest of the fort. Private buses leave from Airforce Circle.

There are buses to Jodhpur (express/deluxe Rs 60/135, 5½ hours, hourly), Bikaner (express Rs 142, seven hours, four daily), Jaipur (deluxe Rs 194, 12 hours, one daily) and Ajmer (Rs 180, 12 hours).

You can book private buses through most travel agencies – if you can't get a ticket, check with a few agencies, as sometimes people will tell you a bus is full when it's not. Destinations include Bikaner (local/deluxe Rs 110/130), Jaipur (Rs 180/190), Jodhpur (local/deluxe/sleeper Rs 70/90/110), Mt Abu (local/deluxe Rs 220/240) and Ahmedabad (deluxe/sleeper Rs 200/300). Be aware that most private buses (except those going to Bikaner) require a change at Jodhpur. Some travellers have found themselves in Jodhpur with a useless onward ticket, so make sure you clarify what you're getting.

There are numerous trains to/from Jodhpur, including the Jodhpur–Jaisalmer Express (No 4809), which leaves Jaisalmer at 11.15pm, arriving in Jodhpur at 5.15am (sleeper/3AC Rs 157/411, 294km). The return trip (No 4810) leaves Jodhpur at 11.15pm and arrives in Jaisalmer at 5.15am. The Jaisalmer Delhi Express (No 4060) leaves at 4.15pm, calls at Jodhpur at 10pm (2nd class/chair Rs 97/322), Jaipur at 5.15am (sleeper/3AC Rs 256/690, 313km) and Delhi at 10.43am (sleeper/3AC Rs 322/877, 623km). The other way, the train (No 4059) leaves Delhi at 6.15pm and arrives in Jaisalmer 19 hours later.

A new train service to Bikaner should have opened by the time of publication.

Getting Around

AUTORICKSHAW

An autorickshaw to Gadi Sagar costs about Rs 30 one way from the fort entrance.

BICYCLE

A good way to get around is by bicycle. There are a number of hire places, including one near Gandhi Chowk (Rs 5/30 per hour/day).

JEEP

It's possible to hire jeeps from the stand on Gandhi Chowk. To Khuri or the Sam sand dunes expect to pay Rs 550 return with a one-hour wait. For Lodhruva you'll pay Rs 300 return with a one-hour stop. To cut the cost, find other people to share with (maximum of five people per jeep).

AROUND JAISALMER

Lodhruva

About 15km northwest of Jaisalmer are the deserted ruins of Lodhruva, the ancient capital before the move to Jaisalmer. The Jain temples, rebuilt in the late 1970s, are sole reminders of the city's former magnificence. The main temple (admission Rs 10, camera/video Rs 50/100; 🕑 6am-8pm) enshrines a finely wrought silver image of Parasnath, the 23rd tirthankar. Apparently a cobra lives in the complex. There are three buses daily from Jaisalmer to Lodhruva (Rs 5, 20 minutes).

Sam Sand Dunes

A desert national park (admission Rs 3, jeep Rs 5) has been established in the Great Thar Desert near Sam village. One of the most popular excursions is to the sand dunes on the edge of the park, 42km from Jaisalmer along an excellent sealed road (maintained by the Indian army).

This is Jaisalmer's Sahara-like desert, with huge, silky, undulating folds of sand. It's best to be here at sunrise or sunset, and many camel safaris spend a night at the dunes. This place has become a massive tourist attraction, so don't count on a solitary desert sunset experience. Nonetheless, it's still possible to frame pictures of solitary camels against lonely dunes.

One tragic consequence of dune-hungry hordes is the debris and rubbish lying around. Please don't contribute to this problem.

There are three daily buses to Sam (Rs 22, 1½ hours).

Khuri is a small village 40km southwest of Jaisalmer – an hour and a world away from the fort's swarming trade. Khuri has its own desert sand dunes, and remains a peaceful place (apart from during holiday periods, as it's popular with Indian holidaymakers), with houses of mud and straw decorated like the patterns on Persian carpets. There are plenty of camps of mud huts, and camel drivers eager to take you on the dunes, but no shop-lined streets or pancake restaurants. Once the excitement of sunset is over, you have desert solitude and the brilliant star-studded sky at night to look forward to.

SLEEPING & EATING

Places to stay in Khuri are basic, fanless thatched mud huts with wall paintings, set around a campfire area. All places listed here provide meals and arrange camel safaris.

Badal House (☎ 274120; per person huts/r with shared bathroom incl half board Rs 300/300) Here you can stay in a family compound with a few charming small huts and freshly painted rooms. Badal Singh is a lovely, gentle man who charges Rs 500 for a camel safari with a night on the dunes. Don't let touts warn you off.

Mama's Guest House (☎ 274042; gajendra_sodha2003@yahoo.com; per person hut with shared bathroom incl half-board Rs 400) This is a long-running place with a circle of whitewashed, cosy huts. A basic/luxurious overnight camel safari costs Rs 650/900.

Gangaur Guest House (☎ 274056; hameersingh@yahoo.com; per person huts with shared/private bathroom Rs 300/400) This is a small place with yet another circle of snug huts; it's closest to the dunes. It offers packages including a camel ride, dinner with traditional dance entertainment, and breakfast for Rs 650.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

There are several buses to Khuri from Jaisalmer (Rs 25, one hour).

☎ 02982 / pop 83,517

One-hundred-and-fifty-three kilometres south of Jaisalmer, Barmer is famed for woodcarving, carpets, embroidery, block printing and other handicrafts. The small shops in the colourful Sadar Bazaar are a good place to start – exploring the narrow backstreets you'll find artisans at work. Otherwise, this desert town, stunned by dramatic floods in 2006, has little for the visitor.

In March, Barmer holds the Thar Festival; there's also a large cattle fair around the same time (see p166 for details).

Hotel Krishna (☎ 220785; s/d with shared bathroom from Rs 110/200, r with private bathroom Rs 200-500; ❄), on the main street leading from the train station, is friendly and has acceptably clean rooms.

From Barmer there are frequent buses to/from Jaisalmer (Rs 65, 2½ hours) and Jodhpur (Rs 86, four hours). The train station picks up the Thar Express (No 4889) from Jodhpur to Khokarpar (Pakistan border) at 3am on Sunday mornings.

Pokaran

The colour of dusty berries and located at the junction of the Jaisalmer, Jodhpur and Bikaner roads, 110km from Jaisalmer, Pokaran Fort (admission Rs 50, camera/video Rs 30/30; 🕑 7am-7pm) is an aura-inducing red-sandstone palace that shelters a tangle of narrow streets lined by balconied houses. It dates from the 14th to 17th centuries and once had charge of 108 villages; part of it is now a colourfully restored heritage hotel (☎ 02994-222274; www.fortpokaran.com; s/d from Rs 1700/2100). There's not much to see here, but a stop breaks the journey between Jodhpur and Jaisalmer.

It was in Pokaran in May 1998 that India detonated five nuclear devices, leaving a huge crater that's strictly off limits.

Buses run frequently to Jaisalmer (2½ hours, Rs 35) and also Jodhpur for a similar price.

Bikaner is a vibrant, dust-swirling desert town with a fabulous fort, a refreshing outpost feel and a burgeoning tourist trade. Close to the fort lies the rickety old walled city, a medieval maze of narrow, dark and uneven streets decorated with rubbish heaps, medicine men, gambling dens, dark-red sandstone havelis and some exquisitely painted Jain temples.

Bikaner was founded in 1488 by Rao Bika, a descendant of Jodha, Jodhpur's founder, and was another important staging post on the great caravan trade routes. When the British arrived centuries later, the state of Bikaner exchanged its finest camels for its freedom.

Camel safaris continue to grow in popularity here, as travellers chase the silken darkness of a desert dawn without the hassle of Jaisalmer. Many travellers also come to visit the notorious Karni Mata Temple in Deshnok, 30km south, where pilgrims worship thousands of holy rats, or Kolayat, 54km south, a temple town where sadhus (spiritual men) swim in rubber tyres.

There's a camel festival (p166) in January.

Orientation & Information

The old city is encircled by a 7km-long, 18th-century city wall with five entrance gates. The fort is northeast, outside the walls.

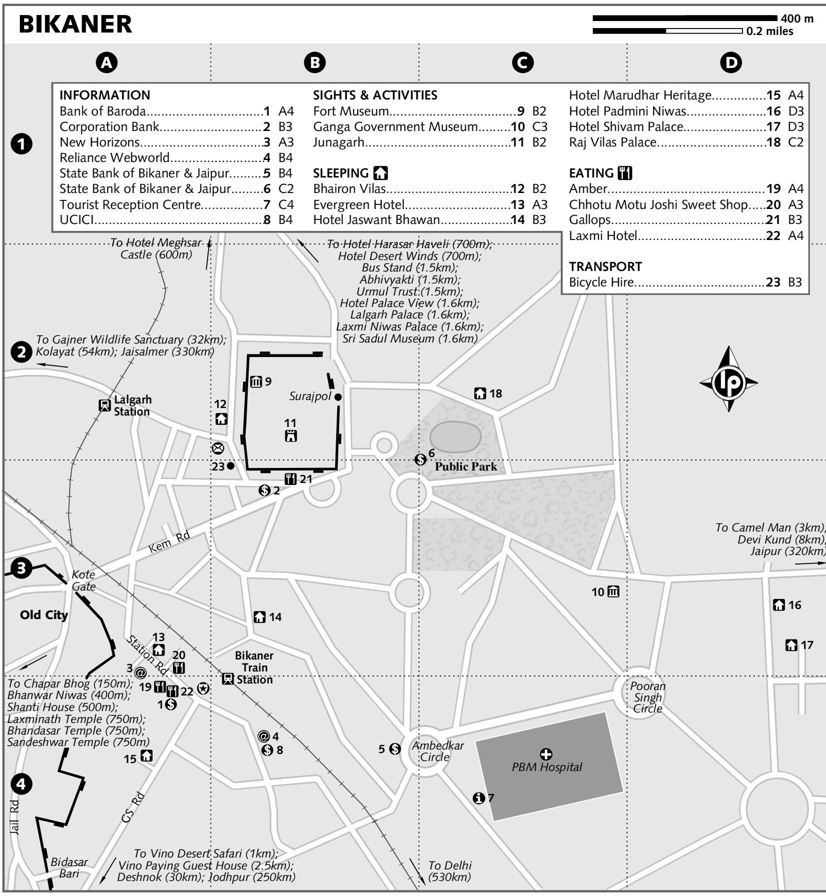
Sights & Activities

JUNAGARH

Constructed between 1588 and 1593 by Raja Rai Singh – a general in the army of the Mughal emperor Akbar – this most impressive fort (adult/child Rs 100/50, camera/video Rs 30/100; 10am-4.30pm) has a 986m-long wall with 37 bastions, a moat and two entrances. The Surajpol (Sun Gate) is the main entrance to the fort. The palaces within the fort are on the southern side, and make a picturesque ensemble of courtyards, balconies, kiosks, towers and windows.

It's the interiors that make the fort stand out. Highlights include the Diwan-i-Khas, the Phool Mahal (Flower Palace), which is decorated with paintings and carved marble panels, the Hawa Mahal, the Badal Mahal and the Anup Mahal.

A compulsory guide is included in the admission price. To visit at a leisurely pace, ask for your own guide – larger groups rush around. The fort museum (admission Rs 25, camera Rs 20; 9am-6pm) is fascinating and well labelled, with over-the-top costumes, jewellery and a rare glimpse of everyday paraphernalia.



LALGARH PALACE

Set about 3km north of the centre, the red-sandstone Lalgarh Palace (admission Rs 5, 10am-4.30pm, Wed closed) was built by Maharaja Ganga Singh (1881–1942) in memory of his father Maharaja Lal Singh. It's out-and-out grandeur, with overhanging balconies and delicate

BIKANER CAMEL SAFARIS

Bikaner is an excellent, offbeat alternative to the Jaisalmer safari scene and is becoming increasingly popular with travellers. There are fewer organisations running safaris here, so the hassle factor is quite low. Here the safari tends to involve more travel in a camel cart – less tiring but also less fun. There are fewer sights than around Jaisalmer, but it's great if you want to ride in empty desert scrub, sleep on dunes and see life in desert villages. Longer safaris (to Jaisalmer or Jodhpur) are highly recommended.

Recommended operators are Vino Desert Safari (☎ 2270445; vino_desertsafari@yahoo.com), which offers half-day to 13-day trips (Rs 500 to 800 daily, depending on how much luxury you require and how much you use a jeep); and Camel Man (☎ 2231244; www.camelman.com), run by Vijay Singh Rathore, which operates safaris ranging from a half-day trip to 14 days (all the way to Jaisalmer), with basic safaris costing Rs 550 per day, and more upmarket excursions (beds with sheets are provided!) costing from Rs 800 to 1100 per day.

latticework. The 1st floor contains the Sri Sadul Museum (Indian/foreigner Rs 10/20, camera/video Rs 20/50; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) with lots of fascinating old black-and-white photographs and some evocative maharaja accessories. In front of the palace is a carriage from the maharaja's royal train. You can stay in the palace (see opposite for details).

OTHER SIGHTS

The narrow streets of the old city conceal a number of old havelis and a couple of notable Jain temples. The temples date from around the 15th century. Bhandasar Temple is particularly beautiful, with yellow-stone carving and dizzyingly vibrant paintings. It's said the foundations contain 40,000kg of ghee, and the floor still gets greasy in summer. Sandeshwar Temple is smaller, but has some fine carving. Nearby, the unassuming Laxminath Temple comes alive at around 10.30pm each night.

The Ganga Government Museum (admission Rs 3, Mon free; 9.30am-5pm Sat-Thu) houses a well-displayed, interesting collection of sculptures, handicrafts, musical instruments and gold paintings by Usta artisans. Entrance is to the back left of the building.

Eight kilometres north at Jorbeer, you'll find the Camel Research Institute (admission free). Between 4.30pm and 5pm, you can watch a cavalcade of camels returning, in biblical fashion, to their enclosure after a day's grazing. A small shop sells the usual knick-knacks, including jootis of camel hide.

BUDGET

The cheapest budget options are along horrendously noisy Station Rd. The better budget options are to the north or south of town.

Vino Paying Guest House (☎ 2270445; vino_desertsafari@yahoo.com; Gangasharhar Rd; s/d from Rs 100/200, huts Rs 300) Three kilometres south of town, this is a homy choice in a family house. Rooms are superb value, and the new garden huts are cool and comfy. Vinod runs excellent safaris, and is developing a farm stay with a swimming pool; he's also the go-to-guy for information on the surrounding villages.

Evergreen Hotel (☎ 2542061; Station Rd; r Rs 175-250) The green-tiled rooms are fine, but they can be noisy and some are musty. There's a restaurant downstairs.

Shanti House (☎ 2543306; ML Modi, New Well; r Rs 200) This is a cool little haveli inside the old city, behind the Jain school, with three bargain rooms on a narrow staircase, all brightly decorated, and the bustle of Bikaner at your doorstep. Owner Gouri is a trustworthy local guide.

Hotel Marudhar Heritage (☎ 2522524; hmheritage_2000@yahoo.co.in; GS Rd; s Rs 250-900, d Rs 350-999) A short walk from the train station, this friendly choice is well kept and well run, with rooms to suit most budgets. Rooms are plain, comfortable and good value, and are popular with locals. There are nice views from the roof, but meals are served in your room.

Hotel Harasar Haveli (☎ 2209891; Sadul Ganj; r Rs 200-1500) Harasar is still the premier budget choice in Bikaner, and a great place to meet other travellers. The deluxe rooms are worth the added expense, and there's a beautiful rooftop restaurant. Be patient with pleas to take a camel safari, and don't worry about getting lost – it's a favourite with the rickshaw drivers.

MIDRANGE

Hotel Palace View (☎ 2543625; opnain_jp1@sancharnet.in; Lalgarh Palace Campus; s Rs 300-650, d Rs 450-800) This hotel near Lalgarh Palace is extraordinarily clean, and the hosts take great pride in satisfying their guests. Hotel Padmini Niwas (☎ 2522794; 148 Sadul Ganj; s/d from Rs 450/750) A fabulous place to unwind from the rush of the city, this hotel has clean, pleasant rooms, and a chilled-out, helpful owner. The lawn area is a revelation, with the town's only outdoor pool (nonguests Rs 100).

Bhairon Vilas (☎/fax 2544751; hbhairon@rediffmail.com; r Rs 600-1200) This hotel is run by the former Bikaner prime minister's great-grandson Harsh Singh, and his grandfather's stately residence is a fine place to stay. Rooms are eclectically decorated with antique clothes, bearskins and old family photographs.

Hotel Jaswant Bhawan (☎/fax 2548848; jash_want@sanchar.web; r Rs 700-1200) Quiet, with a small garden, this is an agreeable, welcoming place. The pricier rooms are spacious and airy, and the food is first rate.

Hotel Desert Winds (☎ 2542202; s/d Rs 900/1100) Next door to Harasar Haveli, this venture has clammy but spacious rooms, and a friendly, relaxed atmosphere. It's run by a retired director of Rajasthan Tourism.

TOP END

Raj Vilas Palace (☎ 2525901; rajvilas@sancharnet.in; Public Park; s/d from Rs 2050/3700) This former residence of the governor general is the latest luxury addition to Bikaner. It has friendly staff, and a real red-carpet feel. The rooms are centrally air-conditioned, though most are fairly businesslike. The rooftop restaurant has the best views in the city.

Bhanwar Niwas (☎ 2529323; www.bhanwarniwas.com; s/d Rs 3000/4000) This superb hotel in the beautiful Rampuri Haveli, near the kotwali (police station) in the old city, has large, solemnly decorated rooms, with hand-painted wallpaper, arranged around an internal courtyard.

Lalgarh Palace (☎ 2540201; www.lallgarhpalace.com; s/d from Rs 3500/4000) This hotel is part of the maharaja's palace (p253), dating from 1902, and has well-appointed, old-fashioned rooms around a courtyard – pricier ones are huge, with high ceilings. There's an indoor pool (Rs 250 per hour for nonguests). You can even stay in the royal train carriage (Rs 2000).

Laxmi Niwas Palace (☎ 2202777; s/d/ste Rs 4500/5500/8000; ❄) Beside Lalgarh Palace, this is a beautifully restored building with some exquisite carving. Rooms are enormous, elegant and evocative, and there's a charming restaurant (see below).

Eating

RESTAURANTS

Amber (Station Rd; dishes Rs 40-95; ⏲ 10am-3pm & 6-10pm) With brown walls and mirrors, and a staid, no-nonsense look, Amber is well thought of and popular for veg fare.

Laxmi Hotel (Station Rd; dishes Rs 15-40) This is a simple place, open to the street, with tasty, fresh vegetarian dishes – you can see the roti (unleavened bread) being flipped in front of you. The two places on either side are pretty good too.

Laxmi Niwas Palace (Laxmi Niwas Palace; dishes Rs 15-40) A lovely place to eat, this is an excellent garden restaurant, with music in the evenings. It has different prices for Indians and foreigners.

Chapan Bhog (Rani Bazaar; dishes Rs 20-70) This spot dishes out top-notch vegetarian fare at very affordable prices. Squeaky clean, but some of the ambience got rubbed off by the sponge.

Gallops (☎ 3200833; dishes Rs 30-150) This is a spiffy air-conditioned café brewing all kinds of imported beans (short black Rs 30). It has a camel-leather-clad lounge area with big windows, and is popular for dinner, especially among the dating set.

QUICK EATS

Bikaner is noted for the namkin (spicy nibbles) sold along Station Rd, among other places.

Chhotu Motu Joshi Sweet Shop (Station Rd; sweets Rs 3-50) This is Bikaner's most loved sweet stop, with an assortment of Indian treats. Try the milk sweet ras malai (cottage cheese dumplings; Rs 12) and saffron kesar cham cham (milk, sugar and saffron flavoured sweet; Rs 6 for two).

Kwality (Station Rd; ice creams Rs 10-15) Kwality has quality ice cream.

Shopping

Abhivyakti (Ganganagar Rd; ⏲ 8.30am-6.30pm) Run by the Urmul Trust, a local NGO supported by Urmul Dairy (which has an outlet next door), Abhivyakti sells textiles produced by skilled artisans from local villages. The profits go directly to the producers and help to fund a girls' college. Take care, as rickshaw drivers and touts have taken visitors to other, commercial shops, claiming them to be run by the Urmul Trust. The Urmul Trust welcomes volunteers (see p1159).

BUS

The bus stand is 3km north of the centre, almost opposite the road leading to Lalgarh Palace. If your bus is coming from the south, ask the driver to let you out closer to the centre. There are express buses to various places, including Udaipur (Rs 242, 12 hours, 6.30pm), Ajmer (Rs 127, seven hours, 15 daily), Jaipur (via Fatehpur and Sikar; Rs 135, seven hours, 15 daily), Jodhpur (Rs 119, 5½ hours, 15 daily) and Jaisalmer (Rs 130, eight hours, three daily), Agra (Rs 227, 12 hours, 5am). There are also buses to Delhi (ordinary/express Rs 190/207, 11/10 hours, six daily), some of which run via Jhunjhunu (Rs 77, five hours, three daily).

Private buses make their way to Jaipur (express/sleeper Rs 100/150), Jodhpur (express/sleeper Rs 100/120), Udaipur (express/sleeper Rs 210/250), Mt Abu (express/sleeper Rs 260/280), Delhi (express/sleeper Rs 170/200), Agra (express/sleeper Rs 200/250) and Ajmer (express Rs 150).

TRAIN

For a train to Jaipur there's the Bikaner Howrah Superfast, leaving at 3.55pm (sleeper/3AC Rs 201/510, seven hours, 175km) or the Jaipur–Bikaner Express (Nos 4737/8), departing at 9.45pm (sleeper/2AC Rs 158/731, 10¼ hours). The Ranakpur Express (No 4707) leaves for Jodhpur at 9.45am (sleeper Rs 148, five hours, 569km). To Delhi, the Bikaner Mail (No 4792) leaves at 7.50pm and arrives in the capital at 6am (sleeper/2AC Rs 200/827, 449km).

A train line to Jaisalmer is scheduled to open by the time of publication.

Getting Around

An autorickshaw from the train station to the palace should cost Rs 30, but you'll probably be asked for more. Bicycles can be hired near Bhairon Vilas for Rs 30 a day.

AROUND BIKANER

Devi Kund

The marble and red-sandstone royal cenotaphs of the Bika dynasty rulers, with some fine frescoes, are 8km east of Bikaner. This peaceful spot is Rs 120 return by rickshaw.

Deshnok

The extraordinary Karni Mata Temple (www.karnimata.com; admission free, camera/video Rs 20/50; 4am-10pm) at Deshnok, 30km south of Bikaner, is one of India's weirder temples. According to legend, Karni Mata, a 14th-century incarnation of Durga, asked the god of death, Yama, to restore to life the son of a grieving storyteller. When Yama refused, Karni Mata reincarnated all dead storytellers as rats, depriving Yama of human souls.

The mass of kabas (holy rodents) is not for the squeamish. It's considered auspicious if the rats scamper over your feet. Keep your eyes peeled for a rare white rat – it's good luck if you spot one.

The temple is an important pilgrimage site, so remove your shoes and be respectful. There are at least two buses hourly from Bikaner to Deshnok (Rs 12, 40 minutes). A taxi return costs Rs 450.

Gajner Wildlife Sanctuary

Thirty-two kilometres along the road to Jaisalmer is this former hunting resort of Maharaja Ganga Singhji, spread over 6000 acres with its own private wildlife sanctuary – filled with black bucks, blue bulls, desert foxes and wild fowl – and stunning views across Lake Gajner. Purportedly the largest hotel in the world (but who's counting?), Gajner Palace Hotel (☎ 2528008; Tehsil Kolayat; r from Rs 3800) is, well, large. Rooms are elegantly restored – and reasonably priced – although service is a bit stiff in the neck. Nonguests can purchase an entry ticket (Rs 150 including soft drink), and sit on a terrace overlooking the lake.

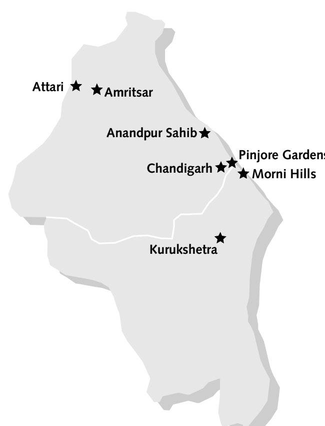
Kolayat

Set around a temple-ringed lake, Kolayat is a beautiful, small, untouristed town. Adding to its sleepy air are stoned sadhus emerging from temples and shrines around the lakes as if rehearsing for Michael Jackson's 'Thriller' video clip. Kolayat Mela (p166) is held in November.

There are a number of dharamsalas (pilgrims' guesthouses), but most won't accept tourists. Bhaheti Dharamsala (r with shared bathroom Rs 30), on the main ghat by the lakeside, is a good place. It has simple rooms (you'll need to rent a bed for Rs 5). Otherwise the town is a good day trip from Bikaner.

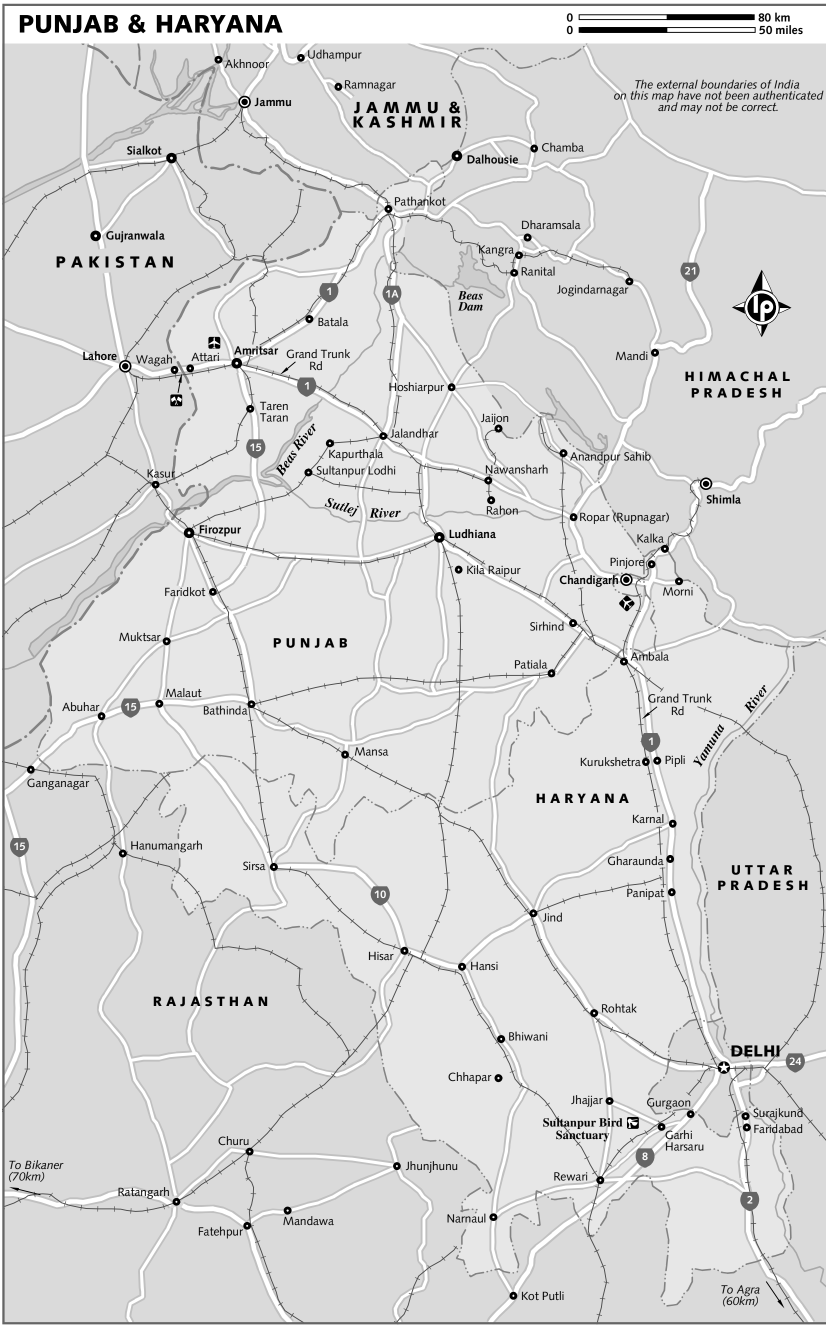
There are regular buses from Bikaner (Rs 20, 1½ hours), or there's a train from Lalgarh Station at 8.30am (Rs 18, 1½ hours), returning at 4pm.

Punjab & Haryana



Enter the land of the Sikhs. Gurdwaras replace temples as the most popular places of worship, Blender's Pride replaces Royal Stag as the choice whisky, and the personable, turban-clad population generally provide a break from the stresses found elsewhere in India. Punjab may share a (Sikh) prime minister with the rest of India, but feels distinct from the other states.

Of course, this doesn't mean visitors should expect to escape the idiosyncrasies and inefficiencies that make travel in India such hair-tearing fun. Even in Chandigarh – an Indian city like no other, designed by the modernist architect Le Corbusier and inhabited by the hippest young urbanites north of Mumbai (Bombay) – cows hold up new cars cruising the straight roads.



Indeed many parts of Punjabi culture, from butter chicken to bhangra music, strike visitors as quintessentially Indian. This is because Punjab, with more ex-patriots than any other state, has exported its culture far and wide. Another benefit of this foot-loose population is the foreign remittances that have helped make Punjab the most developed state. This isn't to say there aren't social problems – it's riddled with heroin and opium near the Pakistan border. And amid the modernisation, a strong sense of the past remains at sites such as Amritsar's Golden Temple – Sikhism's holiest shrine and one of India's most beautiful buildings.

Haryana, home of Kurukshetra, split from Punjab in 1966. Along with its Sikh neighbour, the largely Hindu state is called the 'wheat belt' or 'bread basket' for its agricultural prowess.

PUNJAB & HARYANA

History

Although Punjab's Sikh heritage (p67) is the most famous aspect of the region's history, architectural excavations have revealed that more than 4000 years ago the area was part of the Indus Valley civilisation established by the Harappans. Buddhist relics have been excavated at sites associated with the later Mauryan dynasty in Sanghol, near Ludhiana (p269), while the Kurukshetra district (p277) contains 360 historical sites within a 92-sq-km radius. The Mahabharata mentions Punjab's land and its people, while Valmiki is believed to have worked on the Ramayana in Sri Ram Tirath Ashram near Amritsar.

While the Indian campaigns of the Persian king Darius and Alexander the Great reached Punjab before faltering, the more successful Mughal invaders regularly surged through the area. Panipat became the battleground where regional domination was won or lost over the next six centuries.

During the 1947 partition of India, Punjab saw horrendous carnage that left hundreds of thousands of people dead (see p50). Later, in 1984, Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's highly controversial decision to forcibly remove Sikh separatists – who were championing for an independent Sikh state (to be called Khalistan) – from Amritsar's holy Golden Temple, ignited bloody Hindu–Sikh clashes. In the same year Gandhi was assassinated at her Delhi residence by two of her Sikh bodyguards (see p52).

With more and more local tourists, hotels can fill up, particularly at weekends and during holiday periods.

At the beginning and end of the cooler, drier October-to-March period there is heavy smoke in the air from local farmers burning their fields.

Learn to pronounce Sat sri akal (hello in Punjabi) and you'll have rickshaw drivers punching the air with glee.

Getting There & Around

Arriving and leaving by air is increasingly popular – Amritsar has an international airport (p274) and Chandigarh Airport (p266) is working towards that status.

The Grand Trunk Rd through both states is one of India's top highways, but trains or planes are best for long journeys.

In the same way as the modernist architect Le Corbusier's radical design for Chandigarh polarises critics, this anomaly among Indian cities splits visitors. New hotels, department stores, cafés and other air-conditioned hang-outs line the boom town's straight, clean roads, catering to the fast-living young Indians who emulate Westerners and embrace modernity while gleefully disposing their disposable incomes. While some visitors are unimpressed by Chandigarh's nontraditionalism, others find the geometric, green city a welcome break from the chaos of other Indian cities, and plunge into the many sights and, of course, glitzy nightlife.

The capital of both Punjab and Haryana, it is a Union Territory controlled by the central government.

Orientation

The bus station and main shopping area are in Sector 17 while most hotels and restaurants are in neighbouring Sector 22 and Sector 35. The train station is 8km from the city centre, connected by autorickshaw and taxi.

contains an abstract woollen tapestry designed by Le Corbusier, viewable when court is not in session (9.30am to 10am, 1pm to 2pm and 4pm to 5pm). You can also walk round to the famous Open Hand sculpture, another creation of the workaholic Le Corbusier.

You must enter the High Court via the carpark. On the way is a small museum (admission free; 10am-5pm Tue-Sat) containing curios such as original Le Corbusier sketches and the handcuffs worn by Ram Godse, who assassinated Mahatma Gandhi (see the boxed text, p51).

To visit the huge Secretariat and the silo-like Vidhan Sabha, obtain a permit from the Architecture Department in the UT Secretariat (☎ 2741620; Sector 9).

NEK CHAND FANTASY ROCK GARDEN

Entering this 20-hectare garden (adult/child Rs 10/5; 9am-6pm Nov-Mar, to 7pm Apr-Oct) is like falling down a rabbit-hole into the labyrinthine interior of one man's mind. Created by Nek Chand (see the boxed text, p264) using recycled junk and organic materials, the garden is a maze of twisting walkways and staircases suddenly emerging into valleys with crashing waterfalls or amphitheatres overrun by figures made of china shards. No material is wasted, from electrical sockets to colourful wire and glass, in the legions of men, animals, archways and walls with faces around every corner.

SUKHNA LAKE

Another aspect of Le Corbusier's master plan is this attractive artificial lake with paddle boats (2-seaters per 30min Rs 30, 4-seaters per 30min Rs 60). Ornamental gardens, a playground and the Mermaid Fast Food Restaurant & Bar (meals Rs 50-100) complete the fun.

MUSEUMS

The brilliant City Museum (Sector 10; admission free; 9.45am-5pm Tue-Sun, closed holidays) uses photos, letters, models, newspaper reports and architectural drawings to give a fascinating insight into the planning and development of Chandigarh.

Next door to City Museum, the Natural History Museum (admission/camera Rs 2/5; 10am-4.30pm Tue-Sun) is less interesting for its fossilised animal skulls than its manuscript section, containing Sanskrit texts dating back 500 years.

INDIA'S MODERNIST METROPOLIS

Chandigarh was built as the new capital of Punjab following Partition (p50) and, in the words of Jawaharlal Nehru (independent India's first prime minister), as 'an expression of the nation's faith in the future'.

It was always going to be radically modern, but it could have turned out very differently. Two pioneering American architects were originally assigned the task: Matthew Nowicki and Albert Mayer, the latter influenced by the 'romantic picturesque' seen in England's Garden Cities movement. 'This dream of some modern planners depends entirely on…a way of life alien to that of India', said Nowicki, prophesising the experience of anyone who's tried to negotiate a roundabout in Chandigarh.

When Nowicki died in a plane crash, Mayer resigned and Le Corbusier was recruited to finish the job. The Swiss architect envisaged a modernist utopia where 'arithmetic, texturique and geometrics' would replace the 'oxen, cows and goats driven by peasants, crossing the sun-scorched fields'. However, Chandigarh was meant to be a city of people – more democratic than Delhi – and this called for pedestrian piazzas, tree-lined avenues, houses facing traffic-quiet roads, public gardens, and the artificial Sukha Lake.

Le Corbusier's plan was for low-density, low-rise housing divided into 1-sq-km neighbourhood sectors, each with their own shops, schools and places of worship. Even looking at a map of Chandigarh's numbered sectors, arranged in a geometric grid, provides a sharp contrast with the chaos typically found in urban India.

There was of course room for the odd artistic flourish – notably the symbolic sculptures (no human statues were allowed), and the 'temples of democracy' at the Capital Complex.

Nehru was pleased with the controversial city. 'It is the biggest example in India of experimental architecture. It hits you on the head, and makes you think. You may squirm at the impact but it has made you think and imbibe new ideas.'

GALLERIES

Set in a garden dotted with sculptures such as a mini Eiffel Tower, the Government Museum & Art Gallery (Sector 10; admission Rs 2, camera Rs 5; 10am-4.30pm Tue-Sun, free guided tours 11am & 3pm, films 11am & 3pm Sun) has a sizeable collection including embroidered phulkari (embroidery work) wraps made by Punjabi village women, modern art and Buddhist sculptures from across Asia.

Under renovation at the time of research, the National Gallery of Portraits (Sector 17; admission free; 10am-1.30pm & 2-5.30pm Mon-Fri, to 1.30pm Sat, closed last Sat of month & holidays), behind the State Library, displays photos and paintings illustrating various facets of the Independence movement.

DOMESTIC DWELLINGS

Another aspect of Le Corbusier's grand plan is the lines of three-storey terrace housing in Sector 22 and Sector 17. Despite the overall similarity of design, each unit has different doors, windows, balconies, brickwork and layout, painted in various pastel shades.

PARKS & GARDENS

In line with Le Corbusier's vision of a garden city, Chandigarh is dotted with parks. The Rose Garden (Sector 16) and Bougainvillea Garden (Sector 3) are perfect for a cycle or stroll. Less central parks include the Terraced Garden (Sector 33) and the Garden of Fragrance (Sector 36).

Tours

An open-top, double-decker tourist bus (1 trip/full tour/half-day/full day Rs 10/25/50/75; hourly 9.30am-6.30pm) runs from Hotel Shivalikview to the Rose Garden, Punjab University, Government Museum & Art Gallery, Capital Complex, Fantasy Rock Garden and Sukhna Lake. It takes an hour and you can hop on and off.

JUNK ART GENIUS

Following Independence and Partition, as refugees flooded across the Pakistan border and a newly liberated India made the bold statement that was Chandigarh, one of the new city's road inspectors was a diminutive arrival from Pakistan called Nek Chand. Struck by the amount of waste generated as villages were cleared in the construction of Chandigarh, Chand hauled this matter back to his jungle home and gave it a second life as a sculptural material.

Eventually he had tens of thousands of forms made of urban and industrial waste as well as local stone, created by his own hand and the slow forces of nature. His battalions of water women, pipers, chai-drinkers, monkeys, cheeky stick men wearing tea-cup hats, dancing women and other characters steadily multiplied in secretly sculpted spaces.

Incredibly, Chand's efforts weren't officially discovered until some 15 years after they began, when a government survey crew stumbled upon them in 1973. The unauthorized garden was illegally occupying government land and should technically have been demolished, but the local council recognised the garden as a cultural asset. Chand was given 50 labourers and paid a salary so he could devote himself to the project.

Today, the garden is said to receive an average 5000 visitors a day. It is one of Asia's most significant recycling programs. There is a Nek Chand Foundation (www.nekchand.com), raising funds and recruiting volunteers to restore broken mosaic panels, remove graffiti, photograph and document. There have been exhibitions about the garden in America and Europe and even minireplica gardens built.

Now in his 80s, Chand is still hard at work in his pebble-lined office hidden in the garden. He helpfully proffers exhibition catalogues, newspaper cuttings and correspondence, but he is a man of few words. There is the obvious language barrier of course, but also, perhaps, the humble nature of a man who has spent decades quietly beavering away at his rock-and-junk world.

Indeed, he is less vocal about having met pretty much every notable Gandhi than he is about his plans to develop the garden so visitors will not have to retrace their steps. Asked whether it's true that the garden is India's most visited tourist attraction after the Taj Mahal, he replies, 'It is said.'

Chand had no formal education beyond high school. 'I had no training, no previous interest – one day I just started,' he says. 'In my childhood I used to build mud houses and other toys.' He is said to be influenced by modernist masters such as Le Corbusier and Gaudi, but the deeply spiritual member of Punjab's Hindu community is clear on the main source of his ideas: 'They are a gift from god.'

AROUND CHANDIGARH

Pinjore (Yadavindra) Gardens

These reconstructed 17th-century Mughal walled gardens (admission Rs 10; ⏰ 7am-10pm) are built on seven levels with water features that sometimes operate and panoramic views of the Shivalik hills.

Founded and designed by Nawab Fidai Khan, who also designed Badshahi Mosque in Lahore (in present-day Pakistan), the gardens served as a retreat for the Mughal kings and their harems. They fled the area during a goitre outbreak and the gardens fell to the Maharaja of Sirmaur, Himachal Pradesh.

There is an annual heritage festival (see the boxed text, p260) here.

The Mughal-style Budgerigar Motel (☎ 01733-231877; dm Rs 150, r Rs 500-2500; ❄) has spick-and-span rooms with balconies and two four-bed dorms. There's free entry to the gardens through the hotel's popular bar-restaurant.

Jal Mahal (meals Rs 35-200) is a café and bar in the middle of one the gardens' green ponds.

From Chandigarh, take the bus (Rs 15, one hour, frequent) or a taxi (Rs 200).

Morni Hills

Haryana's only hill station gazes across the hazy plains to the Shivalik and Kasauli hills in nearby Himachal Pradesh, providing a taste of the mountainous landscape over the state line.

Located 10km from Morni village, Hosh & Josh Hills 'n' Thrills (☎ 01733-250166; Tikka Tal; adult/child Rs 50/30; ⏰ 9am-7pm) amusement park is announced by a towering statue of a local mushroom that resembles a nose.

This small town has three main attractions, chief among them the Aam Khas Bagh, a Mughal walled garden laid out by Emperor Akbar with additions by Emperor Jehangir in the 17th century. Its fountains and wells are empty but make an impressive sight, along with the ruined Jehangir's palace and the winter rooms with vents in the floor. There is a small museum with an interesting exhibition about Punjab's role in Indian Independence.

A 20-minute walk away is an important Sikh pilgrimage site, the golden-domed Gurdwara Fatehgarh Sahib, which commemorates the 1704 martyrdom of the two youngest sons of the 10th Sikh guru, Gobind Singh. Buried alive by the Mughals for refusing to convert to Islam, they are honoured at the three-day Shaheedi Jor Mela festival held here every December.

A 10-minute walk further on is Rauza Sharif, the decorative marble mausoleum of Muslim saint Shaikh Faruqi Sirhindi. It is regarded as a second Mecca by India's Sunnis, who flock here every July/August during the Urs festival.

The Maulsari Tourist Complex (☎ 222250; off Bassi Rd; r with/without AC Rs 700/500; ❄), near the Aam Khas Bagh, 3km north of the Grand Trunk Rd, has drab but spacious rooms, a garden setting, and a good bar-restaurant.

PATIALA

Once the capital of an independent Sikh state that was established by Baba Ala Singh as the Mughals weakened (see p45), Patiala is today a friendly town with a handful of sights. It's famous for pagri (turbans), paranda (hair-braiding tags), jootis (Punjabi slippers, often pointy-toed), the Basant festival (see the boxed text, p260) and, of course, the Patiala peg (see the boxed text, below).

Built in a Mughal/Rajasthani style, the faded Qila Mubarak fort looks like it could have been transported from the Great Thar Desert to its position in the bazaar area. Its ceiling is so unsound that entry is not allowed, but a wander round its crumbling walls and spiky doors is worthwhile, and there's an arms gallery (admission Rs 10; ⏰ 10am-5pm Tue-Sun) in the 1859 Durbar Hall. Antique weapons, once used by Sikh warriors, are displayed beneath 22 chandeliers.

New Moti Bagh Palace (admission Rs 10; ⏰ 10am-5pm Tue-Sun) is a wedding-cake building with a suspension bridge over a huge, empty tank. Inside, the Art & Medal Gallery contains Krishna statues, ivory figurines, stuffed animals, furniture, sitars and tablas. A PATIALA PEG

In the early 1900s a tent-pegging contest took place in Patiala between the teams of the viceroy and the sports-mad maharaja of Patiala. Tent-pegging is the curious sport of spearing tent pegs into the ground with a lance from the back of a galloping horse.

Desperate to win and fearful of the wrath of their maharaja, the Patialan team invited their opponents to drinks the night before the match. The British were plied with larger-than-usual measures (or pegs) of whisky, while the tent pegs were changed – smaller ones for the viceroy's team and larger ones for the Patialans. The maharaja's team won but the viceroy's team complained to the maharaja about the size of the pegs. The maharaja (not realising that the complaint referred to the tent pegs) replied that in Patiala, well known for its hospitality, the pegs (of whisky) were always larger than elsewhere. Even today an extra-large measure of whisky is known all over India as a Patiala peg.

KABADDI – KABADDI – KABADDI

A cross between 'touch' and a game of rugby without a ball, kabaddi is played all over India but is particularly popular in Punjab. While one of the players chants 'kabaddi' – and he can't stop or the other team of seven wins – the opposition has to get him to touch the centre line. The game frequently descends into a scrum, but one young player assured us there were rules: 'You're not supposed to punch him or put your hand over his mouth – that would be a foul.'

A less common, nine-a-side variation on this is kho-kho, in which a player chases his opponent around a line of eight sitting players.

NORTHERN PUNJAB

India's textile centre, Ludhiana, the site of a battle in the First Sikh War of 1845–46, is also the headquarters of Hero Bicycles, which produces nearly three million bikes annually.

Ludhiana is a good base from which to attend the Rural Sports Festival (see the boxed text, p260) in Kila Raipur in February, and to visit Kapurthala. This was the home of the Spanish flamenco dancer who married a local maharaja, a story that inspired the Javier Moro novel which Hollywood actress Penelope Cruz was hoping to turn into her directorial debut, The Princess of Kapurthala, at the time of writing. With a permit from the District Commissioner's office you can visit the maharaja's pink, Versailleslike Jagatjit Palace.

Jalandhar survived sacking by Mahmud of Ghazni nearly 1000 years ago and later became an important Mughal city. Nowadays it's a commercial centre and the venue for a top music festival (see the boxed text, p260).

Faridkot, near the Pakistan border, was once capital of a Sikh state of the same name and has a 700-year-old fort. The 13th-century poet and Sufi (Muslim mystic) Shaikh Farid lived here, and is honoured by a festival (see the boxed text, p260). His belief in equality – 'Every person's heart is a jewel' – influenced Guru Nanak (see the boxed text, p273) and some of his poems are in Sikh holy book, the Guru Granth Sahib.

AMRITSAR

Founded in 1577 by the fourth guru Ram Das, Amritsar is home to Sikhism's holiest shrine the Golden Temple. The gold-plated gurdwara glitters in the middle of its holy pool like a huge bullion bar, a sight that some visitors rate alongside the Taj Mahal – particularly after experiencing the surrounding old city's frenetic lanes. In contrast to the old city, the internet cafés, hotels and eateries in Amritsar's modern areas are as slick as the state capital.

The original site for the city was granted by the Mughal emperor Akbar, but another Mughal, Ahmad Shah Durani, sacked Amritsar in 1761 and destroyed the temple. It was rebuilt in 1764, and in 1802 was roofed with gilded copper plates by Maharaja Ranjit Singh and become known as the Golden Temple.

During unrest in Punjab in the early 1980s, the Golden Temple was occupied by separatists intent on creating an independent Sikh homeland. On the orders of then–prime minister Indira Gandhi, they were finally evicted by the army in 1984 in a controversial military action that damaged to the temple and fuelled violent Sikh-Hindu clashes in Punjab and beyond that left thousands (predominantly Sikhs) dead. Gandhi was later assassinated by her Sikh bodyguards (see p52).

Orientation

The old city, including the Golden Temple and bazaars, is southeast of the train station and surrounded by a circular road, once the site of the city's massive walls. Modern Amritsar, north of the train station, contains most of the upmarket hotels and Lawrence Rd, which is a popular eating and shopping street. The bus station is 2km east of the train station.

Sights & Activities

GOLDEN TEMPLE

True to Sikhism's inclusive nature, all are welcome at the Sikhs' holiest shrine. The atmosphere inside is genuinely spiritual but not at all po-faced or daunting, with crowds chatting and bathing in the pool.

Pilgrims and visitors to the complex must remove shoes, wash their feet and cover their heads; head scarves are provided. Photography is only permitted from the Parkarma, the marble walkway surrounding the pool. Tobacco and alcohol are not allowed inside the temple. There is an information office (⏲ 7am-8pm) near the main entrance.

The architecture, like the religion, is a blend of Hindu and Islamic styles but very different to both. The golden dome (said to be gilded with 750kg of pure gold) represents an inverted lotus flower, a symbol of Sikh devotees' aim to live a pure life. Like the Taj Mahal, it's worth seeing at different times of day.

A causeway (Gurus' Bridge) leads to the two-storey marble temple, Hari Mandir Sahib (or Darbar Sahib). This stands in the middle of the sacred pool Amrit Sarovar (Pool of Nectar), which gave the town its name. The lower parts of the marble walls are decorated with inlaid flower and animal motifs in the pietra dura (marble inlay) style of the Taj Mahal.

Four priests inside the temple keep up a continuous chant in Gurmukhi from the Sikh holy book and this is broadcast around the temple complex by loudspeakers. The original copy of the Sikh holy book, the Guru Granth Sahib, is kept under a pink shroud in the Hari Mandir Sahib during the day and returns ceremoniously to the Akal Takhat at night. Ceremony times are 5am and 9.15pm in winter, and 4.30am and 10.15pm in summer.

Upstairs, in the main entrance clock tower, the Sikh Museum (⏲ 7am-7pm) tells the grisly history of the Sikhs, martyred by the Mughals, the British and Mrs Gandhi.

The Akal Takhat, where the Shiromani Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee (SGPC), or Sikh Parliament, traditionally meets, was heavily damaged by the army in 1984, but has been carefully restored.

Completed in 1784, the octagonal Baba Atal Tower commemorates Atal Rai, the son of sixth guru Har Gobind. After Atal performed a miracle, bringing back to life a playmate who had died of a snake bite, his father scolded him for interfering with the ways of god. The repentant youngster committed suicide on this spot in return for the life he had saved. The gurdwara's nine stories each represent one year of Atal's short life.

Guru-Ka-Langar is the free (donations appreciated) community dining room, a feature of all Sikh temples as a mark of unity among people of all religions, creeds and nationalities. The huge kitchens (one has a chapati machine) prepare dhal, rice and chapatis for up to 40,000 pilgrims a day. All are welcome to join the masses eating on the floor.

JALLIANWALA BAGH

This small park (6am-7pm summer, 7am-6pm winter) commemorates 2000 Indians killed or wounded here by the British authorities in 1919 – see the boxed text, below. Some of the bullet marks are still visible, as is the well into which hundreds leapt to avoid the bullets. The park also contains the Martyrs' Gallery (9am-5pm summer, 10am-4pm winter).

RAM BAGH

This park has a must-see museum (admission Rs 10; 10am-4.45pm Tue-Sun, closed holidays) in the summer palace built by the Lion of Punjab, Maharaja Ranjit Singh (1780–1839). Under the great one-eyed leader, Punjab colonised much of present-day Kashmir and Pakistan. The weapons, paintings and manuscripts on display bring the man and this golden age of Punjabi history to life.

MATA TEMPLE

This labyrinthine Hindu cave temple (dawn-dusk) commemorates the bespectacled 20th-century female saint, Lal Devi. Women wishing to become pregnant come here to pray. The circuitous route to the main shrine passes through ankle-deep waterways, low tunnels, staircases, walkways and caves, the last of which turns out to be the inside of a divine mouth.

SRI DURGIANA TEMPLE

Dedicated to the goddess Durga, this 16th-century temple (dawn-dusk) is a Hindu version of the Golden Temple, sometimes known as the Silver Temple for its carved silver doors.

CARNAGE AT JALLIANWALA BAGH

Unrest in Amritsar was sparked by the Rowlatt Act (1919), which gave British authorities emergency powers to imprison without trial Indians suspected of sedition. Hartals (one-day strikes) were organised in protest, and escalated into rioting and looting. Three British bank managers were murdered in reprisal attacks following the killing of Indian protestors by the British.

General Dyer was called upon to return order to the city. On 13 April 1919 (Baisakhi day), 20,000 Indians were holding a peaceful demonstration in Jallianwala Bagh, an open space surrounded by high walls. Dyer arrived with 150 troops and without warning ordered his soldiers to open fire. Six minutes later, more than 400 people were dead, and a further 1500 were wounded.

Dyer's action was supported by some of his British colleagues but described as 'a savage and inappropriate folly' by Sir Edwin Montague, the Secretary of State for India. It galvanised Indian nationalism – Gandhi responded with his programme of civil disobedience, announcing that 'cooperation in any shape or form with this satanic government is sinful'. Richard Attenborough's excellent film Gandhi dramatically re-enacts the massacre and inquiry.

THE FIRST GURU

Born in present-day Pakistan, Guru Nanak (1469–1539), the founder of Sikhism, was unimpressed with both Muslim and Hindu religious practices. Unlike many Indian holy men, he believed in family life and the value of hard work – he married, had two sons and worked as a farmer when not travelling around, preaching and singing self-composed kirtan (Sikh hymns) with his Muslim musician, Mardana. He performed miracles and stressed meditation on God's name as the best way to enlightenment.

Nanak believed in equality centuries before it became fashionable and campaigned against the caste system. He was a practical guru – 'a person who makes an honest living and shares earnings with others recognises the way to God'. He appointed his most talented disciple to be his successor, not one of his sons.

His kirtan are still sung every day in every gurdwara (Sikh temple), and his picture hangs in millions of homes, from humble farm cottages to the prime minister's residence. For more on Sikhism see p67.

Pathankot, in northwest Punjab, is a transport hub. The bus station (☎ 2220088; Gurdaspur Rd) is 500m from the Pathankot Junction train station and 3km from Chakki Bank train station.

Two kilometres from Pathankot Junction is Punjab Tourism's Gulmohar Tourist Complex (☎ 20292; r Rs 300-600;). The station retiring rooms are also reasonable, and there are hotels on Railway Rd.

Buses and taxis run to Amritsar, Jammu, Chamba, Dalhousie, Dharamsala, Manali, Chandigarh and Delhi.

Several daily express trains leave for Delhi (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 388/940/1206, 11 hours), while other daily expresses serve Amritsar (sleeper Rs 271, three hours) and Jammu (sleeper Rs 271, three hours). The Kangra Valley narrow-gauge line leaves from Pathankot Junction train station.

BORDER BRAVADO

Every late afternoon, just before sunset, the Indian and Pakistani military meet at the border to engage in an extraordinary 20-minute ceremony of pure theatre. The border-closing ceremony elicits machismo and posturing from the proud young soldiers on both sides, but also, despite the two countries' uneasy relationship, a stunning display of harmony. It starts around 4.30pm in winter and 5.30pm in summer.

It's worth getting there early – though avoid the stampede when the crowd charges along the chicken run leading to the grandstands. Foreigners are allowed to sit at the front in the VIP area anyway – or, better, grab a seat at the roadside near the gates, right in view of the high-kicking action.

At this point the young soldiers are milling about with the air of self-conscious debutantes, and the real action is in the people who run at the border gates carrying a huge Indian flag. A compere stokes the crowd's patriotic fervour, as they cry 'Hindustan Zindabad' (long live Hindustan). The Pakistanis are equally vociferous, except during Ramadan, when the stands are noticeably quieter, and are segregated by sex.

With a bellow from the guardroom, a squad stomps out onto the road, shoulders square, moustaches twirled and eyes bulging. The drill is to parade up and down in front of your home audience, stamp your feet, throw in some yells and, once puffed up, march to face the other side with a scowling face and clenched fists. Preceded by a kick so high the soldier looks in danger of concussing himself, the high-octane march to the border is vaguely reminiscent of Monty Python's Ministry of Silly Walks sketch.

The gates are flung open. The commanding officers march up to each other and perform a brief handshake and salute. Then the guard parties goose-step to the border and wheel to face their flags; the Indian and Pakistani soldiers stand shoulder to shoulder, their black-and-red and green, red and gold uniforms only centimetres apart.

Bugles blow and the flags are lowered slowly, diplomatically remaining at the same level. The flags are quickly folded and marched back to their respective guardrooms. The border – separating western Punjab from an area that, until 1947, was also part of the state (see p50) – is closed for the night.

ANANDPUR SAHIB

The Sikhs' holiest site after the Golden Temple has several historical gurdwaras, backed by the Nana Devi Hills. A pilgrimage site for more than 300 years, it was founded by ninth guru Tegh Bahadur in 1664, before the Mughal emperor Aurangzeb beheaded him for refusing to convert to Islam. His son, Guru Gobind Singh, founded Sikh brotherhood the Khalsa (see p67) here in 1699, and Holla Mohalla (see the boxed text, p260) celebrates the anniversary every March.

There is a State Bank of India ATM at the side of Kesgarh Sahib.

The fortresslike Kesgarh Sahib is the largest gurdwara and has a number of holy weapons on display, some of them in the hands of the guards. The smaller gurdwara Sis Ganj marks the spot where Guru Tegh Bahadur's head was cremated after it was brought back from Delhi. Some 500m from town is Anandgarh Sahib, where a flight of steps leads to a maroon fort on the roof. From here you can see the five-petal form (inspired by the five warrior-saints in the Khalsa) of the Khalsa Heritage Complex, where a small interpretation centre (admission free; 8am-8pm) explains Sikhism.

Kishan Haveli (☎ 01887-232650; Academy Rd; r Rs 300-1000;), located 1.5km from town, is a tumbledown palace with surprisingly plush rooms with balconies providing a break from the religious intensity. The only disappointment is the restaurant (meals Rs 50).

Gurdwaras also provide accommodation (doubles with fan are available, cost by donation) and free meals, though they can be full.

The bus and train stations are 300m apart on the main road outside town. Buses leave frequently for Chandigarh (Rs 45, two hours) and every hour to Amritsar (Rs 92, five hours).

The overnight Delhi–Una Himachal Express connects Anandpur Sahib with Delhi (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 271/546/641, eight hours).

HARYANA

Haryana's name means either 'Abode of God' or 'green home' depending on whether you believe its first syllable refers to Hari, one of Vishnu's aliases (see p64), or hara, Hindi for green. Either description will ring true to escapees from Delhi or Chandigarh who cross Haryana's flat, patchwork landscape and visit the revered Kurukshetra.

The Haryana state government has built a chain of modern motel-restaurants along the main roads that are named after the many birds found in the state. Haryana Tourism Chandigarh (☎ 2702955; Sector 17; 9am-5pm Mon-Fri); Delhi (☎ 011-23324910; haryanatourism74@hotmail.com; Chanderlok Bldg, 36 Janpath; 9am-5pm Mon-Fri) can supply a pamphlet.

Kurukshetra may look like an unprepossessing regional centre, but it is in fact the birthplace of the universe and the spot where good triumphed over evil – at least according to Hindu teachings. Brahma created man and the universe here, and Krishna delivered his epic Bhagavad Gita sermon, offered as advice to Arjuna (p66) before he fought the 18-day Mahabharata battle in which good came out on top.

The town takes its name from founder Kuru, the Aryan king who offered his limbs to Vishnu in order to establish a land of ethics and values.

There's a lacklustre tourist office (☎ 291615; Pehowa Rd; 10am-6pm) in Neelkanthi Krishana Dham Yatri Niwas, a hotel run by Haryana Tourism opposite Hotel Harsh.

At the Sri Krishna Museum (☎ 091288; admission Rs 15; 10am-5pm Tue-Sun, closed holidays), Krishna kills the Crane demon, subdues the serpent Kaliya, plays the flute and wanders among cows. The fascinating museum is packed with ancient and modern representations of this heroic incarnation of Vishnu (see p64), created by artists from across the subcontinent using materials including wood, stone, bronze, ivory, palm leaves and silk.

Next door is the Kurukshetra Panorama & Science Centre (☎ 291100; admission Rs 15; 10am-5.30pm Tue-Sun). An air-brushed sky flares behind vultures picking at severed heads in the diorama telling the story of the Mahabharata battle between the good Pandavas and the evil Kauravas. The ground floor has fun, interactive science exhibits.

Just 500m away is India's largest tank, the Bhramasarovar, which was created by Brahma according to the Vamana Purana (see p65). Surrounded by bathing ghats and walkways, the popular spot attracts huge crowds during solar eclipses and Gita Jayanti, anniversary of the Bhagavad Gita (see the boxed text, p260).

Another 6km away is Jyotisar, where the banyan tree is said to be an offshoot of the one under which Krishna delivered the Bhagavad Gita.

An entertaining way to see the tree and the nearby temple and tank is at the one-hour sound-&-light show (admission Rs 15; 7.30pm Tue-Sun), with its booming Hindi narration of the momentous local events.

More interesting, Shaikh Chehli's tomb (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; dawn-dusk Sat-Thu) is located 2.3km from the Sri Krishna Museum. This Sufi saint and spiritual teacher of the Mughal prince Dara Shikoh is buried with his family in sandstone-and-marble mausoleums atop a red-brick fortress, surrounded by 12 cupolas. It has views across Kurukshetra and of the neighbouring madrasa (Islamic seminary) and Mughal garden, which respectively contain a small archaeological museum (admission free; 10am-5pm Sat-Thu) and the ruins of a caravanserai.

Don't be put off by the name or the unappealing façade, Hotel Harsh (☎ 396192; Pehowa Rd; r 450-650;) is a friendly hotel near Birla Mandir Chowk and is the best place to stay and eat in central Kurukshetra. The five comfortable rooms have TVs and sit-down flush toilets, and the popular restaurant serves a respectable curry.

Some 6km west of the Grand Trunk Rd, Kurukshetra is reached by regular buses (Rs 90, three hours) from Delhi ISBT and trains (2nd class/chair car Rs 70/400, 2½ hours).

For Patiala in Punjab, buses regularly run to Pehowa (Rs 16, 45 minutes) and from there to Patiala (Rs 27, 1½ hours).

SOUTH & WEST OF DELHI

Surajkund

Some 30km south of Delhi, this town at the northern end of the Aravalli Range is the site of the awesome Surajkund Crafts Mela (see the boxed text, p260).

Surajkund is named after the impressive 10th-century sun pool built by Raja Surajpal, leader of the sun-worshipping Tomars.

Haryana Tourism has three hotels here, king of which is the luxurious Hotel Rajhans (☎ 0129-2512843; r Rs 1500-2300, ste Rs 2800-9900; ❄), with its health club, swimming pools, putting greens and views of the sun pool.

The midrange options are Hermitage (☎ 0129-25112314; r Rs 900-1300, hut Rs 1600; ❄) and, better, Sunbird (☎ 0129-2511357; hut Rs 900-1100, r Rs 1250, ste Rs 2000-3000; ❄), which has lake views.

To get to Surajkund, take a bus from Delhi ISBT (Rs 20, two hours) or catch the Agra train to Faridabad (2nd class/chair car Rs 35/317, 30 minutes), 7km south, and continue by autorickshaw.

During the Mela, special buses run from Delhi ISBT.

Sultanpur Bird Sanctuary

This 145-hectare sanctuary (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/40; camera/video Rs 25/500; ⏲ 6.30am-6pm Apr-Sep, to 4.30pm Oct-Mar) plays host to 255 bird species, including Saras cranes, golden orioles, red munias, green barbets and black drongos. Its fluctuating population of woodland, shallow-water and deep-water birds includes 157 resident species and 98 visiting species from Western Europe, the Middle East and polar regions. The best time to visit is October to March, when, even at noon, stalks and herons can be seen from the 3.5km track circling the lake.

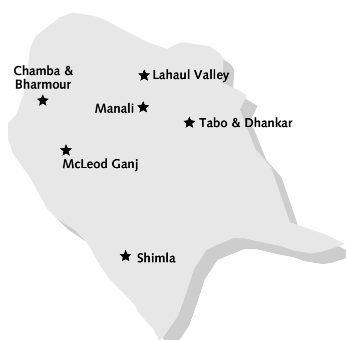
Haryana Tourism's Rosy Pelican Complex (☎ 0124-2375242; r Rs 800-1300; ❄) is less notable for its rooms and so-called huts, which are a little decrepit at the bottom of the spectrum, than for its relaxing bar-restaurant.

It's worth staying the night at Sultanpur, 46km southwest of Delhi, because getting there is harder than spotting a red-crested pochard. Crowded local buses run through the city centre to Dula Khan (Rs 10, one hour). Change in the lay-by there for Gurgaon (Rs 10, one hour), then cover the remaining 14km in a Tempo (Rs 20) or autorickshaw – though the drivers demand Rs 400.

Alternatively, catch a passenger train to Garhi Harsaru and walk the remaining 5km or take a rickshaw (Rs 50). The easiest option is to charter a taxi from the city centre (Rs 1000) or, if you're arriving by plane, straight from the airport, which is only 25km away but no cheaper in a prepaid taxi.

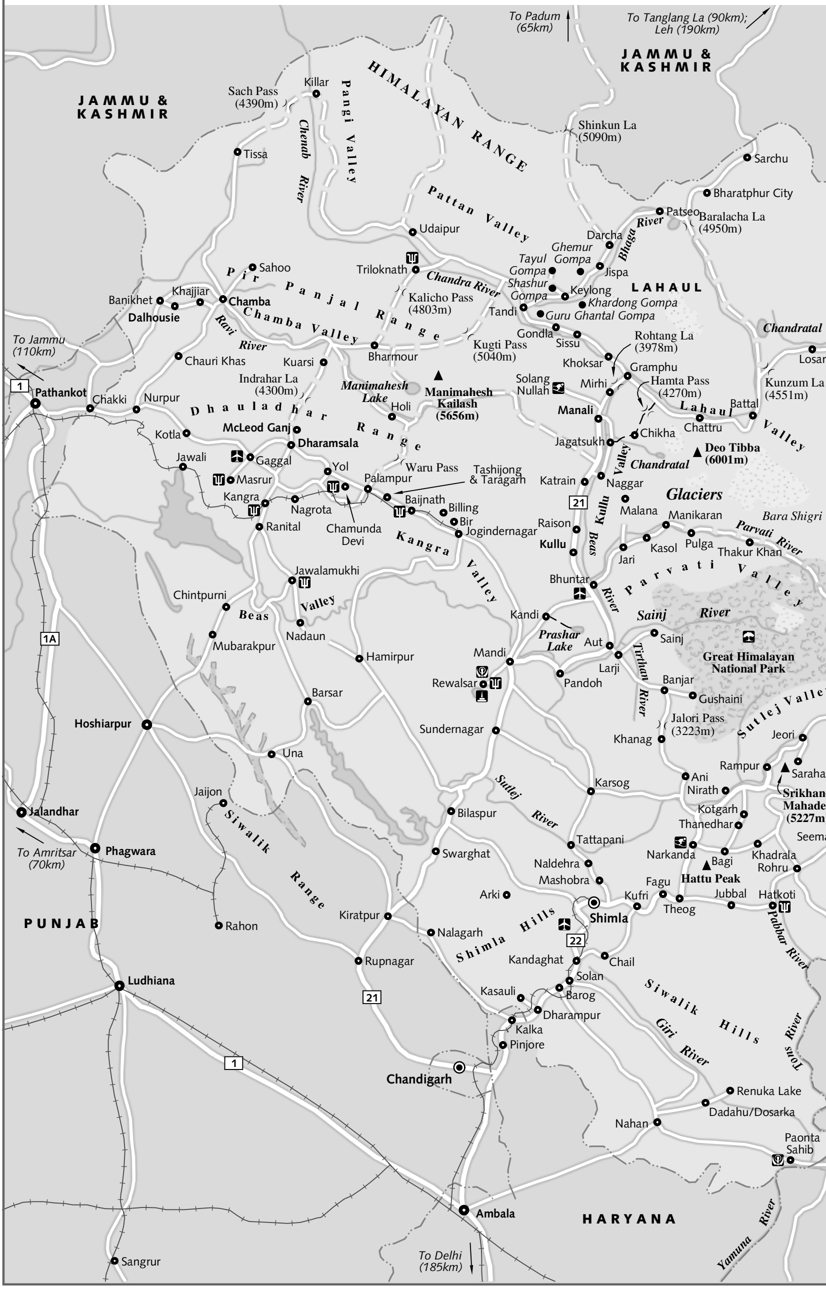
Himachal Pradesh

Crowned by the rugged peaks of the western Himalaya, Himachal Pradesh is North India for the thousands of foreign and domestic travellers who come here every year. Few states can match such incredible diversity – rolling foothills, lofty hill stations, madcap traveller towns, serene pine forests, endless apple orchards and the high-altitude deserts of Lahaul and Spiti, cut off from the outside world by snow for six months of the year.



The mystique of the mountains is overpowering. The mighty peaks of the Dhaula Dhar, Pir Panjal and western Himalaya ranges rise above Himachal, providing a setting for a host of adventure activities from treks and rafting to skiing and Buddhist meditation. Tibetan Buddhist culture abounds in the ancient monasteries of Lahaul and Spiti and the bustling traveller centre of McLeod Ganj, home to the Dalai Lama and the Tibetan government in exile.

In the far east of Himachal, Shimla is India's most popular hill station, and further north is Kinnaur, the eastern gateway to Spiti and an increasingly popular destination for domestic hill tours. In central Himachal, Manali and the Kullu Valley provide a base for hippies, honeymooners and thrill seekers. Across Himachal, the lower hills bristle with castles, forts, temples and palaces.



Manali is the start of the main overland route to Ladakh. Increasingly popular, the Great Himalayan Circuit starts in Kashmir, slices through the mountain valleys of Ladakh, Lahaul and Spiti to Kinnaur and ends with some luxury in Shimla. Even the beaten track is a dirt road between mountain walls – no wonder Himachal is most people's favourite northern state!

HIGHLIGHTS

- Sink a chottapeg (little drink) in a Raj-era hotel in Shimla (p282), India's favourite hill station
- Accumulate karma credits with the Tibetan refugees of McLeod Ganj (p319)
- Ski, trek, climb, paraglide, raft or zorb in the backpacker playground of Manali (p306), Himachal's adventure-sport capital
- Encounter chilled-out people and centuries-old temples in little-visited Chamba (p335) and Bharmour (p337)
- Leave the crowds behind by jumping off the Leh–Manali bus in the serene Lahaul Valley (p339)
- Seek inner peace at the Buddhist monasteries of Tabo (p344) and Dhankar (p344), set amid stunning mountain scenery in the remote Spiti Valley

HIMACHAL PRADESH

HIMACHAL PRADESH

History

Ancient trade routes dominate the history of Himachal Pradesh. Large parts of northern Himachal were conquered by Tibet in the 10th century and Buddhist culture still dominates the mountain deserts of Lahaul and Spiti. The more accessible areas in the south of the state were divvied up between a host of rajas, ranas and thakurs (kings), creating a patchwork of tiny states, with Kangra, Kullu and Chamba at the top of the pile.

Sikh rajas came to dominate the region by the early 19th century, signing treaties with the British to consolidate their power. The first Westerners to visit were Jesuit missionaries in search of the legendary kingdom of Prester John – a mythical Christian kingdom lost in the middle of Asia. Interestingly, there are several Aryan tribes in North India to this day, including the Kinnauris of eastern Himachal, most following a mixture of Hinduism and Buddhism.

During the 19th century the British started creating little bits of England in the hills at Shimla, Dalhousie and Dharamsala. Shimla later became the British Raj's summer capital and narrow-gauge railways were pushed through to Shimla and the Kangra Valley. The British slowly extended their influence until most of the region was under the thrall of Shimla.

The state of Himachal Pradesh was formed after Independence in 1948, liberating many villages from the feudal system. In 1966 the districts administered from the Punjabi – including Kangra, Kullu, Lahaul and Spiti – were added and full statehood was achieved in 1971. Initially neglected by central government, Himachal has reinvented itself as the powerhouse of India, with huge hydroelectric plants providing power for half the country.

FAST FACTS

- Population: 6.1 million
- Area: 55,673 sq km
- Capital: Shimla
- Main languages: Hindi, Pahari and Punjabi
- When to go: April to June, October to November (July to October in Lahaul and Spiti)

Climate

The main seasons for visitors are May to July and September to November – advance reservations for accommodation are recommended at this time. During the monsoon the middle hills can be chilly and damp, and snow closes many mountainous areas from November to April, including the mountain valleys of Lahaul and Spiti. However, this is also the peak skiing season in the Kullu Valley and around Shimla.

Information

PERMITS

The border between India and Tibet is politically sensitive and foreigners need an inner line permit to travel between Rekong Peo in Kinnaur and Tabo in Spiti. You can obtain the permit easily, with two passport photographs and photocopies of the identity and visa pages from your passport, in Shimla, Kaza and Rekong Peo – see those sections for details.

Activities

Manali is India's adventure capital, with a host of wild and exhilarating activities on offer – see the boxed text, p310.

PARAGLIDING

The soaring thermals over the Himalayan foothills provide perfect conditions for paragliding, particularly at Solang Nullah (p317) and Billing (p331).

RAFTING

The Beas River near Kullu and the Sutlej River near Shimla churn up some impressive white water for kayaking and rafting – see p291, p303 and p310.

SKIING

From January to March, skiers and snowboarders congregate on Solang Nullah (p317) and Narkanda (p292) near Shimla.

TREKKING

Himachal Pradesh is a trekkers' paradise, and dozens of agencies in Manali, McLeod Ganj and other towns offer organised treks to remote valleys and mountain passes. Daily rates for all-inclusive treks start at US$50 per person, including guides, tent, food and porters.

The main trekking season runs from May to October, but monsoon rains affect some routes in July and August. Solo trekking is not advised – a number of accidents and 'disappearances' have occurred in Himachal Pradesh (see the boxed text, p303).

Popular moderate treks include the trek to the Pin Valley in Spiti (p302), the Hamta Pass trek from Manali to Lahaul (p315), the trek from McLeod Ganj to the Chamba Valley (p328) and the trek from Padum to Darcha in Ladakh's Zanskar region (p391). Another possible trekking destination is the Great Himalayan National Park (p299) near Kullu.

Getting There & Away

The main route into Himachal is by bus, but there are small airstrips near Shimla, Kullu and Dharamsala that receive flights from Delhi. However, flights are often cancelled and travellers have reported being booked onto overpriced alternative flights by the airlines. If your flight is cancelled, make any new arrangements yourself.

You can get part way into Himachal by train via the old metre-gauge lines from Kalka to Shimla and from Pathankot to Jogindernagar.

Getting Around

Buses provide most local transport around Himachal Pradesh, though there are a few internal flights. Many people hire a car and driver for local sightseeing. Share jeeps join the buses on the trip from Manali to Lahaul and Spiti.

EASTERN HIMACHAL PRADESH

Eastern Himachal Pradesh is dominated by Shimla, the state capital, and the mountainous district of Kinnaur, which runs north to Spiti. The official district website is http://hpshimla.nic.in.

SHIMLA

Until the British arrived, there was nothing at Shimla but a sleepy forest glade known as Shyamala (a local name for Kali). Then a Scottish civil servant named Charles Kennedy built a summer home in Shimla in 1822 and nothing was ever the same again. By 1864 Shimla had developed into the official summer capital of the Raj. Every summer until 1939, the entire government of India fled here from the sweltering heat of the plains, with all their clerks' books and forms filled out in triplicate. When the Kalka–Shimla railway line was constructed in 1903, Shimla's status as India's premier hill station was assured. The city was even briefly the capital of Punjab until the map was redrawn in 1966.

Strung out along a 12km ridge, Shimla seems poised on the verge of sliding into the valley. A jagged line of snow-covered peaks is clearly visible from April to June and October to November, which coincides with the main tourist season. Honeymooners also come here to frolic in the snow in December and January.

Orientation

Shimla sprawls for miles, but the official centre of town is Scandal Point. From here, the flat open area known as the Ridge stretches east to Christ Church, where trails lead uphill towards the Jakhu Temple.

The long, winding, pedestrian-only Mall runs west and east from Scandal Point. Downhill is Cart Rd, with the train station, the Inter State Bus Terminal and taxi stands. A passenger lift provides a quick route between the Mall and Cart Rd, or you can go via the maze of alleyways of the Middle Bazar and Lower Bazar.

At the bus or train stations you will be besieged by porters offering to carry your luggage uphill for Rs 30 to Rs 50. Most double as touts, and hotels will increase your room tariff to cover their commission; ask to be taken to a prominent landmark such as Christ Church and walk alone from there.

Sights & Activities

HIMACHAL STATE MUSEUM & LIBRARY

About 2.5km west of Scandal Point by the telecommunications mast, the state museum (Indian/foreigner Rs 10/50, camera Rs 50/100; 10am-1.30pm & 2-5pm Tue-Fri, Sun & 2nd Sat each month) has an impressive collection of Kangra and Mughal miniatures, Chamba embroidery, coins and jewellery, temple carvings, paintings of Shimla and weapons – including some massive blunderbusses.

VICEREGAL LODGE & BOTANICAL GARDENS

Built as an official residence for the British viceroys, the Viceregal Lodge (Indian/foreigner Rs 20/50; 9.15am-1pm & 2-5pm, till 7pm Jun & Jul, tours half-hourly) looks like a cross between Harry

MONKEY BUSINESS

Shimla's simians are a genuine menace, staging daring raids through open hotel windows and threatening or attacking anyone who gets in their way. Shimla's monkeys weren't born bad – they were made this way by irresponsible feeding – but the 'monkey menace' has become so severe that the local government has started rounding up local monkeys and shipping them to nature parks in Tajikistan.

Visitors to Shimla should learn some monkey sense. Always lock your hotel windows and never leave clothes drying on balconies. Don't feed monkeys and never smile or make eye contact if confronted – it's the monkey equivalent of shouting 'bring it on'! On the walk up to the Jakhu Temple, do as the locals do and carry a stick. Walking sticks can be hired on the path for Rs 15 or you can buy one for Rs 50.

Potter's Hogwarts School and the Tower of London. Every brick used in its construction was hauled up here by mule. Today it houses the Indian Institute of Advanced Study, but tours of the buildings leave half-hourly. Tickets cost Rs 20 if you just want to look at the outside.

Opposite the lodge entrance is the Himalayan Bird Park (admission Rs 5; 10am-5pm), with a small collection of exotic pheasant, including the iridescent monal pheasant, Himachal's state bird.

The lodge is a pleasant 4.5km walk west from Scandal Point along the Mall, but it's poorly signposted – aim for the telecommunications mast, then stick to the largest road.

CHRIST CHURCH

This very English church (☎ 2652953; services 9am Sun) is the second-oldest church in northern India (the oldest is in Ambala in Haryana). Built between 1846 and 1857, it contains Raj-era memorials and some fine stained glass. There's still a Sunday service, albeit with a tiny congregation.

JAKHU TEMPLE

Shimla's most famous temple is dedicated to the monkey god, Hanuman, and appropriately, hundreds of rhesus macaques loiter around harassing devotees for prasad (food offerings). Getting here involves a pleasant hike through the forest, starting at the east end of the Ridge, but the monkeys are frankly a menace – see the boxed text, above. Taxis from either stand charge Rs 250 return.

OTHER TEMPLES

The most popular temple for locals is the small Shiv Mandir just below the Ridge – crowds of school children drop in before and after school and sadhus loiter on the steps soliciting donations.

About 1km west of the Ridge is the Bengali hut–style Kali Bari temple – enshrining an image of Kali as Shyamala. Vaishnavites gather at the modernist Ram Mandir, just above the bus stand in Middle Bazar, while Sikhs attend the huge white Sri Guru Singh Sabha Gurdwara near the ISBT.

HISTORIC BUILDINGS

The Ridge is lined with grand examples of British architecture, including the Town Hall, oddly reminiscent of the mansion in Hammer Horror films, and the mock-Tudor folly housing the post office. At the west end of the Mall are the grand mock-Gothic Offices of the Accountant General. Above Shimla on the way to the Jakhu Temple, you can peek through the gates of Rothney Castle, former home of Allan Octavian Hume – see the boxed text, opposite.

WALKING

About 4km west of Scandal Point is The Glen, a former playground of rich British colonial-

INNER LINE PERMITS

Free permits for travel from Rekong Peo to Tabo in Spiti are issued by the office of the Additional District Magistrate (☎ 2651201; 10am-1.30pm & 2-5pm Mon-Sat, closed 2nd Sat each month), below the BSNL Customer Service Centre on the Mall. Permits are issued while you wait, but you'll need two passport photos and copies of the identity and visa pages from your passport. This office only grants permits for groups of two or more – solo travellers should try for a permit in Rekong Peo or Kaza.

A REMARKABLE CIVIL SERVANT

Regarded as an eccentric reactionary by his peers, Allan Octavian Hume was one of the most colourful characters of the British Empire. Born in Kent, England, Hume joined the Indian civil service in 1849 and quickly rose through the ranks of the colonial administration. Horrified by the shameful treatment of the indigenous population, he became an outspoken campaigner for social reform and eventually helped found the Indian National Congress, the first political party run for and by Indians, which still governs India today.

Hume was even more remarkable outside of politics. In his free time he assembled the largest collection of stuffed birds in Asia, which he housed in a private museum at Rothney Castle, his palatial mansion in Shimla. The whole collection was later shipped to the British Museum in London. Hume was also an avid student of the occult, holding regular seances at Rothney Castle with such luminaries as Madame Blavatsky, the Ukrainian clairvoyant. Hume even toyed with the idea of becoming a chela (student) of the lamas of Tibet, before devoting his energies to self-government for India.

ists, selected for its similarity to the Scottish highlands. The road here passes through the flat green meadow at Annandale, once the site of a famous racecourse, and a popular venue for cricket and polo matches.

About 5km away on the Shimla–Kalka railway line, Summer Hill has pleasant, shady walks. Pretty Chadwick Falls (67m high) are 2km further west, best visited just after the monsoon. There's an interesting temple and excellent views at Prospect Hill, about 5km west of Shimla. About 3km east of Lakkar Bazar, the village of Sanjauli has a Durga temple and a small Buddhist monastery run by Gelukpa monks.

OTHER ACTIVITIES

Pony rides along the Ridge are a popular diversion. You'll pay Rs 40 for a quick turn around Scandal Point and Rs 400 for the trip up to Jakhu Temple.

From April to September, travel agents can arrange rafting trips from Tattapani on the Sutlej River, northwest of Shimla, for Rs 800. In winter there's an ice-skating rink (Nov-Mar) near the Rivoli bus stand.

Tours

In the high season, HPTDC organises daily sightseeing bus tours of villages around Shimla. The tours leave from the Rivoli bus stand at around 10.30am. Seats cost Rs 160 to Rs 245. Contact the office for the current itineraries.

The taxi unions also offer one-day sightseeing tours to Kufri, Naldehra, Fagu and Mashobra (Rs 820); and Mashobra, Naldehra and Tattapani (Rs 1120).

Sleeping

Hotels in Shimla charge steep rates during the peak tourist season (April to June, October to November, and Christmas). At all other times, ask about discounts. In winter, heating can usually be provided for an extra charge. Touts abound in Shimla – claims that hotels are full or closed should be taken with a pinch of salt.

BUDGET

YMCA (☎ 2650021; s/d with shared bathroom Rs 200/350, with private bathroom Rs 450/660;) Up the steps beside the Ritz Cineplex, the YMCA takes all comers, regardless of age, religion or gender. Rooms are pleasant and clean, and there's a net café and lockers for valuables. Book ahead in high season.

YWCA (☎ 2803081; above The Mall) Closed at the time of writing, the YWCA should offer similar facilities to the YMCA, at similar prices.

Hotel Classic (☎ 2653078; fax 2802646; s/d with squat toilet Rs 330/440, with sit-down flush toilet Rs 550/660) The Classic is a worn but welcoming place and the location is handy for the train station and Scandal Point. A new coat of paint has brightened up the rooms and there are views over the Annandale meadow from the garden.

Hotel Dreamland (☎ 2806897; s/d from Rs 400/750) A steep climb behind the pavilion at the west end of the Ridge, the Dreamland has a range of well-cared-for rooms with TVs and modest views. Prices are often discounted so ask before you see the rooms.

Near the ISBT are several noisy cheapies offering basic rooms with bathrooms. Hotel Ranjan (☎ 2652818; d/tr/q Rs 300/400/550) and Vikrant Hotel (☎ 2653602; dm Rs 150, d Rs 250-600) are both OK if you have an early bus in the morning.

MIDRANGE

Hotel Gulmarg (☎ 2653168; gulmarg70@yahoo.com; below The Mall; s Rs 300-450, d Rs 500-1450) Spread out over several buildings and annexes below the Computer College, this huge honeymoon hotel offers gloriously chintzy doubles with round beds and mirrored ceilings, and plainer boxy singles.

Hotel Dalziel (☎ 2652394; hoteldalziel@hotmail.com; The Mall; d Rs 450, new block Rs 550-900) Next to Hotel Classic, the Dalziel offers heritage on a budget. The old building – a former colonial bungalow – contains faded but clean economy rooms arranged around a huge wood-panelled dining room.

Hotel Amber (☎ 2654774; Middle Bazar; r Rs 550-1540) Near the Ram Mandir, this noisy but cheerful hotel has small but agreeable rooms with tiny TVs and shared balconies overlooking the market. There's also an excellent sweet shop and dhaba (snack bar).

our pick Spars Lodge (☎ 2657908; Museum Rd; s/d Rs 600/900) Just downhill from the museum, this place is a real find. Staff are charming, rooms are full of interesting little details and the excellent restaurant serves local trout in a dining room overlooking the valley.

Hotel White (☎ 2656136; www.hotelwhiteshimla.com; Lakkar Bazar; r Rs 600-900, ste from Rs 1200) Northeast of Scandal Point, this midrange place is well run and well priced. It's worth shelling out for one of the 2nd-floor rooms with views down over Shimla.

> FIT FOR A MAHARAJA
> For the full Raj treatment, book a room at Chapslee (☎ 2802542; www.chapslee.com; d with full board Rs 9500-12,500;), the outrageously ostentatious former home of Raja Charanjit Singh of Kapurthala. Perched atop Elysium Hill, about 4km north of Shimla, this extravagant mountain retreat is crammed with chandeliers, tapestries, Afghan carpets, big-game trophies, Mughal ceramics, baroque furniture and pieces of Victoriana. There are just six sumptuous bedrooms, all with completely original fittings, plus a library, card room, sun lounge, tennis courts and – of course – a croquet lawn.

Hotel Doegar (☎ 2811927; www.hoteldoegar.com; The Ridge; d Rs 750-1500) Behind a crazy-paved façade, the Doegar has great views from the roof terrace and compact, fluffy rooms with thick carpets. We recommend upgrading to a deluxe room with balcony and a tub.

Hotel Mayur (☎ 2652392; www.hotelmayur.com; r Rs 950-1500) Overlooking Christ Church, Mayur is comfortable and well located, but not as grand as the glowing neon sign might suggest.

TOP END

Le Royale (☎ 2651002; Jakhu Rd; r Rs 1500-2500) With an eyrie-like location on the track up to the Jakhu Temple, the elegant Royale has an exclusive, hidden-away feel. Rooms are tasteful, there's a very inviting restaurant and bar, and the lawn has mountain views.

Hotel Combermere (☎ 2561246; www.hotelcombermere.com; The Mall; r from Rs 2500, ste from Rs 3200) The choice of well-heeled urbanites from the plains, with grand rooms and prices to match. A glass elevator provides access to 45 rooms and a gym, health club, restaurant and bar.

Hotel Willow Banks (☎ 2658125; www.willowbanks.com; The Mall; r from Rs 2750) After weeks of roughing it in the mountains, the Willow Banks shines like a beacon. There's a gym, sauna and health club, and rooms have every creature comfort.

Oberoi Cecil (☎ 2804848; www.oberoicecil.com; The Mall; s/d from US$215/250;) This spectacular green-and-white pile is easily the classiest place in Shimla. Colonial grandeur outside gives way to modern comforts within and the central atrium has a gorgeous bar and restaurant, open to nonguests. There's wifi throughout.

Eating

As well as the formal restaurants, there are dozens of Indian fast-food places in Middle Bazar serving samosas, potato cakes, channa puri (chickpeas and fried bread) and other snacks. Unless otherwise stated, the following eateries are open from 10am to 10pm.

Baljee's (The Mall; dishes Rs 15-100) Opposite the Town Hall, Baljee's is a great place to breakfast on omelettes, toast and dosas (lentil-flour pancakes), and there's a popular counter selling Indian sweets.

our pick Indian Coffee House (The Mall; dishes Rs 20-60; 8.30am-9pm) A Shimla institution, the Indian Coffee House is packed with local office workers and civil servants, talking heatedly over small cups of coffee and cheap dosas.

Devicos Restaurant (The Mall; dishes Rs 25-90) Skip the fast-food stand at street level and head for the downstairs restaurant for a decent menu of Indian, Chinese and continental staples.

Loveena Restaurant (The Ridge; dishes Rs 30-100) Down some steps near the tourist office, Loveena is a clean and calm bolt hole to escape the bustle of Scandal Point. There's also a moody saloon bar.

China Town (dishes Rs 30-100; 11am-11pm) A tiny hole-in-the-wall place serving superior Indian-Chinese dishes in a boxlike dining room full of mock-Tibetan murals.

Embassy Restaurant (The Mall; dishes Rs 30-100;) A laid-back canteen-style restaurant near the top of the lift, with good sandwiches and soup and tasty homemade cakes. There are great views from the back room.

Ashiana & Goofa (The Ridge; dishes Rs 50-120) Run by HPTDC, these linked restaurants serve good food in reasonably classy surroundings at Scandal Point.

Domino's (The Mall; pizzas Rs 80-355) OK, it's a Western fast-food chain, but travellers flock here for a taste of home after weeks of dhal and rice in the hills.

Café Sol (The Mall; dishes Rs 100-200) Housed in a glass bubble on the roof of the Hotel Combermere, this place serves an upmarket menu that stretches to Japanese and Thai, and there's a great cake counter for dessert.

Cecil (2804848; The Mall; mains from Rs 400, set dinner Rs 780; 12.30-2.30pm & 7.30-10.30pm) To eat out in style, reserve a table at the Cecil – lunch is à la carte and there's an extravagant evening buffet.

Drinking

Barista (The Mall; from 10am) India's chain coffee shops have finally made their way to Shimla, so you can enjoy cappuccino and English-style tea at Barista, opposite the Town Hall.

Park Café (The Ridge; dishes from Rs 40) Up some steps from the Mall, this laid-back, studenty café is a good spot for a hot drink and a snack.

The following places are good for a boozy night out.

The Pub (Ritz Cineplex, Christ Church; beers Rs 90) A very contemporary bar, serving a young, Indian crowd.

Himani's (The Mall; dishes Rs 60-150) Above a snack bar, this neon and marble place is straight out of the 1980s. It's male-dominated without being unfriendly, and the food is good, too.

Entertainment

The most popular entertainment is to stroll along the Mall and the Ridge and watch everyone watching everyone else.

Gaiety Theatre (2805639) The Shimla Amateur Dramatic Club puts on shows here. Even if there's no show on, it's worth taking a peek at the fabulous auditorium.

Ritz Cineplex (2652413; Christ Church; seats Rs 35-75) This modern, multiplex cinema has occasional imported blockbusters amongst the standard Bollywood fare.

Footloose Disco (2652413; entry singles/couples Rs 200/300; from 7.30pm) Sharing the same building, Shimla's only nightclub rocks to Bollywood soundtracks till late on weekends.

Shopping

Domestic visitors head to the bustling Lakkar Bazar to haggle for wood and handloom souvenirs, but foreigners will find more of interest in the crowded and atmospheric Middle Bazar, on the way down to the bus station. You can buy everything here from tin pots and peacock feathers to henna kits and bangles. Fruit and veg are sold at the heaving Sabzi Mandi at the bottom of the hill. For well-made, knock-off, brand-name clothes, head to the Tibetan market behind the tourist office.

Carpets, shawls and other Himachal souvenirs are sold at the Himachal Emporium (2011234; The Mall; 9am-6pm Mon-Sat); while Tibetan souvenirs are sold at the Tibetan Handloom Shop (208163; The Mall; 9am-6pm), aiding Tibetan refugees.

Stock up on clothes made from vivid Indian fabrics at Fab India (2650743; The Mall; 10am-8pm), or boost your music collection with Indian CDs and DVDs at Music World (5538603; The Mall; 10am-6pm).

Ordinary trains (Rs 36/228 in 2nd/1st class) run downhill to Kalka at 2.25pm and 6.15pm, returning at 6am and 8.30am. To travel in style, catch the posh Shivalik Ex-

Getting Around

The only way to get around central Shimla is on foot. Fortunately, there's a two-part lift (Rs 7; 8am-10pm, till 9pm low season) connecting the east end of the Mall with Cart Rd, a five-minute walk above the ISBT. Taxis from the train station to the bottom of the lift cost about Rs 60.

AROUND SHIMLA

See p289 for information on buses and taxis from Shimla to the following towns.

Shimla to Tattapani

About 12km north of Shimla, the small village of Mashobra has an old colonial church and some pleasant walks among deodar trees.

Reached by a drawbridge, the huge white Hotel Gables (☎ 0177-2480171; r from Rs 2200;) was a former residence of Lord Lytton, Viceroy of India. Rooms are plush and the views are sublime.

About 15km north of Mashobra, Naldehra has a famous golf course (☎ 0177-2747739; green fees Rs 250, club hire Rs 250; 7am-6pm Mar-Nov), set amongst the cedars. Ponies can be hired for treks along the ridge and there are more pine-scented walks.

At the golf course, Hotel Golf Glade (☎ 0177-2747809; d Rs 1000-1200, huts Rs 1500-5000) is an up-market HPTDC property offering smart hotel rooms and warm log huts, arranged around an inviting restaurant and bar.

Tattapani

☎ 01907 / elev 656m

About 30km below Naldehra on the banks of the Sutlej River, sleepy Tattapani is known for its steaming sulphurous springs, which spill out onto a sandy river beach. The village has several temples linked to the cult of Rishi Jamdagam, and you can walk to holy caves and former palaces. White-water rafting expeditions along the Sutlej run from June to September (Rs 900 per day).

SLEEPING & EATING

Trimurti Inn (☎ 230749; r Rs 100-500) Uphill towards the new bridge, this place could use a lick of paint but rooms are bright and cheerful.

Rainbow Resort (r Rs 220-300) Next door to the Spring View Hotel, this place also has a private bathing block; rooms are simple and some look towards the river.

Spring View Hotel (☎ 230853; r without/with bathroom Rs 250/300) The best choice here, with a good restaurant and its own bathing pools above the beach. Rafting can be arranged and there's a resident Ayurvedic masseur.

Kasauli

☎ 01792 / elev 1850m

Perched on a hillside 75km southwest of Shimla, Kasauli is another former Raj retreat sent amongst the pines. It has several Raj-era buildings and numerous peaceful walks through the forest offering grand views over the Punjabi plains.

There is no direct bus to Kasauli from Shimla; instead catch a southbound bus from Shimla and change to a local bus at Dharampur.

SLEEPING

Hotel Anchal (☎ 272052; hotelanchal@yahoo.co.in; r Rs 400-850) A rare cheap option in Kasauli, with so-so rooms and modest views. Ask for bucket hot water.

Hotel Ros Common (☎ 272005; d from Rs 1200) A charming HPTDC heritage hotel in a small colonial bungalow, set in lovely gardens that are great for afternoon tea.

Chail

☎ 01792 / elev 2150m

The hilltop village of Chail, 65km south of Shimla, was created by the maharaja of Patiala as his summer capital, after he was expelled from Shimla for getting a little too friendly with the daughter of the British military commander! If you fancy a few overs, Chail has one of several 'world's highest cricket grounds', a 3km walk from the village. As well as forest strolls, there's a wildlife park with deer and birds.

SLEEPING

Hotel Pineview (☎ 248349; r Rs 150-300) The only budget accommodation in town, this place is OK but still hardly great value. Shared rooms have bucket hot water.

HPTDC Palace Hotel (☎ 248141; hptdcchail@sancharnet.in; r from Rs 1200, ste from Rs 3700;) A grand, grey-stone mansion, set in 28 hectares of immaculate lawns, this hotel has all the immodest luxury you'd expect from a former maharaja's palace.

Narkanda

☎ 01782 / elev 2708m

Halfway between Shimla and Rampur, to the northeast, Narkanda is a nondescript truck-stop town, but from January to March it transforms into a modest ski resort. The HPTDC offers seven-day skiing packages for Rs 4955, including accommodation, meals, equipment and tuition, but not transport – see http://himachaltourism.nic.in for dates.

Manali's Directorate of Mountaineering & Allied Sports (☎ in Narkanda 242406; www.dmas.gov.in) runs all-inclusive 14-day ski courses for US$240, also on fixed dates.

SLEEPING & EATING

Hotel Mahamaya Palace (☎ 242448; r Rs 400-800) On the main road, this genial place has a suitably alpine mood, an inviting, dark-wood restaurant and large, worn rooms with mountain views.

HPTDC Hotel Hatu (☎ 242430; hotelhatu@sancharnet.in; d Rs 700-1300) Off the main road, just east of the centre, this government-run place has snug rooms and a restaurant and bar for some après-ski.

Pabbar Valley

☎ 01781 / elev 1400m

Running northeast to Kinnaur, the calm Pabbar Valley is easily accessible from Shimla by public bus. Set in rolling fields at the mouth of the valley, the Durga temple at Hatkoti was founded in the 8th century AD. Built in classic Kinnauri style, the slate-roofed temples attract large numbers of Shaivite pilgrims during the Chaitra Navratra and Asvin Navratra festivals in April and October. Pilgrims' quarters are available at the temple or you can stay at the HPTDC Hotel Chanshal (☎ 240661; dm Rs 75, d with AC Rs 700-800), 10km north of Hatkoti towards Rohru.

Local buses connect Hatkoti to Jubbal, 29km west, which has a fanciful slate-roofed palace built by the former Rana of Jubbal.

☎ 01702

Most tourists just flash through Nahan on the bus between Shimla and Dehra Dun, but the cobbled streets of the old town are crammed with crumbling temples and buildings from the days of the rajas. During the Bhawan Dwadshi at the end of the monsoon, idols of Hindu gods are led through the streets and ceremonially bathed in Ranital (Rani lake) in the town centre.

About an hour by bus from Nahan, Renukjia (Renuka lake) is a popular picnic spot for Indian families. The week-long Renuka Mela festival (p283) is held here in November to honour the goddess Renukaji.

There are several decent hotels in Nahan, including Hotel Renuka (☎ 223306; s/d Rs 150/450) by the maidan, and Hotel Regency (☎ 223302; s/d Rs 250/450), just around the corner. The open-air Milan Restaurant here serves the best food in town.

There are frequent buses to Paonta Sahib (Rs 34, 1½ hours) and Dadahu/Dosarka (Rs 30, 30 minutes), start of the 30-minute walk to Renuka lake. Taxis charge around Rs 500 to Renuka lake or Paonta Sahib.

Paonta Sahib

☎ 01704

Well off the tourist track on the Uttarakhand (Uttaranchal) border, Paonta Sahib is famous as the childhood home of Guru Gobind Singh, the 10th Sikh guru. Sikh pilgrims flock here to pay their respects at the sprawling Paonta Sahib Gurdwara on the banks of the holy Yamuna River. The town overflows during the Holi festival in March, when it can be difficult to find a room anywhere in the area.

On the riverside about 100m from the temple, HPTDC Hotel Yamuna (☎ 222341; d from Rs 500, with AC from Rs 1100;) is a standard HPTDC hotel – unexciting but well looked after, and there's a good restaurant and bar.

There are hourly morning buses to Shimla (Rs 137, seven hours) and several daily services to Dehra Dun (Rs 35, two hours), Nahan (Rs 34, 1½ hours) and Delhi (Rs 140, seven hours).

KINNAUR VALLEY

The old Hindustan–Tibet Hwy (built by the British as a sneaky invasion route into Tibet) runs northeast from Shimla through Kinnaur, providing access to mountain villages with slate-roofed temples and vast orchards of apple trees that provide Himachal's most famous export. The Kinnauris, or Kinners, are a proud, Aryan people who mainly survive from farming and apple growing. You can recognise Kinners all over India by their green felt thepang hats.

With an easy-to-obtain inner line permit (see the boxed text, p296) you can travel north to the mountain deserts of Spiti (p341). For most of the last decade, the road has been blocked between Rekong Peo and Spiti – forcing travellers to change buses and cross the river on precarious ropeways to complete their journey. At the time of writing, the road was open all the way to Tabo, but there's no telling how long it will stay that way – check locally before travelling north of Rekong Peo.

For more information on the Kinnaur Valley, visit the local government website at http://hpkinnaur.nic.in.

Rampur

☎ 01782 / elev 1005m

The gateway to Kinnaur, this nondescript town was once the capital of the Bushahr rajas. Today, Rampur is mainly a place to change buses or break the journey from Shimla to Rekong Peo. Many drunk truck drivers stop here overnight, creating quite a threatening atmosphere, particularly for single women. Most places to stay are below the bus stand, in the bazaar that cascades downhill from the highway.

If you decide to stick around, the delightful, terraced and turreted Padam Palace was built in 1925 for the maharaja of Bushahr; only the garden is open to visitors. There are several ancient temples, including the stone Raghunath Temple on the highway and the Purohit Mandir and Sri Sat Narain Temple down in the riverside bazaar. The gaudy modern Dumgir Budh Temple on the main road recalls Kinnaur's Buddhist past.

The huge Lavi Fair (p283) is held yearly in the second week of November, attracting traders and pilgrims from remote villages.

SLEEPING & EATING

Rampur is a popular liquor stop for truck drivers, so there are some crummy options in the budget range.

Satluj View Guesthouse (☎ 233924; dm Rs 50, r with bathroom Rs 200-275) Down some concrete steps, just uphill from the bus station, this place has tatty but cheap rooms on several levels. The restaurant has good food and cold beers, but almost comically bad service.

HPTDC Hotel Bushahr Regency (☎ 234103; r from Rs 600, with AC from Rs 900) A standard HPTDC property on the western edge of Rampur, combining rooms with plenty of space to spread out and a decent restaurant with slightly lackadaisical service.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Rampur's chaotic bus station has frequent services to Rekong Peo (Rs 84, five hours) and to Shimla (Rs 100, five hours) via Narkanda (Rs 51, three hours). Buses to Sarahan (Rs 32, two hours) leave every two hours. Three daily buses run to Sangla (Rs 80, five hours).

Sarahan

The former summer capital of the Bushahr kingdom, Sarahan is dominated by the fabulous Bhimakali Temple (entry by donation; 🕑 7am-8pm), built from layers of stone and timber to absorb the force of earthquakes. There are two towers here, one built in the 12th century, and a newer tower from the 1920s containing a highly revered shrine to Bhimakali (the local version of Kali) beneath a beautiful silver-filigree canopy.

There are some strict entry rules. Male visitors must wear a cap (which can be borrowed inside the temple), shoes must be removed, smoking is banned, and cameras and leather goods like belts and wallets must be left with the guards. Behind the temple is a small display of ancient ceremonial horns, lamps and weaponry, and across the courtyard is the squat Lankra Vir Temple, where human sacrifices were carried out right up to the 18th century. The tradition lives on in a tamer form in the Astomi ritual during Dussehra (p283), where a menagerie of animals is sacrificed to Bhimakali, including goats, chickens and buffaloes.

A BAD TIME TO VISIT KINNAUR…

Most of the time, Kinnaur is peaceful and calm, but all that goes out the window during the Durga Puja celebrations in September/October. This is the main holiday season in Bengal and thousands of holidaymakers flood into Kinnaur from the plains. Simultaneously, the annual apple harvest lures hundreds of fruit wholesalers from across India. It can be impossible to find a room anywhere in Kinnaur, from Rekong Peo and Kalpa to the far end of the Sangla Valley. If you do end up stuck without a room, you'll have to search for a bed in a drivers' dormitory or try your luck at local shops.

There are peaceful walks in the surrounding hills – stroll downhill to the Buddhist gompa in Gharat village, or gird yourself for the treks on the slopes of Bashal Peak. The flamboyant palace of the last maharaja of Bushahr is just behind the Bhimakali Temple.

SLEEPING & EATING

Apart from the temple guesthouse, all hotels offer significant discounts out of season.

Temple Guesthouse (☎ 274248; dm Rs 25, r Rs 150-300) Rooms here form part of the ancient temple precinct and the more expensive chambers have intricate wood-panelled ceilings. Dorm rooms are more basic, but all bathrooms have hot water.

HPTDC Hotel Srikhand (☎ 274234; dm Rs 75, r from Rs 700) Classier than most HPTDC properties, with tastefully decorated rooms, a respectable restaurant and panoramic views across the valley from the upper floors.

Hotel Sagrika (☎ 274491; r Rs 400-700) Nearby on the main road past the temple, this place is popular with Bengali tourists and very busy in season. Rooms have carpets and hot showers but no TV, and there's a restaurant.

Trehan's Guesthouse (☎ 274205; r Rs 500-600) Small but well formed, Trehan's has friendly owners and compact rooms with thick carpets and TVs. Pricier rooms have views worth paying for.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Three direct buses ply daily from Shimla to Sarahan (Rs 132, eight hours), or there are buses from Rampur (Rs 32, two hours) every two hours. From Rekong Peo, take a bus to Jeori (Rs 76, four hours), and change to a local bus to Sarahan (Rs 13, 45 minutes). Taxis from Jeori to Sarahan cost Rs 300/500 one way/return.

Sangla Valley

☎ 01786 / elev 2680m

The Sangla, or Baspa, Valley used to be described as 'the most beautiful valley in the Himalaya' but today the valley is marred by the dams and barrages of the Baspa Hydroelectric Project. It's still a pretty spot and a good place to see traditional Kinnauri architecture, but you need to head north to Spiti to get a real sense of peace and isolation. The hair-raising road to the valley begins at Karcham on the Rekong Peo–Shimla highway, passing the gushing outflow pipes from the hydroelectric plant.

SANGLA

The largest village in the valley, Sangla was once a fairy-tale village of low wooden houses and slate-roofed temples looking out over a pristine valley, but hydroelectricity is changing Sangla beyond all recognition. Wooden houses are being rebuilt in concrete and new hotels are springing up on every corner. It hasn't quite been spoiled – yet! – but you'll have to head into the hills to find the peace and quiet that the valley was once famous for. Walk down to the lower village to admire the old stone houses and Hindu and Buddhist temples. The Bering Nag Temple forms the centrepiece of the annual Phulech Festival (p283) in September.

Sleeping & Eating

Ask about discounts outside of the main tourist season in September and October. Note that all hotels are booked solid during Durga Puja.

Hotel Mount Kailash (☎ 242527; r Rs 300-1000) Across the gully and backing onto apple orchards, Mount Kailash has a gentle mood and a sunny front lawn. Cheaper rooms have running hot water and buckets rather than showers.

Baspa Guesthouse (☎ 242206; r Rs 350-660, ste Rs 1000) Run by a genial Kinnauri family with an obvious love for the colour green, Baspa offers a range of carpeted rooms with hot water and good views from the upper floors.

Sangla Resort (☎ 242201; r Rs 600-800) Just below the bridge into Sangla, this cute stone chalet is set in peaceful gardens. Rooms are spotless and the shared terrace and balconies have great valley views.

From April to October, several companies operate all-inclusive tented camps along the Baspa River – contact Banjara Camps (☎ 242536; www.banjaracamps.com; s/d tent Rs 3500/3900) or Kinner Camps (☎ 242382; kinnercamps@vsnl.com; tent Rs 2500) for bookings.

The bus stand has half a dozen identical 'Tibetan restaurants' serving momos (Tibetan dumplings), thukpa (noodle soup), chow mein, fried rice and Indian snacks.

Getting There & Away

Buses run to Rampur (Rs 80, five hours) at 6.30am, 10am and noon, or there are four daily buses to Rekong Peo (Rs 30, three hours). Local buses run up the valley to Chitkul (Rs 30, two hours) at noon and 5pm, returning at 6.30am and 1.30pm.

Share jeeps can take you to Karcham (Rs 30, two hours), on the main Shimla–Rekong Peo bus route. Alternatively, take a day trip to the valley by share jeep from Rekong Peo for Rs 1500 to Rs 2000.

AROUND SANGLA

Clinging to a rocky spur 2km above Sangla, the village of Kamru was the former capital of the kingdom of Bushahr. The village is modernising rapidly but there are some impressive slate and stone houses and temples. The village is dominated by the tower-style Kamakhya Devi Fort, the former home of the thakurs (kings) of Bushahr (shoes and leather items should be removed and heads must be covered). Kamru is reached by a sealed road through apple and walnut orchards, starting just west of the bridge into Sangla.

Further up the valley from Sangla are the smaller villages of Rakcham (3050m), 14km from Sangla, and Chitkul (3450m), the last stops on the old trade route to Tibet. Although quieter than Sangla, both are being developed as resorts.

Rekong Peo

Rekong Peo is the main administrative centre for Kinnaur and an important transport hub, but there's little to delay the traveller for longer than it takes to arrange the permit for onward travel to Tabo in Spiti. A steep walk above town near the radio mast is the Kinnaur Kalachakra Celestial Palace (Mahabodhi Gompa), with a 10m-high statue of Sakyamuni and great views across to Kinner Kailash. For a longer stay, take the bus uphill to Kalpa.

Known to locals as 'Peo', the town is spread out along a looping road about 10km above the Hindustan–Tibet Hwy. Most hotels are around the main bazaar at the bottom of town or uphill from the bus stand. A set of concrete steps connects the bus stand and bazaar, passing through fragrant groves of wild marijuana.

There is nowhere to change money here. The Tourist Information Centre (☎ 222897; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) below the bazaar provides local information and arranges inner line permits – see the boxed text, p296. Uphill from the bus stand, Raj Internet Café (per hr Rs 60; 9.30am-7pm) is the only place to check email.

SLEEPING & EATING

Most places to stay are in the main bazaar.

Hotel Snow View (☎ 222048; r from Rs 250) Above a shopping arcade in the bazaar, this noisy option has just a handful of plain rooms with bathroom windows that look onto the valley. There's a cheap dhaba upstairs.

Ridang Hotel (r Rs 350-700) A smart white hotel in the main bazaar, with a good restaurant and a range of large tidy rooms, some carpeted and all with TV.

WHAT PRICE HYDROELECTRICITY?

Until 2002, Kinnaur was one of the quietest corners of Himachal Pradesh. Then hydroelectricity took the state by storm. A series of vast concrete dams and turbine stations now harnesses the mighty force of the Sutlej River, providing power to Himachal Pradesh and most of the surrounding states. The Nathpa Jhakri power station is India's largest power plant, capable of generating 1500 megawatts – equivalent to two nuclear power stations – and there are half a dozen similar facilities strung out along the Sutlej and Baspa Rivers.

Although hydroelectricity is one of the cleanest sources of energy, the effect on the landscape of Kinnaur has been dramatic. Whole valleys have been sacrificed to create giant coffer dams and water that once flowed serenely past forested mountains now surges out of enormous concrete pipes. The projects have flooded Kinnaur with money, leading many villages to demolish their traditional wood and stone houses and rebuild in concrete and steel. Other villages have vanished completely beneath reservoirs, and displaced villagers have been offered minimal compensation. While hydroelectricity is undeniably improving the quality of life for Kinnauris, the loss of natural habitats and cultural heritage will be felt for generations.

INNER LINE PERMITS

Inner line permits allowing travel to Tabo in Spiti can be obtained in one day from the tourist office in Rekong Peo for Rs 150. You'll need two passport photos and photocopies of the identity and visa pages from your passport. Alternatively, make arrangements through your hotel. You'll have to show the permit with your passport at the checkpoints in Jangi and Sumdo.

There are more cheapies uphill from the bus stand; all have rooms with geysers in the bathroom, but all could use a lick of paint. Hotel Shambhala (☎ 222858; r Rs 300-350) and Sairag Inn (☎ 223477; dm Rs 50, r Rs 300-350) are decent value for money.

There are heaps of cheap dhabas in the bazaar.

Hotel Mehefil (ITBP Rd; mains Rs 30-130) Near the start of the steps up to the bus stand, this cosy bar serves cold beers, pegs of whisky and above-average Indian food.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

The bus stand is 2km from the main bazaar by road or 500m by the steps that start by the police compound at the top of ITBP Rd.

There are hourly buses to Shimla (Rs 181, 10 hours), via Jeori (for Sarahan; Rs 76, four hours) and Rampur (Rs 84, five hours). To Sangla there are direct buses at 9.30am and 4pm (Rs 30, three hours) or you can take any bus heading south and change at Karcham (Rs 47, one hour).

For Spiti, there's a 7.30am bus to Kaza (Rs 165, 12 hours) via Nako (Rs 78, five hours) and Tabo (Rs 130, 10 hours). A second bus leaves for Tabo at 4pm. You need an inner line permit to travel on this route – see the boxed text, above. See p345 for more on this route.

Local buses run frequently to Kalpa (Rs 7, 30 minutes), or you can take a chartered taxi (Rs 200) or shared taxi (Rs 30). Taxis charge Rs 1500 to Rs 2000 for a day trip to Sangla and Rs 3500 to Shimla.

Kalpa

☎ 01786 / elev 2960m

Tourism is bringing many changes to Kalpa, but for now this remains one of the most peaceful villages in Kinnaur. Reached by a winding road above Rekong Peo, the village is a pleasing straggle of slate-roofed houses spread out over a ridge with breathtaking views across to Kinner Kailash. The surrounding orchards provide fancy-free walks and there are several simple guesthouses in the village, plus a growing number of modern hotels on the ridge above town.

According to legend, this was the winter home of Shiva, and there are some impressive Kinnauri-style temples in the Narayan-Nagini temple complex, plus a colourful Buddhist temple at the top of the village. In September/October villagers pile wildflowers in the centre of the village as part of the annual Phulech Festival (p283).

SLEEPING & EATING

The following hotels are booked solid during the Durga Puja holiday season (September/October) and offer discounts at other times.

Chini Bungalow (☎ 226385; r Rs 250-450; closed Nov-Mar) Signposted up the lane branching right past the Blue Lotus Hotel, this cottage has a flowery garden facing the mountains. Rooms are simple but clean and well cared for.

Kailash View Guesthouse (☎ 226158; r with shared/private bathroom from Rs 250/300) A 500m trek through fields above the village, cosy Kailash View looks out over orchards. It's a modern building but the simple rooms have a villagey feel.

Hotel Blue Lotus (☎ 226001; r from Rs 500) Close to the bus stand, this neat midrange place has a better-than-average restaurant and a wide, sunny terrace facing directly across to the mountains.

Hotel Kinner Villa (☎ 226006; r Rs 900-1500) Reached via a steep 1km walk through orchards and farmland beyond Kalpa, Kinner Villa is a genuinely tasteful country retreat. Rooms have magnificent views and there are heated lounges facing the valley for winter.

For meals, try the restaurant at the Blue Lotus or the string of dhabas on the road down to the Buddhist temple.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Minibuses run throughout the day between Kalpa and Rekong Peo (Rs 7, 30 minutes), or you can take a taxi (Rs 30/200 shared/chartered) or walk – follow the well-worn stepped path rather than the winding road.

CENTRAL HIMACHAL PRADESH

Running north towards Lahaul, the Kullu and Parvati Valleys are popular with hippies, honeymooners and adrenaline junkies. Many people continue north over Rohtang La (3978m) to Lahaul, Spiti and Ladakh.

For more information on Kullu district, see the websites www.kullu.net and http://hpkullu.nic.in.

MANDI

☎ 01905 / pop 27,400 / elev 800m

Formerly a trading stop on the salt route to Tibet, Mandi is the gateway to the Kullu Valley and the junction of the main roads from Kullu, Chandigarh and Pathankot. The town feels more Punjabi than Himalayan, with a large Sikh community and a sticky air reminiscent of the plains. Sprawling around the confluence of the Beas River and the Suketi Khad stream, the town is dotted with ancient Shaivite temples – at least 81 according to official figures – and you can do a day trip into the hills to visit the holy lakes at Rewalsar and Prashar.

Orientation & Information

Mandi is centred on a sunken shopping complex called Indira Market, arranged around a pretty garden square. Most places to stay and eat are nearby, while the temples are concentrated along the river. The bus stand is on the east side of the Beas, a Rs 10 autorickshaw ride away.

There's nowhere to change travellers cheques, but the SBI Bank near Indira Market has an ATM and the Hotel Evening Plaza can change US dollars cash. Xpert Net (per hr Rs 30; 10am-10pm) is upstairs near the SBI Bank, opposite the road to the Raj Mahal.

Sights & Activities

Mandi is crammed with stone temples, most of them spread out along the river. The brightly painted Bhutnath Mandir, dating from the 7th century AD, is the focal point for the animated Shivaratri Festival (p283) in February, honouring Lord Shiva.

If you follow Bhutnath Bazar to the river, you'll find bathing ghats (steps or landings) with a giant statue of Hanuman and a long avenue of carved stone sikharas (temple towers). Most impressive are the Panch Bahktar and Triloknath mandirs, facing each other across the river. Also worth seeking out is the Akardash Rudar mandir, near the British-built bridge over the Beas.

Perched at the top of Tarna Hill is Rani Amrit Kaur Park with superb views and the colourful Syamakali Temple, decorated with paintings of the various bloodthirsty incarnations of Kali. You can walk the 5km from town or take an autorickshaw (Rs 40).

Sleeping

All the hotels are around Indira Market.

Shiva Hotel (☎ 224221; r Rs 200-400) Behind the market is this modest but inexpensive hotel. There's a small restaurant and bar, and the more expensive front rooms overlook the orderly bustle in the central market square.

Evening Standard Hotel (☎ 225123; r with cold/hot shower from Rs 275/330) A few doors up, this is a reliable cheapie offering clean rooms with TVs and a resident moneychanger. Again, front-facing rooms are best.

Raj Mahal Palace Hotel (☎ 222401; www.rajmahalpalace.com; r from Rs 440, with AC from Rs 880;) A timely refurb has restored this historic hotel to its rightful position as the best place to stay in Mandi. Tucked in behind the main palace buildings, the rooms are bright, cosy and clean as a whistle. There's also a fabulous restaurant in the garden.

Eating

There are plenty of dhabas around Indira Market.

Treat Restaurant (Indira Market; dishes Rs 25-130) On the ground floor of the market, this small but rather swish place serves up Chinese and South Indian food in air-conditioned surroundings.

Raj Mahal Garden Restaurant (mains Rs 40-150; 7am-11pm) The best choice in town, set romantically under trees at the Raj Mahal, with a choice of indoor and outdoor dining, excellent food and a fully licensed bar.

Getting There & Away

BUS

The bus station is across the river in the eastern part of town. Local buses run to Rewalsar (Rs 18, 1½ hours) hourly until early evening. See the table (p298) for details of long-distance bus services.

TAXI

Taxis at the bus station charge Rs 900 to Kullu, Rs 600 to Bhuntar airport and Rs 500 for a return trip to Rewalsar. Expect to pay around Rs 1500 per day for longer trips to the Banjar Valley and Great Himalayan National Park.

REWALSAR LAKE

Around 24km southwest of Mandi, the sacred lake of Rewalsar is revered by Buddhists, Hindus and Sikhs. The Indian monk Padmasambhava departed from Rewalsar in the 8th century AD to spread Buddhism to Tibet, and Hindus, Buddhists and Sikhs came together here in the 17th century to plan their resistance against ethnic cleansing by the Mughals.

A country road winds up to the lake and right around the lakeshore, where you'll find the ochre-red Debung Kagyud Gompa, with an active thangka (Tibetan cloth painting) school and a large central Sakyamuni statue. Just beyond is the pale blue gurdwara built in honour of Gobind Singh in the 1930s. In the other direction, the Tso-Pema Ogyen Heru-kai Nyingmapa Gompa has artful murals and atmospheric pujas (prayer ceremonies) at around 7am and 3.30pm. Uphill from the lake is the towering white Zigar Drukpa Kagyud Institute, with outsized statues of Tantric deities. A 12m-high statue of Padmasambhava is under construction on the hill above the lake. On the far side of the lake are a number of small Hindu temples dedicated to the sage Rishi Lomas, who was forced to do penance here as a dedication to Shiva.

Local taxi drivers can arrange tours to other temples and viewpoints around the lake, including the Buddha Cave on the ridge, where Padmasambhava allegedly meditated (you can also walk here from the lakeshore).

You can check email at Tso-Pema Internet (per hr Rs 20; 8am-8.30pm), near the Nyingmapa gompa.

Sleeping & Eating

Nyingmapa Gompa Guesthouse (☎ 240226; r with shared/private bathroom Rs 80/200) These austere but clean rooms appeal to Buddhist pilgrims looking for spiritual rather than physical comfort.

Dribung Kagyud Gompa Guesthouse (☎ 240364; r with shared bathroom Rs 100-200) The guesthouse at the red gompa has simple but cosy quarters for pilgrims and nonpilgrims. Bucket hot water is included.

HPTDC Hotel Rewalsar (☎ 240252; dm Rs 75, d in old bldg Rs 200, in new bldg Rs 350-550) Pick the new building over the old building at this big HPTDC-run hotel near the taxi stand, or save a few pennies in the dorm.

Hotel Lotus Lake (☎ 240239; r & TV Rs 200-500) Close to Hotel Rewalsar, this tasteful modern place is Buddhist run and the tidy, tiled rooms gleam.

There are several dhabas and simple Buddhist restaurants. Best is the Topchen Restaurant by the Nyingmapa gompa – good momos and thukpa go for around Rs 35.

Getting There & Away

Frequent buses go to Rewalsar from Mandi (Rs 18, 1½ hours), making for an easy day trip. A taxi from Mandi costs Rs 500 return.

MANDI TO KULLU

About 15km south of Kullu near the village of Bajaura is the Basheshar Mahadev, the largest stone temple in the Kullu Valley. Built in the 8th century AD and intricately carved, the temple is a larger version of the classic hut-style sikhara seen all over the Kullu Valley.

Hidden away in the hills between Mandi and Bajaura is scenic Prashar Lake (2730m), home to the striking, pagoda-style Prashara Temple, built in the 14th century in honour of the sage Prashar Rishi. Prashar is an 8km walk from the village of Kandi on the Mandi–Bajaura road, accessible by local bus (ask for times at the bus stand).

Southeast of Mandi is the little-visited Banjar Valley, offering peaceful walks and trips to unspoiled villages. The town of Banjar has a few simple hotels, and you can hike the steep 6km to the village of Chaini to see one of the

As well as conserving wildlife, the park runs programmes that provide a sustainable living for people living on the periphery of the conservation area.

Wildlife is best spotted on a five- to eight-day organised trek, accompanied by a park ranger. Arrangements can be made through the park rangers at the Sai Ropa Tourist Centre, 5km before Gushaini, or with private companies in Manali (p310). You need travel insurance that covers emergency helicopter evacuations.

To get here, catch any bus on the Mandi–Manali route to Aut, then take a taxi to the park entrance.

☎ 01902

Bhuntar has the main airport for the Kullu Valley and a handful of hotels catering to airline passengers. This is also the junction town for buses to the popular Parvati Valley, but most people prefer to stay in Kullu.

Sleeping & Eating

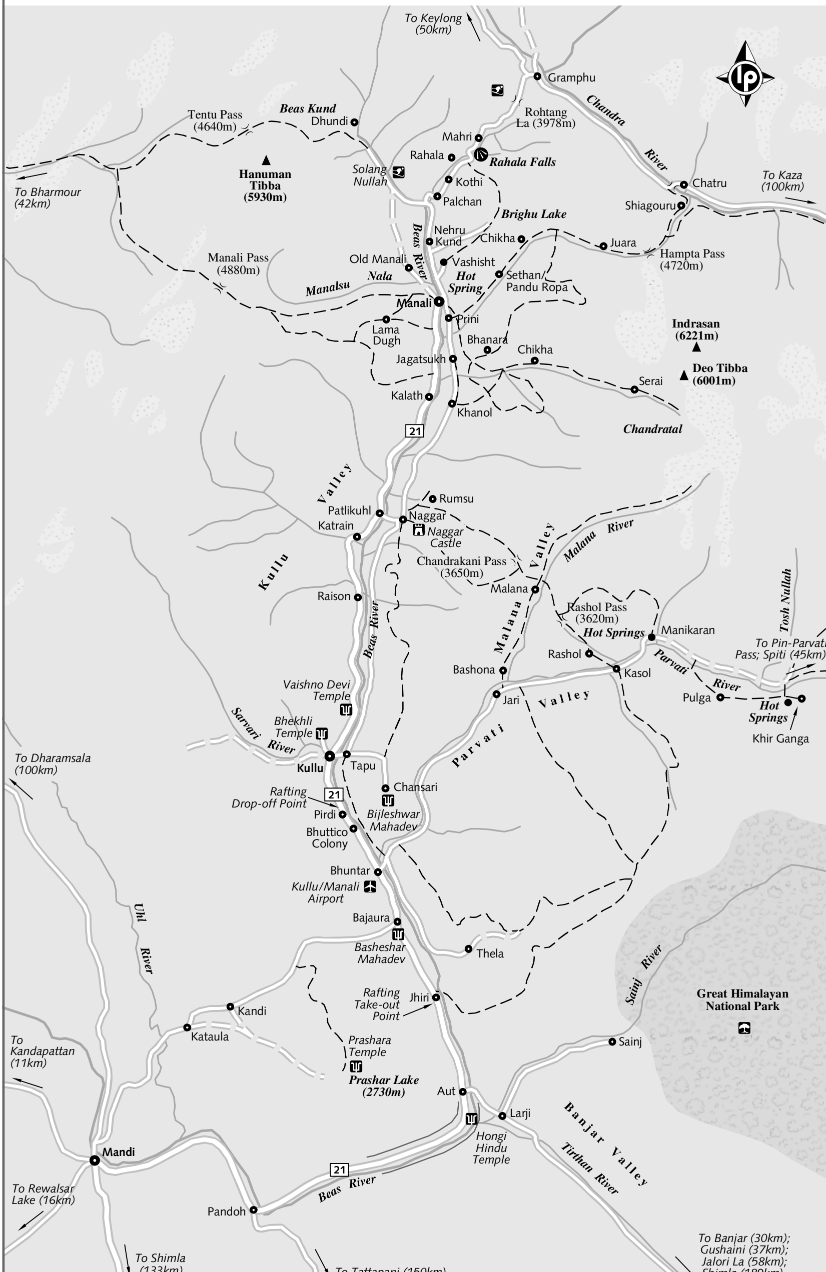
PARVATI VALLEY



☎ 01902

Running northeast from Bhuntar towards Lahaul and Spiti, the Parvati Valley is a well-established traveller hangout. Several small towns along the valley have been transformed into hippie resorts, offering cheap accommodation, international food and a nonstop reggae soundtrack to crowds of dreadlocked and taffeta-skirted travellers. The attractions of the valley are peaceful scenery, the hot springs at Manikaran and a plentiful supply of wild charas (marijuana), with all the risks that this entails – see p1140. There are some excellent treks in the area, but solo trekking is not recommended – see the boxed text, p303.

Jari

About halfway along the Parvati Valley, Jari is the quietest of the traveller hangouts in the valley. There are some friendly guesthouses and the village is the starting point for treks to Malana – a sprawl of wood and stone houses with its own unique caste system and parliament. Visitors must wait on the outskirts of the village to be invited in and it is forbidden to touch any of the villagers or their belongings (there's a Rs 1000 fine if you break this rule). The walk is about 17km in each direction and the village has a few basic guesthouses for overnight stays.

Negi's Himalayan Adventure (☎ 276119) in Jari can organise local treks, including the trip to Malana.

SLEEPING & EATING

Most guesthouses are a steep 1km walk above Jari in the peaceful hamlet of Mateura Jari (follow the guesthouse signs).

Village Guest House (☎ 276070; r with shared bathroom Rs 50-100; 💻) The largest place in the village, with a big walled garden and rooms in several old village houses. There's internet access (per hour Rs 70) and the owners can book bus tickets.

Om Shiva Guest House (☎ 276202; r Rs 100) A decent modern place on the main road through Jari, with simple rooms, hot water in the shared bathroom and a sunny rooftop terrace.

Just uphill from the Village Gust House are the smaller and simpler Chandra Place Guesthouse (☎ 276049; dm/r Rs 50/80) and Rooftop Guesthouse (☎ 275434; r Rs 100) offering a pleasant, villagey vibe.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Buses from Bhuntar to Manikaran stop in Jari (Rs 15, one hour). A one-way taxi between Bhuntar and Jari is around Rs 400.

Kasol

☎ 01902

Kasol is the main traveller HQ in the Parvati Valley. It's like Vashisht or Old Manali but more so, with dozens of reggae bars, traveller restaurants, internet cafés, body-piercing studios and cheap guesthouses. You'll either love it or loathe it. The nicest places to stay are in Old Kasol on the Bhuntar side of the bridge; most of the amenities are in New Kasol on the Manikaran side.

SLEEPING & EATING

Most guesthouses close down for winter from mid-October to mid-April.

Yerpa's Guest House (☎ 273763; r with shared/private bathroom from Rs 100/350; 💻) A large, hotel-style place on the main road, with neat rooms and a slightly more sophisticated mood.

Alpine Guest House (☎ 273710; r with geyser Rs 300-350) Probably the best choice in town, set amongst pine trees next to the river. Lawns and terraces provide space for swapping traveller stories and the rooms bask in the natural sounds of river and forest.

Panchali Holiday Home (☎ 273095; r from Rs 300) Situated back from the road, this modern hotel has presentable rooms with TVs, phones and geysers. Front rooms have nice balconies.

There are several more guesthouses in the maize fields above Kasol, reached by the track beside Panchali Holiday Home.

White House (☎ 273794; r Rs 60-80) The best of several similar village guesthouses, run by a friendly farmer. The cheerful wood-floored rooms have shared bathrooms and there's a tiny café.

Old and New Kasol have loads of traveller restaurants serving cakes and identical menus of traveller fare – Moon Dance Café, Sasi Place Restaurant and Evergreen Restaurant are good choices.

Little Italy (mains from Rs 60) Pizzas here are better than average and you can play pool while you wait for dinner.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Buses from Bhuntar to Manikaran pass through Kasol (Rs 23, 2½ hours). Fares at the taxi stand near the bridge in Kasol include Bhuntar (Rs 550), Kullu (Rs 700) and Manali (Rs 1500).

Manikaran

☎ 01902 / elev 1737m

Manikaran means 'Jewel from the Ear', and according to local legend, a giant snake stole earrings from Parvati while she was bathing, then snorted them out into the ground releasing the hot springs bubbling beneath. The water emerging from the ground is hot enough to boil rice and it has to be cooled with river water for bathing. Locals claim it can cure everything from rheumatism to bronchitis.

The town is centred on the huge Sri Guru Nanak Ji Gurdwara, lurking behind a veil of steam on the far side of the river. The shrine inside is revered by both Hindus and Sikhs, and the road through the village is chock-a-block with pilgrims and shops selling prasad (food offering used in religious ceremonies) and Guru Nanak souvenirs.

There are baths with separate facilities for men and women in the gurdwara and the village, with water diluted to a bearable temperature. The village also has several temples, including the stone hut–style Raghunath Mandir. Keep an eye out for bags of rice, boiling in the vents and fumaroles around the village.

Amar Money Changer (8am-8pm) in the bazaar can change major currencies.

SLEEPING

Most hotels are in the main village, reached by a suspension bridge from the bus stand. Unless otherwise mentioned, all rooms have private bathroom.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Buses run regularly between Manikaran and Bhuntar (Rs 25, 2½ hours), continuing north to Kullu (Rs 38, three hours). For Manali, change in Kullu or Bhuntar. Day trips by taxi can be arranged in Manali, Kullu or Bhuntar.

From Manikaran, taxis charge Rs 100 to Kasol, Rs 600 to Bhuntar, Rs 800 to Kullu and Rs 1300 to Manali.

Pin-Parvati Valley Trek

Best attempted from mid-September to mid-October, this strenuous but rewarding nine-day trek crosses the snow-bound Pin-Parvati Pass (5319m) to the Pin Valley in Spiti. There's no accommodation en route so you'll have to make arrangements through a trekking agency in Kasol or Manali (p310). The trailhead at Pulga is easily accessible by bus or taxi from Manikaran.

From Pulga, the route ascends for two days through forest and pasture to Thakur Khan. Two more days through arid mountain country takes you to High Camp, for an overnight stop before attempting the pass. A challenging tramp over snow and scree will take you into the Pin Valley. The final stage follows the river for two days through the Pin Valley National Park to the village of Mud, which has a daily bus connection to Kaza.

Kullu is the local administrative centre and makes a pleasant change from the hippie holiday resorts elsewhere in the valley. Most of the year the town goes quietly about its business, but every October some 30,000 devotees descend on it for one of the largest and loudest Dussehra festivals in India (p283). Over 200 idols are paraded into town from surrounding temples, led by a huge rath (chariot) holding the statue of Lord Raghunath from the Raghunath Temple in Sultanpur. Simultaneously, a week-long carnival and market is held on the maidan (parade ground), with entertainment such as acrobats, musicians and a motorcycle Wall of Death. Predictably, accommodation is scarce.

Orientation & Information

Kullu is divided in two by the Sarvari River. The southern part of town has the taxi stand, tourist office and most restaurants and hotels. The bus station and Raghunath Temple are north of the river – take the short cut down through the bazaar below the Hotel Shobla International.

The HPTDC tourist office (☎ 224605/222349; ⌚ 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) is behind the taxi stand at Dhalpur. It's useful for booking deluxe HPTDC buses, which leave from outside.

The main post office is uphill from the taxi stand. There are internet cafés on the main road in Dhalpur charging Rs 40 per hour.

Close to the bus station on the main road, State Bank of Patiala (⌚ 11am-2pm Mon-Fri) accepts travellers cheques only in US dollars, British pounds and euros. There's an international ATM at the State Bank of India on the maidan.

Sights & Activities

The pre-eminent temple in Kullu is the Raghunath Temple just north of the centre in Sultanpur. There are several shrines devoted to Raghunath (Rama) and the revered idol is paraded through town during Dussehra. To get here, take either of the two tracks leading uphill opposite the bus station and look for the gateway near the imposing Raja Rupi, the former palace of the rajas of Kullu.

There are several important temples in the surrounding hills, accessible by taxi or local bus (ask for times at the bus stand). About 3km from Kullu, in the village of Bhekhli, the Bhekhli Temple (Jagannathi Devi Temple) offers an impressive vista over Kullu and the valley.

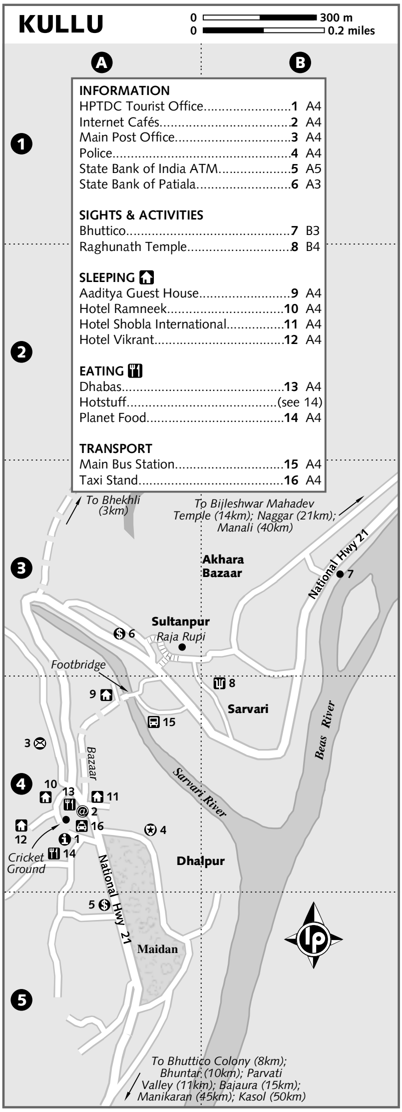
Reached via a 3km trek from Chansari, 11km southeast of Kullu on the east bank of the Beas, the hilltop temple of Bijleshwar Mahadev (Bijli Mahadev) is surmounted by a 20m wooden pole that attracts divine blessings in the form of lightning. The surge of power shatters the stone Shiva lingam inside the temple, which is then glued back together with butter.

From April to June or July, rafting trips are possible on the Beas River – see p310.

Tours

The Kullu Taxi Operators' Union (☎ 222332) offers sightseeing tours from the taxi stand, including trips to Bhekhli Temple (Rs 300) and Bijleshwar Mahadev (Rs 750), the Parvati Valley (Rs 900) and Prashar Lake (Rs 1800).

Sleeping



Hotel Vikrant (☎ 222756; r Rs 275-450) Down a small alley behind the cricket ground at the taxi stand, this place is cracking value. Rooms have TVs, hot showers and cosy warm blankets.

Aaditya Guest House (☎ 224263; d Rs 385-770) Just across the footbridge from the bus station, to the right of the bazaar, this smart,

WARNING – FATAL VACATIONS

Since the mid-1990s around two-dozen foreign tourists have 'disappeared' from the Kullu and Parvati Valleys – killed in accidents while trekking alone or murdered by local drug gangs. With this in mind, it makes sense to be very careful around the local drug scene. Manali charas (marijuana) has an international reputation, but dealing is a high-stakes game and there are at least a dozen bodies out there somewhere belonging to travellers who have fallen foul of the criminal underworld.

If you plan to head into the hills, especially around the Parvati Valley, we recommend joining an organised trek. As well as providing safety in numbers, guides can steer you around dangerous terrain and communicate with locals if you get into trouble. Avoid walking alone and always let your hotel know where you are going and when you plan to be back. Be extremely cautious about befriending sadhus and others wandering in the hills. Better safe than sorry is the motto to live by!

small hotel has a good selection of rooms with tiny TVs and balconies, some facing the river.

Hotel Ramneek (222558; hotel_ramneek@yahoo.co.in; r Rs 500-800) A large place overlooking the cricket ground, the Ramneek has roomy, musty rooms with TV and geyser, and there's a restaurant and net café.

Hotel Shobla International (222800; www.shoblainternational.com; r Rs 1320-2750;) A glitzy business-class hotel, catering mainly to roaming traders and Indian holidaymakers on jeep safaris.

Eating

There are numerous dhabas clustered around the taxi stand and bus station, plus a few proper restaurants behind the maidan.

Hotstuff (dishes Rs 30-200; 8am-10pm) A brightly lit fast-food place near the tourist office, with a good cheap menu of Indian, Chinese and international favourites.

Planet Food (dishes from Rs 75; 8am-10pm) A curious chalet-style building next door, this place has tasty Indian food (veg and nonveg) and a rather stark bar on the top floor.

Shopping

Kullu has several outlets selling the valley's famous shawls, or you can buy at the source at the huge Bhuttico handloom centre just south of Kullu – see the boxed text, opposite.

Getting There & Away

AIR

The airport for Kullu is 10km south at Bhuntar – see p299.

BUS

On the north side of the Sarvari River, the bus station has frequent services around the valley. Buses from Manali to destinations outside the Kullu Valley arrive in Kullu about 1½ hours after departure – see p314 for more details.

See the table, below, for useful buses around the valley.

BUSES FROM KULLU

Destination	Fare (Rs)	Duration	Departures
Aut	24	1½hr	every 15min
Banjar	40	2hr	5 daily
Bhuntar Airport	9	30min	every 15min
Kandi	31	1½hr	3 daily
Manali	30	1½hr	every 15min
Mandi	55	2½hr	every 15min
Manikaran	38	3hr	hourly

SHOPPING FOR SHAWLS

The Kullu Valley is known as the Valley of Apples but it might be better described as the Valley of Shawls. From Bhuntar to Manali the highway is lined with scores of shops selling traditional Kullu shawls, woven on wooden handlooms using wool from sheep, pashmina goats or angora rabbits. This is one of the main industries in the Kullu Valley and it provides an income for thousands of local women, many of whom have organised themselves into shawl-weaving cooperatives. You can tour several of these around Kullu and buy shawls directly from the women who make them.

With so much competition, the sales pressure in touristy places can be fairly overbearing and you'll have to haggle hard for a bargain. For high quality without the hard sell, head to the nearest branch of Bhuttico (www.bhutticoshawls.com), the Bhutti Weavers' Cooperative. Established in 1944 by a group of village women, Bhuttico charges fixed prices and has outlets in most major towns. Expect to pay upwards of Rs 300 for lambswool, from Rs 1000 for angora, from Rs 3000 for pashmina and Rs 6500 for the exquisitely embroidered shawls worn by village women.

TAXI

The taxi stand on the maidan books tours and charter trips. Destinations include the following:

Destination	Fare (Rs)
Bhuntar	200
Jari	550
Kasol	700
Manali	700 (1100 via Naggar)
Mandi	900
Manikaran	800
Naggar	650

Getting Around

Autorickshaws provide services around Kullu; trips in town should cost around Rs 30.

NAGGAR

☎ 01902 / elev 1760m

Centred on imposing Naggar Castle, the slumbering village of Naggar was the capital of Kullu for 1500 years. The Russian painter Nikolai Roerich set up home here in the early 20th century, ensuring a steady stream of Russian tourists. The village lies on the back road between Kullu and Manali but everything of interest is around the castle, 2km uphill. You can check your email at several small net-cafés for Rs 60 per hour. The owners of the Poonam Mountain Lodge can arrange treks into the hills.

Sights & Activities

NAGGAR CASTLE

Built by the Sikh rajas of Kullu in 1460, this dramatic fort (foreigner Rs 15; 7am-10pm) is a fine example of the alternating stone and timber style of Himachali architecture. It was converted into a hotel in 1978 when the last raja fell on hard times. There's a tiny one-room museum downstairs and the Jagtipath Temple in the courtyard houses a slab of stone said to have been carried here by wild bees. The best way to experience the castle is to stay here – see p306.

ROERICH GALLERY

The main road through the village continues for 2km to the Roerich Gallery (☎ 248290; www.roerichtrust.org; admission Rs 30, camera Rs 25; 10am-1pm & 1.30-6pm Tue-Sun, till 5pm Nov-Mar), the former home of the eccentric Russian painter Nikolai Roerich, who died in Naggar in 1947. The lower floors display some of Roerich's surreally colourful paintings of Kullu, Spiti and Lahaul, while the upper floors preserve the artist's private rooms. Roerich was also the brains behind the Roerich Pact, a treaty signed by more than 60 countries guaranteeing the preservation of cultural monuments around the world.

A five-minute walk uphill from the gallery is the Urusvati Himalayan Folk & Art Museum (admission with the same ticket), which houses the painter's personal collection of ethnological artefacts and photos of the Roerich family. There's a painting school here for children and regularly changing exhibitions of modern art.

TEMPLES

Heading down the track beside the castle, you'll pass the handsome 11th-century Vishnu Mandir, covered in ornate carvings. Downhill past the tiny post office is the Gauri Shankar Temple, dedicated to Shiva and surrounded by smaller temples devoted to Vishnu Narayan.

Just below the Roerich Gallery is the pagoda-like Tripura Sundari Devi Temple, surrounded by carved wooden outbuildings. High up on the ridge above Naggar, the Murlidhar Krishna Temple is reached by a woodland path beyond the Roerich Gallery.

Sleeping & Eating

Hotels are clustered around the castle or there's a village-style guesthouse downhill in the small hamlet of Chanalti Naggar.

Chanderlok Guesthouse (☎ 248213; r with shared/private bathroom Rs 200/250) About five minutes' downhill on the path below the castle is this peaceful village guesthouse with neat, sun-filled rooms and a garden full of old Hindu shrines.

Poonam Mountain Lodge & Restaurant (☎ 248248; ravinder7@sancharnet.in; r from Rs 250) Just below the castle, this place feels a bit like a ski chalet. Rooms are wood-panelled and warm, and there's a communal lounge with a wood-burning stove. The owners organise treks, tours and fishing trips.

Hotel Ragini (☎ 248185; raginihotel@hotmail.com; r Rs 600-1000; 💻) The best of the hotels around the castle, Ragini has lovely bright rooms with parquet floors and balconies and a garden used by tour groups for yoga and other holistic activities. The rooftop restaurant serves great food.

Nearby are the similar but less exciting Purmina Guesthouse & Restaurant (☎ 248219; r Rs 500-600) and the Sheetal Hotel (☎ 248250; r Rs 400-1000), which benefits from a cosy restaurant and roof terrace.

Alliance Guest House (☎ 247763; gilloualliance@yahoo.com; r Rs 150-400) On the road up to the Roerich Gallery you'll find this cheerfully chilled-out, French-run guesthouse. Bright colours add warmth to the rooms and you can eat on the veranda. Cheaper rooms share facilities.

HPTDC Hotel Naggar Castle (☎ 248316; dm Rs 75, d with shared bathroom Rs 300, with private bathroom Rs 1000-2500) Obviously, the best place to stay is the castle. Wood and stone corridors open onto a wide variety of rooms, from modest dormitories to palatial suites decked out in colonial finery. The views are breathtaking, but the restaurant is only mediocre.

All the hotels have restaurants; Kailash Restaurant atop the Hotel Ragini is probably the best.

La Purezza (dishes from Rs 50; 🕐 11am-10pm, closed winter) On the road to the Roerich Gallery, this garden café serves decent pizzas and pastas.

Getting There & Away

Local buses run regularly between Manali and Naggar from 6am to 6pm (Rs 15, one hour). A return taxi from Manali to Naggar costs Rs 550 and from Kullu Rs 650, or you can stop off on the way to Manali for Rs 1100.

MANALI

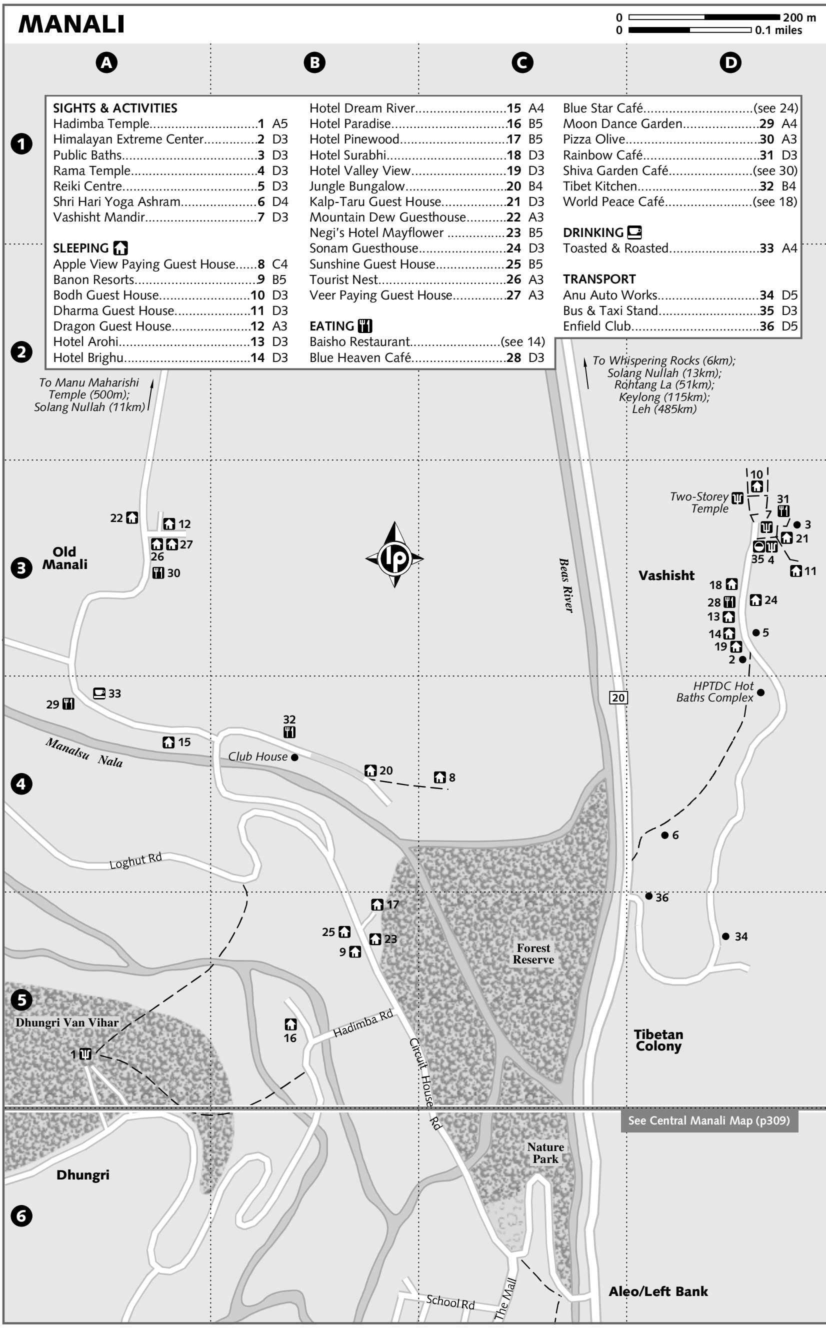
The surrounding mountain scenery lures tourists to Manali year-round. Domestic tourists come here for honeymoons and mountain views, while foreigners come for adventure sports or, more commonly, to hang out in the hippie villages around the main town. Until the 1960s there was nothing here but a few old stone houses and temples, but modern Manali is crammed with concrete hotels and the town is in severe need of some town planning – stay in the villages of Vashisht or Old Manali for a more peaceful mood.

This is also the main jumping-off point for Ladakh, Spiti and Lahaul, with daily buses to Leh, Keylong and Kaza from approximately June to October. Many tourists are also lured here by the famous Manali charas but be warned – local police are more than happy to arrest people for possession or sting them for bribes (see p1140).

According to legend, Manu, the Hindu equivalent of Noah, alighted his boat here to re-create human life after floods destroyed the world. Indeed, from April to June and September to late October it can feel as if all of humanity has returned to Manali. There's another surge in visitors for Christmas and New Year. Prices for rooms can more than triple at these times. Old Manali and Vashisht close for winter from around October to May.



Orientation

Manali is based around one street, the Mall, a continuation of the highway that runs into town. The bus and taxi stands are on the Mall and most hotels and restaurants are on the alleys branching west. Two roads run north from Manali along the Beas River – one to Old Manali on the west bank and one to Vashisht and the Rohtang La on the east bank.

HIMACHAL PRADESH

Dangers & Annoyances

Over the last decade over 160 foreigners have been arrested for drug-related offences in Manali and drugs are behind many of the disappearances and murders of foreigners in the Kullu Valley. See the boxed text, p303.

Sights & Activities

HADIMBA TEMPLE

Also known as the Dhungri Temple, this ancient wood and stone mandir (Map p307) was erected in 1553. Pilgrims come here from across India to honour Hadimba, the wife of Bhima from the Mahabharata. The walls of the temple are covered in woodcarvings of dancers, and horns of bulls and ibex adorn the walls. Grisly animal sacrifices are carried out in May for the three-day Dhungri Mela (p283). Photo-wallahs loiter around the temple offering souvenir photos in traditional costume with your arm around a yak or angora rabbit.

Ghatotkach, the son of Hadimba and Bhima, is worshipped in the form of a sacred tree near the temple. Villagers make offerings of knives, goat horns, and tin effigies of animals, people and houses.

It's a 20-minute walk from Manali or you can take an autorickshaw (Rs 30).

MANALI MUSEUM

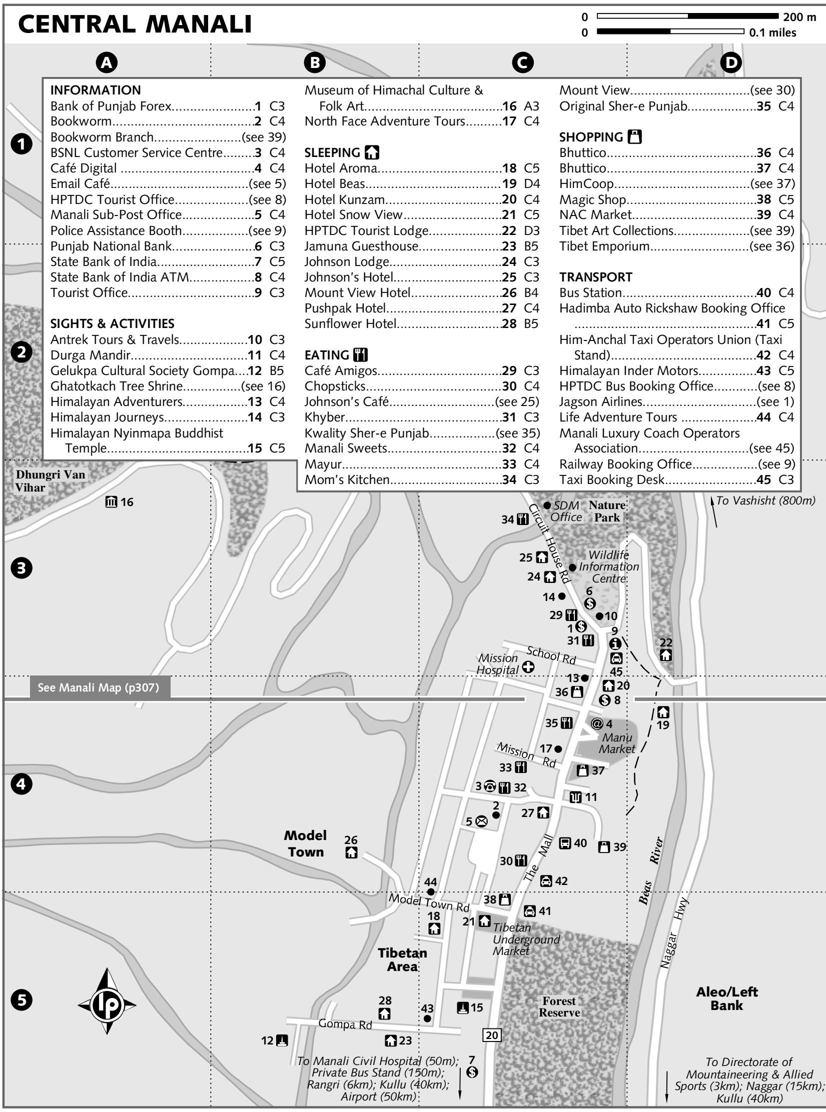
Opposite the Hadimba Temple, the interesting Museum of Himachal Culture & Folk Art (Map p309; ☎ 253846; entry Rs 10; 8am-8pm) has religious relics, household objects, instruments, weapons, architectural woodcarvings and scale models of Himachal temples.

BUDDHIST MONASTERIES

Set back from the main road in the south of Manali, the Himalayan Nyinmapa Buddhist Temple (Map p309; 6am-6pm) contains a two-storey statue of Sakyamuni, the historical Buddha.

Further along the same lane is the more traditional Gelukpa Cultural Society Gompa (Map p309; 6am-6pm), with an atmospheric prayer room crammed with statues of bodhisattvas, revered lamas and Buddhist deities. There's also a small workshop producing Tibetan carpets.

NATURE PARK



A large grove of deodars (cedars) on the banks of the Beas has been set aside as a nature reserve (entry Rs 5; 9am-7pm), with a small aviary of Himalayan birds, including the monal pheasant, Himachal's state bird.

OLD MANALI

About 2.5km above the Mall on the far side of the Manalsu Nala, Old Manali still has some of the feel of an Indian mountain village. There are some beautiful old houses and the wood and stone Manu Maharishi Temple is built on the site where Manu is said to have meditated after landing the boat that saved humanity. A trail to Solang Nullah runs north from here through the village of Goshal.

DIRECTORATE OF MOUNTAINEERING & ALLIED SPORTS

This adventure sports centre (☎ 250337/253789; www.dmas.gov.in; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat, closed 2nd Sat each month) has its headquarters at Aleo, about 3km south of Manali on the east bank of the Beas. A huge range of activities can be arranged, from rafting and treks to skiing and mountaineering courses – see the website for details.

Tours

In season, the HPTDC offers day tours by bus to Naggar (Rs 170), Rohtang La (Rs 220) and Manikaran and the Parvati Valley (Rs 250), but only if there are enough people. Private travel agencies offer similar bus tours.

The Him-Anchal Taxi Operators Union (Map p309; ☎ 252120; The Mall) has fixed-price tours, including Rohtang La (Rs 1200), Solang Nullah (Rs 500) and Naggar (Rs 550).

OUTDOOR ACTIVITIES IN MANALI

To get the most out of Manali, get up into the mountains. All sorts of adventure activities can be arranged in Manali through the tour operators listed on below; also see p92.

Ballooning

Tethered hot-air balloons offer impressive views of the valley, but don't quite achieve the full sense of weightless freedom. Travel agents arrange rides for Rs 500 per person.

Fishing

The rivers of the Kullu and Parvati Valleys are rich in trout and mahseer. The season runs from March to June and July to November and rods and tackle can be hired from agencies in Manali; daily fishing licences from HPTDC cost Rs 100. Top spots include the upper tributaries of the Beas and the Parvati Rivers at Kasol.

Jeep Safaris

Jeep safaris can be arranged to Ladakh, Lahaul and Spiti for around Rs 2000 per day, visiting monasteries, mountain passes and glacial lakes, with accommodation in tents or village guesthouses.

Mountain Biking

The steep slopes around Manali offer some prime country for mountain biking. Agencies offer bike hire for Rs 100/500 per hour/day, or you can organise tours to Ladakh, Spiti and Lahaul. One audacious day trip is the descent from the Rohtang La – buses and taxis can transport you and your bike to the pass, then you can freewheel down. On all high-altitude routes, take time to acclimatise.

Mountaineering

Mountaineering training can be arranged through the Directorate of Mountaineering & Allied Sports (☎ 250337; www.dmas.gov.in). Basic 26-day mountaineering courses run on fixed dates from May to October for Rs 3600/US$365 (Indian/foreigner), including food, accommodation, guides and training (minimum age 17 years). The courses cover essential mountain techniques and a series of local ascents. Local agencies can arrange expeditions to Hanuman Tibba (5930m) and Deo Tibba (6001m). See p95 for more on mountaineering in India.

Paragliding

Paragliding at Manali was suspended for several years following a series of accidents, but the industry seems to have cleaned up its act. Summertime tandem flights at Solang Nullah start from Rs 1200 for 15 minutes, but always check your gear.

ADVENTURE TOUR OPERATORS

The following places are reliable and well established and can arrange treks, tours and adventure activities – see the boxed text, above for popular options.

Rafting

White-water rafting trips on the Beas River can be arranged at the small village of Pirdi, 3km downriver from Kullu. There is 14km of Grade II and III white water between Pirdi and the take-out point at Jhiri; trips costs Rs 450 to Rs 650 depending on the number of passengers. Book through travel agents or directly at Pirdi.

Rock Climbing

The cliffs at Solang, Aleo and Vashisht have a good range of bolted and traditional routes ranging from French 6a to 6c (British 5a to 6a). Himalayan Extreme Center (opposite) in Vashisht offers day trips for Rs 800 per day including all equipment. Independent climbers should bring a selection of slings, nuts and cams (particularly in the smaller sizes) and a 30m or 60m rope.

Skiing & Snowboarding

From January to March, the village of Solang Nullah transforms into Himachal's main ski and snowboarding resort – see p317 for details. Year-round skiing expeditions can be arranged on virgin powder (experienced skiers only) through Himalayan Extreme Center (opposite) for around Rs 2000 per day (trips last three to five days). Costly heli-skiing trips to high-altitude powder can be arranged through Himachal Helicopter Skiing (www.himachal.com).

Walking & Trekking

Manali is a popular starting point for organised mountain treks. Most agencies offer multiday treks for around US$60 per day, all inclusive. Popular options include Beas Kund (three days), the Pin Parvati Trek from the Parvati Valley to Spiti (eight days) and the Hamta Pass (4270m) to Lahaul (five days). For more information on trekking, see p282.

Plenty of shorter walks are possible from Manali, though the usual rules on safe trekking apply – ie tell someone where you are going and never walk alone. The 12km hike up the western side of the Beas River to Solang Nullah is a pleasing alternative to the bus, or you can trek 6km to the snowline above Lama Dugh meadow along the Manalsu Nala stream.

Zorbing

During summer, the ski slope at Solang Nullah is a popular place for zorbing – basically, rolling downhill inside a giant inflatable ball (see the boxed text, p335). You can make arrangements in Manali or in Solang Nullah – expect to pay Rs 200 for about 20 minutes.

Other Activities

Other activities available in the area include horse riding (Rs 900 per day), canyoning (Rs 800 per day) and sightseeing helicopter flights (Rs 1500 per person for 10 minutes).

Heating is rare in Manali so be prepared to dive under a blanket to stay warm.

BUDGET

Central Manali has plenty of budget places; more laid-back backpacker spots are in the villages of Old Manali and Vashisht (see p316).

Manali

HPTDC Tourist Lodge (Map p309; ☎ 253656; dm Rs 75, d Rs 300) Rooms here are nothing to write home about, but the riverside location is pleasant enough and the dorms are a bargain.

Jamuna Guesthouse (Map p309; ☎ 252506; r Rs 150-300) Near the Nyinmapa gompa, this neat, wood-balconied place has a laid-back mood and a peaceful rear terrace and garden. The price makes up for the eccentric interior design.

Mount View Hotel (Map p309; ☎ 252465; r from Rs 250) A short walk from the Mall on the edge of Model Town, this place has questionable décor but warm carpets underfoot.

Facilities are good for the price, but it's debatable whether there is a mountain view.

Pushpak Hotel (Map p309; ☎ 253656; r Rs 250-300) If you don't mind a bit of noise and bustle, this reliable cheapie is squeezed into an alley opposite the bus station. Rooms at the back are quieter and larger.

Sunflower Hotel (Map p309; ☎ 252419; www.paulbabushotel.com; d from Rs 300) Handy for the Tibetan monasteries, this is a quaint choice. Old but comfy rooms come with TVs, geysers, and clean sheets and blankets.

Hotel Aroma (Map p309; ☎ 253159; r Rs 350-550) Huge shared balconies where you can sit out in the evening are the main attraction at this big lime-green hotel just north of the Gelukpa gompa. Rooms are chintzy, but fairly priced.

Old Manali

Uphill from Manali on the far side of the Manaslu Nala stream, Old Manali is a well-established traveller centre. Most hotels and restaurants close down for winter in late October.

Jungle Bungalow (Map p307; ☎ 252278; s/d with shared bathroom Rs 100/150) Firmly targeting the backpacker market, this faded but inexpensive guesthouse has sparsely furnished rooms and big communal balconies. It's on the path above the Club House.

Veer Paying Guest House (Map p307; ☎ 252710; veerguesthouse@rediffmail.com; r with shared/private bathroom from Rs 100/200) There's a tangible buzz about this cheap and friendly place downhill from the temple. There's a great garden, a cosy café, a laundry and a travel agency.

Mountain Dew Guesthouse (Map p307; ☎ 9816446366; r Rs 150) A solid-looking three-storey house with nice balconies and a garden full of fruit trees, vines and roses. Get a room up top for the best views.

Apple View Paying Guest House (Map p307; ☎ 253899; r with shared bathroom Rs 150) A delightful village guesthouse in the peaceful orchards above the Club House, run by a friendly family who take pride in their neat and tidy rooms. Take the path uphill above the Club House.

Tourist Nest (Map p307; ☎ 252383; kdthakur@yahoo.com; r Rs 200-250) Near the Dragon Guest House, this place has the classic Himachal 'wood 'n' stone' look. There's a neat garden and rooms have private balconies and signs of loving care.

Hotel Dream River (Map p307; ☎ 253501; r Rs 300-450) Soothed by the sound of the river, this place has worn but spacious rooms, some with an extra single bed. The location is handy for the main cluster of restaurants in Old Manali.

MIDRANGE

Dragon Guest House (Map p307; ☎ 252290; www.dragontreks.com; r Rs 250-600; 💻 ❄) A backpackers place on the way to upmarket. Snug rooms are better than most in Old Manali with views over orchards and windows on two sides. There's a restaurant, an internet café, and a reliable travel agency for treks and tours.

Hotel Paradise (Map p307; ☎ 252265; r from Rs 300-600; ❄) An older place that benefits from a quiet location on the way to the Hadimba Temple. Although worn, rooms are comfortable and there are mountain views in two directions.

our pick Sunshine Guest House (Map p307; ☎ 25232; r Rs 350, plus Rs 250 for firewood) A real delight. This rambling Raj-era property has huge rooms with fireplaces and oodles of colonial charm, and balconies offer splendid views of gardens, orchards and mountains.

Hotel Beas (Map p309; ☎ 252832; r Rs 400-900; ❄) A massive HPTDC-run hotel on the riverbank below the main town. Rooms are comfortable and clean, though they won't win any prizes for character. It's popular with coach tours so book in advance in season.

Hotel Pinewood (Map p307; ☎ 250118; s/d Rs 750/990) Set in immaculate lawns with hammocks under the trees, this handsome wood and stone house has large rooms with fireplaces and a satisfyingly colonial mood.

Hotel Kunzam (Map p309; ☎ 253197; r from Rs 1400; ❄) A huge, well-run HPTDC property in the middle of town, with spacious and well-styled rooms, and an inviting restaurant and bar. Ask for one of the quieter rooms at the back.

TOP END

The best options are all found along Circuit House Rd heading uphill to Old Manali.

Negi's Hotel Mayflower (Map p307; ☎ 252104; r from Rs 1800, ste Rs 2000; ❄) A stately wooden lodge, with a cascade of wooden balconies. The Mayflower promises 'Exotic Wooden Beauty' and does a great job of delivering it, with large Banon Resorts (Map p307; ☎ 253026; www.banonresortsmanali.com; r from Rs 3100, cottages from Rs 7900; ❄) The Banon family opened the first guesthouse in Manali and their hotel is huge and luxurious. Rooms are a bit too large to feel cosy, but the cottages are the last word in peace and privacy.

Eating

There are restaurants and cafés all over Manali offering the usual range of domestic and international fare. The follow places are open between 8am and 10pm daily, unless otherwise stated.

MANALI

Manali Sweets (Map p309; snacks from Rs 8; 🕑 from 7am) Manali's favourite dhaba, serving Indian sweets, hot chai, samosas and hot veg snacks from early each morning to late at night.

Café Amigos (Map p309; Circuit House Rd; dishes Rs 20-120) An old-fashioned traveller café with cakes, pizzas, Tex-Mex, Tibetan, Chinese and hot apple crumble, plus decent coffee.

our pick Chopsticks (Map p309; The Mall; dishes Rs 20-120) Facing the bus station, this is the most popular traveller choice in Manali town, with Buddhist chanting on the stereo and good Tibetan and Chinese food, cold beers, and fruit wines and tea in metal teapots. Come early to nab a table in the evening.

Mount View (Map p309; The Mall; dishes Rs 30-160) Next door to Chopsticks, the Mount View is very similar.

Mayur (Map p309; Mission Rd; dishes Rs 30-150) A popular Indian restaurant catering to a mixture of locals and holidaymakers – always a good sign. The menu runs from veg curries to continental sizzlers.

Kwality Sher-e-Punjab (Map p309; The Mall; dishes Rs 20-70) A bright, fast food–style cafeteria serving pure-veg Punjabi and South Indian food.

Original Sher-e-Punjab (Map p309; The Mall; dishes from Rs 30) A few doors down from its Kwality relative, this place fills the gap with meaty dishes from the Punjab. It's a bit less fast foody and everything is freshly made.

Khyber (Map p307; dishes Rs 100-300; 🕑 11am-11pm) Upstairs by the main junction, this upmarket bar and restaurant feels a bit like an Indian version of TGI Friday. It serves good meaty mains and the drinks menu runs to cold beers, local cider and Himachal fruit wines.

Johnson's Café (Map p309; Circuit House Rd; dishes Rs 140-300) The restaurant at Johnson's Hotel serves excellent Indian and modern European cuisine, including roast lamb with mint sauce and Himachal trout with almonds. There's an outdoor terrace for warm summer evenings.

OLD MANALI

There are numerous garden restaurants serving all the usual suspects – pizzas, pitta-bread wraps, momos, banana pancakes, apple pie – from early morning to late evening. All these places close by the start of November.

Pizza Olive (Map p307; mains Rs 60-150) A surprisingly modern place for Old Manali, this pleasingly international restaurant serves convincingly done pizzas and pastas and you can eat indoors or out in the garden.

Tibet Kitchen (Map p307; dishes Rs 40-90; 🕑 10.30am-10pm) On the road to the Club House, this is a decent Tibetan and Chinese place with the feel of a real restaurant.

Popular backpacker restaurants include Shiva Garden Café (Map p307) and Moon Dance Garden (Map p307), both serving decent traveller fare for Rs 30 to Rs 100.

Several places in town serve half-decent coffee and English-style tea, including Café Amigos, Chopsticks and Johnson's Café.

Restaurants form the centre of nightlife in Manali and most serve alcohol. The most atmospheric places for an evening beer are Chopsticks and Khyber.

Shopping

Manali is crammed with souvenir shops selling souvenirs from Himachal, Tibet and Ladakh – most are open from 10am to 7pm. Tibet Art Collections (Map p309; ☎ 252974; NAC Market) probably has the best choice. Across the road, Tibet Emporium (Map p309; ☎ 252431; The Mall) has Tibetan knick-knacks and funky T-shirts with Tibetan messages.

Shawls are sold all over Manali. A good place to start is the cooperative Bhuttico (Map p309; ☎ 260079; The Mall), which charges fair, fixed prices – see the boxed text, p305. Several other cooperatives have shops around the Mall.

Street vendors sell fake brand-name sunglasses as well as winter clothing, nuts and dried apples, raisins and apricots. HimCoop (Map p309; The Mall) sells a wide range of locally produced organic juices, jams, dried fruit and pickles. FRUITS OF HIMACHAL

Himachal's bounteous orchards produce huge quantities of apples, pears, plums and apricots, but not all the fruit makes it to market on time. The rest is fermented locally and made into alcoholic cider and perry (pear cider) and a wide range of strong fruit wines, from apple to plum. Take a break from the fizzy chemical lager and order a bottle next time you eat out in Manali.

In season, HPTDC runs a daily bus (Rs 1600 with tented accommodation and food in Keylong) to Leh at 11am. Ordinary government buses (Rs 525) also leave at 11am, but you arrange your own accommodation in Keylong. Private buses run till around mid-October, charging around Rs 1000, stopping at Keylong or Sarchu.

For details about the route, see p338.

Lahaul & Spiti

The Rohtang La to Keylong in Lahaul is normally open from June to late October and the Kunzum La to Kaza in Spiti is open from July to mid-October (exact dates depend on snow conditions).

In season, there are regular buses to Keylong between 4am and 1pm (Rs 87, six hours). For Spiti, buses leave for Kaza (Rs 152, 10 hours) at 5.30am and 6am; the 5.30am service continues to Tabo (Rs 187, 15 hours). The daily bus to Udaipur (Rs 121, nine hours) leaves between 4am and 5am.

Lots of places rent out motorbikes, but make sure the price includes third-party insurance. The going rate per day is Rs 450 for a 500cc Enfield and Rs 300 to Rs 350 for a 100cc to 150cc Yamaha, Honda or Bajaj. Reliable rental places:

AROUND MANALI

Hamta Pass Trek

Easily accessible from Manali, this four- or five-day trek crosses the 4270m Hamta Pass over the Pir Panjal. The trailhead is the village of Prini, accessible by bus on the Manali–Naggar road, but it's camping all the way so organised treks are the way to go – see p310 for recommendations.

From Prini, the route climbs through pine forests to Sethan, then open meadows to Chikha. A waterfall campsite gives time to acclimatise before reaching the foot of the pass at Juara. The climb to the pass is steep and tiring but there are sublime snow-peak views from the top. On the descent, you can possibly push on to Chatru or break the journey with a riverside camp at Shiagouru. From Chatru, road transport runs north to Ladakh, east to Spiti and south to Manali.

Stage	Route	Duration (hr)	Distance (km)
1	Prini to Sethan/ Pandu Ropa	5-6	8
2	Sethan/Pandu Ropa to Juara	4-5	10
3	Juara to Shiagouru via Hamta Pass	7-8	10
4	Shiagouru to Chatru	3-4	8

Vashisht

☎ 01902

About 3km north of Manali on the slopes east of the Beas, Vashisht (Map p307) is the best and brightest of the traveller centres in the Kullu Valley. Indian tourists come here to bathe in the hot springs and tour the temples, while foreign tourists come here for the cheap accommodation and charas. Be aware of the risks – see p1140. Most guesthouses close down for the winter from late October.

There are some interesting old wood and stone houses with ornate carving beyond the public baths, and a number of typically Himachali temples in the middle of the village. Travel agencies, moneychangers, laundry services and German bakeries abound and several net cafés offer international calls, and internet access costs Rs 50 per hour.

SIGHTS & ACTIVITIES

Dedicated to the sage Vashisht, the ancient stone Vashisht Mandir has public baths (admission free; 5am-9pm) with separate areas for men and women, or there are open-air baths just uphill. Nearby are similar temples to Shiva and Rama, and there's a second Vashisht mandir at the back of the village, built in the two-storey Kinnauri style.

Travel agents can arrange treks and other adventure activities around the valley (see p310). Himalayan Extreme Center (9816174164; www.himalayan-extreme-center.com) offers rock climbing at Vashisht, Solang and Aleo (Rs 800 per day, with all equipment) and three- to five-day high-altitude skiing and snowboarding tours (from Rs 2000 per day).

All sorts of holistic activities are available in Vashisht, but there are also plenty of quack practitioners. Along the walking track down to the Beas, the orange-roofed Shri Hari Yoga Ashram (250493; closed winter) offers daily yoga classes for beginners at 10am and advanced classes at 8am and 4.30pm (Rs 100 to Rs 150). We've heard good things about the massage and Reiki sessions at the Reiki Centre (250195; www.reiki-world.com) on the main road.

HIMACHAL PRADESH

YAK SKIING

You love skiing. You love yaks. Why not combine the two? According to Time magazine, the sport of yak-skiing was invented by a Tibetan yak herder in Manali. It involves a pair of skis, a willing skier, a rope, a yak and a bucket of nuts. One end of the rope is carried uphill and fed through a pulley attached to a tree, then tied to a hungry yak. The skier at the bottom then shakes the bucket of nuts to attract the yak, and grabs onto the rope to be whisked up the hillside at death-defying speed. There is a growing body of opinion that yak-skiing doesn't really exist, but ask around locally in Manali and you may be able to prove the sceptics wrong.

are carpeted and clean, with geysers in the bathroom.

Hotel Arohi (☎ 254421; mcthakur@yahoo.com; r Rs 500-900;) A genuinely midrange hotel at the start of the village, offering good rooms with TVs and geysers and views from everywhere, including the restaurant.

If these places are full, there are several more guesthouses on the track behind the Rainbow Café.

EATING

Beer is widely available and standard opening hours are 7.30am to 11pm. There are several German bakeries for takeaway snacks.

Rainbow Café (dishes Rs 20-80) Most people end up at this rooftop place at the end of an evening; come here for decent traveller fare, cold beers and a ceaseless reggae soundtrack.

World Peace Café (dishes Rs 30-100) Upstairs at the Hotel Surabhi, this is a popular choice for traveller food and rooftop views. The menu runs to Italian, Mexican and Israeli food.

Baisho Restaurant (dishes Rs 40-100) A chilled-out restaurant above the Hotel Brighu, with mood lighting, a huge menu and comfy cushions to sit back on in front of nightly DVD movies.

Other good traveller restaurants include the Blue Heaven Café and Blue Star Café, both with old Indian and continental favourites from Rs 30.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Autorickshaws charge about Rs 40 to Rs 50 for the journey between Vashisht and Manali; don't rely on being able to get a lift back to Manali later than 7pm. On foot, take the trail near the Himalayan Extreme Center past the ruined HPTDC baths and down to the banks of the Beas River. Coming uphill, the trail begins about 200m north of the Vashisht turn-off.

Solang Nullah

☎ 01902

The best of the modest ski resorts in Himachal Pradesh, Solang Nullah sits at the bottom of a long, green meadow about 13km north of Manali. In summer the meadow is used for paragliding, walking and zorbing. From January to March, skiers and snowboarders can enjoy 1.5km of alpine-style runs. A new ropeway is under construction that will raise Solang to the level of the more established ski resorts at Auli and Gulmarg. A small drag-lift is already in operation on the beginners slopes above the village.

The Directorate of Mountaineering & Allied Sports (☎ 250337/252342; www.dmas.gov.in) based in southern Manali runs all-inclusive 14-day courses for basic, intermediate and advanced skiers on set dates between January and March. The fee of Rs 3100/US$240 (Indian/foreigner) includes equipment, food and dorm accommodation at the slopes.

Private companies run similar courses and offer ski and boot rental – expect to pay Rs 350 to Rs 500 per day, plus Rs 300 for use of the ski lifts. Winter clothing, and slightly tired ski gear, can be rented at dozens of wooden huts on the road between Solang Nullah and Manali. Advanced skiers can join expeditions to high-altitude slopes in Manali and Vashisht.

In summer, pony rides cost Rs 100, quad-bike rides cost Rs 300, zorbing starts at Rs 200 and paragliding flights start at Rs 1200. The slopes are also good for walking – the Shiva temple 3km above the village is a popular destination. See p310 for more on all these activities.

Buses leave Manali at 8am, 2pm and 4pm for Solang Nullah (Rs 9, one hour), returning on arrival. A taxi from Manali is Rs 300; it's a two-hour walk from Old Manali. Snow may make the road impassable in January and February.

WESTERN HIMACHAL PRADESH

Western Himachal Pradesh is famous as the home of the Tibetan government in exile, close to Dharamsala. The official website for Kangra district is http://hpkangra.nic.in.

DHARAMSALA

☎ 01892 / pop 19,800 / elev 1219m

Dharamsala (pronounced Dharam*sala*) is best known as the home of the Dalai Lama. In fact, the Tibetan government in exile is based just uphill in Gangchen Kyishong, and most travellers stay uphill in the busy little traveller town of McLeod Ganj. Dharamsala itself has a good museum and a busy bazaar, but most people only come here to catch a bus.

The State Bank of India (10am-4pm Mon-Fri, 10am-1pm Sat) accepts travellers cheques and changes cash and there's an ATM in the main bazaar. The Himachal Emporium (☎ 224185; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) on the main road sells Kullu shawls and Tibetan carpets for Rs 3500 upwards.

Sights

The Museum of Kangra Art (☎ 224214; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/50; 10am-1.30pm & 2-5pm Tue-Sun) near the bus stand displays some fine miniature paintings from the Kangra school, along with temple carvings, fabrics and embroidery, weapons and palanquins belonging to local rajas.

There's also a War Memorial, 1km south of town, commemorating local war heroes in battles since Independence.

Sleeping

There are a few good options if you have an early bus in the morning.

Surbhi Guesthouse (☎ 224677; r Rs 250-350) The price is right at this generic hotel, uphill on the road to Gangchen Kyishong. It's a bit less noisy than other places in town and the showers are hot.

Kashmir House (☎ 222977; d Rs 800-1500) A slightly classier HPTDC property than the Hotel Dhauladhar, this refurbished folly once belonged to the maharaja of Jammu and Kashmir. The huge rooms have all mod cons, in a quiet location below the road to Gangchen Kyishong.

HPTDC Hotel Dhauladhar (☎ 224926; r Rs 1200-2000) Although comfortable, rooms here are expensive for what you get. Nevertheless, its handy for the bus stand and there are good views from some rooms.

Eating

Monal Restaurant (dishes Rs 20-70; 10am-10pm) A dingy but hygienic fast-food house with tasty and inexpensive South Indian and Gujarati food.

Andey's Midtown Restaurant (mains Rs 40-120; 9am-10.30pm) The best food in town is served at this upmarket Indian restaurant in the centre. Come for kebabs, rich curries, burgers and continental snacks, and a beer on the side.

MCLEOD GANJ

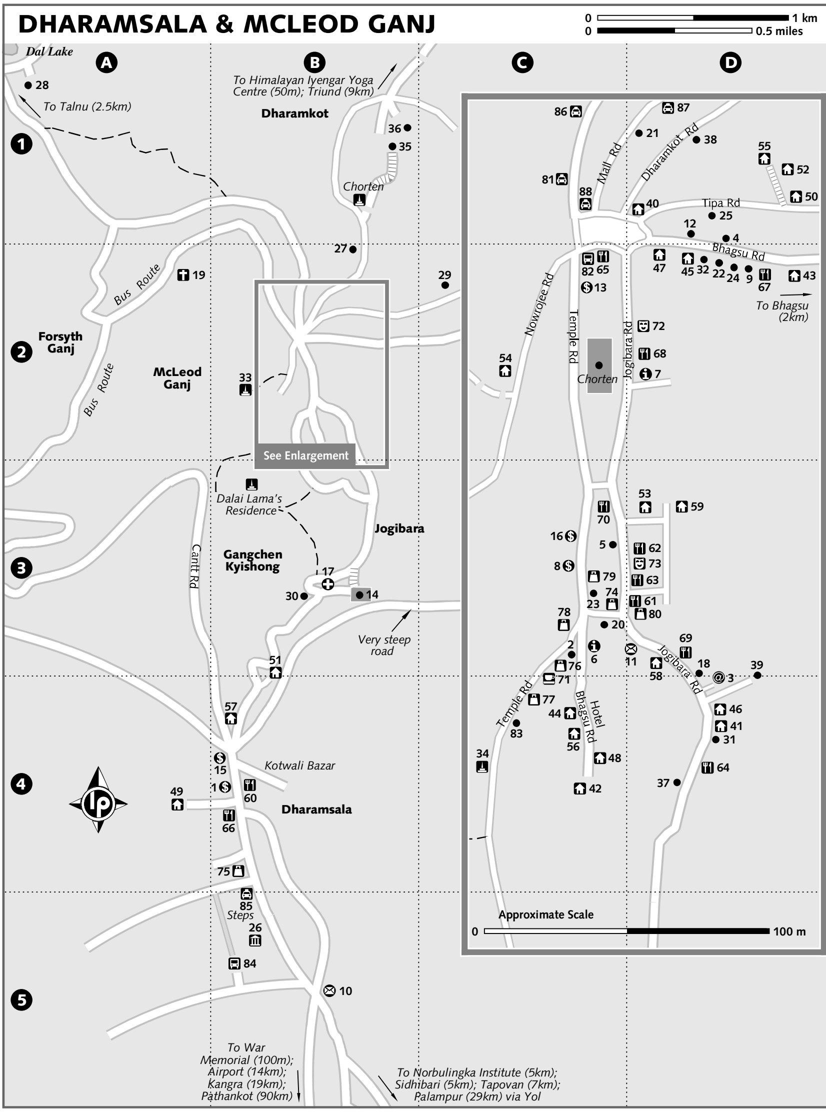
☎ 01892 / elev 1770m

Around 4km above Dharamsala, or 10km via the main road, McLeod Ganj is the headquarters of the Tibetan government in exile and the residence of His Holiness the 14th Dalai Lama. It's also the main traveller hangout in Himachal Pradesh, with dozens of budget hotels, trekking companies, net cafés, traveller restaurants, video movie parlours and wall-to-wall shops selling Tibetan souvenirs.

McLeod was established in the mid-1850s as a British garrison and it briefly served as an administration centre for the colonial government until the devastating earthquake of 1905. It remained a backwater until 1960, when the Dalai Lama and his entourage claimed asylum here following the Chinese invasion of Tibet (see the boxed text, p323).

Since this time, McLeod has become a major centre for the study of Buddhism and Tibetan culture. There are all sorts of holistic activities and courses on offer, and lots of travellers come here to volunteer on community projects that focus on the refugee community.

Waterproofs are essential for McLeod Ganj: it rains a lot here. Many shops and businesses are closed on Monday.



THE KANGRA TOY TRAIN

A lumbering narrow-gauge train runs east from Pathankot, providing a scenic, if slow, back route to Kangra (2½ hours), Palampur (four hours), Baijnath (6½ hours) and Jogindernagar (nine hours). There are seven trains a day – two as far as Jogindernagar and five as far as Baijnath. Ordinary trains cost Rs 27 or less to any destination on the route, but carriages are crammed with passengers and seats cannot be booked in advance. Board early to grab a window seat and enjoy the views en route.

Orientation

From the central bus stand, Jogibara Rd runs south to Gangchen Kyishong and Dharamsala, Temple Rd runs south to the Tsuglagkhang Complex, Bhagsu Rd runs east to Bhagsu, Tipa Rd runs northeast to the Tibetan Institute of Performing Arts and Dharamkot Rd runs north to Dharamkot.

The taxi stand is on Mall Rd and autorickshaws and share jeeps stop on the lower northern road to the Church of St John in the Wilderness and Dal Lake.

Sights

TSUGLAGKHANG COMPLEX

Downhill from McLeod on Temple Rd, the Tsuglagkhang (Central Chapel; 🕒 10am-6pm for nonresidents) comprises the photang (official residence) of the Dalai Lama, as well as the Namgyal Gompa, Tibet Museum and the Tsuglagkhang itself.

The revered Tsuglagkhang is the exiles' equivalent of the Jokhang Temple in Lhasa. Sacred to Avalokitesvara (Chenrezi in Tibet), the Tibetan deity of compassion, it enshrines a 3m-high gilded statue of the Sakyamuni Buddha, flanked by Avalokitesvara and Padmasambhava, the Indian scholar who introduced Buddhism to Tibet. The Avalokitesvara statue contains several relics rescued from the Jokhang Temple during the Cultural Revolution.

Next to the Tsuglagkhang is the Kalachakra Temple, built in 1992, which contains mesmerising murals of the Kalachakra (Wheel of Time) mandala, specifically linked to Avalokitesvara, currently represented on earth by the Dalai Lama. Sand mandalas are created here annually on the fifth day of the third Tibetan month. Photography is allowed in the Tsuglagkhang, but not in the Kalachakra Temple.

The remaining buildings form the Namgyal Gompa, where it is possible to watch monks debate most afternoons, sealing points of argument with great flourish, a foot stamp and theatrical clap of the hands. The monastery bookshop has a good selection of Buddhist texts, and you can enjoy cakes and vegetarian food at the Namgyal Café (snacks Rs 30-70; 🕒 10am-10pm Tue-Sun), which provides vocational training for refugees.

MEETING THE DALAI LAMA

Meeting face to face with the Dalai Lama is a lifelong dream for many travellers, but private audiences are almost never granted. Put simply, the Dalai Lama is too busy with spiritual duties and running the government in exile to meet everyone who comes to Dharamsala. Tibetan refugees are automatically guaranteed an audience, but travellers must make do with the occasional public meetings held at Gangchen Kyishong during the monsoon (July/August) and after Losar (Tibetan New Year) in February/March. Details of meetings are posted around McLeod Ganj. To attend you have to register, with your passport, at the Branch Security Office (☎ 221560; www.tibet.com; Bhagsu Rd; 🕒 9am-1pm & 2-5pm Mon-Sat, closed 2nd & 4th Sat each month).

EXILES

Until May 1949, Tibet was an autonomous kingdom, ruled by the spiritual dynasty of the Dalai Lama, the living incarnation of Avalokitesvara, the Buddhist deity of compassion. Then the Chinese People's Liberation Army marched into Lhasa to liberate the Tibetan people of their land and their culture. Since then, some 1.2 million Tibetans have been killed and 90% of Tibet's cultural heritage has been destroyed.

Facing unimaginable persecution, more than 250,000 Tibetan refugees have made the decision to flee their homeland, on foot over the Himalaya to seek sanctuary in India, led by His Holiness the 14th Dalai Lama, Tenzin Gyatso, who was granted asylum in Dharamsala in 1959. The village of Gangchen Kyishong below McLeod Ganj is now the headquarters for the official Tibetan government in exile, with a dedicated team of politicians and legal experts fighting for liberation and the rights of those still oppressed in Tibet.

Sadly, the cause of India's Tibetan refugees has fallen out of favour with Western protesters. 'Free Tibet' marches struggle to find a hundred people who are prepared to protest about the death of a million Tibetans. With China becoming increasingly powerful on the world stage, hopes for justice for Tibet are fading fast.

Meanwhile, India's Tibetan refugees continue to eke out a living from farming, manufacturing, and selling carpets and other traditional crafts. Tibetan refugee schools and other charitable projects are in desperate need of long-term volunteers across the region – see p325 and p1155 for more information.

Also here is the moving Tibet Museum (www.thetibetmuseum.org; admission Rs 5; 10am-6pm Tue-Sun), telling the tragic story of the Chinese occupation and the subsequent Tibetan exodus through photographs, interviews and video clips. A visit here is a must for anyone staying in McLeod Ganj.

Most Tibetan pilgrims make a kora (ritual circuit) of the Tsuglagkhang Complex, which must be carried out in a clockwise direction. Take the road to the left at the entrance to the temple and follow the winding path leading off to the right.

SECRETARIAT OF THE TIBETAN GOVERNMENT IN EXILE

Inside the government compound at Gangchen Kyishong, the Library Of Tibetan Works & Archives (Secretariat Complex; 9am-5pm Mon-Sat, closed 2nd & 4th Sat of month) preserves the Tibetan texts saved from the Cultural Revolution. Many have since been translated into English and other European languages, but you must become a temporary member (Rs 50 per month; passport needed for ID) to access the collection.

Upstairs is a fascinating cultural museum (admission Rs 10; 9am-1pm & 2-5pm Mon-Sat, closed 2nd & 4th Sat each month) with statues, old Tibetan artefacts and books, and some astonishing three-dimensional mandalas in wood and sand. Also worth a visit is the Nechung Gompa, home to the Tibetan state oracle.

TIBETAN MEDICAL & ASTROLOGICAL INSTITUTE (MEN-TSEE-KHANG)

Established to preserve the ancient arts of amchi (traditional Tibetan medicine) and astrology, the Men-Tsee Khang (☎ 222618; Gangchen Kyishong) is a five-minute walk below the Secretariat. There's a library and training college, and if you know the exact time you were born, you can have a whole life horoscope prepared in English for US$45.

The Men-Tsee-Khang Museum (admission Rs 5; 9am-1pm & 2-5pm Mon-Sat) has fascinating displays on traditional Tibetan medicine, told via preserved specimens and illustrative thangkas (rectangular Tibetan painting on cloth).

TSECHOKLING GOMPA

At the base of a long flight of steps below the bus stand, this peaceful gompa was built in 1987 to replace the original Dip Tse Chokling Gompa in Tibet, destroyed in the Cultural Revolution. Home to a small order of Gelukpa monks, the prayer hall enshrines a statue of Sakyamuni in a magnificent jewelled headdress.

OTHER ATTRACTIONS

Run by a local charity that works with former political prisoners, the Gu Chu Sum Movement Gallery (Jogibara Rd; admission free; 2-5pm Mon, Wed & Fri) has an exhibition of photos telling the story of political oppression in Chinese-occupied Tibet.

Established by the Tibetan Welfare Office, the Environmental Educational Centre (Bhagsu Rd; 8.30am-7pm Mon-Sat) provides education on environmental issues. You can refill your water bottle and the adjacent Green Shop (see Shopping, p328) sells handmade paper and other organic products.

Just off the main road into McLeod, the Church of St John in the Wilderness has handsome stained-glass windows dating from the British era. It's open on Sunday mornings for the weekly service. The cemetery contains the graves of many victims of the 1905 earthquake.

Activities

ALTERNATIVE THERAPIES & MASSAGE

McLeod Ganj has dozens of practitioners of holistic and alternative therapies, some legitimate and some making a fast buck at the expense of gullible travellers. Adverts for courses and sessions are posted on noticeboards all over McLeod Ganj and in Contact magazine, but talking to other travellers is a better way to find the good practitioners. Be warned that some women travellers have been molested by so-called 'therapists'; see Dangers & Annoyances, p322.

Readers have recommended the Himalayan Iyengar Yoga Centre (☎ 221312; www.hiyogacentre.com; Dharamkot Rd; Apr-Oct) and Z Meditation (☎ 220621; www.zmeditation.com; Jogibara Rd) for yoga and meditation sessions.

AMCHI

Amchi (traditional Tibetan medicine) is a popular treatment for minor and persistent ailments. There are several clinics around town, including the Men-Tsee-Khang Clinic (☎ 221484; Tipa Rd; 9am-1pm & 2-5pm Mon-Sat, closed 2nd & 4th Sat each month) and Dr Lobsang Khangkar Memorial Clinic (☎ 220811; 9am-noon & 2-5pm Mon-Sat) near the post office.

WALKS

Interesting short walks around McLeod include the 2km stroll to Bhagsu (p329) and the 3km walk northeast to Dharamkot for uplifting views south over the valley and north towards the Dhauladhar Ridge.

About 4km northwest of McLeod Ganj on Mall Rd, peaceful Dal Lake is home to the Tibetan Children's Village (☎ 221248; www.tcv.org.in; 9.30am-5pm Mon-Fri), which provides free education for refugee children. Visitors are welcome and there may be opportunities for volunteers. The lake itself has a small Hindu temple and there are great views from Naddi just uphill.

A popular longer walk is the two-day return trip through boulder fields and rhododendron forests to Triund (2900m), a 9km walk past Dharamkot. Triund has a simple rest house and you can stop overnight and stroll up to the glacier at Laka Got (3350m) before turning back to McLeod Ganj. There's a scenic route along the gorge from the waterfall at Bhagsu. From Triund, you can trek to Indrahar La (4300m) and the Chamba Valley – (p328).

TREKKING

It's possible to trek from McLeod Ganj to the Kullu, Chamba, Lahaul and Spiti Valleys, and there are several agencies in town who can make the necessary arrangements. Probably the most popular route crosses the 4300m Indrahar Pass over the Dhaula Dhar to Bharmour (p328).

Uphill from the bus stand on the road to Dharamkot, the Regional Mountaineering Centre (☎ 221787; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) can arrange treks and adventure activities and offers courses and expeditions on set dates. It can also provide a list of registered guides and porters.

Other reliable trekking operators:

Eagle's Height Trekkers (☎ 221097; www.trekking.123himachal.com; Mall Rd)
Yeti Trekking (☎ 221060; Dharamkot Rd)

VOLUNTEERING IN MCLEOD GANJ

There are numerous opportunities for volunteers to help newly arrived Tibetan refugees, from cleaning up litter to skilled placements in teaching and training. To maximise the benefits for local people, always look for a position that matches your existing skills. The following places can match you to a suitable placement. Volunteers generally make their own arrangements for accommodation and meals.

One of the best places to start is VolunteerTibet (☎ 220894; www.volunteertibet.org; Jogibara Rd; ⏲ 3-5pm Mon-Fri), a community organisation that arranges placements in areas of need – eg teaching, providing computer training and social services. Volunteers with two months or more to spare are preferred.

LHA (☎ 220992; www.lhaindia.org; Temple Rd; ⏲ 10am-5pm Mon-Fri) also arranges placements at a variety of local community projects. You need a minimum of two weeks for teaching placements and one month or more for serious vocational programmes.

The Tibetan Welfare Office (☎ 221059; Bhagsu Rd; ⏲ 9am-1pm & 2-5pm Mon-Sat, closed 2nd & 4th Sat each month) can provide advice on other opportunities for volunteers around McLeod Ganj. Many organisations seeking volunteers also advertise in the free magazine Contact. See p1155 for other projects working with Tibetan refugees in India.

In December/January, McLeod celebrates Losar (Tibetan New Year, p283) with processions and masked dances at local monasteries. The Dalai Lama often gives public teachings at this time. The Dalai Lama's birthday on 6 July is also celebrated with aplomb.

From 10 to 12 December, McLeod Ganj hosts the International Himalayan Festival (p283) to commemorate the Dalai Lama's Nobel Peace Prize, featuring cultural troupes from all the Himalayan nations.

Take-away beer and spirits are available at a small liquor store below the Asian Plaza Hotel.

A similar tailoring service is offered by Stitches of Tibet (☎ 221527; www.tibetanwomen.org; Temple Rd; ⌚ 10am-5pm Tue-Sun), which provides work for newly arrived women refugees.

From McLeod, take an autorickshaw along the Dharamkot road then walk on through pine and rhododendron forests to Triund, where there's a simple rest house. The next stage climbs to the glacier at Laka Got (3350m) and continues to the rocky shelter known as Lahes Cave. AROUND MCLEOD GANJ

Bhagsu

☎ 01892

About 2km east of McLeod Ganj, Bhagsu (Bhagsunag) is developing into a busy summer resort. There's a popular traveller centre at the back of the village, but things are definitely moving upmarket. The village has a cold spring with baths, a small Shiva temple built by the raja of Kangra in the 16th century, and a gaudy new temple with stairways passing through the open mouths of a cement crocodile and lion. You can walk on to Dharamkot or Triund via a gushing waterfall.

Various alternative therapies are available in the backpacker enclave, though there are plenty of quack practitioners around. The Buddha Hall (☎ 221171; www.buddhahall.com) offers courses in Reiki, yoga and Indian classical music. Bhagsu has half a dozen internet cafés and travel agents.

SLEEPING

There are numerous backpacker hotels and a number of posher hotels targeting domestic tourists.

Omni Guest House (☎ 221604; r with shared/private bathroom Rs 120/200) Uphill from the main road is this slate-roofed block of spartan but cheap backpacker rooms and a hippie café full of murals. Classier hotel-style rooms should be available by the time you read this.

Pink White Hotel (☎ 221209; r Rs 150-500) Up the main road in the traveller enclave, this place looks a little tired, but rooms are cheap and you get a TV, carpet and balcony.

Oak View Guesthouse (r from Rs 200) A tidy new guesthouse near Hotel Highland, with a traveller café out the front and decent rooms with TV and geysers. Most rooms have views but some are better than others.

Sangam Guesthouse (☎ 221013; r from Rs 300) Right at the entrance to Bhagsu, offering spic-and-span rooms, some with balconies. A new level of smarter rooms was added recently.

Hotel Highland (☎ 220501; r Rs 350-700) Opposite Pink White Hotel, this cavernous place is clean and tidy and decent value. Rooms come with geysers, TVs, phones and balconies.

Meghavan Holiday Resort (☎ 221935; www.meghavanholidayresort.com; r from Rs 800, ste from Rs 1200) Just up from the main road, this huge, cream-coloured hotel targets Indian holidaymakers with comfy rooms full of soft upholstery. The front rooms with bay windows are better than the dark back-facing rooms.

EATING & DRINKING

Bhagsu is full of German bakeries and backpacker cafés. Alcohol is usually available on an 'under the table' basis.

Ashoka International Restaurant (dishes Rs 50-170) Bhagsu's poshest dining option serves good Indian and Chinese food in a smart dining room with a choice of floor cushions or normal tables.

Sidhibari & Tapovan

About 6km from Dharamsala, the little village of Sidhibari is the adopted home of Ogyen Trinley Dorje, the 17th Karmapa of Tibetan Buddhism, who fled to India in 2000. Although his official seat is Rumtek Monastery in Sikkim, the teenaged leader of the Kagyu (Black Hat) sect has been banned from taking up his seat for fear this would upset the Chinese government.

The temporary seat of the Karmapa is the large Gyuto Tantric Gompa (☎ 01892-236637) in Sidhibari. Public audiences take place here on Wednesday and Saturday at 2pm; foreign visitors are welcome but security is tight and bags, phones and cameras are not allowed inside the auditorium.

Nearby is the Tapovan Ashram, a popular spiritual retreat for devotees of Rama, with a colourful Ram Mandir, a giant black Shiva lingam and a 6m-high statue of Hanuman.

Regular local buses run from Dharamsala to Sidhibari (Rs 5, 15 minutes) or you can take a taxi for Rs 250 return. Tapovan is a 2km walk south along a quiet country road.

Norbulingka Institute

☎ 01892

About 6km from Dharamsala, the wonderful Norbulingka Institute (☎ 246402; www.norbulingka.org; 8am-6pm) was established in 1988 to teach and preserve traditional Tibetan art forms, including woodcarving, statue-making, thangka painting and embroidery. The centre produces expensive but exquisite souvenirs, including embroidered clothes, cushions and wall hangings, and sales benefit refugee artists. Also here are delightful Japanese-influenced gardens and a central Buddhist temple with a 4m-high gilded statue of Sakyamuni. Next to the shop is the Losel Doll Museum (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/20; 9am-5.30pm), with quaint puppet dioramas of Tibetan life. A short walk behind the complex is the large Dolma Ling Buddhist nunnery.

Set in the gorgeous Norbulingka gardens, the characterful Norling Guest House (☎ 246406; normail@norbulingka.org; s/d from Rs 1000/1150) offers fairy-tale rooms decked out with Buddhist murals and handicrafts from the institute. Meals are available at the institute's Norling Café.

To get here, catch a Yol-bound bus from Dharamsala and ask to be let off at Sidhpur (Rs 5, 15 minutes), near the Sacred Heart School, from where it's a 15-minute walk. A taxi from Dharamsala will cost Rs 250 return.

EAST OF DHARAMSALA

Palampur

☎ 01894 / elev 1249m

About 30km southeast of Dharamsala, Palampur is a small junction town surrounded by tea plantations and rice fields. A short trek from town takes you to the pretty waterfall in Bundla Chasm, or you can pass a pleasant few hours observing the tea-making process at the Palampur Tea Cooperative (☎ 230220; 10.30am-12.30pm & 1.30-4.30pm Tue-Fri), on the Mandi side of town.

Pine's Hotel (☎ 232633; r Rs 150-350) wins no prizes for interior decoration, but the price is right. Cheaper rooms share facilities.

HPTDC Hotel T-Bud (☎ 231298; d Rs 700-1300), 1km north of Main Bazaar on the edge of town, has large grounds and a good restaurant; rooms are spacious and well kept.

The new bus station is 1km south of Main Bazar; an autorickshaw from the centre costs Rs 20. Buses leave all day for Dharamsala (Rs 20, two hours) and Kangra (Rs 29, 1½ hours). A taxi from Dharamsala costs Rs 550. Palampur is a stop on the Pathankot–Jogindernagar rail line.

Baijnath

☎ 01894 / elev 1010m

The small town of Baijnath, set on a mountain-facing ridge 46km southeast of Dharamsala, is an important pilgrimage destination. In the middle of the village is the exquisitely carved Baidyanath Temple, sacred to Shiva in his incarnation as Vaidyanath, Lord of the Physicians, dating from the 8th century. Thousands of pilgrims make their way here for the Shivaratri Festival (p283) in late February and early March.

Most people visit on a day trip, or a stop on the journey from Mandi to Dharamsala. Buses from Dharamsala pass through several times a day (Rs 35, two hours). The Pathankot–Jogindernagar rail line passes through Paprola, about 1km west of the main bus stand. A return taxi from Dharamsala costs Rs 1000.

Tashijong & Taragarh

About 5km west of Baijnath, and 2km north from the Palampur road, the village of Tashi-jong is home to a small community of Drukpa Kagyud monks and refugees. The centre of life here is the Tashijong Gompa, with several mural-filled prayer halls and a carpet-making, thangka-painting and woodcarving cooperative.

About 2km south of Tashijong, at Taragarh, is the extraordinary Taragarh Palace (☎ in Delhi 011-24643046; www.taragarh.com; r from Rs 3500-5000;), the summer palace of the last maharaja of Jammu and Kashmir. Now a luxury hotel, this elegant country seat is full of portraits of the Dogra royal family, Italian marble, crystal chandeliers, tiger skins and other ostentatious furnishings. There's a restaurant, a fully equipped gym and gorgeous grounds with a pool.

Both villages can be reached on the buses that run along the Mandi–Palampur highway – just tell the bus driver where you want to get off. A taxi from McLeod Ganj is Rs 600/800 one way/return.

Bir & Billing

About 9km east of Baijnath, a road winds uphill to the village of Bir (1300m), a small Tibetan colony with three peaceful gompas that welcome passing visitors, and Billing (2600m), a famous launch pad for paragliding and hang-gliding. In 1992 the world record of 135km for an out-and-return flight was set here. International teams come to challenge the record every May for the Himalayan Hang-Gliding Rally (p283). You need your own gear to enjoy the thermals, but inquire locally about tandem flights.

A taxi from McLeod Ganj to Billing will cost Rs 700. Alternatively, travel by bus or train to Jogindernagar (on the route to Mandi) and take a taxi there for Rs 300 return.

SOUTHWEST OF DHARAMSALA

Kangra

☎ 01892 / elev 734m

The former capital of the princely state of Kangra, this bustling pilgrim town is an easy day trip from McLeod Ganj. Hindus visit to pay homage at the Brajeshwari Devi Temple, one of the 51 Shakti peeths, the famous temples marking the sites where body parts from Shiva's first wife, Sati, fell after the goddess was consumed by flames – the Brajeshwari temple marks the final resting place of Sati's left breast (see p486 for more on the legend).

Famous for its wealth, the temple was looted by a string of invaders, from Mahmud of Ghazni to Jehangir, before collapsing in the 1905 earthquake. Rebuilt in the original style, the temple is reached through an atmospheric bazaar winding uphill from the main road, lined with shops selling prasad and religious trinkets.

On the far side of town, a Rs 80 autorickshaw ride from the bus stand, the impregnable-looking Kangra Fort (Nagar Kot; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; dawn-dusk) soars above the confluence of the Manjhi and Banganga Rivers. The fort was used by Hindu rajas, Mughal warlords and even the British before it was finally toppled by the earthquake of 1905. On clear days, head to the battlements for views north to the mountains and south to the plains. A small museum at the fort has stone carvings from temples inside the compound and miniature paintings from the Kangra School.

SLEEPING & EATING

Royal Hotel & Restaurant (☎ 265013; royalhotel@rediffmail.com; r Rs 400-450) Located on the main road between the steps of the main temple and the bus stand, the Royal has neat, tiled rooms with hot showers, plus a decent restaurant.

Hotel Maurya (☎ 265875; r Rs 350-550, with AC Rs 850) A little closer to the bus stand, Hotel Maurya benefits from regular licks of paint and rooms are good for the price.

For meals, eat at your hotel or try one of the many dhabas in the centre of town and along the bazaar that runs up to Brajeshwari Devi.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Kangra's bus stand is 1.5km north of the temple bazaar, a Rs 20 autorickshaw ride from the centre. There are frequent buses to Dharamsala (Rs 14, one hour), Palampur (Rs 29, 1½ hours), Pathankot (Rs 65, three hours) and Jawalamukhi (Rs 25, 1½ hours).

Trains pull into Kangra Mandir station, 3km east of town, and Kangra station, 5km south, accessible by autorickshaw for Rs 50 and Rs 100 respectively. Travellers have reported problems getting an auto from the stations into town.

Taxis in Kangra charge Rs 200 to Gaggal airport, Rs 350 to Dharamsala, and Rs 500 to McLeod Ganj, Jawalamukhi or Masrur.

Masrur

A winding road runs southwest from Gaggal through pleasant green hills to the 10th century temples (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; dawn-dusk) at Masrur. Although badly damaged by the 1905 earthquake, the sikharas owe more than a passing resemblance to the Hindu temples at Angkor Wat in Cambodia. You can climb to the upper level for mountain views.

The easiest way to get here is by taxi from McLeod Ganj (Rs 900 return), or you can get as far as Lunj (Rs 15, 1½ hours) from Dharamsala by public bus and take a local taxi for the last few kilometres.

Jawalamukhi

☎ 01970

About 34km south of Kangra is the temple of Jawalamukhi, the goddess of light, worshipped in the form of a natural gas eternal flame, issuing from the rocks. The temple is one of the 51 Shakti peeths, marking the spot where the tongue of Shiva's first wife Sati fell after her body was consumed by flames (see p486 for more on the legend). The gold dome and spire was installed by Maharaja Ranjit Singh, the 'Lion of Punjab', who never went into battle without seeking a blessing from the temple.

HPTDC Hotel Jawalaji (☎ 222280; r from Rs 500, with AC from Rs 1100;) is a superior HTPDC property, with well-loved rooms, conveniently located for walks to the temple and outlying countryside.

Buses to Dharamsala (Rs 40, 1½ hours) and Kangra (Rs 25, 1½ hours) leave all day from the stand below the road leading up to the temple. Taxis charge Rs 700/1000 one way/return from McLeod Ganj.

CHAMBA VALLEY

The Chamba Valley is another splendidly isolated valley system, cut off from the Kangra Valley by the Dhauladhar Range and from Kashmir by the Pir Panjal. This area was ruled for centuries as the princely state of Chamba, the most ancient state in North India. Even though good roads connect Chamba with Pathankot and Kangra, surprisingly few foreign visitors make it out here, with even fewer continuing down the valley beyond the old hill station of Dalhousie.

The official website for Chamba is http://hpchamba.nic.in.

Dalhousie

☎ 01899 / pop 10,500 / elev 2036m

Dalhousie is another of those 'little pieces of England' that the British left behind after Independence. Since Independence, the colonial mansions have been joined by the posh Dalhousie Public School and numerous modern hotels catering to honeymooners from the plains. There isn't much to do but stroll and admire the views, which is rather the point of coming here.

Quite a few Tibetan refugees have made a home in Dalhousie and there are painted rock carvings of Buddhist deities along the south side of the ridge. You can also visit the British-era churches of St John and St Francis, set amongst the pines at opposite ends of the ridge. Pony rides can be arranged for about Rs 100 per hour.

ORIENTATION

Unusually for a hill station, there are few steep roads. The built-up areas at Subhash Chowk and Gandhi Chowk are linked by two level alleys – Thandi Sarak (Cold Rd), and Garam Sarak (Hot Rd), which gets more sunshine. The bus stand is about 1km downhill.

The high season – when room prices double and availability dwindles – runs from April to July, September to late October, and Christmas to New Year.

Street lighting is limited so bring a torch.

INFORMATION

HPTDC tourist office (☎ 242225; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat, open Sun Apr-Jul) Opposite the bus stand; can advise on bus times.

SLEEPING

In the off season, expect discounts of at least 50%. Unless stated, the following offer rooms with TV and bathrooms with hot showers.

Budget

Youth Hostel (☎ 242189; yh_dalhousie@rediffmail.com; dm with private bathroom Rs 60, r Rs 200;) A 200m walk down a back lane opposite the bus stand, Dalhousie's hostel is as clean as a new pin. Dorms are single sex, showers are hot, and facilities include a net café and dining hall. Rooms must be vacated from 10am to 12.30pm for cleaning, but you're welcome to pass the time downstairs.

Hotel Crags (☎ 242124; Garam Sarak; r Rs 350-500, cottage Rs 650) A steep climb below the Subhash

Chowk end of Garam Sarak, this big old colonial house has huge faded rooms and a large front terrace offering spectacular views of the valley.

Sharing a lane below Garam Sarak, Hotel Monal (☎ 242362; r from Rs 500) and Hotel Aarti (☎ 242433; r Rs 350) offer almost identical facilities: simple but clean rooms with TVs and tiled bathrooms. Hotel Aarti has the better views.

Midrange & Top End

The HPTDC runs two decent hotels in Dalhousie – Hotel Geetanjali (☎ 242155; r Rs 550-800) offers worn colonial charm in an old house just off Thandi Sarak, while Hotel Manimahesh (☎ 242793; Bus Stand; r Rs 1100-2000) offers large, modern rooms with sublime Pir Panjal views.

Hotel Ark (☎ 240605; Panchkula Rd; r Rs 700-1400) A wonderful colonial folly, built in 1941 in the style of a Mughal mausoleum. Spiral staircases wind up the mock minarets to large, modern rooms. Book a deluxe room for a front lounge with valley views.

Aroma-n-Claire Hotel (☎ 242199; Court Rd; r from Rs 1000) Sadly closed for renovation when we visited, this hotel is owned by a family of collectors who have filled the place with bizarre bric-a-brac and intriguing found objects. It should have reopened by the time you read this.

Hotel Mount View (☎ 242120; www.hotelmountview.com; Bus Stand; r from Rs 1600, ste from Rs 2400) Dark wood and period knick-knacks lend a pukka feel to the Mount View, built as the British departed in 1947. Rooms fall somewhere between chintzy and charming.

Hotel Grand View (☎ 240760; www.grandviewdalhousie.in; s/d Rs 1600/1900, ste Rs 2900) More than living up to its name, this stately 1920s hotel has oodles of colonial charm. The rooms, restaurant and bar are a flashback to the Raj and the fabulous gardens gaze across to the ice-capped peaks of the Pir Panjal.

Several modern concrete hotels are clustered together on Air Force Rd, just above Subhash Chowk, offering comfortable but bland accommodation. Hotel Goher (☎ 242253; goherdeepak@yahoo.com; r from Rs 700) and Hotel New Metro (☎ 242775; r from Rs 770) are decent choices.

EATING

Both Subhash Chowk and Gandhi Chowk have places to eat. Most restaurants are open from 9am to 10pm, but alcohol is only served at the big hotels.

For a cheap treat, there are several Punjabi dhabas on the south side of Subhash Chowk. All are called Sher-E-something and all serve good food for Rs 70 or less.

Café Dalhousie (snacks Rs 20-50; ⏰ from 8am) A huge wood-floored place serving excellent and cheap dosas and other South Indian snacks, with hot chai to wash it down.

Kwality Restaurant (Gandhi Chowk; dishes Rs 40-120) With an extensive menu, this restaurant is popular with Indian families and specialises in burgers, pizza and sizzlers.

Napoli (Garam Sarak; dishes Rs 45-200) A short walk down from Ghandi Chowk, Napoli skips Italian food in favour of familiar but well-prepared Indian and Chinese favourites.

SHOPPING

Close to Gandhi Chowk on Garam Sarak, you'll find fair-priced shawls and hats at Bhuttico (☎ 240440; ⏰ 10am-6pm Mon-Sat) and a good selection of Tibetan carpets and handicrafts at the Tibetan Refugee Handicraft Centre (☎ 240607; ⏰ 10am-7pm Wed-Mon).

Around Dalhousie

KALATOP WILDLIFE SANCTUARY

Midway between Dalhousie and Chamba, accessible by taxi or public bus, the forested hills around Khajjiar are preserved as the Kalatop Wildlife Sanctuary. The pine forests provide excellent walking country and you have a chance of spotting langur monkeys, barking deer and black bears. Buses between Dalhousie and Khajjiar pass the park entrance at Lakkar Mandi.

KHAJJIAR

About 22km from Dalhousie, this grassy marg (meadow) is ringed by pines and thronged by holidaymakers from the plains. On the shore of the central pond is the slate hut–style Khajjinag Temple, with fine woodcarvings and crude effigies of the five Pandavas, installed here in the 16th century.

ZORBING

Many of Himachal's winter resorts have found a new lease of life in summer through the sport of zorbing. One of the goofier pieces of sports equipment, the zorb is a human-sized hamster ball made from clear inflatable plastic. Passengers climb in through a tiny porthole and the zorb is pushed to the edge of the slope where gravity takes its inevitable course. The 'zorbonaut' has no way of controlling the ball but being out of control is part of the thrill. Staff are on hand to catch you at the bottom, so you won't roll all the way down to the Punjab. Popular spots for a roll include Solang Nullah (p317) near Manali and Khajjiar (opposite) near Dalhousie.

In season, pony rides around the lake cost Rs 110 and zorbing on the meadow costs Rs 150 – see the boxed text, above. About 1km from Khajjiar towards Chamba is a gaudy modern temple with a monumental statue of Shiva.

There are plenty of fast-food restaurants and several hotels, but most foreigners make a day trip here by bus from Chamba (19, 1½ hours) or Dalhousie (Rs 16, one hour). Buses run on this route five times a day.

Chamba

☎ 01899 / pop 20,700 / elev 996m

Well off the tourist circuit, the charming capital of Chamba district is dominated by the former palaces of the local maharajas. The princely state of Chamba was founded in AD 920 by Raja Sahil Varman and it survived for 1000 years until finally falling to the British in 1845. Every year since 935, Chamba has celebrated the annual harvest with the Minjar Festival (p283) in July/August in honour of Raghuvira (an incarnation of Rama).

Chamba sits on a ledge above the Ravi River. The de facto centre of town is the open grassy sports field known as the Chowgan, the focus for festivals, impromptu cricket matches, picnics and promenades. Most places of interest are tucked away in the alleyways of Dogra Bazar, which runs uphill past the maharaja's palace.

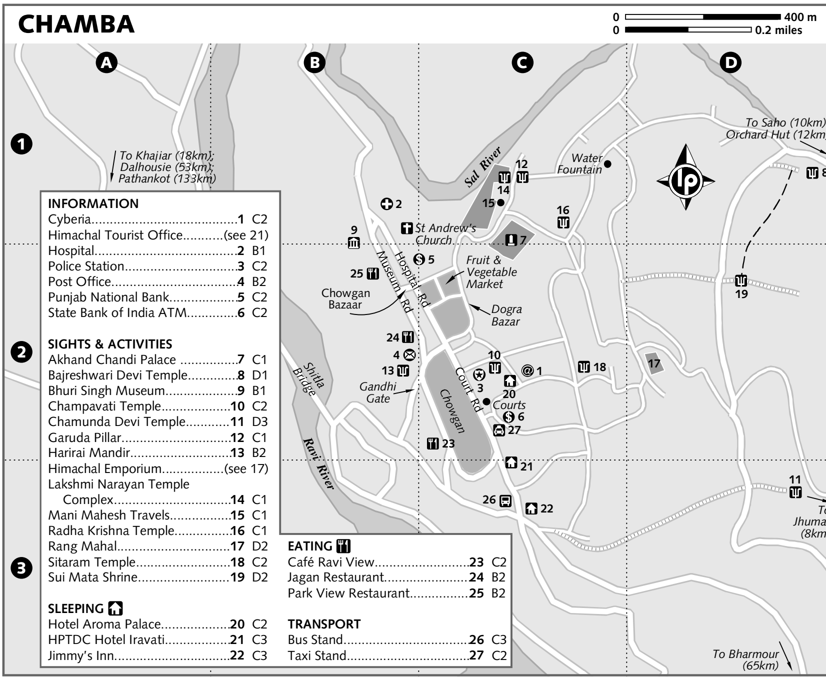
SIGHTS & ACTIVITIES

Lakshmi Narayan Temple Complex

Opposite the Akhand Chandi Palace are six sikhara temples dating from the 10th to 19th centuries, built in the Himachal stone-hut style and covered in carvings. The largest (and oldest) is dedicated to Lakshmi Narayan (Vishnu). In front is a distinctive Nepali-style pillar topped by a statue of Vishnu's faithful servant, the man-bird Garuda. The remaining temples are sacred to Radha Krishna, Shiva, Gauri Shankar, Triambkeshwar Mahdev and Lakshmi Damodar. The compound has a small museum (admission free; 11am-3pm Mon-Sat) displaying religious artefacts.

Other Temples



On the hilltop above the Rang Mahal, reached via a set of steps near the bus stand, or by taxi along the road to Jhumar, the stone Chamunda Devi Temple features impressive carvings of Chamunda Devi (Durga in her wrathful aspect) and superior views of Chamba and the Dhauladhar. About 500m north along the road to Saho, the Bajreshwari Devi Temple is a handsome hut-style mandir with exquisite effigies of Bajreshwari (an incarnation of Durga) set into plinths around the walls.

Between the two is a small shrine to Sui Mata, a local princess who gave her life to appease a water spirit that was causing a terrible drought in Chamba. The goddess is highly venerated by local women and the four-day Sui Mata Mela (p283) is celebrated each April on the Chowgan in her honour.

By the Chowgan is 11th century Harirai Mandir, sacred to Vishnu. Dotted nearby Akhand Chandi Palace are similar stone temples to Radha Krishna, Sitaram (Rama) and Champavati – daughter of Raja Sahil Varman, worshipped locally as an incarnation of Durga.

Historic Buildings

Uphill from Chowgan in Dogra Bazar is the stately white Akhand Chandi Palace, the former home of the Chamba raja. Built in 1764, the central Darbar Hall is reminiscent of many civic buildings in Kathmandu. It now houses a postgraduate college; you can peek inside during school hours.

A few blocks southeast is the fortress-like Rang Mahal (Old Palace), which once housed the royal granary and treasury. It now houses the Himachal Emporium (☎ 222333; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat), which sells Chamba's famous rumals – pieces of cloth finely embroidered in silk, with a perfect mirror image of the same pattern on the reverse side and no evidence of knots or loose threads. Prices start at Rs 300.

Bhuri Singh Museum

Founded in 1908, the town museum (☎ 222590; Museum Rd; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/50, camera Rs 50/100; 10am-5pm Tue-Sun, closed 2nd Sat each month) has a fabulous collection of miniature paintings from the Chamba, Kangra and Basohli schools, plus woodcarvings, weapons, rumals (local embroidery), relics from the rajas and ornately carved fountain slabs from around the Chamba Valley.

Hotel Aroma Palace (☎ 225577; hotelaromapalace@yahoo.com; dm Rs 100, s/d from Rs 400/500; 💻) Up an alley near the taxi stand, this big, modern place has a range of tidy rooms, a net café, restaurant and a sunny terrace. Cheaper rooms have their own bathroom outside off the hall.

HPTDC Hotel Iravati (☎ 222671; Court Rd; d Rs 600-1400) Conveniently located at the south end of Chowgan, the Iravati offers large, well-equipped rooms and a better-than-average in-house restaurant.

EATING & DRINKING

Chamba is known for its chukh – a chilli sauce consisting of red and green peppers, lemon juice and mustard oil, served as a condiment in most restaurants. Most places are open from 8am to 10pm.

Café Ravi View (Chowgan; snacks Rs 20-40; 🕘 9am-9pm) A modern HPTDC-run snack house, on the river side of Chowgan, serving Indian and Chinese fast food – including a bargain veg thalis (Rs 35) – plus icy cold beers.

Jagan Restaurant (Museum Rd; dishes Rs 25-100) Opposite the Dogra Bazar, this place offers the tasty Chamba speciality chamba madhra (kidney beans with curd and ghee) for Rs 65, plus a good selection of veg curries.

Park View Restaurant (Museum Rd; dishes Rs 30-70) A great little restaurant serving tasty veg and nonveg food – order some jheera rice and curd and a copper pail of dhal on the side. Beer and spirits are served surreptitiously under the table.

Bharmour

☎ 01895 / elev 2195m

From Chamba, a perilous mountain road winds 65km east to the ancient slate-roofed village of Bharmour, hovering on the edge of a seemingly bottomless valley. Bharmour was the capital of the princely state of Chamba until AD 920, and there are fascinating temples and treks to surrounding mountain passes. The villages around Bharmour are home to the semi-nomadic Gaddis, pastoralists who move their flocks up to alpine pastures during the summer, and descend to Kangra, Mandi and Bilaspur in winter.

SIGHTS & ACTIVITIES

Reached through the bazaar leading uphill from the jeep stand, the Chaurasi temples are some of Himachal's finest. Built in the classic stone-sikhara style, with wide slate canopies, the Shaivite temples are spread over a flagstone courtyard that doubles as an outdoor classroom for local schools. Highlights of the compound are the towering Manimahesh Temple, built in the 6th century AD, and the squat Lakshna Devi Temple, featuring an eroded but wildly carved wooden doorway.

Treks from Bharmour can be arranged through Himalayan Travelling Agency (☎ 225059), by the HP State Coop Bank, and the Directorate of Mountaineering & Allied Sports (☎ 225036), on the track above the jeep stand. Expect to pay around Rs 1000 per day, including food, tents, guides and porters. The trekking season lasts from May to late October.

Possible destinations include Keylong and Udaipur in Lahaul, Baijnath and Dharamsala in the Kangra Valley, and the sacred lake at Manimahesh, a three-day, 35km hike above Bharmour. In August/September, pilgrims take a freezing dip in Manimahesh Lake as part of the Manimahesh Yatra (p283) in honour of Lord Shiva.

SLEEPING & EATING

Chamunda Guest House (☎ 225056; r with shared/private bathroom Rs 100/150) On the lower road through Bharmour, past the PWD Rest House, this lemon-yellow village house has a range of simple, cement-floored rooms with bucket hot water. The owners are friendly, but limited English is spoken.

Soma Sapan Guesthouse (☎ 225337; r from Rs 300) On the track running away from the temples behind the jeep stand, this small guesthouse has a range of decent rooms, soothed by the sound of a rushing stream. Call ahead to check it's open before walking up here.

Chaurasi Hotel & Restaurant (☎ 225615; r Rs 300-500; dishes Rs 35-80) Set to reopen by the time you read this, after a big refurb, this tall wood-and-brick hotel on the temple road has generous-sized rooms with soaring views over the valley. The restaurant here is probably Bharmour's best.

As well as hotel restaurants, there are several dhabas on the path to the Chaurasi temples.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Buses leave every few hours for the thrilling trip to Chamba (Rs 49, 3½ hours), but expect delays due to landslides. Taxis charge Rs 800/1000 one way/return.

LAHAUL & SPITI

The largest district in Himachal Pradesh, Lahaul and Spiti is also one of the most sparsely populated regions on earth. This rugged network of interlocking river valleys lies in the rain shadow of the Himalaya – 12,000 sq km of snow-topped mountains and high-altitude desert, punctuated by tiny patches of greenery and villages of whitewashed mud-brick houses clinging to the sides of rivers and meltwater streams.

As in Zanskar and Ladakh, Buddhism is the dominant religion, though there are small pockets of Hinduism in Lahaul, where many temples are sacred to Buddhist and Hindu deities. According to legend, some monasteries in Lahaul were founded personally by Padmasambhava, the Indian monk who converted Tibet to Buddhism in the 8th century AD.

Manali is the main gateway to Lahaul and Spiti. A seasonal highway runs north over the Rohtang La (3978m) to Keylong, the capital of Lahaul, continuing to Ladakh over the mighty Baralacha La (4950m) and Tanglang La (5328m). Side roads branch west to the little-visited Pattan Valley and east to Spiti over the 4551m Kunzum La. Growing numbers of travellers are visiting Lahaul and Spiti as part of the Great Himalayan Circuit from Kashmir to Kinnaur (p33).

Snow closes all the mountain passes in winter. The Rohtang La, Baralacha La and Tanglang La are normally open from June to late October, while the Kunzum La to Spiti is accessible from July to October. Exact dates depend on snow conditions at the passes. At other times, the only way into the area is the rugged Hindustan–Tibet Hwy from Rekong Peo in Kinnaur. Whichever way you come, the rapid climbs in altitude bring a risk of Acute Mountain Sickness (AMS; see p1188).

For more information on Lahaul and Spiti, visit the local government website at http://hplahaulspiti.gov.in.

History

Buddhism arrived in Lahaul and Spiti during the 8th century AD with the Indian missionary Padmasambhava. By the 10th century, upper Lahaul, Spiti and Zanskar had been incorporated into the vast Guge kingdom of western Tibet. The Great Translator, Ringchen Zangpo, founded a series of centres of Buddhist learning along the Spiti Valley, including Tabo, one of the most remarkable Buddhist monasteries in North India.

After the kings of Ladakh were defeated by Mongol-Tibetan armies in the 18th century, the region was divided up by the surrounding powers. Lower Lahaul fell to the rajas of Chamba, Upper Lahaul came under the sway of the rajas of Kullu and geographically isolated Spiti became part of Ladakh.

In 1847 Ladakh and Spiti were conquered by the Dogra Rajas of Kashmir, and Kullu and Lahaul came under British administration as a subdivision of the kingdom of Kangra; Spiti was added two years later. Despite the change of regimes, the region maintained strong links with Tibet right up until the Chinese occupation in 1949.

Since then, there has been a major resurgence in the cultural and religious life of Spiti, aided by the work of the Tibetan government in exile in Dharamsala. The gompas of Lahaul and Spiti are being restored and money from tourism and hydroelectricity is improving living conditions for the farming communities who get snowed in here each winter.

Climate

Lahaul and Spiti have a markedly different climate to the rest of Himachal Pradesh. The limited rainfall and high altitude – mostly above 3000m – ensures desperately cold conditions in winter. Even in summer, temperatures rarely rise above 15°C, and winter temperatures can plummet below -30°C!

Realistically, the region is only open to travellers when the mountain passes are open, from early June/July to late October. Whenever you travel, bring plenty of clothing for cold weather. See the boxed text, p367, for more tips on high-altitude travel.

LAHAUL

Separated from the Kullu Valley by the 4551m Kunzum La, Lahaul is greener and more developed than Ladakh and Spiti, but most travellers whistle straight through on the way to Manali or Leh, missing most of what Lahaul has to offer. The capital, Keylong, is an easy stop on the popular Leh–Manali bus trip and you can detour to a number of mountain villages and medieval monasteries that are blissfully untouched by mass tourism.

Government buses between Manali and Leh run from mid-July to mid-September and private buses and share jeeps run till mid-October. Services as far as Keylong continue until the Rohtang La closes in November, and buses east to Kaza stop when the Kunzum La closes in October. Check the status of the passes before visiting late in the season – once the snows arrive, you might be stuck for the winter.

Manali to Keylong

From Manali the road to Leh strikes north along the Beas River Valley and climbs slowly through pine forests to the bare rocky slopes below Rohtang La (3978m). The name literally translates as 'pile of dead bodies' – a reference to the hundreds of travellers who have frozen to death here over the centuries. Many Indian tourists make a day trip to Rohtang La from Manali for their first taste of snow, stopping at the dhabas in Mirhi to warm up with hot chai and aloo paratha (potato flat-bread).

On the far side of the pass, the road plunges down into the green Lahaul Valley, a soothing landscape of rocky buttresses and green alpine meadows. About 66km northwest of Manali, the tiny hamlet of Gramphu marks the turn-off to Spiti. There is only one building in Gramphu – a rustic stone dhaba beside a stream where you'll have to wait for the bus if you're heading to Kaza from Keylong.

Khoksar, 5km northwest of Gramphu, has several dhabas and a police checkpoint where foreigners must show passports. The road passes through a sheer-sided valley, hemmed in by rock walls and the white tips of mountain glaciers. There's a spectacular hanging waterfall opposite the tiny village of Sissu, and you may be able to stay at the PWD Rest House (r Rs 350).

About 18km before Keylong, Gondla is famous for its eight-storey tower fort, built from alternating layers of stone and timber. Once the home of the local thakur (king), the fort is no longer occupied, but it's still an impressive sight. Try to visit during the lively Gondla Fair in July. From Gondla, you can hike 4km to the village of Tupchiling to visit historic Guru Ghantal Gompa, allegedly founded by Padmasambhava. Although crumbling, the gompa contains ancient murals and wooden statues of bodhisattvas (Buddhist saints). Gondla has a basic hotel and a PWD Rest House (r Rs 350) that may accept travellers.

INNER LINE PERMITS

To travel between Tabo in Spiti and Rekong Peo in Kinnaur, travellers need an inner line permit. This is easily arranged in Kaza – free permits are issued in around two hours by the Assistant District Commissioner's Office (☎ 222002; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat, closed 2nd Sat each month) in New Kaza – look for the grey-roofed building behind the hospital. There are several forms to fill out and you need two passport photos and photocopies of the identity and visa pages from your passport – both can be arranged in the old village bazaar. Officially, travellers should be in a group of four, but this office routinely issues permits for individual travellers as well as groups. Permits can also be obtained in Rekong Peo and Shimla.

Pattan Valley

About 8km south of Keylong at Tandi, a side road branches northwest along the Pattan Valley towards Udaipur. Overlooking the Chenab River, it's a peaceful spot with a few basic hotels and the plain-looking Markula Devi Temple, which hides fabulous wooden panels depicting scenes from the Mahabharata and Ramayana, carved in the 12th century.

From Udaipur, you can backtrack 9km along the valley to the squat stone temple at Triloknath, founded as a Shiva temple but converted into a Buddhist shrine by the sage Padmasambhava. Hindus worship the idol inside as Shiva while Buddhists venerate it as Avalokitesvara. Triloknath is a major pilgrimage site for both religions during the Pauri Festival (p283) in August.

Buses run here daily from Keylong (Rs 40, two hours) and Manali (Rs 121, nine hours).

Keylong

☎ 01900 / elev 3350m

The capital of Lahaul sprawls along one side of the green Bhaga Valley, spread out below the Manali–Leh highway. It's a friendly little town that has experienced a major economic boom since it became the main overnight stop for buses travelling between Himachal Pradesh and Ladakh. Many travellers stop just for the night and leave early the next morning, but there are interesting walks in the surrounding hills and the pace of life is easy and unhurried.

By the time you read this, the bus stand should have moved from the highway to the shiny new bus stand down in the valley, where you'll find most of the hotels. At the south end of town is the moderately interesting Lahaul & Spiti Tribal Museum (admission fee to be decided; 10am-5pm Tue-Sun), with traditional costumes, old dance masks and treasures from local gompas.

Keylong celebrates the annual Lahaul Festival (p283) in July with a big, bustling market and various cultural activities.

SLEEPING & EATING

All the following places offer rooms with bathrooms and geysers. Ask about discounts outside of the main tourist season (July to September).

Nalwa Paying Guest (☎ 222612; dm Rs 50, r from Rs 300) Above some shops on the highway, this place offers decent rooms with geysers; some rooms have valley views.

Hotel Dupchen (☎ 222205; s/d Rs 200/250) A popular local restaurant, serving Indian and Tibetan staples, with a few spic-and-span rooms upstairs.

Hotel Tashi Deleg (☎ 222343; r Rs 300/1500) Next to the main bazaar, this smart-looking place has a cosy restaurant serving cold beers and good Indian-Chinese food. The luxury rooms are slightly overpriced, but cheaper rooms are just right and many have good valley views. If the manager is around, you can change US dollars at reception.

Hotel Snowland (☎ 222219; r Rs 550-1050) Snowland benefits from bright colours and a lawn offering gorgeous views across to Khardong. All rooms are cheerfully chintzy and the deluxe rooms sleep three.

HPTDC Hotel Chander Bhaga (☎ 222393; dm Rs 150, r Rs 1000-1600; Jun-Oct) North of Keylong on the highway, this huge hotel is styled after an alpine ski chalet. Although overpriced, rooms are spacious and well appointed and the dorm is a bargain.

Aside from the hotel restaurants, there are plenty of dhabas on the highway and along the bazaar.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Keylong is the official overnight stop for government buses travelling between Manali and, Leh so there are regular services in both directions when the mountain passes are open – typically June to October. However, bookings are only taken in Manali, so it can be hard to find a seat on to Ladakh. If you find yourself in this predicament, the only option may be backtracking all the way to Manali.

Assuming you get a seat, buses to Leh (Rs 440) leave at 5am, arriving at around 8pm the same evening. There around five daily buses to Manali (Rs 87, six hours). For Kaza take the 5.30am bus and change at Gramphu (Rs 38, two hours); the bus to Kaza (Rs 102, eight hours) pulls in around 8.30am.

For the Pattan Valley, there are two daily buses to Udaipur (Rs 40, two hours). Infrequent local buses run south to Gondla (Rs 18, 40 minutes) and north to Jispa (Rs 17, 40 minutes) and Darcha (Rs 22, one hour).

Around Keylong

SHASHUR GOMPA

About 3km above Keylong is Shashur Gompa, dedicated to the Zanskari lama Deva Gyatsho. The original 16th-century gompa is now enshrined inside a modern gompa with fine views over the valley. Frenetic masked chaam dances are held here every June or July (depending on the Tibetan calendar) – see the boxed text, p372. The path to the gompa cuts uphill behind the old bus stand – stick to the rough dirt path until you see the white chortens visible on the ridge.

KHARDONG GOMPA

Propped up on stilts on the far side of the valley, the 900-year-old gompa at Khardong is a steep two-hour walk from Keylong. Maintained by an order of Drukpa Kagyud monks and nuns, the monastery enshrines a mighty prayer wheel said to contain a million strips of paper bearing the mantra 'om mani padme hum' (hail to the jewel in the lotus). The surrounding scenery is magnificent and there are excellent frescoes, but you'll have to track down a monk or nun to open the doors. To get to the monastery, head through the bazaar, follow the stepped path down to the hospital and take the bridge over the Bhaga River, from where it's a 4km slog uphill.

TAYUL GOMPA

Perched on the side of the valley above the village of Satingri, the ancient Tayul Gompa has more elegant mural work and a 4m-high statue of Padmasambhava, flanked by his two manifestations, Sighmukha and Vijravarashi. Tayul is about 6km from Keylong, reached by a fairly long day-hike.

JISPA

About 20km north of Keylong, the pretty village of Jispa is a popular overnight stop for mountain bikers and motorcyclists. There's a small and interesting folk museum (entry Rs 25; 9am-6pm) on the main road and a 2km walk south is the 16th-century Ghemur Gompa, where a famous masked 'devil dance' is held in July.

For accommodation, there's the extremely inviting Hotel Ibex Jispa (☎ 01900-233203; s/d Rs 1400/1800) on the main road.

Keylong to Ladakh

It's a long, bone-shaking ride from Keylong to Ladakh and the high passes are bitterly cold, even in summer, but the scenery is some of the most dramatic on earth. Wear your warmest clothes and make the most of the occasional dhaba stops.

Heading north from Keylong, the village of Darcha is the last permanent settlement before Rumtse in Ladakh and the end point of the seven-day trek from Padum in Zanskar (see p391). Passports are checked here and there are dhabas offering basic food.

There's another army checkpost at Patseo, before the road climbs over the breathless 4950m Baralacha La. On the far side, the road descends to the improbably named Bharatphur City with its cluster of parachute-tent dhabas. From Bharatphur, it's a long, dusty drive to the next island of civilisation, Sarchu, an occasional overnight stop for private buses between Leh and Manali. It's a bleak and bitterly cold spot, but the parachute-tent dhabas provide hot chai and camping beds to truckers and the handful of cyclists and motorcyclists who pass this way.

The scenery along the final run to Ladakh is some of the most spectacular along the route. Above Sarchu, the road winds through a series of dramatic switchbacks known as the Gata Loops as it climbs to an even higher pass, the 5060m Lachlung La. On the far side, the scenery is truly something from the Silk Road – endless ridges of sand and scree, divided by bizarrely eroded buttresses.

There's another bleak checkpoint and parachute-tent camp at Pang before the road struggles up the desperate slope of the 5328m Taglang La, the second-highest motorable pass in the world (the highest is the 5602m Khardung La, north of Leh). From here, buses speed downhill into the Indus Valley. You'll get your first taste of Ladakhi architecture in the form of whitewashed chortens in the villages of Rumtse, Lato and Miru. There's one more police checkpost at Upshi before the road meets the wide, paved highway running north to Leh. Villages between Upshi and Leh are covered on p380.

SPITI

Divided from the fertile Lahaul Valley by the 4551m Kunzum La, the Spiti Valley is another piece of Tibet transported to India. Buddhist monasteries and tiny villages of whitewashed houses are dotted here and there along the arid valley floor, dwarfed by the sheer scale of the surrounding landscape. Local farmers eke out a living on the small strip of greenery that hugs the banks of the Spiti River.

In many ways Spiti is even more rugged and remote than Ladakh, but buses run over the Kunzum La from Manali from July to October, and the Hindustan–Tibet Hwy to Tabo is theoretically open all year. A steady stream of motorcyclists and mountain bikers pit their machines against some of the most challenging roads in India. Most people start in Manali or Keylong and exit the valley at Rekong Peo in Kinnaur, but a few travellers go against the flow and travel west to Keylong or Ladakh.

In either direction, an inner line permit is required for the stretch from Tabo to Rekong Peo – see the boxed text, p339.

Gramphu to Kaza

From the dhaba at Gramphu, the road to Spiti follows the gorge of the Chandra River, which was carved by glaciers as the Himalaya thrust upwards 50 million years ago. There are few permanent settlements, but buses stop for chai at Chattru, a small cluster of dhabas around the first bridge over the Chandra.

There's second bridge and a single stone-hut dhaba at Battal, where a rough track runs 14km north to lovely Chandratal (Moon Lake), a tranquil glacial pool set amongst snow peaks at 4270m. From June to September, you can stay in comfortable tents on the lakeshore at the Dewachen EcoCamp (☎ book through Ecosphere in Kaza 222724; per person Rs 500). This is also the starting point for treks to nearby Bara Shigri (Big Glacier), one of the longest glaciers in the Himalaya, but the route is treacherous and it's best to travel with an experienced guide.

From Battal, the road leaves the river and creeps up to Kunzum La (4551m), the watershed between the Spiti and Lahaul Valleys. Buses perform a respectful circuit of the stupas at the top before continuing down into the Spiti Valley. An alternative 10.5km trail to Chandratal starts at the pass, continuing to Baralacha La on the Manali–Leh road in three strenuous days.

The first village of any size is Losar, a cluster of concrete and mud-brick houses in scrubby vegetation on the valley floor. Buses stop for lunch at the dhabas on the highway and there's a passport check. You should have time for the ethnological displays at the rural museum (entry Rs 25, 9am-6pm) before the bus heads on to Gramphu or Kaza. You can break the journey here; Samsong Café & Guesthouse (r with shared/private bathroom Rs 200/300) has basic rooms and hot meals.

The final stretch to Kaza follows the edge of the Spiti River, passing the large Yangchen Choling nunnery at Pangmo, which provides an education for girls from around the valley. A few kilometres further along is the Sherab Choling monastery school at Morang. Experienced teachers may be able to arrange volunteer teaching placements at these schools through the US-based Jamyang Foundation (www.jamyang.org).

At Rangrik, just before the bridge across the river to Kaza, there's a Buddhist temple with a 5m-high sitting Buddha statue.

Kaza

☎ 01906 / elev 3640m

Sprawling over the eroded flood plain of the Spiti River, Kaza is the administrative and transport hub of Spiti subdistrict. The setting is wonderfully rugged – jagged mountains rise on either side and the river coils across the flat valley floor like a python with indigestion. The original, whitewashed village is separated from the modern administrative compound at New Kaza by a stream. The Dalai Lama is set to open the new Sakya Gompa in New Kaza in 2008.

Most people stay at least one night to arrange the inner line permit for travel beyond Tabo. Kaza is also the starting point for trips to Ki Gompa and Kibber and treks into the mountains. The well-organised bus and jeep stand is below the bazaar in the old village.

In August, villagers from across Spiti descend on Kaza for the Ladarcha Fair (p283). All sorts of goods are bought and sold and traders wear their finest clothes.

INFORMATION

There is nowhere to change money, but you can check emails at a small net café (per hr Rs 80; 9.30am-7pm) in the old bazaar. Inner line permits for travel to Kinnaur are easy to arrange – see the boxed text, p339.

Ecosphere (☎ 222724; www.spitiecosphere.com) Arranges village homestays, tours and accommodation at the Dewachen EcoCamp at Chandratal.

Spiti Holiday Adventures (☎ 222711) Organises all-inclusive mountain trips from Rs 2000 per person per day.

SLEEPING & EATING

Kaza is home to half-a-dozen guesthouses and hotels.

Hill View Guest House (☎ 222331; r Rs 150-200) Overlooking the army base on the New Kaza side of the stream, this old-school guesthouse has cosy rooms with thick rugs on the floor and hot showers in the communal bathrooms.

Mahabudha Guest House (☎ 222232; r with shared bathroom Rs 200-250) Just below the main road at the top of the old village, this bright and welcoming village home has big rooms with thick blankets. The shared bathroom has a geyser, meals are served in the traditional kitchen and there's an amchi clinic on site.

Snow Lion Hotel (☎ 222525; r Rs 500-600) Overlooking the stream at the top of the old village, this modern hotel has a decent restaurant and rooms on two floors with balconies overlooking the stream.

HPTDC Tourist Lodge (☎ 222566; tents Rs 350, r Rs 500) A slightly institutional HPTDC property with a choice of plain but comfortable hotel rooms, or permanent tents with shared facilities in the grounds.

Banjara Kunphen Retreat (☎ 222236; www.banjaracamps.com; r with meals per person Rs 1500; May-Oct) Spread over two modern buildings in New Kaza, this place appeals to older travellers on group tours. Rooms are tastefully furnished and upstairs balconies have great views over the town and valley.

As well as the hotel restaurants, there are some traveller-friendly restaurants in the old bazaar.

Mahabudha Restaurant (dishes Rs 25-95) This traveller-oriented place serves a huge range of dishes from Europe, Asia and the subcontinent.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Bus

The bus station is at the bottom of the new town, just off the main road. There are buses to Manali (Rs 152, 10 hours) at 4.30am and 7am. For Keylong, change at Gramphu (Rs 102, eight hours). A bus leaves for Rekong Peo (Rs 165, 12 hours) at 9am, passing through Sichling (for Dhankar; Rs 20, one hour) and Tabo (Rs 35, two hours). There's a second Tabo bus at 2pm.

There's a single daily bus to Ki (Rs 10, 30 minutes) and Kibber (Rs 15, 40 minutes) at 5pm, returning at 7.30pm. This will give you time to visit Ki while the bus goes on to Kibber. To visit both places in one day, walk or hire a taxi.

For the Pin Valley, buses to Mud (Rs 40, two hours) leave at 4.30pm.

Taxi

The local taxi union is based at the bus stand, or you can make arrangements at your hotel. You'll pay Rs 1000 to Tabo and Rs 4000 to Rs 4500 to Keylong, Manali or Rekong Peo. Day trips include Ki and Kibber (Rs 600) and Dhankar and the Pin Valley (Rs 1500).

Ki

About 12km back down the valley from Kaza, the tiny village of Ki is dominated by the whitewashed buildings of Ki Gompa (admission by donation; 7am-7pm). Set atop a 4116m-high hillock, this is the largest gompa in Spiti and the views from the top are extremely photogenic. An atmospheric puja (prayer ceremony) is held in the new prayer hall every morning at around 7am, but the original medieval prayer room is closed to visitors (peek through the door at the old statues and dance masks). The masks are put to use every June/July for the annual chaam festival (p283) and again in February/March for Losar (p283).

The monks offer some basic but comfortable rooms (☎ 01906-262201; dm with shared bathroom & cold water Rs 150); the price includes meals.

Kibber

☎ 01906

About 8km above Ki, this dusty village was once a stop on the overland salt trade. At 4205m, Kibber once claimed to be the highest village in the world, but now it only claims to be the highest village in the world with a motorable road and electricity. The surrounding landscape is satisfyingly desolate and you can walk to other, even remoter villages along the edge of the gorge. Kibber used to be the setting for the historic Ladarcha trade fair in July, but this was recently shifted to Kaza.

Passing tour groups have created a fair amount of child begging in the village. Resist the urge to hand out sweets, pens and cash; if you want to help, donate to the village school instead.

SLEEPING & EATING

There are several village guesthouses offering rooms and meals. Bucket hot water costs Rs 10 to Rs 15.

Dikitling Guesthouse (☎ 262223; r with shared bathroom Rs 100) A big blue house on the main village road, offering spartan but tidy rooms with a terrace and balcony that catches the morning sunshine.

Rainbow Guest House (☎ 226309; r with shared bathroom Rs 150) Close to the village school, Rainbow offers plain rooms and hearty village meals.

Serkong Guesthouse (☎ 226222; r Rs 150-200) On the far side of the village, this place gets the sun earlier than the competition. Rooms are neat and clean, and the pleasingly bohemian front terrace has easy chairs and old photos of Spiti.

Norling Guest House (☎ 226242; dm Rs 50, d with bathroom Rs 200-300), Tidy and well cared for, this friendly place has the best rooms and the best restaurant in town. Proper furniture and little murals make guests feel at home.

Dhankar

East of Kaza, the snaking Spiti River merges with the Pin River, creating a single braid of blue in the midst of dust-coloured badlands. Perched high above the confluence is the tiny village of Dhankar, the former capital of the Nono kings of Spiti.

The 1200-year-old Dhankar Gompa (admission Rs 25) is wedged between rocky spurs at the top of the village, with views that inspire euphoria. The lower monastery building has a silver statue of Vajradhara (the Diamond Being) and there's a second prayer hall on the hilltop, with exquisite medieval murals of Sakyamuni, Tsongkhapa and Lama Chodrag.

Just downhill is a small museum (entry Rs 25) with costumes, instruments, old saddles and Buddhist devotional objects. In November, Dhankar monks celebrate the Guktor Festival (p283) with energetic masked dances.

Above the gompa are the ruins of the mud-brick fort that sheltered the entire population of the Nono kingdom during times of war, and an hour's climb uphill is the scenic lake of Dhankar Tso, offering epic views towards the twin peaks of Mane Rang (6593m).

Dhankar is a steep 10km walk or drive from the village of Sichling on the Kaza–Tabo highway. You can stay at the monastery in simple monks' rooms (dm with shared bathroom Rs 100, r with bathroom Rs 300-400) or there's the modest Dolma Guesthouse (r with shared bathroom Rs 150) in Sichling.

Buses from Kaza to Tabo pass through Sichling (Rs 20, one hour) or you can do a day trip by taxi from Kaza for Rs 800.

Pin Valley National Park

Running south from the Spiti Valley, the wind-scoured Pin Valley National Park (1875 sq km) is famous as the 'land of ibex and snow leopards', though sightings of either species are rare. From July to October, a popular eight-day trek runs from here over the 5319m Pin-Parvati Pass to the Parvati Valley near Kullu (p302).

The road to the Pin Valley branches off the Kaza–Tabo highway about 10km before Sichling, climbing through winter meadows to the cluster of whitewashed farmhouses at Gulling. About 2km above Gulling at Kungri, the 600-year-old Ugyen Sanag Choling Gompa has old prayer rooms and a huge new monastery with vivid murals of protector deities, including the many-eyed archer Rahula and one-eyed Ekajati, the Guardian of Mantras. There's also a small museum (Rs 25; 10am-6pm) with ethnological and religious displays.

You can stay at the monastery in plain, clean rooms (r with shared bathroom Rs 250) or there's the tiny Hotel Himalaya (☎ 01906-242314; r with shared bathroom Rs 150) in Gulling.

Southwest of Gulling, Sagnam marks the turn-off to the village of Mud, trailhead for the trek over the Pin-Parvati Pass. The wind moans between the whitewashed houses and there are some uplifting short walks around the valley. For accommodation, try the village-style Snow Leopard Guesthouse (r with shared bathroom from Rs 150) by the main road, or the modern PWD Resthouse (r with shared bathroom Rs 150-300), below the hospital.

Buses run daily from Kaza to Mud (Rs 40, two hours), stopping in Gulling (Rs 25, 1¼ hours) and Sagnam (Rs 30, 1½ hours). Taxis in Kaza charge Rs 700 to Sagnam and Rs 1100 to Mud.

Tabo

☎ 01906

About 47km east of Kaza, Tabo is the only other town in the Spiti Valley. The setting, hemmed in by scree slopes, is wind-blown and dramatic, and the ridge above town is riddled with caves used as meditation cells by local lamas. The main reason to visit is Tabo Gompa (admission by donation), a World Heritage site preserving some of the finest Indo-Tibetan art in the world – see the boxed text, opposite.

You may be able to check your email and make calls at the Tabo Cyber Café (per hr Rs 60; 7am-9pm) near the bus stand.

SLEEPING

Guesthouses in Tabo are clustered around the gompa, or strung out along the main road.

Millennium Monastery Guesthouse (☎ 223315; dm Rs 70, r with shared/private bathroom from Rs 150/300; ⊠) Run by the monastery, this popular place has decent rooms around a central courtyard. Rooms have piped hot water for washing, but guests are asked to refrain from smoking, drinking alcohol and other activities that might offend monastic sensibilities.

Maitreya Guesthouse (☎ 223329; s/d with shared bathroom Rs 200/450) On the north side of the gompa, this pleasant and well-run guesthouse is livened up by colourful bedding and carpets and a sunny front terrace.

HIMACHAL PRADESH

Trojan Guesthouse (☎ 223384; r Rs 350-550) Run by a group of Spitian Rastafarians – yes, they do exist! – the Trojan has very welcoming carpeted rooms and plenty of reggae vibe. It's on the highway before the turn-off to the bus stand.

Banjara Tabo Retreat (☎ 233381; www.banjaracamps.com; r with meals per person Rs 1500; May-Oct) Also on the highway, this appealing midrange place rents its tasteful rooms to passing travellers when it isn't booked out by groups.

EATING

Half-a-dozen simple restaurants serve Tibetan, Indian and Chinese fare. Third Eye Café at the Maitreya Guesthouse and the reggae-themed Zion Café are reliable options. For an upmarket meal and cold beer, try the restaurant at the Banjara Tabo Retreat.

Café Kunzum Top (dishes from Rs 25) Run by the energetic and widely travelled Sonam, this cheerful Spitian café serves tasty momos, espresso coffee and compote made with local apples. Beers are available and Sonam can arrange chang (rice beer) on request.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Now that the road to Rekong Peo has been repaired, onward travel from Tabo is easy. There are morning and afternoon buses to Kaza (Rs 35, two hours), and buses leave for Rekong Peo (Rs 130, 10 hours) at 11am and for Manali (Rs 187, 15 hours) at 5am. Taxis charge Rs 1000 to Kaza and Rs 3500 to Rekong Peo.

Tabo to Rekong Peo

Theoretically, the highway road from Tabo to Rekong Peo in Kinnaur is open all year, providing the only winter access to the Spiti Valley. However, the highway has been washed away repeatedly by the Sutlej River. A number of hydroelectric projects are helping to tame the destructive power of the river, but it's worth checking the road is intact before heading east of Tabo. You will need to show your passport and inner line permit at Sumdo and Jangi. Some of the following places are technically in Kinnaur, but they are covered here since they form part of the Spiti circuit.

From Tabo, the road follows the narrowing Spiti Valley, before soaring over the ridge into the valley of the Sutlej River. This could well be the most dangerous and hair-raising road in India – even die-hard travellers have been known to finger their rosaries as the bus skids around hairpin bends with millimetres to spare. Nevertheless, the views of the Spiti River flashing 2000m below are mesmerising.

Overnight stops used to be forbidden, but travellers now have seven days to complete the trip. Sumdo has a permit checkpost and the road starts its ascent into the hills at Chango, which has several Buddhist temples.

TABO GOMPA

The choskhor (sacred compound) at Tabo was founded in AD 996 by the Great Translator, Ringchen Zangpo, who hired the best Buddhist mural painters from Kashmir to decorate the walls. Visitors must arrange a time to view the murals with the monks at the modern monastery new door.

The compound is centred on the huge gTsug Lha-Khang (Assembly Hall), a dark and atmospheric chamber ringed by exquisite murals and suspended life-sized stucco statues of 33 bodhisattvas. Together with the four-sided effigy of Vairocana at the rear of the chamber, the statues create a three-dimensional mandala.

To the left of the main temple is the Large Brom-Ston Lha-Khang, with more Kashmiri-style murals, reached through an intricately carved wooden doorway. Left again is the gSer-Khang (Golden Temple), with a large seated Buddha and detailed paintings of celestial deities on the roof and walls. Behind the gSer-Khang is the dKyil-hKhar-Khang (Mystic Mandala Temple) containing a giant frieze of Vairocana surrounded by giant mandalas.

To the right of the gTsug Lha-Khang are the smaller Byams-pa Chenpo Lha-Khang, containing a 6m-high Maitreya statue and murals of the Tashi-Chunpo Temple and Potala Palace in Tibet, and the Brom-Ston Lha-Khang, with murals of Sakyamuni and his disciples.

The modern gompa outside the compound has a well-attended morning puja (prayer ceremony) at 6.30am, and the monastery guesthouse contains a Buddhist library (admission free; 9.45-11.45am & 2-4pm Jun-Sep) and a small religious museum (admission Rs 10; 9am-noon & 2-5pm).

The first settlement with accommodation is Nako, a pretty village of white mud-brick houses about 1km off the main road. The landscape here is vaguely Central Asian and the village is centred on a small lake, surrounded by the 11th-century buildings of Nako Gompa, containing some fine Tabo-style murals and sculptures.

There are several simple guesthouses offering rooms with shared bathroom for around Rs 200, or the posher Reo Purgil Hotel (r Rs 400). Depending on the permit situation, you may be able to trek to the ancient gompas at Tashigang and Somang.

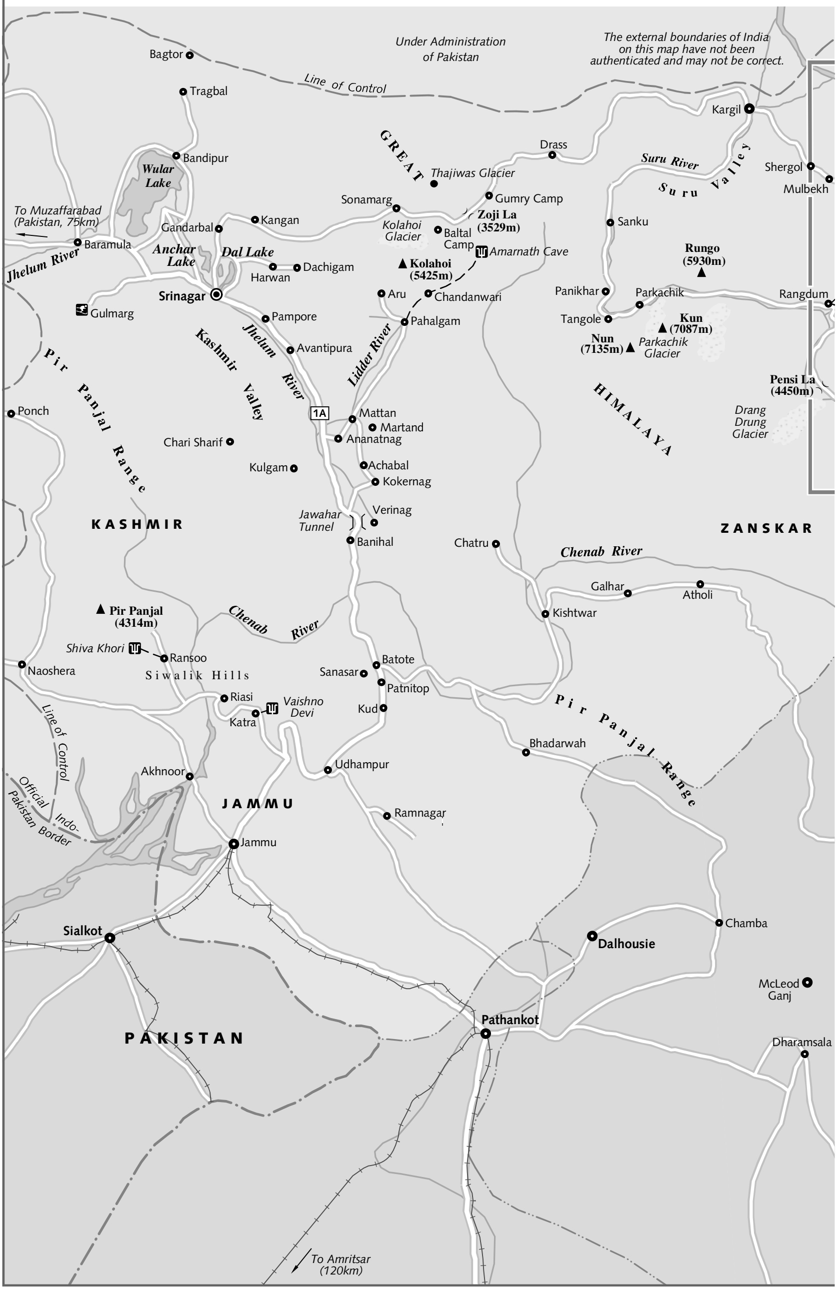
The final stage of the journey passes through greener country in the narrow gorge of the Sutlej River. The village of Puh marks the official crossing into Kinnaur and there are two colourful gompas belonging to the Drukpa sect. You may be able to stay at the Monastic Retreat Guesthouse (r Rs 350).

There are more monasteries and temples at Khanum, near Spillo, founded by Ringchen Zangpo in the 10th century. Jangi marks the end of the permit zone and the start point of the parikrama (ceremonial circumnavigation) around Kinner Kailash (6050m). The village has a number of Kinnauri-style temples and you can continue 14km uphill to visit the Buddhist monastery at Lippa. An inner line permit is required, even if you just do a day trip here from Rekong Peo.

Jammu & Kashmir

The mountain retreat of Mughals and Buddhist lamas; the Alps of India; Jehangir's Valley of Paradise. All these terms have been used to describe Kashmir, one of India's wildest and most controversial tourist destinations. After 20 years of isolation, travellers are slowly drifting back to this legendary backwater, returning to Srinagar's famous houseboats and walking the trekking routes north of Pahalgam. Kashmir boasts some of the highest and most rugged landscapes on earth in mountainous Ladakh, and one of the most sublime in serene Dal Lake.

Many people panic at the idea of travelling to Kashmir, so it's important to dispel some myths. The state of Jammu and Kashmir is actually three separate regions: Hindu Jammu, Buddhist Ladakh and the Muslim Kashmir Valley. Ladakh to the northeast is almost untouched by the Kashmiri conflict, while Jammu and the Kashmir Valley are safer than they have been for decades. However, the Kashmiri insurgency is ongoing and it is essential to check the security situation before travelling to either Jammu or the area around Srinagar. Remember that the dispute over Kashmir has been the cause of three wars between India and Pakistan.



If Jammu and Srinagar seem like too much of a gamble, don't overlook Ladakh and Zanskar. These rugged Buddhist regions are a little slice of Tibet, transplanted to India and wedged in by roaring rivers and snow-capped mountains. A series of mountain passes, the highest in the world, connect Ladakh, Zanskar, Kashmir, Lahaul, Spiti and Manali, opening up a fabulous circuit from Srinagar all the way to Kinnaur in Himachal Pradesh.

HIGHLIGHTS

- Climb stupas (domed edifices housing Buddhist or Jainan relics), murmur mantras, munch momos (Tibetan dumplings) and explore the dusty backstreets of Leh (p367), Ladakh's glorious medieval capital
- Marvel at murals and mix with meditative monks at the gompas (monasteries) and palaces of the Indus Valley (p380)
- Experience the giddy heights of the Himalaya on magnificent mountain treks through Ladakh (p379) and Zanskar (p391)
- Pay your respects at ancient mosques and relive the Raj on a Dal Lake houseboat in Srinagar (p357)
- Ski some of India's finest powder on the ski slopes of Gulmarg (p360) or hike among the pines at the mountain resort of Pahalgam (p361)

JAMMU & THE KASHMIR VALLEY

FAST FACTS

- Population: 10.1 million
- Area: 222,236 sq km
- Capital: Srinagar (summer) and Jammu (winter)
- Main languages: Kashmiri, Urdu, Ladakhi, Hindi, Purig, Balti, Dogri, Punjabi and Pahari
- When to go: Kashmir – April to October (December to March for skiing); Ladakh – May to October

Hemmed in by the Pir Panjal mountains and the western Himalaya, the Kashmir Valley straddles India and Central Asia. In both culture and appearance, this Muslim heartland is closer to Afghanistan or Iran than the neighbouring states of Punjab and Himachal Pradesh. The countryside inside the valley is flat and heavily cultivated, with low, terraced fields delineated by fruit and nut orchards and rows of pin-straight poplar trees, backing onto a wall of snow-capped mountains. Kashmiris even look different to their southern and eastern neighbours, with their green eyes and grey flowing pheran (woollen tunics).

Unless you fly, there are only two routes into the Kashmir Valley – the summer-only highway from Srinagar to Kargil and the southern highway to Jammu, exiting the valley via the 2531m-long Jawahar Tunnel. Once a vision of tranquillity, the valley has been scarred by violence ever since Indian Independence, when the majority-Muslim kingdom joined with India instead of ceding to Pakistan. However, recent peace overtures have gone some way towards quelling the violence, and both Jammu and the Kashmir Valley are safer than they have been since 1989, when the tourist industry collapsed after a series of deadly attacks on foreign tourists.

As this book went to print, Jammu and the Kashmir Valley were the safest they have been for many years. The winter capital, Jammu, is a fascinating metropolis jammed with temples and museums, while the summer capital at Srinagar is a mesmerising sprawl of ancient wooden mosques and bobbing houseboats. In the north, the hill stations of Gulmarg and Pahalgam are once again attracting trekkers and skiers, and growing numbers of travellers are using Srinagar as the western gateway to Ladakh.

However, certain caveats apply. Violence can flare up suddenly and it would be foolish to visit Kashmir without checking the political situation first; see the boxed text, p352.

History

The Hindu kingdom of Kashmir was mentioned in the Mahabharata and the valley became a major centre for Buddhist learning under the Emperor Ashoka in the 3rd century BC. Kashmiri mural artists travelled across the Himalaya, creating fabulous monastery murals in Ladakh, Lahaul and Spiti. Sufi mystics brought Islam to Kashmir in the 13th century and Hindu and Buddhist culture went into rapid decline. The Mughals consolidated their hold on the valley during the reign of Sultan Sikander (1389–1413), who ordered the destruction of most of the Hindu temples and Buddhist monasteries in the valley. Followers of Buddhism fled east towards Ladakh, but the Hindu pandits were granted protection under Akbar (1556–1605) and the Kashmiri style of painting found a new expression in the lavish interiors of Srinagar's mosques.

By the time the British arrived in India, Jammu and Kashmir was a loose affiliation of independent kingdoms, nominally under the control of the Sikh rulers of Jammu. After the British defeated the Sikhs they handed Kashmir to the Hindu Dogra dynasty, who ruled from 1846 until Independence.

Most of the current problems in Kashmir began with Partition. Although the princely state of Kashmir had a majority Muslim population, its maharaja initially refused to sign up with either India or Pakistan. After months of equivocation, an invasion by Pashtun tribesmen, backed by the new government in Pakistan, persuaded the maharaja to throw in his lot with India. Pandit Nehru, himself a Kashmiri Hindu, sent troops to secure the border, sparking the first India–Pakistan war.

By the end of the conflict, two-thirds of the state was under Indian control, including the majority-Muslim Kashmir Valley, while the remaining third was held by Pakistan. This sparsely inhabited area has been the main cause of tension between India and Pakistan ever since. In 1949, the UN established a tenuous border – known as the Line of Control – but Pakistan invaded again in 1965, triggering another protracted conflict.

Hindus and Buddhists were generally content with Indian rule, but the Muslim population grew increasingly restive. When promises of increased autonomy failed to materialise, a militant fringe turned to armed rebellion. The Indian army responded with brutal force, increasing resentment in the valley. By 1990, the state was awash with freedom fighters, some from Kashmir but rather more from Afghanistan and Pakistan, ensuring a pro-Pakistan agenda.

In fact, most Indian Kashmiris would rather be independent of both India and Pakistan. Most of the mainstream political parties, including the ruling Congress–Jammu and Kashmir People's Democratic Party coalition, are working towards autonomy or full independence for Kashmir. However, the conflict has also become a cause célèbre for Islamic radicals. The two most active insurgent groups – Lashkar-e-Toiba and Jaish-e-Mohammad – were founded by Afghan mujahideen with the aim of restoring Muslim rule over India. The claim that militants are fighting for the rights of Kashmiris is undermined by the treatment of women in militant-controlled areas. Every year, dozens of Kashmiri women are executed for perceived transgressions against Islam or mutilated as a warning to families who fail to support the insurgency.

In 1990, Kashmir was placed under direct rule from Delhi, triggering 16 years of bloody unrest. Massacres and bomb attacks by militants were matched by human rights abuses by the Indian army, including the unexplained disappearance of 4000 people. Elections in 1996 led to calls for the division of Kashmir along religious lines, but this was rejected by Delhi.

Following a series of nuclear tests by the Indian government in 1998, tensions in the region rose almost to breaking point. Pakistan responded with its own tests, then mounted an incursion across the Line of Control near Kargil, before the UN talked the two countries back from the brink.

Subsequent elections have led to increasing autonomy for Kashmir, matched by a significant reduction in levels of violence across the Line of Control. India and Pakistan were forced together by the devastating Kashmiri earthquake in October 2005 – see the box, p360. As this book went to press, the leaders of Pakistan and India had agreed in principle to abandon their claim to the other portion of Kashmir.

However, militant attacks on soldiers, civilians and domestic tourists continued throughout 2006. Travellers should be aware of the ongoing security risks in Kashmir and plan accordingly.

Climate

Jammu has a plains climate with heavy rain and humidity during the monsoon (June to August). The Kashmir Valley has a cooler mountain climate. The road from Jammu to Srinagar is usually open year-round, but smaller roads may be blocked by snow from December to March, which marks the ski season at Gulmarg.

Getting There & Around

Numerous domestic airlines fly to Srinagar and Jammu, and frequent buses and share

IS IT SAFE?

In 2000, with India and Pakistan gearing up for war, Bill Clinton described Kashmir as the most dangerous place in the world. The two nuclear neighbours have since pulled back from the brink, but violence continues to rock Kashmir on a daily basis and there were militant attacks on civilians throughout 2006, including a series of deadly grenade attacks on Indian tourists in Srinagar and Jammu.

When things are calm, Kashmir is no more dangerous than anywhere else in India, but attacks can occur without warning so it is essential to get reliable information about the security situation before you travel. Be aware that travel insurance policies may not cover you if your home government has issued specific advice against travel to Kashmir. In particular, avoid Kashmir at times of heightened political tension. Political anniversaries, public demonstrations, rallies by political parties and protests after Friday prayers are all potential flashpoints. Be wary around military installations and avoid large crowds, particularly crowds of Hindu pilgrims. Do not assume that travel is safe just because things seem calm on the surface. It only takes a firebrand speech or a controversial arrest for the conflict to flare up again.

Militants continue to stage periodic attacks on army installations, government offices, tourist attractions, markets and public buses. Even when things are peaceful, there is a huge Indian army presence at banks, offices, bus stations and religious sites. Avoid taking photos of anything military – when in doubt, ask. Expect regular bag searches when entering buildings and always carry your passport as soldiers can ask for your papers at any time.

Unfortunately for travellers, people involved in tourism are unlikely to give an unbiased view of the safety situation. Instead, look to local newspapers and news websites. Editorials are invariably skewed, but news reports of clashes and militant attacks can provide a clue to the current level of violence inside Kashmir. Useful news services:

- Daily Excelsior (www.dailyexcelsior.com)
- Greater Kashmir (www.greaterkashmir.com)
- Kashmir Herald (www.kashmirherald.com)
- Kashmir Times (www.kashmirtimes.com).

jeeps provide connections to Ladakh and the plains. Jammu is served by frequent train services, and a new line is being extended from Jammu to Srinagar and around the Kashmir valley – check locally for updates.

No permits are required to visit Jammu or the Kashmir valley, but you should heed the security advice in the boxed text, opposite. Public buses and trains have been attacked during times of political tension – chartered jeeps are usually safer.

It has been 20 years since the houseboats of Dal Lake were last filled with holidaymakers, but the Kashmiri summer capital is slowly coming back to life, to the great relief of the thousands of Kashmiris who depend on tourism for a living. The attractions of Srinagar are myriad – placid Dal Lake with its slumbering houseboats, fabulous Mughal gardens, the historic wooden mosques of the old town. However, security is still a concern. Kashmir is the safest it has been for years, but even a minor shift in the political balance can trigger a new wave of bombings and murders. With this in mind, it would be foolhardy to visit Srinagar without checking the latest security situation thoroughly – see opposite.

Orientation

Srinagar is divided into neighbourhoods by Dal Lake and the tributaries of the Jhelum River. Most of the houseboats and tourist facilities are close to the Boulevard on the south shore of Dal Lake. The Mughal gardens are strung out along the east shore, and the old town sprawls along the west shore, squeezed between the river and Hari Parbat hill.

West of the boulevard is Dal Gate and the shopping district of Lal Chowk. The tourist office and government bus stand are close to Dal Gate, while the public bus stand is further west along MA Rd. Most banks and offices are squeezed between MA Rd and Residency Rd, divided from the river by the pedestrian Bund.

Information

INTERNET ACCESS

Srinagar has just a few net cafés, but all offer fast connections for Rs 30 per hour.

BBC Online (Dr Ali Jan Shopping Plaza, MA Rd; ⏲ 9am-6pm) Close to Lambert Lane.

Skybiz Internet (Dal Gate; ⏲ 9am-8pm) Handy for Dal Gate and the boulevard.

MONEY

The HFDC ATM on Residency Rd is the most reliable place to withdraw cash.

Jammu & Kashmir Bank (MA Rd; ⏲ 10am-4pm Mon-Fri, 10am-12.30pm Sat) Changes cash and travellers cheques in most major currencies. There's a branch near the Hotel Paradise on the boulevard.

POST

Main post office (Bund, off Residency Rd; ⏲ 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) This post office is heavily fortified, and customers are searched on arrival. International parcels can only be sent from 10am to 1pm on Monday and Wednesday.

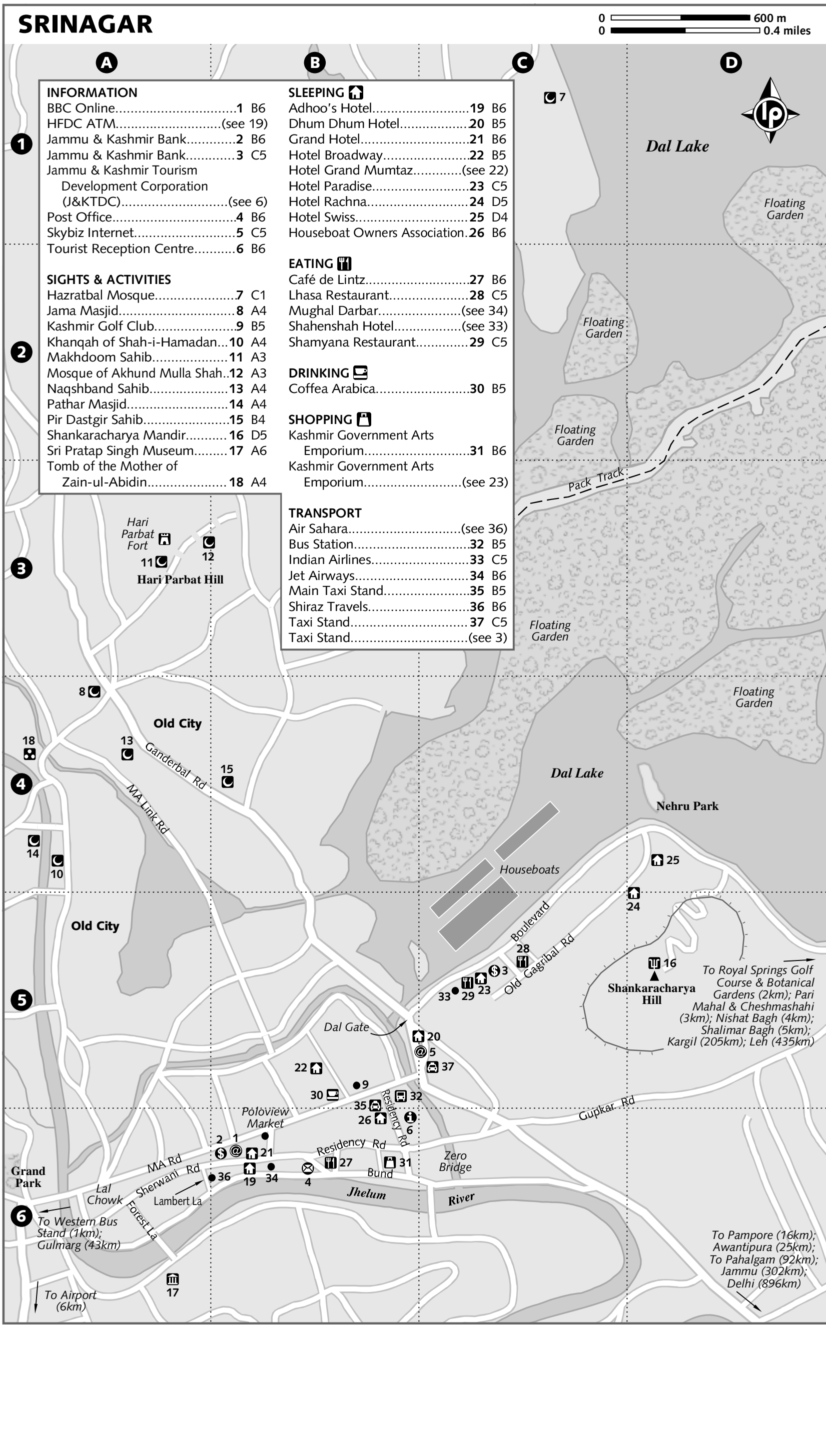
TOURIST INFORMATION

Jammu & Kasmir Tourism Development Corporation (J&KTDC; ☎ 2457927; www.jktdc.org; TRC Rd; ⏲ 10am-7pm) At the back of the Tourism Reception Centre; this office makes bookings for its properties statewide.

Tourism Reception Centre (☎ 2456291; www.jktourism.org; TRC Rd; ⏲ 10am-6pm) Helpful staff and brochures, plus a Rs 10 map of Srinagar and Kashmir.

Dangers & Annoyances

Kashmir has come a long way since the war-torn 1980s, but political violence is an ongoing problem – see the boxed text, opposite.



Touts are another hassle in Kashmir. From the moment you arrive, hangers-on will try to steer you towards a commission-paying houseboat. Be polite but firm and they will usually move on to another candidate. Travellers should also be wary of dodgy houseboat packages booked in Delhi – see the boxed text, p357.

Sights

DAL LAKE

Dal Lake is Srinagar's jewel, a vast, mirror-flat sheet of water reflecting the carved wooden balconies of the houseboats and the misty peaks of the Pir Panjal mountains. Flotillas of gaily painted shikaras (gondola-like taxi boats) skiff around the lake, transporting goods to market, children to school and travellers from houseboat to shore. If you want to photograph the lake, bring a long lens and a polarising filter to cut down the glare from the water.

Most visitors to Srinagar stay out on Dal Lake in one of the delightful houseboats left behind from the Raj, but landlubbers can hire shikaras

BUSINESS HOURS

Srinagar follows normal business hours but most shops, banks and offices shut for several hours at lunchtime on Friday for Muslim prayers. If you have urgent business, get it done on Thursday, just to be safe. Although there is no official curfew, Srinagar is eerily silent after 8pm. Don't rely on being able to find a rickshaw or shikara (gondola-like taxi boat) after hours.

for tours around the lake, visiting floating gardens and the floating flower and vegetable market. It's a colourful spectacle, but expect plenty of attention from souvenir vendors.

Shikaras can be hired from boat stations all along the lakeshore and official rates are displayed on noticeboards. A shuttle from the boulevard to your houseboat will cost Rs 10 to 15, while an hour paddling around the backwaters will cost Rs 100, either on shore or at your houseboat.

Note that detours to commission-paying souvenir shops are routine – be firm if you don't want to spend half your day being bombarded with trinkets.

PARKS & GARDENS

Srinagar is a city of gardens, many dating back to the Mughal era. Taxis charge Rs 600 for a tour visiting all the following gardens. These gardens are strung out along the road running east around Dal Lake; taxis charge Rs 600 for a tour visiting all the gardens.

The delightful Shalimar Bagh (admission Rs 5; 7am-6pm Wed-Mon) was built for Nur Jahan by her husband Jehangir. Regarded by many as the zenith of Mughal horticulture, the gardens step gracefully up the hillside, shaded by trees and cooled by artificial streams and Mughal pavilions.

Nearby, Nishat Bagh (admission Rs 5; 7am-6pm Thu-Tue) is a broad cascade of terraces lined with mighty chinar trees, starting right on the lakeshore and climbing to an elegant mock façade.

High above the lakeshore, Pari Mahal (admission free; dawn-dusk) looks more like a fort than a garden. The flower-filled terraces are divided by tall masonry arches, offering sweeping views down over the city.

Just downhill, Cheshmashahi (admission Rs 5; 7.30am-6.30pm Fri-Wed) offers more topiary, rosebushes and water features, backing onto a handsome Mughal pavilion.

Down on the lakeshore are the sprawling Botanical Gardens (admission Rs 5; 7am-6pm Sat-Thu), a favourite snoozing and promenade venue for local families.

MOSQUES & MAUSOLEUMS

The Kashmiri style of architecture is unique in the Islamic world. Kashmiri mosques are handsome, square buildings, ringed by covered balconies and topped by an elegant central spire. Minarets are rarely seen. Instead, the focus is on the inside of the mosque – walls are covered in papier-mâché or khatamband (wood panelling) and painted in vivid geometric and floral patterns.

Visitors are welcome at most of the mosques and shrines in Srinagar, but always remove your shoes before entering. As a rule, you can visit these places anytime from sunrise to sunset, except during Friday prayers; however, you should ask permission before entering and before taking any photos inside. Note that most mosques have a dedicated entrance for women (cover your head if local women do the same).

Jama Masjid

Srinagar's principal place of worship, the mighty Jama Masjid (Nowhatta) was constructed by Sultan Sikander in 1394, but the current building dates from 1672. Built in the classic Kashmiri style, the masjid has room for 33,000 devotees. The 378 columns that support the roof were each made from the trunk of a single deodar tree, and monumental brick gatehouses mark the four cardinal directions. Visitors are welcome at the discretion of the mosque attendants, but bags and cameras are prohibited.

Pir Dastgir Sahib

Dominating a busy junction in the old city, this grand Sufi shrine (Khanyar Chowk area) looks more like a civic building than a mosque. The graceful white and green exterior hides a glorious papier-mâché interior full of scrollwork, Arabic script and floral motifs, supported by papier-mâché palms. Men and women are welcome and visitors can take pictures with permission from the attendants.

Naqshband Sahib

This beautifully proportioned 17th-century shrine (Khanyar Chowk area) was built using the same technique as the tower temples and palaces of Himachal Pradesh, with alternating layers of wood and stone to dissipate the force of earthquakes. Ask the attendants if you can see the wood-panelled khatamband ceiling.

Khanqah of Shah-i-Hamadan

The first mosque ever built in Kashmir, the Khanqah of Shah-i-Hamadan (Khawaja Bazar area) was founded in 1395 by the Persian saint Mir Sayed Ali Hamadni. However, the khanqah (Muslim meeting hall) has burnt to the ground several times and the current incarnation dates to the 1730s. The frontage and interior are covered in elaborate wood carvings and papier-mâché reliefs. Visitors are welcome to peek through the door but only Muslims may enter.

Pathar Masjid

Facing Shah-i-Hamadan on the opposite side of the river, the peaceful Pathar Masjid (Zaina Kadal area) is a more conventional stone mosque built by Jehangir's wife Nur Jahan in 1623.

Hari Parbat & Makhdoom Sahib

Hindus believe that towering Hari Parbat hill was the island where Sharika (Durga) defeated the lake demon Jalodabhava, while Muslims pay homage at the vast Makhdoom Sahib shrine, dedicated to a Sufi saint who helped the spread of Islam in Kashmir. A flight of stone steps climbs up to the shrine and descends towards Dal Lake, passing the ruined mosque of Akhund Mulla Shah, built by Shah Jahan's son Dara Shikoh in 1649. The hill is topped by the imposing Hari Parbat Fort, now occupied by the Indian Army. Around the base of the hill are the remains of the old city walls, built by Akbar in the 1590s.

Tomb of the Mother of Zain-ul-Abidin

Hidden away in the bazaar streets between Zaina Kadal and the river, this unusual brick mausoleum (Zaina Kadal area) marks the final resting place of the favourite wife of Sultan Sikander, built over the ruins of a Hindu temple destroyed by Sultan Sikander. There's an interesting medieval cemetery behind the shrine.

Hazratbal Mosque

On the lakeshore north of the Old City, this modern mosque was the setting for a notorious standoff between armed militants and Indian police in the 1990s. Today it has returned to its peaceful purpose – enshrining a hair of the Prophet Mohammed.

SRI PRATAP SINGH MUSEUM

This fabulous museum (☎ 2312859; Lal Mandi area; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/50; 🕒 10am-4pm Tue-Sun) is laid out in the former summer palace of the maharaja. Highlights include miniature paintings, Mughal papier-mâché and bronzes, Hindu and Buddhist carvings, musical instruments, weaponry, traditional costumes, carpets and embroidery. There's also a large natural history section, though the stuffed animals look like they died of fright.

Photos are prohibited and you need your passport to enter. To get here, take the footbridge at the south end of Forest Lane in Lal Chowk market.

SHANKARACHARYA HILL

Rising behind the boulevard, this hill (also known as Takht-i-Sulaiman or Throne of Solomon) is topped by the tiny stone Shankaracharya Mandir, which predates the arrival of Islam in Kashmir by a thousand years. Taxis and autorickshaws charge Rs 300 for the return trip from town or you can hike up from the west end of the boulevard in about half an hour.

Activities

GOLF

Recalling Srinagar's British past, there are several upmarket golf clubs; green fees are Rs 200 and club hire is around Rs 200, plus caddy fees. Try the Kashmir Golf Club (☎ 2476677; MA Rd; 🕒 6.30am-9pm) or the Royal Springs Golf Course (☎ 2482582; Lakeshore; 🕒 7.30am-6.30pm Wed-Mon) near the Botanical Gardens.

SWIMMING

In summer, everyone plunges into the cool waters of Dal Lake. Swimming barges are set up near Nehru Park offering private changing rooms for bathers and water-skiing around the lake. Get here by shikara for Rs 40 each way.

Tours

Any of the taxi stands in Srinagar can arrange sightseeing tours. Expect to pay Rs 1000 for a full-day tour, including the Mughal Gardens, the Shankaracharya temple and the Old City.

Sleeping

Srinagar has a range of land-based accommodation options, but houseboats are the main attraction.

HOUSEBOATS

our pick The houseboats of Dal Lake offer a window back in time. These flat-bottomed pine barges are basically floating villas, with bedrooms, lounges, kitchens, staff quarters and gorgeous verandas leaning out over the water, decorated with carved walnut panels. Interiors fall somewhere between Mughal splendour and English chintz. Most houseboats are run by individual families, who provide home-cooked meals and shikara trips to shore and around the lake.

Standards of houseboats vary – some are damp and gloomy, others are palatial – and the level of luxury is not always clear from the price. Officially, houseboats are divided into five classes and rates are set by the government, but prices vary hugely and massive discounts (up to 70%) can be negotiated. At the time of research the advertised rates were as follows:

Category	Full board per person (Rs)	Lodging only (Rs)
Deluxe	2000	1000
A category	1200	600
B category	800	400
C category	700	350
D category	400	200

The Houseboat Owners Association (☎/fax 2450326; Residency Rd; ⏲ 8am-6pm) can make bookings, but there are 1400 boats to choose from. By far the best way to find a houseboat is to rent a shikara for an hour and visit several houseboats to see what is on offer. Touts will try to steer you towards a commission-paying boat, but these are rarely the best or friendliest places to stay. Under no circumstances should you book a houseboat in advance with a travel agent outside Kashmir. We receive regular letters from travellers who have been scammed for hundreds of dollars by unscrupulous operators – see the boxed text, below.

When choosing a houseboat, make sure you know exactly what you are getting. Meals, hot water and shikara lifts from boat to shore should be included in the price. If not, you may end up paying a hefty surcharge later. Look for houseboats that offer a choice of meals rather than three daily portions of dhal and rice. Most boats charge an extra Rs 300 in winter to cover the costs of heating oil. Wherever you stay, expect frequent visits from souvenir sellers in shikaras – an unavoidable irritation.

The majority of Srinagar's houseboats bob gently on Dal Lake, lined up in front of the boulevard. There are more cheap boats north of the old town on Nagin Lake. Alternatively, you can stay on one of the many boats moored on the banks of the Jhelum River – established in colonial times when the British were prohibited from owning land – which have a boardwalk directly to shore.

HOTELS

Some hotels in Srinagar are permanently occupied by the army – look for and avoid places wrapped in barbed wire. All the following hotels have TVs and private bathrooms

HOUSEBOAT HASSLES

For many visitors to Srinagar, a stay on a houseboat is a charming experience. For others it is a waking nightmare. While most houseboat owners are perfectly honest, we receive a lot of correspondence from travellers who have been held as virtual hostages on houseboats by unscrupulous operators.

Most of the complaints relate to package tours booked in Delhi. Travellers frequently arrive to find that the floating palace they booked is a creaky barge, and hidden charges amounting to hundreds of dollars have been added to their bill. Others have literally been held hostage, either through spurious claims about violence onshore or through the physical confiscation of their passports. Single women have also reported inappropriate advances from houseboat staff.

To avoid this criminal behaviour, book your houseboat after you arrive in Srinagar and inspect the boat thoroughly before you agree to stay. Make sure that the fee covers everything promised, including meals and transfers (get this in writing) and make it clear that you do not want unsolicited visits from souvenir vendors. Keep your passport and other valuables with you at all times.

It pays to let the Houseboat Owners Association (above) know where you're staying and the proposed duration of your stay. Although run by houseboat owners, they may be able to arbitrate in any subsequent disputes over fees.

with hot water. Ask about discounts when you check in.

Hotel Swiss (☎ 2472766; swisshotelkashmir@sancharnet.in; s/d Rs 450/550) Behind the boulevard on Old Gagribal Rd, this well-run hotel has friendly management and a large choice of rooms with spotless bathrooms.

Dhum Dhum Hotel (☎ 2450779; Dal Gate; r with hot shower Rs 450-850) Conveniently located for the old town and the boulevard, this is the best land-based budget accommodation. Rooms are dull but clean and there's a good dhaba (snack bar) downstairs.

Grand Hotel (☎ 2476583; Residency Rd; s/s from Rs 1000/1200;) A solid midrange choice, the Grand offers small but well-loved rooms with thick carpets. Central heating keeps out the winter chill and the restaurant serves excellent Kashmiri food.

Adhoo's Hotel (☎ 2472593; adhooshotels@yahoo.com; Residency Rd; s/d from Rs 1400/1600;) This myrtle-coloured block is hidden away in a courtyard off Residency Rd. Inside, you'll find huge, cheerfully dated rooms, some with river views.

Hotel Paradise (☎ 2450779; Blvd; r Rs 1800-2200;) Set around a huge lawn, set back from the boulevard, the Paradise has huge, well-lit rooms with balconies facing the garden or lake. The garden-facing rooms are quieter and cosier.

Next to each other on MA Rd, Hotel Broadway (☎ 2459001; www.hotelbroadway.com; s/d Rs 3500/4500;) and Hotel Grand Mumtaz (☎ 243184; hotelgrand_mumtaz@yahoo.co.in; s/d Rs 4500/5500;) offer sumptuous rooms, elegant restaurants, coffee shops and heated swimming pools.

Eating

There are dozens of cheap vaishno dhabas (vegetarian snack bars) along the boulevard and around Dal Gate, while the old town is dotted with stands serving shashlik (grilled lamb skewers) and grilled lake fish. Most restaurants charge 8% tax on the bill.

Mughal Darbar (Residency Rd; dishes Rs 50-120; 10am-10pm) Close to the Polo Ground, this cheerful restaurant serves a good range of Kashmiri dishes, including murg mirch korma (chicken in a clear spicy gravy) and fruit-stuffed naan.

our pick Shamyana Restaurant (Blvd; dishes Rs 60-170; 11am-11pm) Set back from the boulevard, Shamyana serves up top-notch Mughlai and Chinese food in a bright, comfortable dining room. The house rogon josh (lamb and tomato curry) is a veritable feast.

Café de Lintz (Residency Rd; dishes Rs 60-200; noon-8.30pm) A decent fill-up stop on the way to Residency Rd, serving all the usual Indian and Chinese standards.

Lhasa Restaurant (Blvd; dishes Rs 70-180; 10am-9pm) A local favourite for momos (Tibetan dumplings), noodle soups and Chinese chicken. The dining room is styled after a Buddhist monastery or you can eat out in the walled garden.

Drinking

Srinagar is a Muslim town so alcohol is in short supply. If you dress your best, you may be able to sneak a cold beer in the bar at the Hotel Broadway or the Kashmir Golf Club on MA Rd.

Coffea Arabica (Hotel Broadway, MA Rd; 9am-7pm) A modern coffee shop serving all your espresso favourites to a soundtrack of Lionel Ritchie and the Backstreet Boys.

Shopping

The range of Kashmiri souvenirs in Srinagar is unparalleled, but the pressure to buy can be overbearing. Elegantly painted papier-mâché boxes and Christmas-tree decorations make cheap and light souvenirs, or there are bulkier papier-mâché items like lamps and vases. Carved walnut wood is another speciality of the valley, as are cashmere and pashmina shawls, and carpets – see the boxed text, opposite. Shops in Lal Chowk sell cricket bats, saffron, dried fruit and nuts.

Resist the urge to buy shahtoosh shawls and anything else made from animal fur – local furriers do a lively trade in endangered species (see the boxed text, p1147).

The boulevard and Lambert Lane are lined with souvenir shops, but you can find the same souvenirs without the hassle at Kashmir Government Arts Emporium (☎ 2452783; off Residency Rd; 10am-5.30pm Mon-Sat), all at fixed prices. There's a handy branch (☎ 2477466; Blvd) next to Hotel Paradise, but beware of copycat stores in the same building.

Getting There & Away

AIR

Half a dozen airlines offer daily flights between Srinagar and Delhi (from US$88, 1¼ hours) or Jammu (US$86, 35 minutes). Indian Airlines (☎ 2450247; Shahenshah Palace Hotel, Blvd; 10am-4.45pm Mon-Sat) flies to Leh (US$102, 45 minutes) on Tuesday. There are also town offices for Jet Airways (☎ 2480801; Sherwani Rd) and Air Sahara

KNOW YOUR CARPETS

Kashmiri carpets are famous for their rich sheen and intricate patterns, but you need to choose carefully as quality can vary tremendously. Most Kashmiri carpets use designs from Iran, knotted by hand in wool or silk, or a combination of the two. Silk carpets look luxurious but they tend to be less durable than wool and fake silk is often passed off as the real thing. When choosing a carpet, look at the level of detail in the design and the range of colours. Turn the carpet over and look at the back – the knots should be small and tightly packed together. Expect to pay upwards of US$200 for a good quality 3ft by 5ft (0.9m by 1.5m) wool carpet and US$1000 for a similar sized carpet in silk.

If you can't stretch to a knotted Kashmiri carpet, consider some of the other floor coverings available in the valley. Chain-stitched gabbas (floor rugs) in wool or silk cost a fraction of the price of knotted carpets. Also look out for namdas, delightfully rustic rugs made from pressed felt embroidered with wool in flowing floral patterns. Whatever you buy, consider the weight – a 3ft by 5ft (0.9m by 1.5m) carpet weighs at least 5kg, a quarter of the standard airline baggage allowance.

Be warned that some carpets are produced using child labour; see the boxed text, p1145.

(☎ 2106750; Lambert Lane) that are open for similar hours. Shiraz Travels (☎ 245 5221; Lambert Lane) can book all domestic flights, as well as helicopter trips to Amarnath. Look out for cheap web fares on Spicejet, Air Deccan and other budget airlines.

There's a massive level of security at the airport and foreigners must register on arrival. Allow at least three hours to check in. Check with the airline for specific restrictions on cabin baggage – these change all the time.

BUSES

Militants have attacked buses in the past, so seek local advice before travelling by bus.

Deluxe government buses run by J&KTDC (☎ 2455107) leave from a stand next to the Tourist Reception Centre. Services include the following:

Destination	Fare (Rs)	Duration (hr)	Departures
Delhi	890-990	24	8.30am
Gulmarg	160	2½	9am
Jammu	215	12	7.30am (6.30am in summer)
Kargil	240/320 (ord/dlx)	10	8am
Pahalgam	120	2	8.30am
Sonamarg	170	3	8am

From May to late October, the Kargil buses continue to Leh after an overnight stop; the Srinagar to Leh fare is Rs 490/620 (ordinary/deluxe) A few private buses to Kargil and Srinagar leave from the chaotic Western Bus Stand in Batmaloo, 1½km west of Lal Chowk.

Buses run twice a month between Srinagar and Muzafarrabad in Pakistani-administered Kashmir, but this route is only open to Indian and Pakistani citizens.

Private buses around the valley leave from the Western Bus Stand. There are several daily buses to Sonamarg (Rs 40, three hours) and Pahalgam (Rs 42, two hours). For Gulmarg, change at Tangmarg (Rs 70, two hours).

SHARE JEEPS

The easiest and safest way to reach Jammu or Kargil is by share jeep from the taxi stand opposite the tourist office. Jeeps to Jammu (Rs 300 to 400) leave between 6am and 11am; jeeps to Kargil (Rs 500 to 550) leave from 7am. Infrequent jeeps to Leh cost Rs 1000 (18 hours).

TAXI

By far the easiest and safest way to explore the Kashmir Valley is by chartered taxi. There are unionised taxi stands all over the city, all charging fixed rates. Fares and destinations include the following:

Destination	Fare (Rs)
Gulmarg	1200 (return)
Jammu	2900
Kargil	3800
Leh	8000
Pahalgam	2000 (return)
Sonamarg	1800 (return)

THE KASHMIRI EARTHQUAKE

On 8 October 2005, the Kashmir Valley was struck by a massive earthquake measuring 7.6 on the Richter Scale, destroying thousands of homes and burying whole villages under deadly landslides. A massive rescue effort was immediately launched on both sides of the border, with rescue crews from as far afield as Britain and the USA helping to locate survivors and set up emergency camps for refugees. In total, 80,000 people were killed, most on the Pakistan side of the Line of Control, and 2.5 million were left homeless.

Aid flooded in from around the world and India and Pakistan opened the Line of Control to allow aid convoys to cross. However, hopes that this new spirit of cooperation might calm the insurgency were quickly dashed. As the snows thawed around the refugee camps, Kashmiri militants detonated bombs at the Hanuman temple and train station in Varanasi and on crowded commuter trains in Mumbai, killing more than 200 people. Donations to charities supporting earthquake victims are still welcome but be aware that many phoney charities were set up to channel money to militants.

Getting Around

A taxi to the airport costs Rs 360. Shikara rates are set by the local union – see Dal Lake, p353 for details. An autorickshaw to anywhere in Srinagar will cost under Rs 60.

See p356 for taxi tours of Srinagar.

AROUND SRINAGAR

There are several interesting detours along the road to Pahalgam, east of Srinagar, all accessible by chartered taxi or local bus – check the security situation before you travel.

About 16km southeast of Srinagar, Pampore is the centre of the Indian saffron industry. Every October, the fields along the highway are carpeted with vivid violet crocus blooms (the flower stamens produce the vivid yellow pigment).

Avantipura, 25km from Srinagar, has two ruined Hindu temples dating from the 9th century. The huge Awantiswarmi Temple (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; ⌚ dawn-dusk), dedicated to Vishnu, has similarities to the Hindu temples of Southeast Asia. About 1km west is the smaller Awantsvara Temple, dedicated to Shiva and visited on the same ticket.

The area between Avantipur and Ananatnag is famous for the production of willow cricket bats; the roadside is dotted with stalls offering bats for sale and most will let you peek at the workshops where the cricket bats are made.

At Ananatnag, the main road turns south wards to Jammu, while the road to Pahalgam branches off to the east. About 7km from Ananatnag, the 7th-century Surya Temple at Martand follows a similar plan to the temples at Avantipura. There is a modern temple to Surya a few kilometres north at Mattan, with a holy spring full of teeming fish. Gardens from the time of Shah Jahan can be seen in the nearby villages of Achabal, Kokernag and Verinag.

Heading north from Mattan, the road enters the gorgeous valley of the Lidder River, which becomes a raging torrent with the spring snowmelt. Jagged mountains rise ahead and the road is flanked by towering chinars, Kashmir's national tree.

GULMARG

☎ 01954 / elev 2730m

About 52km southwest of Srinagar, the pine-fringed meadow at Gulmarg – literally 'Meadow of Flowers' – is a busy ski resort in winter and a popular walking resort in summer. The Alpine landscape is a marked contrast to the flat, poplar-lined fields that cover the bottom of the Kashmir Valley, but don't expect a quiet retreat. Gulmarg is packed with domestic tourists year-round and most of the meadow is given over to a golf course that doubles as a training slope during the ski season.

Orientation & Information

The meadow at Gulmarg is ringed by a long road that connects the bus stand, the Gondola cable car and the golf course. All the cheap hotels are lined up between the bus stand and the Gondola.

At the golf course, the Tourist Reception Centre (☎ 254487; ⌚ 9.30am-5pm) has information on skiing and local attractions. The Jammu & Kashmir Bank ATM at the bus stand takes some foreign cards.

Sights

About 1km west of the bus stand, the Gondola Cable Car (return ticket to 1st/2nd stage Rs 200/700; 10am-4pm) whisks travellers from the meadow to the heights of Afarwat mountain. The first stage runs to 3930m and the second stage continues to a giddy 4390m. The views are outstanding and you can hike back down to Gulmarg through the forest in a few hours, passing the turf-roofed winter houses of the nomadic Gujar people.

As well as building the golf course, the British were responsible for the 150-year-old St Mary's Church now abandoned in the middle of the green. Nearby, the wooden Rani temple attracts Hindu worshippers, while Muslims pay their respects at the tin-roofed Babu Reshi Shrine, a few kilometres below Gulmarg.

Activities

In winter, Gulmarg becomes India's premier skiing resort, with runs to suit all levels. There are several drag lifts and one chair lift, but electricity is sometimes restricted to 15 minutes every hour. The Gondola provides access to some dramatic high-altitude powder. The ski season runs from 15 December to 15 April, and skis and boots can be hired from the tourist office or the Kashmir Alpine ski shop near Hotel Highlands Park. Expect to pay Rs 300 for equipment and Rs 30 for a ski pass for the day.

Other wintery activities include ice-skating on the open-air rink by the Hilltop Hotel and sledging on the meadow. Sledge pullers charge Rs 130 per hour. Pony rides around the meadow and into the forest cost Rs 120 per hour.

The large and well-maintained golf course (☎ 254487; nine holes Rs 100, club hire Rs 100) claims to be the highest in the world.

Sleeping & Eating

Ask for discounts outside of the peak summer season (June to August) and ski season (December to April).

Hotel Yamberzal & Restaurant (☎ 254447; s/d Rs 600/1200) Cheap by Gulmarg standards, this simple place has plain rooms with hot showers and carpets, and a restaurant overlooking the meadow.

Sahara Hotel (☎ 254505; r from Rs 800) This incongruously named hotel next door is almost identical to Hotel Yamberzal.

Hotel Kingsley (☎ 254415; s/d from Rs 800/1440) Right next to the bus stand, the wood-shingled Kingsley is faded but comfy. Rooms have reliable hot water and the front lawn faces right onto the meadow.

Hotel Highlands Park (☎ 254430; s/d from Rs 3000/4000, ste Rs 5000) The best of the period properties on the far side of the green, this grand hotel sprawls over a dozen British-era cottages on the hillside. Rooms with open fireplaces ooze colonial charm and there's a very pukkah restaurant and bar.

Hotel Hilltop (☎ 254445; hilltop_gulmarg@yahoo.com; d from Rs 4000) An upmarket option near the Gondola, this centrally heated place is toasty warm, but rooms are expensive for what you get. There's a bar and restaurant.

All the hotels have restaurants and there are several pure-veg dhabas along the road between the bus stand and Gondola.

Getting There & Away

A return taxi from Srinagar costs Rs 1200. See p359 for information on buses.

PAHALGAM

☎ 01936 / elev 2130m

Set in a magical valley beside the Lidder River, Pahalgam is framed by pine forests and snow-covered peaks that bear more than a passing similarity to the Rocky Mountains. This was once Kashmir's most popular resort, but today it exists in a state of limbo, empty for most of the year, but deluged with visitors during the annual Amarnath yatra (pilgrimage) from June to August (see p362). Outside of the pilgrimage season, this is a fine spot for walking, pony trekking or just enjoying the cool, clean mountain air. However, check the security situation before visiting – pilgrims have been repeatedly targeted by militants.

Information

On the main street, the Tourist Reception Centre (☎ 243224; 24hr Apr-Oct, 10am-4pm Nov-Mar) mainly caters to pilgrims. Cyber Café (per hr Rs 50; 10am-6pm) at the bus stand offers slow internet access.

Sights & Activities

The most popular destination for short walks is the viewpoint at Baisarn, 5km above Pahalgam. From here, you can continue 2.5km to an even better viewpoint at Dhabyan, or walk 7km to the pretty lake at Tulyan. Pony owners will pounce on you as soon as you arrive in Pahalgam offering pony treks to the same destinations for Rs 300 to 500. In winter, sledge rides cost Rs 100 to 300, depending on the distance.

Other attractions include the 11th-century Mamleshwar Temple on the west bank of the river, the wooden town mosque, a Sikh gurdwara and the flower-filled Club Park (entry Rs 5; 8am-7pm).

About 1km south of the centre, the Jawahar Institute of Mountaineering and Winter Sports (243129; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) offers mountaineering and trekking courses (April to November) and ski courses (January to February). Custom-made treks cost Rs 150 per person per day – the four-day trek to the Kolahoi Glacier and Tarsar Marsar Lake is a popular option.

From April to September, white-water rafting on the Lidder can be arranged through Highland Excursions (01942488061; www.highlandoutdoors.com) on the road to Aru.

Sleeping

Pahalgam has dozens of pilgrim hotels, but most shut down for the winter. Unless otherwise stated, the following hotels are open from April to November.

Hotel New India (243365; d Rs 300) One of half a dozen no-frills pilgrim hotels by the bus stand, offering bare rooms with bathrooms.

Brown Palace (243255; r with shared/private bathroom from Rs 200/800, cottage Rs 1500) Run by a charming Muslim family, this homy, wood-panelled guesthouse is 1km north of Pahalgam in the quaint village of Laripura.

Hotel Tulyan (243096; s/d Rs 1500/2000) A spark ling new place full of marble and polished pine, just above the bus stand. It fits the Alpine setting perfectly.

Hotel Pahalgam (243252; www.pahalgamhotel.com; s/d Rs 4000/5500) The best choice in town, Hotel Pahalgam is spread over several wooden Raj-era buildings in a gorgeous garden right next to the Lidder. Rooms have thick carpets and toasty wood-burning stoves, and you can stay here year-round.

Hotel Nataraj (243225; d Rs 2400, cottages Rs 5500-7000) Rooms at this midrange hotel are only so-so, but the cottages in the garden are delightful. Each has a kitchen, two bedrooms, a bathroom with hot shower, and a garden with a swing and balcony overlooking the Lidder.

Eating

All the hotels have restaurants and there are dhabas and bakeries near the bus stand.

Log Inn (snacks Rs 20-60) In front of Hotel Pahalgam, this log-cabin coffee shop serves cakes, real espresso, hot chocolate and warming mugs of herbal tea.

Nathu's Rasoi (mains Rs 40-100) The fast-food restaurant at the Hotel Tulyan serves tasty Chinese and Indian veg food quicker than you can say onion pakora.

Hotel Paradise (mains Rs 50-150) Right on the main road; a solid choice for Kashmiri curries and Chinese, Indian and continental standards.

Getting There & Away

Government buses leave for Srinagar (Rs 120, two hours) at 4pm and Jammu (Rs 250, 12 to 14 hours) at 8am, but only if there are enough tourists. Private buses to Srinagar (Rs 42) leave three times a day, or take a local bus to Ananatnag (Rs 20, one hour) and change.

AMARNATH

elev 13,800m

Every year 500,000 Indian tourists make the annual yatra (pilgrimage) to the ice lingam at Amarnath. This is one of the most important pilgrimage sites in India, but pilgrims have been targeted by militants on numerous occasions, so check things out carefully before visiting. The cave at Amarnath is reached by a three-day, 36km trek from the town of Chandanwari, 16km north of Pahalgam. Some pilgrims complete the journey by pony, helicopter or dandy (palanquin). Inside the main chamber is a natural stone lingam that becomes encrusted with ice from May to August. Pilgrim numbers peak during the Shivrani Festival in July and the military presence can be overpowering.

During yatra season, the tourist office in Pahalgam runs shuttle buses to Chandanwari and makes arrangements for the three-day trek to Amarnath. Ponies cost Rs 2650; palanquins cost Rs 10,000.

SONAMARG

0194 / elev 2740m

Set in a sweeping, forested valley, Sonamarg was once a popular trekking destination, but the town now has a heavy military presence. The road to Leh and Kargil passes through Sonamarg, so you can enjoy the scenery from the bus, even if you don't stop over. For those who do stay, J&KTDC (2417208) can arrange ponies for day trips to beauty spots like the spectacular Thajiwas Glacier, 4km above town.

For accommodation and meals, try the well-run J&KTDC Tourist Huts (☎ 2417208; dm Rs 150, r Rs 400, 2-bed hut Rs 1800) or the superior Hotel Glacier Heights (☎ 2417215; r with bathroom Rs 1200), backing onto the forest.

Government buses from Srinagar to Kargil or Leh pass through Sonamarg (Rs 170, three hours), or you can take a private bus from Srinagar's Western Bus Stand. Buses heading on to Ladakh are often full by the time they reach Sonamarg; you may have to return to Srinagar to get a seat.

SONAMARG TO KARGIL

The road from Son amarg to Kargil passes through increasingly rugged terrain as it struggles over the 3529m Zoji La – the pass that separates Kashmir from Ladakh. Unfortunately, this route passes close to the Line of Control and the road has been shelled on several occasions. Check things are calm before you visit.

Even when things are safe, this is not a journey for the fainthearted. The road is barely wide enough for a single vehicle and it clings to the side of precarious drops, wedged in by a saw edge of mountain peaks. Travel from Sonamarg to Kargil is only possible from June to October and the pass is only open to Kargil-bound traffic in the afternoon. If you arrive at the wrong time, you'll have to wait in the gloomy Baltal Camp at the foot of the pass.

Beyond the Zoji La, the landscape is barren and eerily silent after the birdsong-filled hills of Kashmir. Foreigners must register at the similarly gloomy Gumry Camp on the Ladakh side of the pass.

From Gumry, it's 37km to the bleak outpost at Drass – allegedly the coldest inhabited place on earth after Oymyakon in Siberia. Although most villagers are Muslim, there are some ancient Buddhist carvings on the roadside. From Drass, the road stretches another 56km to Kargil, the gateway to Buddhist Zanskar and Ladakh.

SOUTHERN KASHMIR

The population of southern Kashmir is mainly Hindu and Sikh, but the region sees regular attacks from Muslim militants who slip across the border from Pakistan. Tourist sights and train stations are favourite targets – investigate the security situation thoroughly before you decide to visit.

Jammu

☎ 0191 / pop 2,718,113

If Srinagar is the City of Gardens, Jammu is the City of Temples. The winter capital of Kashmir is awash with Hindu shikharas (temple towers) and Sikh gurdwaras (temples). Founded in 1730 as the capital of the Dogra Rajas, Jammu is the main bus and railhead for Kashmir, and an interesting place to break the journey from Delhi to Srinagar. Unfortunately, the city is also a major target for extremists – make sure things are calm before you come.

ORIENTATION

Jammu sprawls along the banks of the Tawi River. The train station and airport are on the south side of the river, while the bus stand and old town are on the north bank. Most of the cheap hotels and restaurants are near the bus stand on Jewel Chowk or Vinaik Bazaar.

INFORMATION

Money

The Jammu & Kashmir Bank (Shalimar Rd; 10am-4pm Mon-Fri, 10am-1pm Sat) can change major currencies in cash and travellers cheques. The most reliable ATM is at the HFDC Bank by the bus stand.

Tourist Information

The Tourist Reception Centre is located on Residency Rd.

J&K Tourism (☎ 2548172/2544527; 10am-4pm) Provides information on the whole of Kashmir. There's a booth at the train station.

J&KTDC (☎ 2549065; www.jktdc.org; 8am-8pm) Makes bookings for J&KTDC hotels statewide.

SIGHTS

For security reasons, you may need to leave your bag, camera and mobile phone with security guards when visiting any of the following places.

Close to the main bazaar, Raghunath Mandir (Residency Rd; 6-11.30am & 6-9.30pm) was constructed by Maharaja Gulab Singh, founder of the princely state of Jammu and Kashmir. The temple has a gilded sikhara and dozens of shrines to different incarnations of Vishnu. Pavilions around the main shrine contain thousands of saligrams (ammonite fossils) representing the myriad deities of the Hindu pantheon.

Crowning the hill on the south bank of the Tawi River, the Bahu Fort was constructed by the Dogra Rajas in the 19th century. Inside, the Bawey Wali Mata Mandir is thronged by devotees of Kali, particularly on Tuesdays and Sundays. Pilgrims pour water from the temple over tethered goats, who shake themselves dry, showering the devout in sacred droplets.

Below the fort are the peaceful Bagh-e-Bahu Gardens (admission Rs 5; 9am-9pm), laid out on a classic Mughal plan overlooking the river. A huge, fish-shaped aquarium is under construction at the top of the hill.

There are more interesting temples dotted around town, including the gaudy Har-ki-Paori Mandir near the fort and the towering Ranbireshwar Mandir on Shalimar Rd, with its giant stone lingam.

About 5km northeast of the centre, the stately Amar Mahal Palace (2546783; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/45, camera Rs 10; 9-12.50am & 2-5.50pm, till 4.50pm Apr-Sep) was the last official residence of the Dogra Rajas. It's styled after a French chateau and inside you can see the Rajas' state rooms and a collection of portraits and miniatures.

Nearby is the Dogra Art Gallery (2678610; admission free; 10am-4pm Tue-Sun, 8am-1.30pm in summer), displaying 800 miniature paintings in a wing of the fading but fabulous Mubarak Mandi Palace.

TOURS

Taxis at the train station and tourist office charge Rs 410 for a four-hour sightseeing trip.

SLEEPING

Most of the sleeping options are close to the bus station, though theft is rife in the cheaper hotels. Note that accommodation can be in short supply during the Vaishno Devi yatra season (September to October).

our pick Diamond Hotel (2577792; Vinaik Bazar; s/d with cold shower Rs 200/250, r with hot shower, TV & AC Rs 300-400) Head and shoulders above the competition, the Diamond offers a good choice of budget rooms, with the option of air-con and hot water.

Vardaan Hotel (2573212; Vinaik Bazar; s/d from Rs 990/1090) A smarter option near the bus stand. Come here for good soundproofing, steamy hot showers and icy air-con.

KC Residency (2520770; www.kcresidency.com; Residency Rd; s/d from Rs 1900/2300) The poshest choice in town, with a revolving rooftop restaurant, a disco, an Ayurvedic spa and elegant rooms with all mod cons.

EATING

The road running up to the bus stand has several cheap vegetarian vaishno dhabas and Kashmiri Muslim restaurants serving tasty wazwan (meat thalis).

Jewel's Fastfood (Jewel Chowk; Rs 30-100; 7.30am-11pm) A friendly snack house with plastic chairs and good-value dosas, curries and thalis (Rs 75/90 veg/nonveg).

our pick Paradise Bar & Restaurant (Jewel Chowk; mains Rs 50-160) Next door, this cheerfully chintzy 1980s-style bar serves cold beers and good tandoori chicken, seekh kebabs (spicy meat kebabs, cooked in a tandoor) and veg curries.

Falak (2520770; Residency Rd; mains from Rs 200; 12.30-11pm) The revolving restaurant atop the KC Residency Hotel is the best splurge in town, with a broad and enticing Indian menu.

SHOPPING

Kashmir Government Arts Emporium (2542946; Residency Rd; 10am-7pm Mon-Sat) The full range of Kashmiri souvenirs can be found here.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Half a dozen airlines fly between Jammu and Delhi (US$161, one hour) or Srinagar (US$86, 35 minutes). Indian Airlines (2456086; Tourist Reception Centre; 10am-4.45pm Mon-Sat) also flies to Leh (US$112, 45 minutes) on Thursday and Saturday. Jet (2574312; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) has an office at the KC Residency Hotel. STC Travel (2574080; Jewel Chowk) handles bookings for other airlines.

Bus

The bus stand is north of the river, just off BC Rd. Within Kashmir, buses leave for Srinagar (Rs 110 to 150, 10 to 12 hours) hourly from 5am to 8am. There are also regular buses to Katra (Rs 25, two hours) and Ransoo (Rs 110, four hours). The bus stand also has regular services to Delhi (Rs 315, 12 hours), Amritsar (Rs 97, six hours) and Pathankot (Rs 47, 2½ hours). One bus leaves daily for the following towns (inquire locally for times):

Destination	Fare (Rs)	Duration (hr)
Chamba	160	7
Dalhousie	145	6
Dehra Dun	300	11
Dharamsala	115	5
Haridwar	295	12
Manali	295	12
Shimla	260	12

Share Jeeps
Fast share jeeps to Srinagar (Rs 300 to 400) leave from the highway in front of the bus stand from 4am to 8am. A charter taxi costs Rs 3200 to Srinagar and Rs 710 to Katra.

Train
Jammu Tawi is the main station in Jammu, but check the security situation as there have been attacks on trains. Useful services to Delhi include the Jammu Mail (4034) at 3.35pm and the Shalimar Mail (4646) at 8.55pm. Fares are Rs 948/669/248/154 in 2A/3A/sleeper/2nd class.

The rail line is being extended all the way to Srinagar; check locally for updates.

GETTING AROUND
Auto-rickshaws are plentiful; journeys around town cost Rs 50 to 60. Stretch minivans shuttle between the bus station and train station for Rs 5 per head. A taxi to the airport costs Rs 150.

Around Jammu
There are loads of interesting sights in the hills around Jammu, but this area is particularly prone to insurgent attacks. Be sure to check the security situation before venturing into the hills.

Probably the most famous sight close to Jammu is the Hindu temple of Vaishno Devi. From September to October, thousands of pilgrims join the daily convoy of jeeps and buses heading north to Katra, start of the 12km hike to the temple complex. The temple enshrines a revered image of Mata Vaishno Devi, representing the goddess incarnated as Kali, Saraswati and Lakshmi. As usual, check things are safe before you visit.

About 110km northwest of Jammu, Shiva Khori is visited by thousands of Hindu pilgrims during the Shivaratri Festival in February and March. At the end of the kilometre-long cave is a revered Shiva lingam, formed from a natural stalagmite. The caves are a 3km walk from the village of Ransoo, accessible by public bus from Jammu.

About halfway between Jammu and Srinagar is the green and pleasant hill station at Patnitop, with several hotels and forest walks. All Srinagar–Jammu buses pass this way.

LADAKH

Ladakh is bound by mountains and made up of mountains. Sheer walls of rock and ice divide the Indus Valley from Tibet, Kashmir and Himachal Pradesh, and human habitation is restricted to narrow strips of greenery clinging to the rivers that drain down from mountain glaciers. This rugged region is home to one of the last undisturbed Tantric Buddhist populations on earth, protected from colonial interference, rampaging Mughals and the ravages of the Cultural Revolution by sheer force of geography.

From November to May, Ladakh is almost completely cut off from the outside world. Even in summer, getting here involves crossing the highest mountain passes in the world, or a hair-raising flight that weaves between the peaks. Isolation has preserved an almost medieval way of life, dictated by the changing seasons. However, change is coming to this mountain Shangri La. Tourism and hydroelectric power are flooding the region with money, and global warming is altering rainfall patterns, threatening farming cycles and Ladakh's traditional mud-brick architecture.

Unlike the rest of Jammu and Kashmir, Ladakh has seen little violence since Independence. Most Ladakhis are Buddhist, with smaller communities of Shia and Sunni Muslims in Leh and the valleys surrounding Zanskar and Kargil.

History
Ladakh's earliest inhabitants were nomadic yak herders, but permanent settlements were established along the Indus by Buddhist pilgrims travelling from India to Mt Kailash in Tibet. Buddhism soon became the dominant religion, though the minority Brokpa tribe still follows Bonism: the religion that preceded Buddhism in Tibet (see the boxed text, p388).

By the 9th century, the Buddhist kings of Ladakh had established a kingdom extending all the way from Kashmir to Tibet, protected by forts and dotted with vast Buddhist gompas (monasteries). Different sects struggled for prominence, but the Gelukpa (Red Hat) order was introduced by the Tibetan pilgrim Tsongkhapa in the 14th century, and it soon became the major philosophy in the valley.

Simultaneously, Muslim armies began to invade Ladakh from the west. In the 16th century, the province fell briefly to Ali Mir of Balistan, but Buddhism bounced back under Singge Namgyal (1570–1642), who established a new capital at Leh. Ladakh was finally annexed into the kingdom of the Dogra Rajas of Jammu in 1846.

Since then, Ladakh has been ruled as a subdistrict of Jammu and Kashmir. In response to anti-Buddhist discrimination, the Ladakh Autonomous Hill Development Council (LAHDC) was formed in 1996, lobbying for the creation of a Union Territory of Ladakh. Since then, candidates from the Ladakh Union Territory Front have lead the field at elections, but with the state government profiting heavily from Ladakh's tourism industry, autonomy is likely to remain a distant dream.

Climate

The sun shines in Ladakh for 300 days a year, but rainfall levels are on par with the Sahara and winter temperatures frequently dip below -20°C. The extremes of cold create a short tourism season in Ladakh; the mountain passes are only open from July to October and few tourists visit for the desolate winters. For locals, winter is the season of celebration. All the food and fuel for winter has been stacked and stored and people are free to spend their days making merry at Ladakh's many festivals.

If do you visit in winter, bring serious winter gear. Running water is in short supply, and hot water and heating costs extra at hotels because of the limited supply of fuel. For more tips, see the boxed text, opposite. In recent years, global warming has caused a significant shift in rainfall patterns, altering the growing season and increasing erosion by wind and rain, affecting buildings and roads across the region.

Average summer (June to September) and winter (October to May) temperatures follow:

Region	Summer	Winter
Kargil	0° to 38°C	-17° to 12°C
Leh	-3° to 30°C	-20° to 13°C
Nubra Valley	-3° to 28°C	-15° to 15°C

Language

Ladakhi, written in the Tibetan script, is the main language of Ladakh and Zanskar. If you only learn one word, make it jule (pronounced joo-lay) – meaning 'hello', 'goodbye', 'please' and 'thank you' – derived from the Tibetan greeting tashi-delek.

Information

PERMITS

To visit the Nubra Valley, Pangong Tso and the Rupsu Valley, you need an Inner Line Permit, which can only be obtained through a travel agent in Leh. Most agents can arrange the permits in one working day for around Rs 100, plus a daily visitor tax of Rs 20. Permits are valid for seven days and you're required to travel in a group of four, though agents can sometimes get around this with creative paperwork. It's possible to obtain a permit and travel independently, but border police have turned back groups of less than four, even with the proper papers. You'll have to show your passport and hand over copies of the permit at numerous checkpoints, so carry half a dozen copies.

Dangers & Annoyances

Most of Ladakh lies above 3000m and fly-in visitors invariably suffer mild symptoms of AMS (p1188). Avoid strenuous exertion for the first 24 hours and drink plenty of water. Thereafter, always consider the effects of altitude when making steep ascents, particularly over mountain passes. Trekkers should take extra care – make sure you are properly equipped and acclimatised.

Leh and eastern Ladakh see none of the trouble that affects the rest of Jammu and Kashmir, but the road between Kargil and Srinagar has been shelled in the past, so check things are safe before you travel; see p352.

Avoid using charcoal heaters in unventilated hotel rooms because of the risk of carbon monoxide poisoning; see p1126.

Activities

Ladakh is an adventure playground for outdoor types and Leh abounds with tour operators offering trips up into the mountains.

TREKKING

From July to October, Ladakh and Zanskar offer some fantastic high-altitude trekking routes. For more information see Trekking in Ladakh (p379) and Trekking in Zanskar (p391).

A MOUNTAIN TOOLKIT

There are special considerations for travel in harsh mountain conditions. Warm, insulating clothing is essential, even in summer, and sunburn is an ever-present risk because of the altitude. Bring a hat, sunscreen and lip salve, as well as UV-proof sunglasses. A mountain medical kit should include paracetamol for symptoms of Acute Mountain Sickness, but only as an aid for retreating to lower altitudes – see p1188 for more on this potentially deadly condition.

Also carry a course of antibiotics (available in larger towns) and dehydration salts for stomach upsets, plasters for blistered feet, a chapstick and a tube of cold sore cream containing aciclovir – wind-chapped lips are particularly vulnerable to cold sores. Campers should bring a sleeping bag rated to three or four seasons, and photographers should carry a polarising filter to reduce glare. A good-quality torch is essential for finding your way home along unlit village streets.

MOUNTAINEERING

Ladakh is a mountaineers' paradise, but you must pay mountain royalties and climbing at this altitude is a serious endeavour – see p95 for more advice. UK-based Adventure Peaks (www.adventurepeaks.com) is one of several companies offering mountaineering packages in Ladakh. There are also several high-altitude trekking ascents, including the popular four-day climb up Stok Kangri (6121m) and treks to the base of the Nun Kun Massif (7135m) – see p379 and p391.

WHITE-WATER RAFTING & KAYAKING

From July to September, rafters and kayakers can enjoy epic white water on the Indus and Zanskar Rivers. Grades vary from I to III on the Indus and II to IV on the Zanskar. The most popular trip is the short but thrilling run from Phey to Nimmu near Leh (Grade II to III) – see p372.

Getting There & Around

Leh receives year-round flights from Delhi, Srinagar and Jammu. Buses and share jeeps run from Srinagar to Leh from May to November, and from Manali to Leh from July to mid-October. See the Getting There & Away sections for Leh, Manali and Srinagar for details. Transport within the valley is mainly by local bus, chartered taxi or rented motorcycle.

LEH

☎ 01982 / pop 28,100 / elev 3505m

On one level, Leh is a tourist town, with all the travel agencies, souvenir shops and pizza restaurants you would expect to find in a bustling backpacker centre. On the other hand, how many other tourist towns back onto ruined palaces in the lee of the Himalaya? The sky overhead is a vivid dark blue from the altitude – a breathless 3505m above sea level – and the modern town melts into a crumbling old city of timber and mud bricks. The Indian Army maintains a large military base near the airport to patrol the borders with China and Pakistan, but their main job is repairing roads and bridges and keeping the mountain passes clear of snow.

Orientation

The main landmark in Leh is the Royal Palace, overlooking the crumbling alleyways of the Old Town and the Polo Ground. Most hotels and restaurants are southwest along Main Bazar and Fort Rds, or northwest in the village of Changspa. There are more village guesthouses further north in Karzoo and Sankar.

The bus stand and post office are 1km south of Main Bazar, and the airport is 7km southwest on the road to Kargil. The road to the Nubra Valley and Khardung La runs uphill behind the Polo Ground.

TELEPHONE

There are numerous PCO/STD/ISD offices in Leh, charging the standard Indian rates for international calls. Mobile phone users will find a citywide signal for Airtel and BSNL mobiles, but expect trouble getting a line for calls inside Ladakh.

TOURIST INFORMATION

Noticeboards all over town have adverts for tours, treks and activities, and local news is provided by the magazines Ladags Melong (Rs 20) and Magpie (Rs 2). Useful websites include www.reachladakh.com, www.jktourism.org/cities/Ladakh and www.excursionsindia.theindiancenter.com/gompas-of-ladakh.

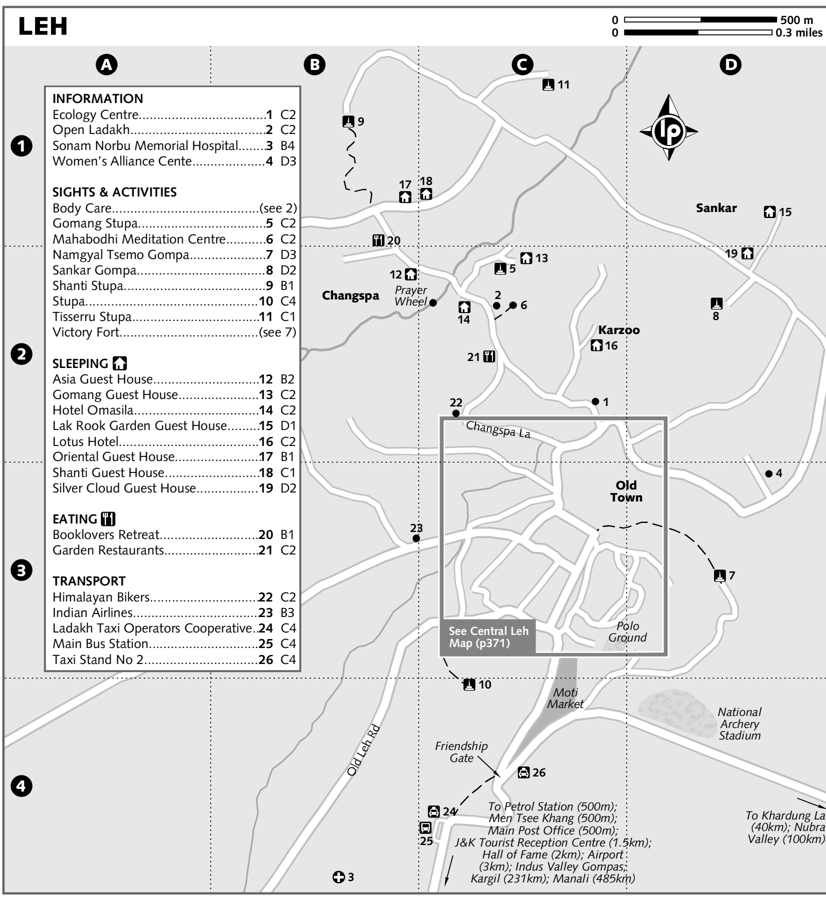
RESPONSIBLE TRAVEL IN LADAKH

The culture and pristine environment of Ladakh is under threat from commercial exploitation for tourism. Do your bit to preserve Ladakh by observing the following guidelines:

- Respect local culture Stick to long trousers or skirts and tops that cover the shoulders, especially when visiting monasteries.
- Avoid plastic Purify your own water or refill your water bottle instead of buying water in plastic bottles. Avoid plastic bags and goods packaged in plastic.
- Conserve water Never leave taps running and use composting Ladakhi toilets instead of flush toilets where available. Use environmentally friendly laundry services and don't wash directly in streams.
- Save energy Turn off lights when not in use and support guesthouses that use renewable electricity.
- Support local communities When you shop and eat, look for places that use locally sourced ingredients or materials and employ local people in production. Drink local tsestalulu (sea buckthorn) juice instead of packaged soft drinks.
- Trek responsibly Aim to minimise your impact on any areas you pass through; see p98 for tips on responsible trekking.
- Support local organisations Visit the Women's Alliance Centre (p370) and the Ecology Centre (p370) to find out more about local issues.

Jammu & Kashmir Tourist Reception Centre (☎ 252094; Old Leh Rd; 10am-4pm Mon-Sat) Handles bookings for Jammu and Kashmir Tourist Bungalows in Ladakh.

Tourist office (Map p371; ☎ 253482; Fort Rd; 10am-4pm Mon-Sat) Has limited brochures on Ladakh. There's a booth at the airport, open for incoming flights.



Sights

LEH PALACE

Rising above the old town, the ruined Leh Palace (Map p371; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; dawn-dusk) was built in the 17th century by the Buddhist kings of Ladakh. It bears more than a passing similarity to Potala Palace in Tibet and the views from the roof are stunning. The Archaeological Survey of India is restoring the palace, but it's debatable whether the restoration is moving faster than the rate of decay. So far, only the palace prayer room gives any sense of the grandeur that must once have filled these corridors. Carry a torch and watch out for holes in the floor.

NAMGYAL TSEMO GOMPA

A giddying climb above the palace, this mud-brick gompa (Map p369; admission Rs 20) was built in 1430, enshrining a three-storey-high image of Sakyamuni, the historical Buddha. The steep path to the gompa starts from the palace, or you can take a taxi most of the way for Rs 115/168 one way/return. To avoid AMS, don't come up here too soon after arriving in Ladakh.

FILL UP!

If travellers keep on drinking purified water from disposable plastic bottles, Leh will vanish under a sea of plastic. Fortunately, help is at hand, courtesy of Dzomsa (Map p371; ☎ 250699; Main Bazar; 8am-9pm), an environmental organisation that provides refills of purified, pressure-boiled water for just Rs 7. Dzomsa also offers an environmentally friendly laundry service, a recycling and disposal service for paper and batteries, and a small shop selling delicious tsestalulu (sea buckthorn) juice and organic apricots.

Behind the gompa are the lofty ruins of a medieval victory fort, badly damaged by hordes of backpackers scrambling over the walls. If you come up here, watch your footing and try not to hasten the destruction.

OLD LEH

Behind the Jama Masjid, the crumbling streets of Old Leh are lined with eroded chortens (Tibetan for stupas) and traditional mud-brick Ladakhi houses. After centuries of neglect, locals are now preserving the remaining buildings with help from the German-run Tibet Heritage Fund (www.tibetheritagefund.org).

Immediately below the palace are a series of ceremonial buildings belonging to the former royal family, marked on the Central Leh map (p371). The Soma Gompa is used for traditional dances on summer evenings. Nearby is the small red Chamba Lhakhang, and the interesting Chenrezi Lhakhang, with rediscovered medieval murals between the inner and outer walls.

A free brochure and map listing other interesting buildings and monuments in the old town is available from local travel agencies.

SANKAR GOMPA

Hidden away in the tangle of streets behind the Women's Alliance, the Sankar Gompa (Map p369; admission Rs 20) is maintained by a small order of Gelukpa monks. Inside, you can see some ancient murals and statues of Maitreya, the future Buddha, and Avalokitesvara, the thousand-armed god of compassion. Across the road is the photang (official residence) of the head lama of Ladakh.

CHOWKHANG

Right in the centre but hidden away behind Main Bazar, this small modern gompa (Map p371; admission free; 24hr) is the headquarters of the Ladakh Buddhist Association. Masked chaam dances (ritual masked dances) take place here as part of the Ladakh Festival in September.

BUDDHIST STUPAS

Reached by a long winding road or an equally exhausting flight of steps from Changspa, the gleaming Shanti Stupa (Map p369; 5am-9pm; ☒) was built by Japanese monks to promote world peace. The stupa offers stunning views, but don't rush up here too soon after arriving in Leh because of the risk of AMS.

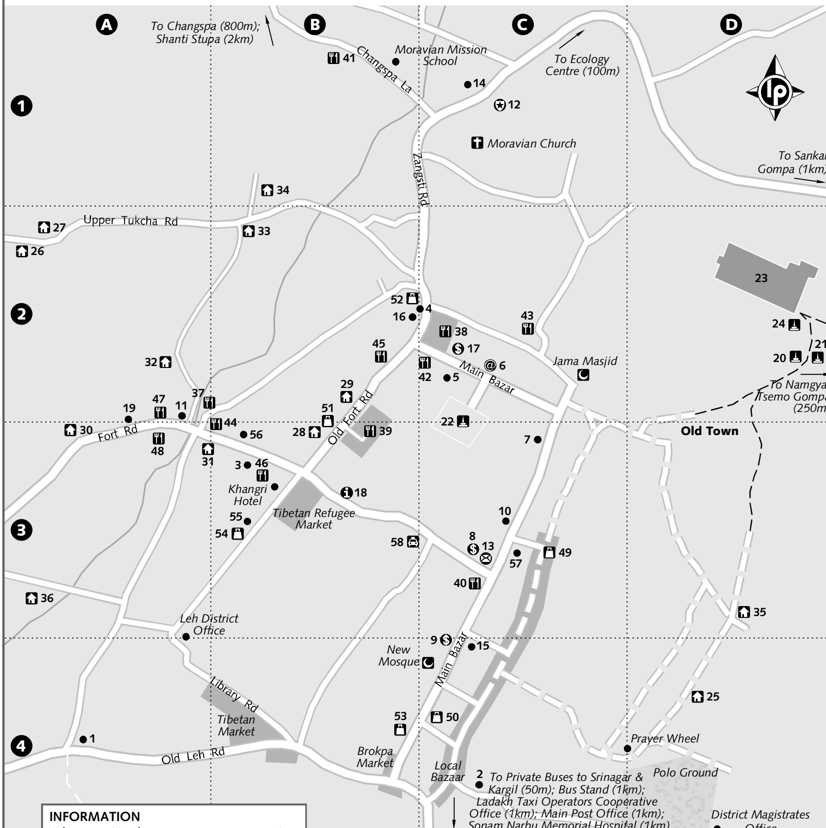
Just north of the Shanti Stupa are the ruins of the 11th-century Tisserru Stupa (Map p369; admission free; 24hr) made from mud bricks laid in geometric patterns over a core of poplar trunks.

Closer to Changspa is the striking Gomang Stupa (Map p369; admission free; 24hrs), built in the 9th century in a similar style to the Bodhi stupa in Kathmandu and flanked by Buddhist rock carvings.

Reached by a path from Old Leh Rd is another prayer-flag cloaked stupa (Map p369) balanced on a rocky outcrop overlooking the bus stand. The 360-degree views over Leh are superb.

HALL OF FAME

About 2km south of Leh on the airport road, this small museum (Indian/foreign Rs 10/50; 9am-1pm & 3-7pm) has displays on Ladakhi culture and the war with Pakistan over the disputed Siachen Glacier.



ECOLOGY CENTRE

In Changspa, the Ecology Centre (Map p369; ☎ 253221; admission by donation; 10am-4pm Mon-Sat) has a library and an exhibition on current environmental issues, plus a shop selling handicrafts produced by village cooperatives.

WOMEN'S ALLIANCE CENTRE

Run by village women, this community centre (Map p369; ☎ 250293; 10am-4pm Mon-Sat) campaigns for sustainable development and the preservation of Ladakhi culture. The centre screens the excellent documentary Ancient Futures at 3pm from Monday to Saturday, and other films on request. Donations are appreciated.

MEN TSEE KHANG

About 2km below the centre on the airport road, this Buddhist cultural centre (☎ 253566; ⏰ 8am-1pm & 2-5.30pm, till 4.30pm winter) was established to promote traditional Tibetan medicine and astrology. There's a small museum and you may be able to arrange a life horoscope.

Activities

YOGA, MEDITATION & MASSAGE

Numerous places offer yoga and meditation classes, and massages and rubs after long treks in the hills. Standards vary so check noticeboards and the traveller grapevine for recommendations. The going rate for an hour of traditional or Ayurvedic massage is Rs 350 to 500. Also see Courses (opposite).

In Changspa, Body Care (Map p369; ☎ mobile 253350; Changspa Lane) has a sauna and a wide range of massages and herbal rubs.

RAFTING & KAYAKING

From July to September, Ladakh's rivers offer some of the best white-water rafting and kayaking in India. Splash Adventures (Map p371; ☎ 254870; gangakayak@yahoo.com; Zangsti) has all sorts of trips around Ladakh and Zanskar. One day's rafting on the Indus is Rs 900, while the five-day run on the Zanskar River – known as the 'Grand Canyon of Asia' – is Rs 1000 per day. Kayak, paddle and lifejacket hire costs Rs 1500 per day.

TREKKING

See opposite for reliable trekking operators and p379 for information on routes.

ANATOMY OF A GOMPA

Ladakh is famous for its atmospheric gompas (Buddhist monasteries), but Buddhist mythology is incredibly complicated and you can spend hours exploring a gompa and still understand only a fraction of what is going on. Fortunately, many Buddhist monks speak English and will gladly explain things if you ask.

The focal point of a gompa is the du-khang, or prayer hall, where monks assemble for the morning puja (literally 'respect'; offering or prayers, recitals from the Buddhist sutras). The walls may be covered in vivid murals or thangkas (cloth paintings) of bodhisattvas (enlightened beings) and dharmapalas (protector deities) depicted in frightful poses to symbolise the eternal fight against ignorance. By the entrance to the du-khang you'll find a mural depicting the wheel of life – a graphical representation of the core elements of Buddhist philosophy (see www.buddhanet.net/wheel1.htm for an interactive description of the wheel of life).

Almost all gompas hold masked chaam dances (ritual masked dances to celebrate the victory of good over evil and of Buddhism over pre-existing religions) to celebrate major festivals. Dances to ward off evil feature masks of Mahakala, the Great Protector, a diabolical-looking figure with a headdress of human skulls. The Durdag dance features skull masks depicting the Lords of the Cremation Grounds, while Shawa dancers wear masks of wild-eyed stags. These characters are often depicted with a third eye in the centre of their foreheads, signifying the need for inner reflection.

The main chaams take place for Losar (Tibetan New Year) in December/January, Dosmoche (Festival of the Scapegoat) in February, and the smaller festivals of Gu-Stor and Tse-Chu (different dates at different monasteries). If you can't visit when a chaam is taking place, ask a monk to show you the room where the masks and costumes are stored.

Another unusual activity at Buddhist monasteries is the production of butter sculptures, ornate and slightly psychedelic models made from coloured butter and dough. The sculptures are deliberately built to decay, symbolising the impermanence of human existence. Many gompas also produce exquisite sand mandalas – geometric patterns made from sprinkled coloured sand, then destroyed to symbolise the futility of the physical plane.

Gompas are typically open from sunrise to sunset, but you may need to find a monk to open the doors. The best time to visit any gompa is during the morning puja, when monks and novices gather to chant passages from the sacred scriptures, sometimes accompanied by clanging cymbals, booming drums and honking Tibetan horns. Visitors are welcome to watch, but try not to disturb the novices. The first puja takes place at around 7am and attendants often come round with salted butter tea to keep out the morning chill.

VOLUNTEERING IN LADAKH

Schools across Ladakh need experienced volunteer teachers to teach English and other subjects to local children. You may be able to find a placement by approaching schools and monasteries directly. Alternatively, several international agencies place teachers in Ladakhi schools, including Beautiful World (www.beautifulworld.org.uk) and Mondo Challenge (www.mondochallenge.org).

Many travel agencies in Ladakh offer cut-price tours to volunteers who are willing to help clear rubbish from vulnerable natural areas like the Rupsu Valley and Pangong Tso; check local noticeboards for departures. The Directory (p1157) has more information on volunteering in Zanskar and Ladakh.

Courses

In summer the Mahabodhi Meditation Centre (Map p369; ☎ 253689; www.mahabodhi-ladakh.org; Changspa Lane) runs yoga and meditation sessions from Monday to Saturday.

In Changspa, Open Ladakh (Map p369; ☎ 9419179917; www.openladakh.com) has meditation classes at 4pm weekdays and a variety of longer courses and Buddhist retreats. Look for the sign on Changspa Lane.

Treks & Tours

Dozens of tour operators offer treks and jeep safaris around Ladakh, from daytrips to gompas to high-altitude week-long treks. Agencies all charge similar prices, but the cost of any given tour will depend on the number of people, the type of vehicle, the kind of accommodation and food, and the destination – as well as the number of ponies, guides and porters on trekking tours.

Expect to pay around US$60 per person per day for a three-day (two-night) jeep trip to the Nubra Valley, Pangong Tso or Tso Moriri, and a similar price for a trekking trip to the Markha Valley or Stok Kangri, based on four people trekking together; see p379 for more information.

Travel agents can arrange permits for Nubra, Pangong Tso or Tso Moriri for around Rs 100 plus taxes (see p366). Officially, foreigners must travel in a group of four, but travel agencies can often find extra travellers to make up the numbers. Check the noticeboards around town for 'travellers wanted' notices. The taxi stand offers fixed-rate tours as far as the Nubra Valley (p376), but you still need a permit.

Listed here are some long-established and reputable trek and tour operators, but it pays to seek out recommendations from other travellers. Look for companies that minimise the environmental impact of remote tourism and be sure that your travel insurance covers helicopter evacuation in case of accidents at altitude.

Festivals & Events

Most of Ladakh's festivals take place in winter, but plenty of people attend the Ladakh Festival (1 to 15 September) in Leh – a touristy but entertaining package of sports and cultural activities, including masked chaam dances, archery and polo. In February, locals celebrate the New Year with the two-day Dosmoche fair. A giant pole is erected outside Leh and effigies representing the evil spirits of the old year are ceremonially burnt or cast out into the desert; see the boxed text (p351) for more festivals in Ladakh.

Sleeping

Unless otherwise stated, the following places are closed in winter (exact dates depend on how many visitors are still in town). From 15 September, rates plummet everywhere, then increase again slightly to cover the cost of heating once the snow arrives.

In budget places, bucket hot water is the norm. Most midrange and top-end places have running hot water in the morning and evening. Rates at hotels in Leh include tax; a 10% service charge applies at more expensive hotels.

HOMESTAYS IN LADAKH

A growing number of village farmhouses around Ladakh and Zanskar are opening their spare rooms to paying guests, providing a fascinating window onto the Ladakhi way of life. Facilities are modest – a pile of rugs and blankets for bedding and candles for light – but the rooms are surprisingly cosy and everyone eats together in the family kitchen, with all the pots and pans proudly on display. You may even be able to help with the harvesting and planting work in the family fields.

Homestays around the Indus Valley can be arranged through Himalayan Homestays (www.himalayan-homestays.com) for around Rs 350/600 per single/double. For bookings, contact Snow Leopard Trails (Map p371; ☎ 252074; Hotel Kanglhachen Complex) or Overland Escape (Map p371; ☎ 250858; Fort Rd).

Hotel Yak Tail (Map p371; ☎ 252118; www.hotelyaktail.com; Fort Rd; s/d from Rs1300/1800) Chintzy but charming is the best way to describe this big courtyard hotel on Fort Rd. Eating Banana-pancake breakfasts and pizza suppers are de rigueur in Leh, though you can also find tingmo (steamed Tibetan bread), momos, chowmein (fried noodles) and thukpa (noodle soup). As well as the following places, Changspa and Fort Rd have numerous garden restaurants, open from July until September, when the owners decamp to Goa.

The following restaurants open daily from early morning to late at night unless otherwise mentioned.

Sharing a courtyard next to the Bank of India on Main Bazar, Food Affair and the All Ladakh Unemployed Youth Association serve cheap snacks and chai to an eager crowd of penny-watching travellers.

Pumpernickel German Bakery (Map p371; Main Bazar; snacks Rs 15-60) A useful noticeboard, cheap cakes and sandwiches, and low, low prices keep this place full of travellers through the season.

Lamayuru Restaurant (Map p371; Fort Rd; mains from Rs 30) An old traveller hangout, complete with old travellers. Come here for inexpensive Indian, Chinese and international snack meals and a good noticeboard.

Tenzin Dickey Tibetan (Map p371; Fort Rd, mains from Rs 30) For travellers who can't get enough of momos and thukpa, this vegetarian Tibetan restaurant pushes all the right buttons.

Hotel Neha (Map p371; Main Bazar; snack meals under Rs 40) Locals flock to this Punjabi place for pure-veg snacks like channa puri (chickpea curry with bread) and Indian sweets.

La Pizzeria (Map p371; Changspa Lane; pizzas & mains Rs 50-200) A popular drinking hole and dinner spot for the Changspa crowd, with above-average pizzas and a roasting open fire in the evenings.

La Terrasse (Map p371; Main Bazar; dishes Rs 50-200) A stalwart of the traveller scene, serving cold beers and food from an eclectic Indian, Chinese, Tibetan, European and Israeli menu. As well as the roof terrace, there's an indoor dining room for cold nights.

Gesmo Restaurant (Map p371; Fort Rd; snack meals Rs 40-180) A reliable coffee shop and travellers restaurant that stays open late into autumn – cakes and hot drinks are the main attractions.

Booklovers Retreat (Map p369; Changspa Lane; meals Rs 40-100; 7am-11pm) A surprisingly sophisticated option for old Changspa, this place serves a full range of coffees, teas and snacks, and there's a bookshop, in case you didn't bring your own.

Leh View Restaurant (Map p371; Main Bazar; mains Rs 60-130) A Kashmiri-owned place, with meaty Kashmiri curries as well as the usual traveller fare. Go up to the roof terrace for dinner with a view.

our pick Summer Harvest (Map p371; Fort Rd; mains Rs 50-120) Top-notch Indian and Chinese food, cold beers and international sports on the TV attract travellers to this inviting restaurant.

Himalaya Café (Map p371; Main Bazar; mains Rs 60-120) One of several top-floor restaurants at the south end of Main Bazar, serving good Chinese and Indian fast food in calming modern surroundings. There's also a roof terrace.

Il Forno (Map p371; Zangsti Rd; pizzas Rs 80-120) This unassuming rooftop place serves the best pizzas in town, washed down with icy cold beers, but only until late September.

Tibetan Kitchen (Map p371; Fort Rd; mains Rs 60-180; 11am-10.30pm) Evening tables should be booked in the afternoon (in person) at this classy restaurant at the Hotel Tso-Kar. The menu has lots of Tibetan specialities such as sha bakleh (bread stuffed with meat) and ruchowtse (cheese and vegetable momos in soup), but no alcohol.

QUICK EATS

There's a fruit and vegetable market (Map p371) at the junction with Fort Rd and Old Fort Rd. You can buy freshly baked Tibetan bread from the traditional wood-fired Ladakhi bakeries (Map p371) behind the Jama Masjid.

Drinking

Most of the garden and rooftop restaurants serve beer but it never appears on the menu so ask the waiter. There's also a liquor store near the Jammu & Kashmir Bank. Chang (rice beer) is hard to find beyond festival time; try asking at your hotel or in the vegetable market.

Popular drinking holes include Summer Harvest and La Terrasse – see Eating.

Entertainment

CULTURAL PERFORMANCES

Dance troupes put on shows of traditional Ladakhi song and dance at around 5.30pm on summer evenings (spectators pay Rs 50) in front of Kangri Hotel (Map p371) and the courtyard of the Soma Gompa.

SPORT

Local teams play weekly matches at the polo ground on Tuesdays and Saturdays.

Shopping

Leh is packed with souvenir shops. There are some wonderful things on offer – from thangkas and Ladakhi hats to heavy turquoise jewellery and wooden choktse (Tibetan tables) – but be aware that many souvenirs are trucked in from China, Kashmir and Nepal, providing little benefit to local people.

Probably the best selection in town is at Ladakh Art Palace (Map p371; ☎ 252116; Main Bazar; 9am-7.30pm), but prices are somewhat inflated. Nearby, Buddhist Thangka House (Map p371; ☎ 255669; Main Bazar; 9am-6pm) has a good range of thangkas, starting at Rs 1500.

The Ecology Centre (Map p369) and Women's Alliance (Map p369) sell locally produced crafts and clothes. Wooden choktse tables carved with images of mythical beasts are available from the Handicrafts Industrial Cooperative Shop (Map p371; Old Fort Rd; 9am-6pm) and Wamda Wood Carving (Map p371; Old Fort Rd; 9am-6pm).

Brokpa women sell dried apricots, apples and nuts along Main Bazar, or head to Ladag Apricot Store (Map p371; Old Fort Rd; 9am-6pm) and Dzomsa (Map p371; ☎ 250699; Main Bazar; 8am-9pm) for packed apricots and delicious 'apricot leather' (dried sheets of pounded apricot pulp).

It's also worth checking out the local bazaar (Map p371), between Main Bazar and the Polo Ground, for traditional Ladakhi robes, machine-made carpets and antiques.

Getting There & Away

AIR

The dramatic flight into Leh is the only way to reach Ladakh in winter, but flights may be cancelled at short notice because of bad weather. It can take days to rearrange your booking, so build some flexibility into your plans.

Security at Leh airport is tight and no hand luggage is allowed on flights leaving Leh. You can take your camera and laptop in the cabin, but only if the battery is placed in the hold. If you want aerial photographs of Ladakh, there are no restrictions on cameras on flights into Leh.

Both Indian Airlines (Map p369; ☎ 252076; Fort Rd; ⏰ 10am-1pm & 2-5pm) and Jet Airways (Map p371; ☎ 250999; Main Bazar; ⏰ 10am-5pm Mon-Sat, till 3pm Sun) have at least one daily flight between Delhi and Leh (US$170, one hour). Both airlines operate a reduced service in winter. Indian Airlines also flies to Srinagar (US$102, one hour) on Wednesday and Jammu (US$112, 45 minutes) on Friday and Sunday.

BUS

Local and long-distance public buses leave from several stands at the main bus station (Map p369), 700m south of the centre (on foot, cut through the bazaar by the Friendship Gate). Double-check times before traipsing down here with your bags.

Local Villages

Villages buses tend to leave Leh in the afternoon and return the following morning. The minibus stand at the main bus station has services to destinations mentioned in the boxed text, left.

In season, Himachal Pradesh Tourist Development Corporation (HPTDC; ☎ 252297/252095) buses leave at around 4.30am daily; the fare is Rs 1600, including tented accommodation at Keylong. The Himachal Rd Transport Corporation (HRTC) and Jammu & Kashmir State Road Transport Corporation (J&KSRTC) offer ordinary buses at the same time for Rs 525 (accommodation in Keylong is extra).

Privately owned buses leave around 3.30am, costing about Rs 1000, including tented accommodation at Keylong (or Sarchu). You can book with any travel agency in Leh.

Nubra Valley

Buses to Nubra leave from the Ladakh Bus Operators Cooperative (☎ 252792) booth at the main bus stand. There's an 8am bus to Diskit (Rs 102, six hours) on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, returning the following day at 7am. A single bus to Sumur (Rs 101, 6am) leaves at 6am on Thursday and Saturday only, returning the next morning. Note that groups of less than four may be turned back, even with a Nubra permit.

Western Ladakh

Buses to the west of Ladakh leave from the Ladakh Bus Operators Cooperative (☎ 252792) at the north end of the main bus station. Bus times and fares are listed in the boxed text, p378 – all services go via Nimmu (Rs 20, one hour) and Basgo (Rs 24, 1¼ hours). To reach destinations west of Khalsi, take any bus from Leh to Kargil or Srinagar – see 'To/From Kashmir & Kargil', below.

Kashmir & Kargil

The Leh to Srinagar road is usually open from the end of May to early November. The trip takes two days with an overnight stop in Kargil (or occasionally Drass). Buses bound for Srinagar have to clear the pass by 5am, forcing a 2am start from Kargil.

Destination	Fare (Rs)	Duration (hr)	Departures
Alchi	54	3	8am, 4pm
Khalsi	78	4½	3pm

Book the day before. Private buses to Srinagar (Rs 800) and Kargil (Rs 500) leave from behind the Polo Ground at 5am.

MOTORCYCLE

Several places on Changspa Rd and Main Bazar rent out motorcycles for local exploration, but the only petrol stations are at Leh, Choglamsar, Phyang and Kargil. Always check that you are insured for third-party claims.

Discover Himalaya Adventure (Map p371; ☎ 250353; Main Bazar) rents mopeds for Rs 400 per day and various 100cc to 125cc motorcycles for Rs 500 per day.

SHARE JEEPS

Share jeeps to Manali and Kargil run from July to mid-October. Once the public and private buses stop running over the Rohtang La, this is only way to reach Manali by road.

The Ladakh Taxi Operators Cooperative (☎ 252723) at the north end of the main bus station sells advance tickets for Manali (Rs 1000 to 1500, 14 hours). Check the night before to find out your taxi number; taxis leave at around 1am.

Regular jeeps to Kargil (Rs 500, 12 hours) leave from the old bus stand near the Friendship Gate. A few jeeps leave for Srinagar (Rs 1000, 18 hours) at around 3.30pm.

TAXI

Near the tourist office, the Ladakh Taxi Operators Cooperative (☎ 252723; Fort Rd; 🕑 7am-7pm) offers drop-offs and jeep tours as far afield as Nubra, Kargil and Manali. The union sets the prices; popular tours include Shey, Thiksey and Hemis (Rs 1047), Alchi, Likir and Rizong (Rs 1910), and the Nubra Valley (two/three days Rs 5542/6931). TRUCK

Goods trucks pick up paying hitchhikers throughout Ladakh, but this is rarely cheaper than the bus fare. Bear in mind that drink driving is a serious problem, particularly on trucks between Manali and Leh.

Getting Around

TO/FROM AIRPORT

The prepaid taxi stand offers transfers to central Leh for around Rs 110, or you can walk to the highway and flag down a public bus for Rs 5. Some drivers tout for hotels but most give up if you stand your ground.

TAXI

Taxis charge Rs 50 to 70 for short trips around town. Arrange a taxi the night before for early morning trips to the bus stand.

BICYCLE

The gompas of the Indus Valley are easily accessible by rented bike. In Changspa, Himalayan Bikers (Map p369; ☎ 250937; www.thehimalayanbikers.com; Changspa Lane) rents out mountain bikes for Rs 250 to 500 per day. It also arranges cycle tours to Pangong Tso and the Khardung La (jeeps take you up, gravity takes you down).

TREKKING IN LADAKH

The mountains of Ladakh provide some inspirational trekking country, but many routes climb above 5000m, so proper acclimatisation is essential to avoid AMS – see Health (p1188). Treks are possible throughout the summer, but independent trekking is risky; trails are unmarked, food and water can be hard to find, and there are few people to help if you get into trouble. Unless you are experienced with navigation and survival at altitude, play it safe and join an organised trek. Whichever way you go, make sure that your travel insurance covers you for emergency helicopter evacuation.

Trekking agencies in Leh offer inclusive treks with a guide, packhorses, food and supplies for around US$60 per person per day. See p373 for a list of reliable operators. Check the gear provided before setting out and make sure that you are clear what the fee is covering; if any of the services you have paid for are missing, demand that the agent fixes things before you leave.

Food supplies should be carried from Leh, as there are few places to stay or eat on trekking routes. Carry a gas or liquid fuel stove to minimise your consumption of firewood and carry out all your litter with you – see p98 for more on responsible trekking.

The following are some of the most popular routes. Serious trekkers should refer to Lonely Planet's Trekking in the Indian Himalaya.

ASCENT OF STOK KANGRI

This dramatic 6120m peak looms over the village of Stok, across the valley from Leh. Despite the elevation, pre-acclimatised trekkers can complete the ascent in four to five days. However, you should carry clothing for cold conditions above the snow line and allow plenty of acclimatisation time.

Starting from Stok, the trail passes through green pastures then rugged desert to the Stok Kangri base camp at 4800m, with an overnight acclimatisation stop at Mankarmo. From here, you can achieve the summit and return in one gruelling day, or play it safe with a second stop above the snowline at Stok Kangri High Camp (5300m).

Trekkers are normally roped together for the ascent to the snow-blanketed summit, which is marked by billowing prayer flags. On clear days, the views across the Indus Valley and Himalaya rival what you see from the airplane on the flight into Leh. The descent from the base camp to Stok can be completed in one day. See the boxed text, above, for details of trek.

ASCENT OF STOK KANGRI

Stage	Route	Duration (hr)
1	Stok to Mankarmo	4-5
2	Mankarmo to Stok Kangri Base Camp	3-4
3	Stok Kangri Base Camp to High Camp	3-4
4	High Camp to summit to Stok Kangri Base Camp	6-7
5	Stok Kangri Base Camp to Stok	4-5

SPITUK TO MARKHA VALLEY & HEMIS

The trailhead for this popular eight- or nine-day trek is Spituk Gompa, though taxis can take you as far as Rumbuk, shaving a few hours off the first leg of the journey. It is also possible to start this trek from Stok, or from Chiling on the west bank of the Zanskar River, crossing by cableway.

From Spituk, the route follows the Zingchen Valley for two days to Ganda La (4920m), with a one-day acclimatisation stop en route. On the far side of the pass, it's a steady descent to the Markha Valley and the village of Skiu. Another day will take you to Markha village,

7	Nimaling to Shang Sumdo via Kongmaru La	6
8	Shang Sumdo to Martselang	4-5
9	Martselang to Hemis	3-4

where the trail climbs again to rolling yak pastures at Nimaling.

From Nimaling, the path strains upwards again to Kongmaru La (5030m), a lofty eyrie with knee-trembling views north and south. After crossing the pass there's another camp at Shang Sumdo before you descend to Hemis Gompa. This last stage can be completed in one long day or two days with a stop in Martselang. See the boxed text, p379, for details of trek.

Parachute-tented camps offer basic accommodation and meals through the Markha Valley during the trekking season. An alternative is to sleep at the homestays springing up along the route (see the boxed text, p374).

LAMAYURU TO CHILING VIA DUNG DUNG LA

Starting from Lamayuru Gompa, this trek traverses the Zanskar Range and returns to the Indus Valley via the Zanskar River. Alternative trekking destinations from Lamayuru include Alchi, Stok and Padum in Zanskar.

Heading to Chiling, the trail crosses the valley and climbs over Prinkiti La (3750m) to the ancient gompa at Wanla. Another day takes you to Hinju at the base of Konze La (4950m), where an acclimatisation day is recommended before crossing the pass. From Konze La there are impressive views of the East Karakoram Range before a short descent to Sumdo Chinmu.

The following stage ascends the 4820m Dung Dung La, offering giddying views of the Zanskar Range and river. You can complete the journey to Chiling in a long day and be back in Leh by evening. See the boxed text, left, for details of the trek. Some people combine this trek with the Markha Valley trek.

AROUND LEH

☎ 01982

The Indus Valley is strewn with small villages and medieval monasteries that make interesting day trips from Leh by rented motorcycle or public bus (see p377). Spituk and Phyang are reached via the Kargil road, while Choglamsar, Thiksey and Shey lie on the road to Manali. The back road from Choglamsar to Karu provides access to the gompas on the west bank of the Indus.

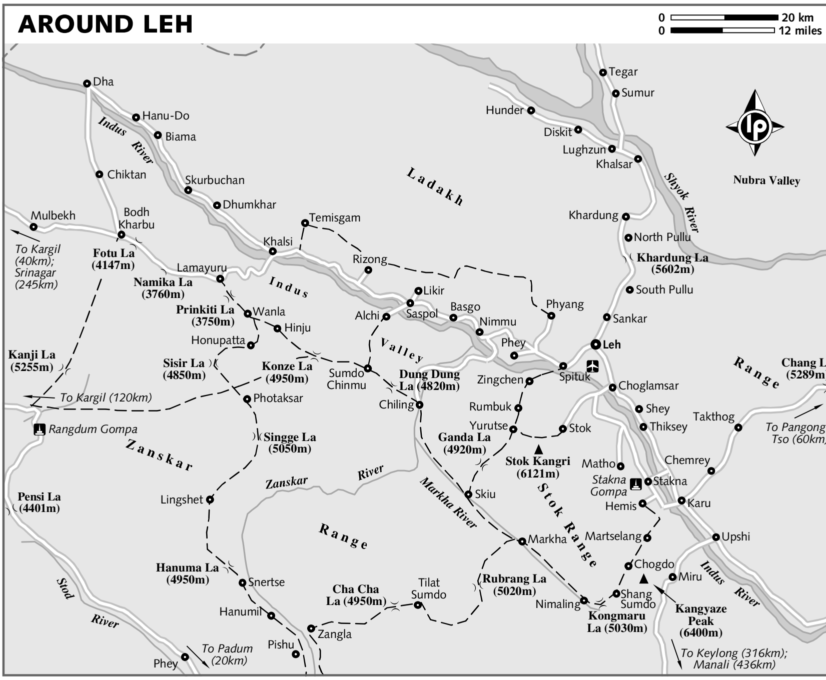
The gompas in the following villages are usually open to visitors from sunrise to sunset, but you may have to find a monk to open the doors.

Spituk

Crowning a small hill behind the airport, Spituk Gompa (admission Rs 20) was built in the 15th century by the Gelukpa order. The prayer halls feature fine murals and some impressive statues of the protector deities, including Vajrabhairava and bull-headed Yamantaka. Chaam dances are held for the Gu-Stor festival (p351) in January. Be cautious of taking photographs out over the airport army base.

Spituk is the main trailhead for the seven-day Markha Valley trek to Hemis (p379).

Phyang



About 5km past Spituk, a track runs north from the main road to picturesque Phyang Gompa (admission Rs 25), founded in the 16th century. The main chamber has impressive statues of Avalokitesvara and Amitabha, while the smaller gokhang contains statues of Mahakala and other protector deities. Every third year, a giant thangka is unveiled here as part of the Phyang Tsedup festival (p351) in July and August.

Life in the village farms and orchards moves at a serene pace dictated only by the seasons. Hidden North (☎ 226007; www.hiddennorth.com; tent Rs 60, s/d with shared bathroom Rs 150/250) is a delightful guesthouse, set in lovely lawns and gardens in the middle of Phyang.

Choglamsar

Almost a suburb of Leh, Choglamsar is home to thousands of Tibetan refugees and the Dalai Lama has a photang (ceremonial residence) here for official visits. Sights include the large Karma Dupgyud Choeling Gompa on the main road and the refugee camp itself, which has a traditional Tibetan amchi clinic and a centre for Buddhist studies. Choglamsar is also the turn-off for the back road to Stok, Matho, Stakna and Hemis.

AROUND LEH

Travellers with a spiritual inclination can take three- and 10-day residential courses in vipassana meditation at the Mahabodhi Meditation Centre (☎ 264372; www.mahabodhi-ladakh.org; dm Rs 150, r 350-500; 💻); the website has details. You can stay here even if you don't take a course.

There are plenty of roadhouse-style restaurants serving beers and momos on the main road.

Near the gompa, this spic and span Buddha Garden Guesthouse (☎ 244074; dm Rs 100, r Rs 200-300; 🕑 Apr-Sep) is run by a friendly, mothering, Tibetan lady. Bathrooms are shared but the water is hot and home-cooked meals are available.

Shey

About 15km southeast of Leh, Shey was once the summer capital of Ladakh. Although damaged by time and the elements, the Royal Palace (admission Rs 20; 🕑 8am-7pm May-Oct) is still a place of worship and the prayer room contains a two-storey gilded copper statue of Sakyamuni (the historical Buddha), installed in 1645. Behind the palace, reached by a precarious scramble along the ridge, the ruins of Shey fort offer heart-stopping views over the Indus Valley.

Just east of the palace is a field of giant white chortens, surrounding the tiny Shey Gompa. The gold-roofed building on the edge of the valley is the photang (official residence) of the local lama.

Down a lane opposite the palace, the tidy Besthang Guest House (☎ 264081; r with shared bathroom Rs 200) offers a warm, family welcome and there's a sunny, flower-filled garden.

Thiksey Gompa

About 2km south of Shey, glorious Thiksey Gompa (admission Rs 20) is practically a town inside a monastery. Hundreds of monks live and work in the whitewashed huts that cover the hillside. The main gompa has two prayer chambers – the eastern chamber contains a mesmerising 14m-high statue of Maitreya (the future Buddha) in a magnificent jewelled headdress, while the western chamber has wonderful statues of dharmapalas – enlightened humans who have adopted a fearful aspect to show their detachment from the ignorance of the physical world. A rear chamber contains murals of flayed human beings and treasures dating back to the founding of the gompa in the 15th century.

Most people come here for the early morning puja (literally 'respect'; offering or prayers) at 7am, which features synchronised chanting from the sutras (Buddhist books). Every year in October and November, Thiksey holds extravagant masked dances for Gu-Stor (p351). Sand mandalas are often prepared here for smaller local festivals.

Run by the gompa, the genteel Chamba Hotel (☎ 267011; kthiksey@vsnl.com; r Rs 300) is the only place to stay. Rooms have private bathrooms and there's a small garden and a restaurant serving Indo-Chinese meals.

Stok

Crossing over the Indus, Stok is the official home to the Ladakhi royal family. Stripped of their power in 1846, the royals now live a comparatively modest life, dividing their time between stately Stok Palace (admission Rs 25; 8am-1pm & 2-7pm May-Oct) and a private mansion in Manali. Many of the family treasures – including ceremonial robes, jewellery, votive objects, thangkas, photos and the Royal tea service – are displayed in the palace museum.

In February/March, Stok holds the important Guru Tse-Chu festival (p351), where the royal oracles make predictions about the future. Behind the palace, peaceful lanes wind past whitewashed farmhouses and fields with the peak of Stok Kangri (6120m) looming overhead. About 1km north of the palace is tiny Stok Gompa, with retouched murals and statues of Mahakala and other deities.

Close to the palace and set in a humble village house, Kalden Guesthouse (☎ 242057; r with shared bathroom Rs 150; May-Oct) has simple, carpeted rooms overlooking the kitchen garden.

Downhill from the palace are the very similar Hotel Highland (☎ 242005; r from Rs 1000) and Hotel Skittsal (☎ 242051; www.skittsal.com; r from Rs 1800), upmarket Ladakhi-style buildings with comfortable ensuite rooms and good restaurants.

Matho

About 10km southeast of Stok, monumental Matho Gompa (admission Rs 20) soars high above the valley on an impregnable rocky buttress. The views over the valley are stupendous and this is the only monastery in Ladakh belonging to the obscure Sakya sect. The prayer rooms contain some striking murals and statues of Sakyamuni, Avalokitesvara and Maitreya.

During the annual Nagrang festival (p351) in February and March, the monastery oracles carry out daring acts of acrobatics while blindfolded, then engage in ritual acts of self-mutilation before making predictions for the coming year.

Stakna

Across the floodplain from Matho, little Stakna Gompa (admission Rs 20) crowns a hillock overlooking the Indus. The monastery was founded by a lama from Bhutan, and the Bhutanese influence is obvious from the murals inside. There are three, interlinked prayer rooms, some with frescoes dating back to the 16th century.

You can get here by bus along the Leh–Manali Hwy – ask the driver to let you down near the Stakna turn-off and walk across the miniature suspension bridge.

Hemis Gompa

The revered gompa (admission Rs 30) at Hemis is screened from the rest of the valley by a narrow gorge, but as soon as the monastery comes into view, you'll understand what the fuss is about. This is one of the largest and grandest gompas in Ladakh, with three thangka-filled prayer halls fronting onto a vast courtyard, used for masked dances during the Tse-Chu festival (p351) in June and July. Every 12 years, the largest thangka in Ladakh – a massive 12m-wide and four-storeys high – is unfurled from the top of the monastery. The next ceremony is in 2016. Upstairs is an 8m-high statue of Padmasambhava in all his popeyed glory.

In the basement of the gompa, Hemis Spiritual Retreat (☎ 249011; r Rs 200; Jun-Sep) offers rudimentary but clean monks' cells with shared bathrooms. Just downhill from the gompa, Hemis Restaurant & Camping (camping per tent Rs 100) has a basic camping plot and simple meals.

If you come by motorcycle, turn off the Leh–Manali road at Karu and make a left near the winding mani wall (made from stones carved with mantras).

CHEMREY VALLEY

At Karu, a side road branches north towards Chang La (5289m), the third-highest motorable pass in the world. The lower reaches of the Chemrey Valley are accessible by bus or taxi, but you need a permit to cross the pass and visit the serene lake at Pangong Tso.

Chemrey village is dominated by the beautifully proportioned, but little visited, Thekchhok Gompa (admission Rs 20). Built in the 17th century, the main prayer hall contains murals of the 1000 Buddhas and a chamber on the 4th floor has a 3m-high statue of Padmasambhava. There are masked dances here in November for the Chemrey Angchok festival (see p351).

Beyond Chemrey, the road climbs to Shakti, a sprawling farming village with a large army base and the ruins of a huge fort, just north on the road to Takthog.

Some 7km north of Shakti, tiny Takthog Gompa (admission Rs 20) is the only Nyingmapa monastery in the upper Indus. The prayer chamber is set in a cave where the great sage Padmasambhava meditated in the 8th century. From here, the road climbs to the Wari La (5273m), a possible starting point for treks into the Nubra Valley.

The only accommodation in the valley is the basic J&K Tourist Bungalow (s/d Rs 200/350) at Takthog, but you'll have to find the chowkidar (attendant) to open the doors. Book with the Tourist Reception Centre (☎ 252094) in Leh.

Buses to Shakti (Rs 35, 1½ hours) leave regularly from the main bus station in Leh, or you can hire a taxi for the day for Rs 1100.

Pangong Tso

Beyond Chang La, another breathtaking valley system opens up, backing onto the Karakoram Mountains. Most of the valley floor is covered by the gently rippling waters of Pangong Tso, which runs east for 130km into Tibet. The lake is brackish with mineral salts and the windblown shores have a wild, melancholy beauty.

You can only visit with a permit, arranged through a travel agent in Leh, and visitors must turn back at Spangmik, about 7km along the southwest shore. Most visits are during a long day trip, but you may be able to find accommodation in Tangtse village, 40km before the lake.

NUBRA VALLEY

☎ 01982

From Leh, a rough road runs north over the awesome Khardung La, the highest motorable pass in the world. Even in summer, the crossing is crusted in permafrost and the Border Roads Organisation faces an ongoing battle to keep the pass open through winter and autumn. Beyond the pass is the wide, flat Nubra Valley, crisscrossed by the winding channels of the Shyok and Nubra Rivers.

At first glance, the valley seems parched and dry, but this is prime farming land by Ladakhi standards. Farmers grow apples, apricots and barley and harvest the orange berries of the tsestalulu (sea buckthorn bush). Dotted around the valley are ancient gompas and ruined palaces, and villages are close enough together to make this magnificent walking country.

However, you do need a permit, which only allows travel as far as Hunder and Panamik for a maximum of seven days – see the boxed tex, p366. You must hand over photocopies of your permit on both sides of the Khardung La and also by the bridge to Sumur.

Note that guesthouses are often booked up by tour groups in summer – arrange a room in advance unless you fancy a chilly night under the stars. In all the sleeping places listed in this section, bucket hot water costs Rs 10 to 20.

Getting There & Away

Traffic towards Nubra can only cross the Khardung La from dawn until 10am; vehicles heading to Leh then have exclusive use of the road from 1pm to 6pm. From November to May, Nubra-bound traffic can use the road on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday mornings, while Leh-bound traffic is restricted to Wednesday, Friday and Sunday mornings (the road closes every Monday for repairs).

Because of the requirement to visit in a group of four, most people visit on a tour arranged through a travel agent in Leh. Expect to pay US$60 per day, including accommodation. Alternatively, you can arrange the permit through a travel agent and then travel independently by jeep or bus – see p376. However, soldiers have been known to turn back groups of less than four at the Khardung La, even with the correct permit.

Getting Around

There's a limited public bus service around the valley, Monday to Saturday. Buses leave Diskit for Sumur (Rs 25, two hours) at 8am and 3pm, returning at similar times the following day. The 8am bus continues to Panamik (Rs 45, 2½ hours). Local buses run every few hours between Disket and Hunder for Rs 10.

Jeeps at Diskit bus stand charge Rs 250 to Hunder, Rs 1035 to Sumur, Rs 1775 to Panamik and Rs 3300 to Leh,

Leh to Diskit

The road to Nubra is officially open year-round, but snow and rockfalls can close the road for days between October and May.

The first stop on the route is the military camp at South Pullu, where foreigners must register and show permits. From here, the road is a crudely drawn line of gravel and dust right up to the Khardung La at 5602m. This lofty cleft in the mountain wall is chilly and desolate, but the views are what eagles see as they soar over the Himalaya and you can pat yourself on the back for surviving the highest motorable road in the world.

On the far side, the road slips and slides to the military camp at North Pullu, where foreigners again register and hand over a copy of the Nubra permit. If you misjudge the timing, you may end up stuck in either North or South Pullu until the road opens in your direction of travel.

From North Pullu, the road winds down to Khardung, a yak-herding village with a small but friendly gompa hidden behind a baffle of scrubby trees.

Beyond Khardung, the road dives to the valley floor and the dusty village of Khalsar, which has a few teahouses for truckers. Beyond Khalsar, the road forks; the left branch follows the Shyok River to Diskit and Hunder, while the right branch follows the Nubra River to Sumur and Panamik.

Diskit

elev 3144m

Sprawling over the floodplain on the south bank of the Shyok River, Diskit is the main town in the Nubra Valley, which means it has several government offices in addition to the usual cluster of whitewashed farmhouses. The main attraction here is the 17th-century Diskit Gompa (admission Rs 20), reached by a winding road or the dirt track starting near the stream in the middle of the village. Stone steps climb to the main prayer hall, which enshrines a huge Maitreya statue and a giant drum. Upstairs is a dramatic lookout, and a second chamber with effigies of demonic protectors. The gompa holds a major festival for Dosmoche (see p351) in February. Downhill is the photang (official residence) of the head lama of Nubra, dwarfed by an enormous statue of Chamba (Maitreya).

SLEEPING & EATING

Most guesthouses in Diskit are south of the main road, around the whitewashed mani wall that cuts through the middle of the village.

Kharyok Guest House (☎ 220050; camping per tent Rs 70, r without/with bathroom Rs 150/300) On the main road, this big white house doubles as the village shop. Rooms are large and there's a big private courtyard.

Karakoram Guest House (☎ 220024; camping per person Rs 100, r from Rs 200) Downhill from the prayer wheel and off to the right, this is a family farmhouse with a new block of rooms. The welcome is warm and you can pitch your tent in the garden.

Sunrise Guest House (☎ 220011; r without/with bathroom Rs 250/500; year-round) Nearby, Sunrise offers an eclectic mix of rooms, set in a shaded sunflower garden facing the mani wall.

Olthang Guest House (☎ 220067; own tent Rs 70, permanent tent Rs 250, d/tr with shared bathroom Rs 200/250, d with private bathroom in old/new bldg Rs 300/700; year-round) A rapidly expanding place on the main road through Diskit, with rooms in an old mud-brick farmhouse and a newer hotel block, plus a peaceful meadow campground across the road.

Hunder

Beyond Diskit, the highway passes through a wide area of rolling sand dunes before reaching the sprawl of farmhouses and scrubby trees at Hunder. Foreigners can only travel as far as the bridge at the west end of the village. Immediately before the bridge is the squat Hunder Gompa, containing a large gilded statue of Chamba; ask around for the monastery attendant. Across the road, a crude trail climbs to two crumbling Buddhist temples and the ruins of a vast compound of pilgrims' quarters. The fort at the top of the ridge offers inspirational views, but the exposed scramble up here is not for the fainthearted.

SLEEPING & EATING

The guesthouses in Hunder are strung out below the highway, on the winding main road through the village.

Snow Leopard Guest House (☎ 221097; camping per tent Rs 100, r without/with bathroom Rs 200/400) A plush affair on the way into the village, with several buildings in a flower-filled garden. More expensive rooms have geysers (hot-water heaters) in the bathrooms.

> GETTING THE HUMP
> Left behind from the days of the Silk Route, there are still some shaggy Bactrian (two-humped) camels in the sand dunes of the Nubra Valley. These inscrutable beasts of burden can be hired for sand-dune safaris between Diskit and Hunder, or longer excursions around the valley. Ask at local guesthouses – rates start at around Rs 500 per hour.

Jamshed Guest House (☎ 221158; tent Rs 75, s with shared bathroom Rs 300, d with private bathroom Rs 350) A short stroll from the gompa, this well-tended place offers large village-style rooms in the family home and several outbuildings, or you can camp in the garden.

Moon Land Guest House (☎ 221048; r from Rs 200) Signposted off the road, this pretty white-washed farmhouse offers rustic rooms and the sound of trickling streams. The owners speak limited English.

Goba Guesthouse (☎ 221083; r without/with bathroom from Rs 200/500) A newish and bright abode.

Milky Way Guest House (☎ 221041; r without/with bathroom Rs 300/350) Even closer to the gompa, the Milky Way is another village house that has been sensitively modernised. Rooms are tidy and clean.

The monks at Thiksey Gompa run a luxury tented camp at Hunder in the summertime; contact the gompa committee on ☎ 267011 for details.

Sumur

elev 3096m

On the far side of the valley, another dramatic gorge runs north along the Nubra River. Sumur is the largest village here, a pretty, green settlement with some interesting Buddhist relics. About 1km uphill from Sumur is the huge Samstemling Gompa, with a school full of friendly novice monks and a number of old and modern prayer halls full of quite distinguished murals.

Further north on the main road is the small village of Tegar (Tiger), with a small, adobe gompa enshrining a giant prayer wheel. Above the road are the burnt-out ruins of the Zamskhang Palace, a former residence of the kings of Nubra, surrounded by tiny stupas filled with thousands of votive clay tablets left here by pilgrims on the Silk Rd. There's another medieval gompa a few kilometres north at Pinchimik.

SLEEPING

Most of Sumur's guesthouses are spread out along the lane striking east from the prayer wheel on the main road. Bucket hot water costs Rs 10 to Rs 20.

Largyal Guesthouse (☎ 223537; camping per person Rs 50, r with shared bathroom Rs 250) Right at the back of the village, this place benefits from a quiet location and a working farm atmosphere.

AO Guesthouse (☎ 223506; r Rs 250) Next to the Jammu & Kashmir Bank, this place has a decent restaurant and a range of plain rooms with bathrooms, plus a family room with low Ladakhi beds.

Hotel Yarabtso (☎ 223544; r with private bathroom Rs 1000-1800) North of the centre in Tegar, this tastefully converted village house caters to tour groups looking for a little more luxury. The soft beds are enticing after a day on the road and the garden is a riot of colour.

North of the high school are Namgyal Guesthouse (☎ 223505; camping per person Rs 70, r without/with bathroom Rs 300/400) and LP Namgail Guesthouse (r without/with bathroom Rs 250/300), both friendly village houses with spacious rooms and huge gardens.

Panamik

elev 3183m

About 28km north of Sumur, the village of Panamik is the most northerly point open to foreigners in India. Although not particularly scenic, there are some dingy hot springs and you can trek 8km to the river bridge at Hargam and on to the stunningly remote Ensa Gompa.

Opposite the hot springs, Hot Springs Guesthouse (☎ 247043; r without/with bathroom Rs 200/300) offers decent rooms and hot meals to the few visitors who stay overnight.

RUPSU VALLEY

Framed by humbling mountain scenery, the serene lake of Tso Moriri winds along the bottom of the Rupsu Valley, tucked against the Western Himalaya about 240km southeast of Leh. The waters are mildly brackish from mineral salts dissolving out of the surrounding rocks and the area is inhabited by nomadic Khampa people, who migrate across the Himalaya with herds of goats, cows and yaks. Wildlife is plentiful – you stand a good chance of seeing rare Himalayan birds, as well as kiang (wild ass), foxes and marmots. There's a 19th-century gompa in the village of Korzok, just west of the lake, which also has a striking photang.

About 50km north of Tso Moriri is the smaller lake of Tso Kar, accessible by jeep or a four- to five-day trek. Overlooking the lake-shore, the wind-scoured village of Thukse has a small but atmospheric gompa.

All visitors to Rupsu need a permit arranged through a travel agent in Leh; the only accommodation for independent travellers is the informal campsite by the gompa in Korzok. You'll need to bring everything you require from Leh, including food and potable water, and take everything out with you when you go. Jeep trips from Leh cost US$60 per day; many people visit the lake as a detour on the way to Manali or Keylong.

The road to Korzok is OK for off-road cycles but difficult for motorcycles because of drifting sand. However, there are no good maps and the route is very poorly signposted.

WEST OF LEH

☎ 01982

Beyond Nimmu, the road to Kargil enters a barren wasteland that stretches most of the way to Kashmir. This is rugged country, but the dun colours of the desert are occasionally broken by small islands of green, where farms and villages cling to the sides of small rivers and streams. All the villages along the valley are accessible by public bus from Leh; see p377. Passports are checked at Khalsi, and motorcyclists should be aware that there are no petrol stations between Phyang and Kargil. For more information on getting to the following towns, see p377.

Basgo

About 40km west of Leh, Basgo was the capital of lower Ladakh before the kingdom was united at Leh. Until recently, this fascinating World Heritage site was crumbling into dust, but Unesco and the Basgo Welfare Committee have joined forces to restore the ancient citadel compound.

Today, Basgo's Chamba Gompa (admission Rs 20) is one of the highlights of the Indus Valley. The mural work inside has been spectacularly restored using traditional colours and techniques; images of bodhisattvas and celestial beings even cover the ceiling. The main building contains a two-storey statue of Maitreya, and there's a second gompa just downhill with another outsized Maitreya statue. The ruins of the citadel are scattered across the surrounding hills.

Basgo has nowhere to eat or sleep but there are roadhouses for meals in nearby Nimmu, 2km back towards Leh near the confluence of the green Indus and the murky brown Zanskar River. A road is slowly being built from here to Padum in Zanskar.

Likir

☎ 01982

About 68km from Leh and tucked into a side valley, the village of Likir is home to the 11th-century Klu-kkhyil Gompa (admission Rs 20), reached by a 40-minute trek along the river. Inside, you can see several prayer rooms full of statues and murals and an interesting museum (🕑 8am-1pm & 2-6pm, till 4pm winter) with thangkas and religious objects – including a kapala (ceremonial bowl) made from a human skull and a kangling (ceremonial flute) made from a human femur. In front of the gompa is a gaudy 7m statue of Maitreya. Chaam dances take place in February for the Dosmoche festival (see p351).

Farmhouses above the gompa rent basic rooms for Rs 200 to 300; camping is possible in the garden of the Likir Monastery School.

Reached via a small track off the main village road, the roomy Norboo Spon Guest House (☎ 227137; tent Rs 50, s/d half-board Rs 200/400) offers standard village rooms in a gigantic garden. Rates include breakfast, lunch, dinner, and free Indian or Tibetan tea. The same owners run a second guesthouse further north on the way to the gompa.

Further along the village road, Gaph-Chow Guest House & Camping (☎ 227151; liker@rediffmail.com; camping per person Rs 90, s/d Rs 350/400) is moving upmarket. There's an old-fashioned guesthouse and a pleasant campground under the apricot trees, plus a new complex of semi-permanent tents, set to open by the time you read this.

Alchi

Clinging to the edge of a narrow gorge just south of the Kargil road, the temples of Alchi represent the crowning glory of Indo-Tibetan art in Ladakh. The complex was founded in the 11th century by the Great Translator, Ringchen Zangpo, who bought in artists from the Buddhist monasteries of Kashmir to create the amazing murals and sculptures at Alchi.

The Chhoskhor Temples (admission Rs 20; 8am-1pm & 2-6pm) are at the end of the main cobbled street through the village. First is Sumrtsek Temple, with astounding murals depicting thousands of Tantric deities and huge wooden statues of Maitreya, Manjushri and Avalokitesvara. Next along is Vairocana Temple, with a rear chamber full of gigantic mandalas. At the rear of the compound are the Lotsa Temple, with more mandalas, and the Manjushri Temple, enshrining an enormous four-sided statue of Manjushri. Also check out the unusual chortens in the grounds; the plain mud exteriors hide vivid paintings inside. Photography is banned inside the temple compound.

SLEEPING & EATING

Most of the guesthouses in Alchi are on lanes leading off from the main road to the gompa. In summer, Alchi can get very crowded, but almost everything closes for winter.

Choskor Guest House (227084; r without/with bathroom Rs 200/300) On the way into Alchi, beneath a rocky buttress, this traveller-oriented place has a nice village mood and large square rooms overlooking the garden. Tasty local meals are prepared in the traditional Ladakhi kitchen and it's open through the winter.

Lotsava (227129; dorjeystanzin@yahoo.com; r without/with bathroom from Rs 200/300, permanent tent with meals Rs 2200-2700) Down a lane on the way out of the village, this huge square farmhouse has cosy Ladakhi-style rooms with bucket hot water. Curtains add a homy touch and corner rooms get light from two sides. In summer, the owners run a luxury tented camp on the edge of the village.

Alchi Resort (252520; s/d from Rs 850/1150) This compound of two-room huts is unlovely from the outside, but rooms are better than average and the solar-heated hot water is a blessing.

Samdupling Guest House (227104; s/d Rs 1300/1800) A good midrange choice just above the bus stand, with large, bright bedrooms and the luxury of 24-hour hot water. Generous discounts are possible out of peak season.

Rizong

North of Saspol, a narrow gorge cuts north to the imposing Rizong Gompa (admission Rs 20), a stack of dusty monks' cells crammed into an arid, rocky amphitheatre. The two prayer halls have soot-darkened murals and gilded statues of Sakyamuni and Maitreya. Experienced teachers may be able to volunteer at the monastery school; contact Beautiful World (www.beautifulworld.org.uk).

Set in orchards downhill from the gompa, the Chullichan Nunnery provides an education for girls from local villages. You're welcome to visit, but a donation is greatly appreciated.

There's no accommodation at Rizong, but Saspol has several upmarket resorts.

Uley Ethnic Resort (253640; ulecamp@sancharnet.in; r or tent with meals Rs 3000; closed Sep-May) Hidden away amongst apple orchards, this rather grand place offers a choice of semipermanent tents or tasteful rooms in mud-brick cottages, arranged around a safari tent restaurant.

No buses run to Rizong, so hire a taxi (Rs 1570 return) or take any bus heading to Khalsi or beyond, and walk the steep 5km up the valley.

Lamayuru

01982 / elev 3390m

About 125km from Leh, Lamayuru is set amongst eroded badlands at the mouth of a narrow gorge. According to legend, this was once the bottom of a deep lake but a Buddhist saint prayed to the guardian spirits and the water miraculously drained away. Geological deposits around Lamayuru do indicate the presence of a vanished lake, perhaps drained by a receding glacier. The remaining silt has been sculpted into a bizarre moonscape of towers and ravines by the wind and rain.

The main attraction in Lamayuru is Lamayuru Gompa (admission Rs 20), the oldest in Ladakh, dating back to at least the 10th century. Perched atop a towering cliff, pockmarked with manmade caves, the gompa has few murals but the prayer halls contain jewelled chortens, statues of bodhisattvas (Buddhist saints) and ancient chaam masks. Masked dances take place here in July for the three day Yuru Kabgyat festival (p351).

SLEEPING & EATING

Lamayuru's guesthouses all come with shared bathrooms.

Siachen Guesthouse & Camping Site (tent Rs 100, r Rs 250-350) A simple village house, offering home-cooked meals and traditionally furnished rooms with carpet beds and choktse tables, plus a basic camping site.

Dragon Hotel (255323; r Rs 150-300) The Dragon Hotel is in a charming family home with tidy rooms and a fabulous Ladakhi kitchen piled with pots and pans. Upstairs

LOST TRIBES

Also known as Drokpa or Dards, the Brokpa people inhabit the Dah-Hanu valley, northwest of Khalsi. The origins of the tribe are lost to history, but their Aryan features and fair complexion have led many to conclude that the tribe was descended from the invasion force of Alexander the Great. Most Brokpa follow the ancient Bon religion, which provided the basis for Tibetan Buddhism. Travel agents in Leh offer tours to Dah-Hanu, but you can see Brokpa women most days selling dried fruit and vegetables at the south end of Leh's Main Bazar – just look for the ornate headcoverings, made from silver, beads and artificial flowers.

rooms have gompa views and colourful Buddhist murals.

Hotel Niranjana (☎ 224001; angchok1@rediffmail.com; dm Rs 100, s/d Rs 800/1000) This upmarket option is run by the monastery and a 15m-high thangka is hung from the roof during festivals. Showers are hot and the restaurant serves good food, but rooms are expensive for what you get.

Mulbekh

From Lamayuru, the road climbs over Fotu La (4147m) and Namika La (3760m) before descending Mulbekh – a dusty string of teahouses along the hwy. Across the road is the tiny Chamba Gompa (admission Rs 10), centred on an 8m-high rock-cut statue of Maitreya dating to AD 700. Uphill from town are the gompas of Serdung and Gandentse, the last Buddhist monuments before Muslim-dominated Kargil.

About 1km on the Leh side of the statue, thes unobtrusive J&KTDC Tourist Bungalow (r with private bathroom Rs 100) can be booked in Kargil. Rooms are clean and the chowkidar (attendant) can arrange meals.

Directly opposite Chamba Gompa, the basic roadhouse, Paradise Hotel and Restaurant (☎ 270010, r with shared bathroom Rs 150), has plain, grungy rooms with shared squat toilets in an outdoor block.

KARGIL

☎ 01985 / elev 2817m

The administrative centre for four surrounding valleys, Kargil marks the easternmost extent of the Muslim incursion into Ladakh. Before Partition, Kargil was an important trading post for caravans travelling between Baltistan and Zanskar, but today it stands on the faultline between India and Pakistan. A famous battle was fought here during the 1999 Indo-Pakistan War and the town remains heavily fortified.

Most visitors only come here to break the journey between Srinagar and Leh, or change buses for the trip to Zanskar. If you do stop over, there are good views from the peaceful village of Goma (Upper) Kargil, a steep walk above the hospital. Local traders sell dried Kargil apricots in the bazaar (usually with the stones still inside). Be aware of anti-Indian and anti-Jewish sentiments in the valley.

Orientation & Information

Kargil is Ladakh's second-largest town but everything is arranged along the highway, or the lanes branching down to the river. Hotel Siachen will change cash at a poor rate and several internet cafés offer slow connections for Rs 120 an hour.

The Tourist Reception Centre (☎ 232721; 10am-4pm) is behind the share-jeep stand, down the lane near the Shashila restaurant. You can arrange guides and camping gear for treks and make bookings for J&KTDC Tourist Bungalows in the Suru Valley.

Sleeping & Eating

Unless mentioned otherwise, rooms have private bathrooms and geysers.

J&KTDC Tourist Bungalow (☎ 232328; off Main Bazar; dm Rs 20, r Rs 100-150) The main tourist bungalow is next to the tourist office. The dorms are a steal for the price. There's a nicer annexe up the hill behind the hospital.

Popular Chacha Hotel (☎ 233390; Main Bazar; s/q Rs 100/400;) A real rock-bottom choice on the main road – just a couple of rooms and basic shared bathroom facilities with cold water, plus an internet café downstairs.

Hotel Greenland (☎ 232324/233388; off Main Bazar; r from RS 350) Down an alley beside the small local taxi stand, this place is simple, cheap and reasonably clean. The local taxi union has an office here where you charter jeeps to Zanskar.

Hotel Siachen (☎ 232221; off Main Bazar; s/d Rs from 1300/1800) This upmarket chalet-style place, down an alley behind the taxi stand, has rooms on three floors set around a garden, with a travel agency, restaurant and parking. Rates are usually discounted by 30% to 50% and the manager can change foreign cash (at a low rate).

Shashila (Main Bazar; dishes Rs 30-100) A more formal Kashmiri restaurant, serving cheap portions of dhal and rice and rogon josh (lamb and tomato curry).

Half-a-dozen Muslim dhabas along Main Bazar offer Kashmiri and Ladakhi food and trekkers can pick up fruit, biscuits and freshly baked bread in the bazaar.

Getting There & Away

BUS

The government bus stand is below the highway – take the alley opposite the road to the hospital. Buses leave for Leh (semi-deluxe/deluxe Rs 240/320, 10 hours) at 4.30am and for Srinagar (semi-deluxe/deluxe Rs 240/320, 10 hours) between 1am and 2am. You'll pay Rs 30 as far as Mulbekh (1½ hours) and Rs 100 to Lamayuru (4½ hours). Book the day before and check that the road to Srinagar is safe before boarding.

The minibus stand, about 500m back up the road to Leh, has services to Panikhar (Rs 50, two hours) at 7am and 2pm, passing through Sanku (Rs 30, one hour). Buses to Zanskar are notoriously unpredictable; even the tourist office doesn't know the schedule. The bus to Padum (Rs 300, 14 to 18 hours) should leave on alternate days at around 3am, stopping at Rangdum (Rs 150, seven hours), but often there is no bus for days on end.

JEEP/TAXI

A chartered jeep will cost Rs 8000 to Padum (Rs 12,500 for a three-day round trip) and Rs 3800 to Srinagar or Leh, with room for four or five passengers. You can make a day trip to Mulbekh by taxi for around Rs 1000. Book with the office at the Greenland Hotel.

Share jeeps leave from a separate stand near the tourist office. Jeeps to Leh (Rs 500, 22 hours) leave at 7am; jeeps to Srinagar (Rs 500 to 550, 10 hours) leave at 3am.

ZANSKAR

When it comes to splendid isolation, Zanskar is about as isolated as you can get. This rugged Buddhist valley can only be reached by an arduous week-long trek or a 14-hour drive along a pitted and potholed track along the Suru River. Although Zanskar is administered from Kargil, the people of the valley are predominantly Buddhist. The valley even has its own king, though the role is mainly ceremonial.

From November to May, Zanskar is cut off entirely from the outside world. Ice chokes the mountain passes and the valley sits under a silent blanket of snow. Farmers in the valley spend the whole summer storing up fuel and food for the long winter months. A few hardy travellers trek here in winter along the frozen Zanskar River to see the valley at its most beautiful and uncrowded. For more information on activities in Zanskar ,see p366.

Zanskar's days of isolation are numbered. A road is slowly being built along the valley of the Zanskar River, linking the capital, Padum, to Nimmu on the Leh–Kargil road. When it opens, it may change the mood of the valley forever. However, most locals are looking forward to a shift of administration from Muslim Kargil to Buddhist Ladakh.

Trekkers can find limited provision in the villages along the valley. There are no petrol stations in Zanskar, so motorcyclists should bring all the fuel they need in spare cans. Trucks may pick up hitchhikers for a fee. See p367 for more details.

Kargil to Rangdum

The main road into Zanskar follows the Suru Valley. There are J&K Tourist Bungalows in most villages, but you'll need to find the chowkidhar (attendant) to open the doors. All offer basic rooms for Rs 100; the bungalows at Purtickchay, Tangole and Rangdum also have dorm beds for Rs 20.

The first part of the valley is green and fertile. About 40km from Kargil, the village of Sanku is the starting point for treks to Drass and Mulbekh, and you can stop over at the tourist bungalow and visit the mausoleum of the Sufi saint Sayed Mir Hashim.

From Sanku, the road climbs slowly to the pretty village of Panikhar, set beneath the looming peaks of Nun (7135m) and Kun (7087m). This is a scenic area for walks and treks, and you can stay in the tourist bungalow or the friendly Khayoul Hotel & Restaurant (☎ 259110; r with shared bathroom Rs 100).

The road continues to Tangole, with a tourist bungalow used by trekking and mountaineering groups attempting the ascent of Nun and Kun. Further east, the Parkachik Glacier crumbles dramatically into the Suru River.

The countryside becomes wilder and more barren as the road enters the wind-scoured plain at Rangdum. The village itself is just a small cluster of white houses, centred on a group of teahouses and a good J&K Tourism Bungalow – the only place to stay unless you arrange a homestay with local villagers. Around the valley's edge, geographical strata has been twisted into a 3-D abstract painting by plate tectonics. From Rangdum you can trek east over the Kanji La (5255m), linking up to the Leh–Kargil road at Lamayuru.

About 5km south of the village, Rangdum Gompa (admission by donation) is perched atop a low hill overlooking the plain. The 25 monks who live here are outnumbered by the monastery donkeys, who sleep inside at night, and the prayer halls contain some fine muralwork.

After Rangdum, the road climbs the rugged Pensi La (4401m), which forms the border between the Suru and Zanskar Valleys. Marmots abound on the grassy patches between the rocks and the pass offers jawdropping views of the Drang Drung glacier, a perfect tongue of glistening white, snaking down between steely grey moraines.

On the far side of the pass, the valley opens up into a broad, flat plain at the meeting of the Zanskar and Stod Rivers. This is Zanskar proper, a sweeping sheet of farmland ring-fenced by a sheer mountain wall. On the final descent to Padum, you can detour to the historic Zongkul Gompa at Ating, where you must also show your passport. There's another small gompa at Sani, just outside Padum.

PADUM

Basking under an endless sky, Padum is the capital of Zanskar, but don't expect more than a few dusty streets and a bus stand. Around Padum, the Zanskar valley shimmers in the wan desert light. Yaks and dzo graze calmly in the fields and the plain is dotted with small farms and villages. Padum has a little town mosque, catering to a small community of Sunni Muslims, and two ruined gompas. A short walk across the valley is the medieval monastery at Pibiting, topped by a massive chorten with views over the plain.

The Tourist Reception Centre (☎ 245017; 10am-4pm Mon-Sat) can advise on trekking routes and arrange guides and porters for Rs 250 to 300 per day. Alternatively, you can make arrangements through Zanskar Trek (☎ 245136) on the road to the mosque. See opposite for popular routes.

Sleeping & Eating

Most hotels shut up from late October to June, except for tour groups on winter treks. Hot water by the bucket costs Rs 10 to 15. Campers can set up at the simple campground (tent Rs 50) opposite the tourist office.

J&KTDC Tourist Bungalow (☎ 245017; r with shared bathroom Rs 100) Sharing a compound with the tourist office, this simple place is a good choice for travellers watching the pennies after expensive jeep trips around the valley.

Changthang Hotel (☎ 245166; r without/with bathroom from Rs 150/250) Around a courtyard with a trickling stream, Changthang has an inviting restaurant and rooms are good for the price.

Mont-Blanc Guesthouse (☎ 245183; r without/with bathroom Rs 250/350) At last, a proper village-style guesthouse in Padum! Mont-Blanc offers bright, traditionally furnished rooms in a family home on the road to the mosque.

Hotel Ibex (☎ 245012; d Rs 350) The choice of tour groups and older travellers, this well-kept place has snug rooms arranged around a sheltered garden courtyard, plus a restaurant with a good cook but a limited menu.

Kailash Hotel (☎ 245074; d from Rs 400) This hotel, next door to Changthang Hotel, is similar but slightly grander.

Marq Guest House (☎ 245021; d Rs 500) Just off the main road, this big white house has big white rooms with geyser hot water in the showers. There's an ISD call centre on site and nice views from the garden.

Gakyi Café (dishes from Rs 30) Facing Hotel Ibex, this large, Buddhist-run place serves the best food in town, with an emphasis on – you guessed it – momos and noodles.

Kailash Hotel & Bar (beer Rs 80, snack meals from Rs 40) Not to be confused with the Kailash Hotel on the main road, this truckers' restaurant serves the only alcohol in town.

Getting There & Away

BUS

Until the road to Nimmu opens, bus transport in Zanskar will continue to be slow and unpredictable. In summer, a bus is supposed to leave Padum for Kargil (Rs 300, 14 to 18 hours) between 2am and 3am every other day, but it can be cancelled for days on end. You need to book tickets the day before. Drivers will let you off wherever you want, but there could be a two-day wait for the next bus to pass by.

TAXI

By taxi, it's a steep Rs 8000 from Kargil to Padum, or Rs 12,500 for a three-day return trip; jeeps have space for four or five passengers. The trip can be done in one gruelling 14-hour drive, or you can stop on the way at Rangdum.

Getting Around

The Padum Taxi Union office, between the Hotel Ibex and the bus stand, charges high rates: Rs 800/1000 one way/return to Karsha Gompa and Rs 6000 to Rangdum. Those who have time: trek.

AROUND PADUM

Like a smear of whitewash on the mountainside across from Padum, Karsha Gompa is Zanskar's largest and oldest Buddhist monastery, dating back to at least the 10th century. Around 150 monks maintain the gompa, helped by the French charity Solidarijeune (www.solidarijeune.org). There are two main chambers, both containing stunning murals and old treasures. The annual chaam dances are held in July as part of the three-day Gu-Stor festival (see the boxed text, p351). Experienced teachers may be able to volunteer at local schools for girls through the US-based Jamyang Foundation (www.jamyang.org).

The best place to stay is the appealing Thieur Guesthouse (tent Rs 70, r with shared bathroom Rs 200-250), set in a pretty garden just uphill from the Rural Development office. You can reach the gompa from Padum by (expensive) taxi or a two-hour walk across the exposed plain to the new bridge over the Zanskar River.

There are more historic gompas in the small villages of Pishu, Stongde and Zangla, accessible by taxi or on foot from Padum. A more challenging destination is the isolated gompa of Phuktal, squeezed into a cave clinging to the side of the near-vertical Shadi gorge. Inside you can see a sacred spring and some 700-year-old murals in the Alchi style. The gompa can only be reached by walking – typically as part of the Padum to Darcha trek (see right).

TREKKING IN ZANSKAR

The main trekking season runs from late June to October, though a few people specifically come here for the famous winter trek along the frozen Zanskar River. Storms occasionally interrupt itineraries in August and September. As many treks climb over 5000m, proper acclimatisation is essential to avoid AMS – see Health (p1188).

Most people make advance arrangements in Leh (agencies charge around US$60 per person per day all-inclusive), but you can also organise guides and porters in Padum (opposite) and Kargil (p388). Going without a guide is not recommended – see p97 for more advice.

The following are some of the most popular routes. Serious trekkers should refer to Lonely Planet's Trekking in the Indian Himalaya for further details.

PADUM TO DARCHA VIA SHINKUN LA

This extremely popular seven- to eight-day route follows the Tsarap Valley east towards Darcha on the Manali–Leh hwy in Lahaul. A road is slowly being built along the valley, allowing trekkers to cut out several stages at the start and end of the trek. Starting from Padum, the route runs east to Raru (on foot or by jeep) then up to Purne in two moderate days.

Most trekkers then detour north to the cave monastery at Phuktal and spend a second night in Purne to prepare for the sustained climb to Shinkun La (5090m). There are more overnight stops at Sking/Kargyak and Lhakhang before the trail crosses the Great Himalaya Range and descends to meet the main road at Darcha. Exhausted trekkers can arrange transport for the final stage from Ramjak.

Stage	Route	Duration (hr)
1	Padum to Raru	5-6
2	Raru to Pepula	5
3	Pepula to Purne	4-5
4	Purne to Phuktal Monastery to Purne	5-6
5	Purne to Sking/Kargyak	6-7
6	Sking/Kargyak to Lhakhang	6
7	Lhakhang to Ramjak over Shinkun La	8
8	Ramjak to Darcha	5-6

PADUM TO LAMAYURU VIA SINGGE LA

This tough trek begins in either Padum or Karsha Monastery (in reverse, it's the most trekked route into Zanskar). From Padum, the route follows the left bank of the Zanskar River before diverting north to the whitewashed tower of Lingshet Gompa over Hanuma La (4950m). Or, you may be able to travel by jeep to Zangla and cross to Pishu via Zanskar's longest cableway.

From Pishu, the trail crosses the Zanskar Range via the Singge La (5050m), with swoon-inducing views. It's not overly demanding and the gradual descent to the village of Photaksar can be completed in one stage. From Photaksar the trail crosses Sisir La (4850m) to the village of Honupatta and continues mostly downhill to Wanla. The final leg to Lamayuru can be done on foot or by pre-arranged jeep.

Stage	Route	Duration (hr)
1	Padum to Karsha	2
2	Karsha to Pishu	4-5
3	Pishu to Hanumil	4-5
4	Hanumil to Snertse	5
5	Snertse to Lingshet via Hanuma La	5-6
6	Lingshet to Singge La base camp	5-6
7	Singge La base camp to Photaksar via Singge La	5-6
8	Photaksar to Honupatta via Sisir La	6
9	Honupatta to Wanla	5
10	Wanla to Lamayuru	3-4

THE CHADAR TREK

A few hardy souls fly into Ladakh in winter to attempt the unique Chadar Trek along the frozen Zanskar River. While there are no high-altitude stages, conditions are testing and expeditions need serious equipment for winter camping. Experienced local guides are also required to lead a safe passage across the ice.

The starting point is Chiling, accessible by jeep from Leh. The route follows the river for seven days through a surreal canyon landscape, with camping stops in rock caves along the riverbank. The majority of people time the trek to coincide with the Losar celebrations in Padum and Karsha. Homestays are available in the last few villages before Padum.

Stage	Route	Duration (hr)
1	Chiling to Tilat Sumdo	5/6
2	Tilat Sumdo to Paldar Sumdo	6-7
3	Paldar Sumdo to Nerak Pullu	5-6
5	Nerak Pullu to Hanumil	5-6
6	Hanumil to Pishu	4-5
7	Pishu to Karsha	4-5
8	Karsha to Padum	2

Uttar Pradesh

Uttar Pradesh doesn't quite roll off the tongue like Rajasthan, Kerala or Kashmir, but as a travel destination this expansive state looms large, thanks to Agra, home of the Taj Mahal, and the enthralling city of Varanasi.

Known as UP, and often referred to as the cow belt or Hindu belt, India's most populous state covers the vast, sprawling plain of northern India, bordering Delhi, Uttarakhand (formerly Uttaranchal, was part of UP until it split in 2000), Nepal and Bihar. The mighty, myth-laden Ganges – Hinduism's most sacred river – rises in Uttarakhand and flows through the state providing a spiritual backbone exemplified by the bathing ghats of Varanasi and the pilgrimage centre of Allahabad – the most auspicious of India's four Kumbh Mela sites. Just outside Varanasi, Sarnath was where Buddha first preached his gospel of the middle way, and Kushinagar, near Gorakhpur, is where he died. Devotees of a different kind are drawn to Mathura and Vrindavan, the birthplace of the much-loved god Krishna.

But nothing draws tourists like India's most famous icon, the Taj Mahal, and the other Mughal monuments in Agra and Fatehpur Sikri. On the banks of Hinduism's second-holiest river, the Yamuna, the white-marble Taj stands as an unrivalled monument and architectural wonder. Of course, the nawabs in UP's capital Lucknow and the British in Allahabad also left behind an impressive architectural legacy that's lasted well beyond their downfall. Although Agra and Varanasi stand out in UP, it would be a shame not to delve deeper into one of India's most historically and politically important regions.

HIGHLIGHTS

- Rise before dawn and be inspired as the sunrise illuminates the magical white-marble Taj Mahal (p399), in Agra
- Take a predawn boat ride along the bathing ghats that line the sacred Ganges at Varanasi (p425), then enjoy a rooftop yoga session before breakfast
- Stand in awe amid Akbar's elaborate red-sandstone palaces and the magnificent Jama Masjid at Fatehpur Sikri (p408)
- Walk with Buddha's spirit around the peaceful villages of Sarnath (p438) and Kushinagar (p440)
- Row to the point where the Yamuna and Ganges Rivers meet, then visit the shrine to the Nehru family in undiscovered Allahabad (p420)
- Dine on nawab cuisine and step back into the turbulent times of the Indian Uprising at the Residency in Lucknow (p413)

History

Over 2000 years ago the region was part of Ashoka's great Buddhist empire, but only archaeological evidence of this era remains today. Muslim raids from the northwest began in the 11th century, and by the 16th century the region was part of the Mughal empire with its capital in Fatehpur Sikri, Agra and then Delhi.

Following the decline of the Mughal empire, Persian invaders stepped in briefly before the nawabs of Avadh rose to prominence in the central part of the region. The nawabs were responsible for turning Lucknow into a flourishing centre for the arts, but their empire came to a dramatic end when the British East India Company deposed the last nawab, triggering the Uprising of 1857. Agra was later merged with Avadh and the state became known as United Province. It was renamed Uttar Pradesh after Independence and has since been the most dominant state in Indian politics, producing half of the country's prime ministers. However, the people of the state have not benefited much from this as poor governance, a high birth rate, a low literacy rate and an erratic electricity supply have held back economic progress in the past 60 years.

In 2000, the mountainous northwestern part of the state was carved off to create the new state of Uttaranchal.

AGRA

Agra's magnificent white marble Taj Mahal stands like a bulbous beacon, drawing tourists like moths to a wondrous flame. Despite the hype, it's every bit as good as you've heard. While Agra itself is a sprawling, bloated and polluted industrial city that few travellers seem to have a good word for, the Taj is not a stand-alone attraction. The legacy of the Mughal empire has left a magnificent fort and a sprinkling of fascinating tombs and mausoleums, while the Yamuna River provides a suitably sacred backdrop. The Mughal emperor Babur established his capital here in 1526, and for the next century Agra witnessed a remarkable spate of architectural activity as each emperor tried to outdo the grandiose monuments built by his predecessors.

The city has a lively but chaotic chowk (marketplace) and plenty of places to stay and eat, but the hordes of rickshaw-wallahs, touts, unofficial guides and souvenir vendors can be as persistent as the monsoon rain.

Many tourists choose to visit Agra on a whistle-stop day trip – made possible by the excellent train services from Delhi. However, Agra's attractions are much more than can be seen in a day, and if you have the time you can enjoy several days' sightseeing with side trips to Fatehpur Sikri and Mathura.

History

In 1501, Sultan Sikander Lodi established his capital here, but the city fell into Mughal hands in 1526, when Emperor Babur defeated the last Lodi sultan at Panipat, 80km north of Delhi. Agra reached the peak of its magnificence between the mid-16th and mid-17th centuries during the reigns of Akbar, Jehangir and Shah Jahan. During this period the fort, the Taj Mahal and other major mausoleums were built. In 1638 Shah Jahan built a new city in Delhi, and his son Aurangzeb moved the capital there 10 years later.

In 1761 Agra fell to the Jats, a warrior class who looted its monuments, including the Taj Mahal. The Marathas took over in 1770, but were replaced by the British in 1803. Following the Uprising of 1857, the British shifted the administration of the province to Allahabad. Deprived of its administrative role, Agra developed as a centre for heavy industry, quickly becoming famous for its chemicals industry and atmospheric pollution, before the Taj and tourism became a major source of income.

Orientation

Agra sits on the Ganges plain on the western bank of the Yamuna River. The fort and the main marketplace, Kinari Bazaar, are northeast of Agra Cantonment train station and Idgah bus station. The Taj Mahal is about 2km east of the fort on the far side of the spacious British-built cantonment.

The labourers and artisans who toiled on the Taj set up home immediately south of the mausoleum, creating the congested network of alleys known as Taj Ganj, now a popular area for budget travellers.

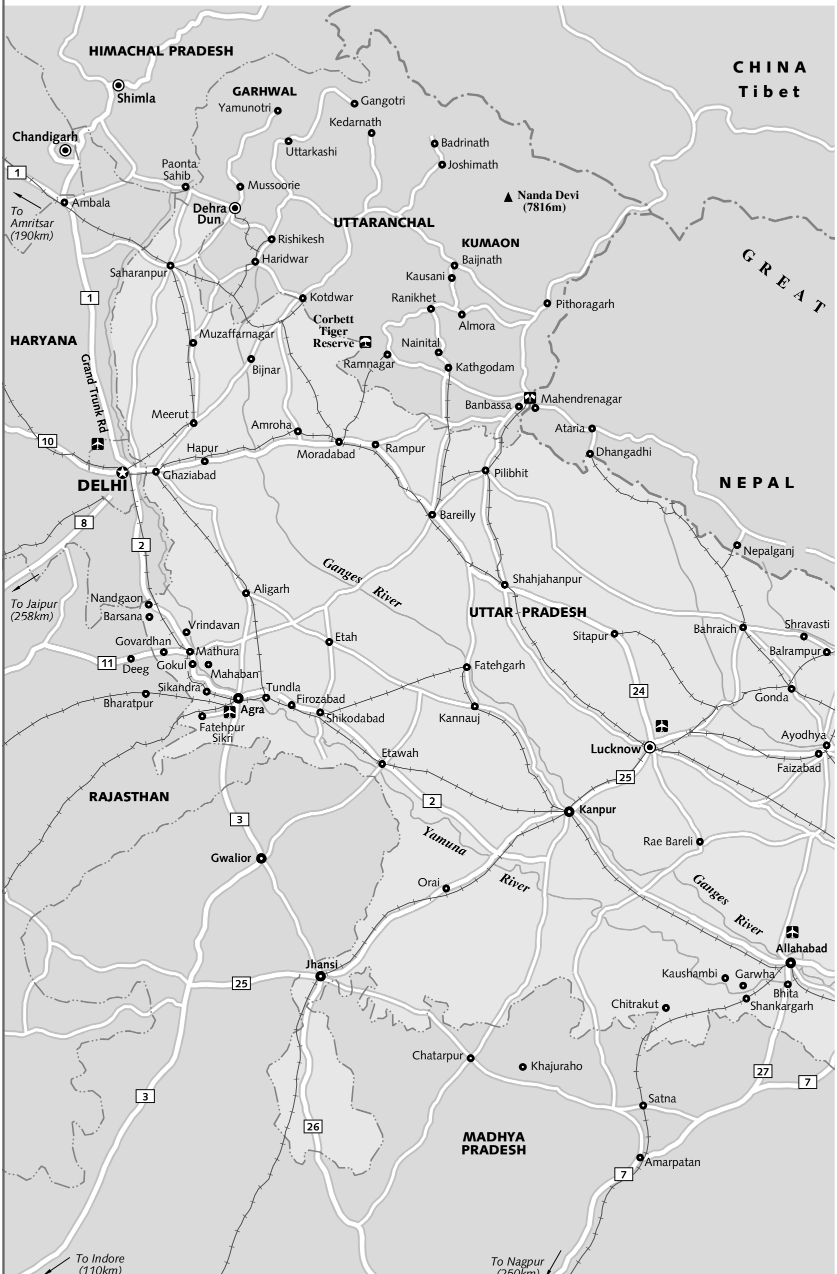
FESTIVALS IN UTTAR PRADESH

Magh Mela (Jan/Feb; Allahabad, p420) This religious fair is held at Sangam on the banks of the Ganges (p420) at Allahabad. Hindu pilgrims from all over India camp out and take a soul-cleansing dip at auspicious times. Every 12 years the fair is replaced by the massive Kumbh Mela (next in Allahahad in 2013) and every six years with the Ardh Mela (last held in 2007).

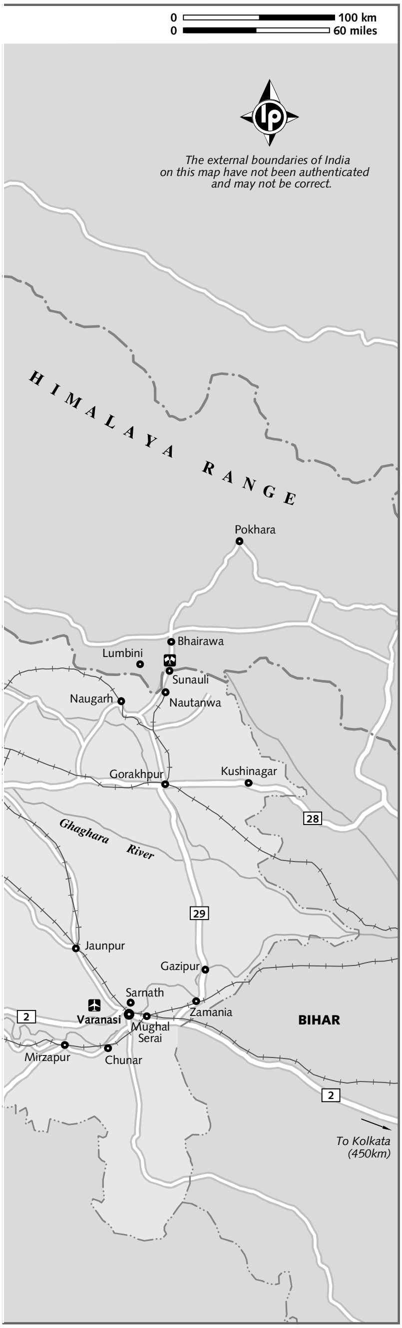
Taj Mahotsav (18-27 Feb; Agra, opposite) Held in Shilpgram, a crafts village and open-air emporium. Features live music and dance, food tasting and a Mughal procession.

Holi (Feb/Mar; Barsana, near Vrindavan, p412) This national festival is celebrated with particular fervour around Mathura and Vrindavan, spiritual home of Krishna. In Barsana village, near Vrindavan, a traditional festival takes place where local women, armed with bamboo sticks, beat off men from a nearby village who defend themselves with straw shields.

Purnima (Apr/May; Sarnath, p438) Sarnath, just outside Varanasi, takes on a festive air during Buddha's birthday, when Buddhists from many countries take part in a procession and a fair is held.



Janmastami (Aug/Sep; Mathura, p410) You can barely move here during Krishna's birthday, when the Dwarkad-heesh temple is swathed in decorations and musical dramas about Krishna are performed.



Ram Lila (Sep/Oct; Varanasi, p425) Every year since the early 1800s, the Ram Lila, a lengthy version of the Ramayama, has been performed at Ramnagar in Varanasi. The epic saga of Rama's marriage to Sita and his battle against the demon king, Ravana, is performed mainly by Brahmin youths aided by masks, music, dancing and giant pâpier-maché figures.

Lucknow Mahotsava (late Nov-Dec; Lucknow, p413) The spirit of the nawabs comes back to life during this 10-day festival. Events include processions, plays, Kathak dancing, *ghazal*s (Urdu songs), sitar recitals, kite flying and tonga races.

Eid ul-Fitr (Dec/Jan; Fatehpur Sikri, p408) Join the happy crowds in the bazaar and mosque at Fatehpur Sikri, near Agra, for the end-of-Ramadan celebrations.

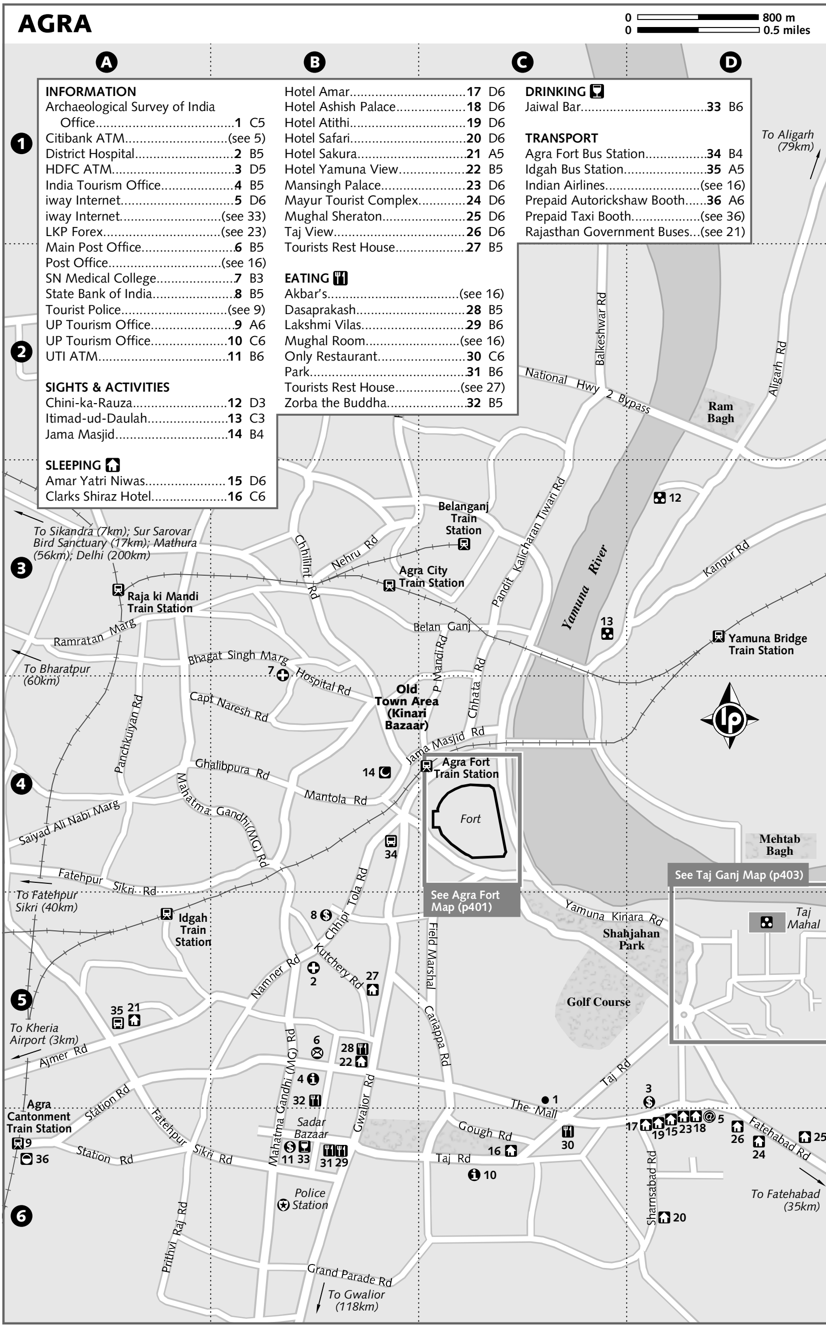
Dangers & Annoyances



Touts, vendors and rickshaw-wallahs can be pretty draining in Agra, particularly around the Taj, but it's certainly more an annoyance than a danger – it helps to maintain a sense of humour and patience. Many hotels, tourist shops and money changers pay hefty commissions to taxi drivers and rickshaw-wallahs who bring in customers; if this happens you will pay more in order to cover their commission. When booking a hotel or guesthouse, arrange for a pick-up from the train or bus station or use the prepaid stand. Cheap or free rickshaw rides always lead to a gem or souvenir shop. Lots of 'marble' souvenirs are actually soapstone. Avoid hole-in-the-corner travel agents.

SCAMS

Don't fall for the gem import scam that has been conning naive tourists in Agra for more than a decade. Travellers are convinced to help a shop avoid import duty by carrying gems back to their home country, where a company representative will reimburse them for their costs plus a tidy profit. The travellers are asked to make a small credit-card payment 'as a sign of good faith'. Without exception, the gems are worthless, the representative never materialises and travellers are lumped with a credit-card bill of US$1000 or more. Keep your credit card firmly sheathed!

Sights & Activities

Two tickets are issued to visit some of Agra's mains sights: the Agra Development Association (ADA) ticket is valid for the Taj, Agra Fort, Akbar's Mausoleum, Itmad-ud-Daula and Fatehpur Sikri for one day, so hang on to it. The separate Archeaological Survey of India (ASI) ticket must be purchased for each of these sights. Both these tickets are only available from the sites themselves. Children under 15 get in free to all monuments.

TAJ MAHAL

Described as the most extravagant monument ever built for love, this sublime Mughal mausoleum is India's most ogled icon. Many have tried to sum up its beauty – 'a teardrop on the face of eternity' according to Indian poet Rabindranath Tagore, 'the embodiment of all things pure' according to British writer Rudyard Kipling. As an architectural masterpiece it stands alone.

The Taj was built by Emperor Shah Jahan as a memorial for his second wife, Mumtaz Mahal, who died giving birth to their 14th child in 1631. The death of Mumtaz left the emperor so heartbroken that his hair is said to have turned grey virtually overnight. Construction of the Taj began in the same year and was not completed until 1653 – although there's some debate as to the exact date of completion. Not long after it was finished, Shah Jahan was overthrown by his son Aurangzeb and imprisoned in Agra Fort where, for the rest of his days, he could only gaze out at his creation through a window. Following his death in 1666, Shah Jahan was buried here alongside Mumtaz.

In total, some 20,000 people from India and Central Asia worked on the building. Specialists were brought in from as far afield as Europe to produce the exquisite marble screens and pietra dura (marble inlay work) made with thousands of semiprecious stones. A popular story that Shah Jahan had intended to construct an identical Taj in black marble as a tomb for himself on the opposite bank of the Yamuna – creating a mirror image in negative – is probably too fanciful to be true. Local guides are fond of saying this was part of the reason Aurangzeb threw him in jail – the Mughal empire couldn't afford his grandiose plans!

The spectacular mausoleum was designated a World Heritage site in 1983 and looks as immaculate today as when it was first constructed – though it underwent a huge restoration project in the early 20th century after falling into disrepair and even suffering vandalism. In recent times the threat of damage has come from atmospheric pollution. Acid rain, produced by sulphur dioxide from vehicle and industrial emissions, began to discolour the famous white marble and erode the fine carving and inlays. In an attempt to reduce pollution, new industrial developments in Agra were banned in 1994, and only nonpolluting vehicles are allowed within 500m of the Taj.

Entry & Information

The Taj (☎ 2330498; Indian/foreigner Rs 20/750, video Rs 25; 🕑 6am-7pm Sat-Thu) can be accessed through the west, south and east gates, which all lead to an outer courtyard. The south gate is the main access and easiest to reach from Taj Ganj, while the east gate generally has the shortest queues. The west gate can get very crowded with tour groups coming from Agra Fort. There are separate queues for men and

TAJ BY SUNRISE, SUNSET OR MOONLIGHT?

With the relatively high entry fee discouraging repeat visits, a big decision for many travellers is exactly when to visit the Taj. Most people want to avoid the worst of the crowds, or the heat of the day, or choose the best time for photography. If you're an early riser, sunrise offers the best of all worlds. It's a magical time when the air is cool and the morning light spreads across the Taj, turning it from dark purple to pale blue and finally a golden glow. Tour groups generally don't start arriving till 9am. Sunset also provides a beautiful, softer light – arrive at least an hour or two before sunset to soak up the atmosphere. Don't discount the middle of the day – especially if you take a book and relax in the shady archways or gardens for a while.

Finally, moonlight viewings are possible for five nights either side of each full moon (except on a Friday) – but with plenty of security restrictions. A maximum of 400 visitors are allowed in groups of 50. Each group stays only 30 minutes between 8.30pm and 12.30am and must stand some distance away from the Taj itself. Visitors are subject to strict security checks. Cameras are allowed but not video cameras and there are no refunds if clouds cover the moon. Tickets must be bought at least 24 hours in advance only from the Archaeological Survey of India office (Map p398; ☎ 2227263; 22 the Mall; Indian/foreigner Rs 510/750). You can get current information and full-moon dates up to 2010 on the UP Tourism website (www.up-tourism.com).

Considering all this, a better place to see the Taj by moonlight is probably the rooftop restaurant of one of the Taj Ganj guesthouses, such as Shanti or Kamal.

women. Prohibited items such as food, tobacco, matches, mobile phones and camera tripods can be left without charge in cloakrooms. Cameras and videos are permitted, but you cannot take photographs of the tombs inside the mausoleum, and areas where you can take your video camera are limited.

From the south gate, entry to the inner compound is through a 30m red sandstone gateway on the south side of the forecourt, which is inscribed with verses from the Quran.

Visiting the Taj

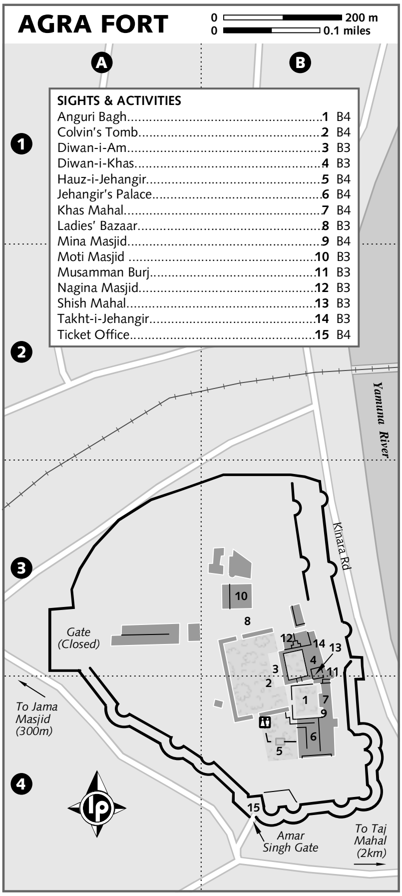
Once inside, the ornamental gardens are set out along classical Mughal charbagh (formal Persian garden) lines – a square quartered by watercourses, with an ornamental marble plinth at the centre. When the fountains are not flowing, the Taj is beautifully reflected in the watercourses.

The Taj Mahal itself stands on a raised marble platform at the northern end of the ornamental gardens, with its back to the Yamuna River. Its raised position means that the backdrop is only sky – a master stroke of design. Purely decorative 40m-high white minarets grace each corner of the platform. After more than three centuries they are not quite perpendicular, but they may have been designed to lean slightly outwards so that in the event of an earthquake, they would fall away from the precious Taj. The red sandstone mosque to the west of the main structure is an important gathering place for Agra's Muslims. The identical building to the east, the jawab, was built for symmetry and was probably used as accommodation for travellers.

The central Taj structure is made of semitranslucent white marble, carved with flowers and inlaid with thousands of semiprecious stones in beautiful patterns. A perfect exercise in symmetry, the four identical faces of the Taj feature impressive vaulted arches embellished with pietra dura scrollwork and quotations from the Quran in a style of calligraphy using inlaid jasper. The whole structure is topped off by four small domes surrounding the famous bulbous central dome.

Below the main dome is the Cenotaph of Mumtaz Mahal, an elaborate false tomb surrounded by an exquisite perforated marble screen inlaid with some 43 different types of semiprecious stones. Beside it, offsetting the symmetry of the Taj, is the Cenotaph of Shah Jahan, who was interred here with little ceremony by his usurping son Aurangzeb in 1666. Light is admitted into the central chamber by finely cut marble screens. The real tombs of Mumtaz Mahal and Shah Jahan are in a locked basement room below the main chamber and cannot be viewed.

On the western side of the gardens is a very small museum (admission Rs 5; 10am-5pm Sat-Thu), housing original architectural drawings of the Taj and some nifty celadon plates, said to split into pieces or change colour if the food served on them contains poison.



AGRA FORT

With the Taj Mahal overshadowing it, it's easy to forget that Agra has one of the finest Mughal forts in India. By visiting the fort and Taj on the same day you get a Rs 50 reduction in ticket price. Construction of the massive red-sandstone fort and palace (Map p398; ☎ 2364512; Indian/foreigner Rs 20/300, video Rs 25; dawn-dusk), on the bank of the Yamuna River, was begun by Emperor Akbar in 1565. Further additions were made, particularly by his grandson Shah Jahan, who added buildings using his favourite building material – white marble. The fort was built primarily as a military structure, but Shah Jahan transformed it into a palace, and later it became his gilded prison for eight years after his son Aurangzeb seized power in 1658.

The ear-shaped fort's colossal double walls rise over 20m in height and measure 2.5km in circumference. The Yamuna River originally flowed along the straight eastern edge of the fort. It contains a maze of buildings, forming a city within a city, though many of the structures were destroyed over the years by Nadir Shah, the Marathas, the Jats and finally the British who used the fort as a garrison.

The Amar Singh Gate to the south is the sole entry point to the fort and its dogleg design is meant to confuse attackers who made it past the first line of defence – a crocodile-infested moat.

Diwan-i-Am (Hall of Public Audiences) was used by Shah Jahan for domestic government business, and features a throne room where the emperor listened to petitioners. In front of it is the small and rather incongruous grave of John Colvin, a lieutenant-governor of the northwest provinces who died of an illness in the fort during the 1857 Uprising. The Moti Masjid (Pearl Mosque) is usually closed to visitors, but don't miss the tiny but exquisite Nagina Masjid (Gem Mosque), built in 1635 by Shah Jahan for the ladies of the court. Down below was the Ladies' bazaar where the court ladies bought goods.

Diwan-i-Khas (Hall of Private Audiences) was reserved for important dignitaries or foreign representatives. The famous jewel-encrusted Peacock Throne was housed here until Aurangzeb moved it to Delhi. It was taken off to Iran in 1739 by the Persian plunderer Nadir Shah. Overlooking the river and the distant Taj Mahal is Takhti-i-Jehangir, a huge slab of black rock with an inscription around the edge. This throne was made for Jehangir when he was prince Salim. An interesting optical illusion occurs when the Taj is viewed from this throne and then from the other side of the courtyard – though further away, it appears much larger.

The Shish Mahal (Mirror Palace) has its walls inlaid with tiny mirrors, but at the time of research was closed for restoration. Even so, caretakers will offer to let you in for outrageous baksheesh.

Musamman Burj and Khas Mahal are the wonderful white-marble octagonal tower and palace where Shah Jahan was imprisoned for eight years until his death in 1666, and from where he could gaze out at the Taj Mahal, the tomb of his wife. The Mina Masjid was his own private mosque.

In the courtyard of the large harem quarters is Anguri Bagh, a garden that has been brought back to life; now it looks like it may have done in Shah Jahan's time.

The huge red-sandstone Jehangir's palace was probably built by Akbar for his son Jehangir; it blends Indian and Central Asian architectural styles, a reminder of the Mughals' Afghani cultural roots. In front of the palace is Hauz-i-Jehangir, a huge bowl carved out of a single block of stone, which may have been used for bathing.

AKBAR'S MAUSOLEUM

This outstanding sandstone and marble tomb (☎ 2641230; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/110, video Rs 25; ⏲ dawn-dusk) commemorates the greatest of the Mughal emperors. The huge courtyard is entered through a stunning gateway. It has three-storey minarets at each corner and is built of red sandstone strikingly inlaid with white-marble geometric patterns.

Akbar started the construction himself, blending various elements just as his religious and political philosophy did (see the boxed text, p402).

The mausoleum is at Sikandra, 10km northwest of Agra Fort. Getting there by public transport is tricky but buses (Rs 10, 30 minutes) heading to Mathura from Agra Fort bus station go past the mausoleum. An autorickshaw should cost Rs 150 for a return journey, including waiting time. Consider hiring the autorickshaw for longer and visiting other sights on the same trip.

ITIMAD-UD-DAULAH

Nicknamed the Baby Taj (Map p398; ☎ 2080030; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/110, video Rs 25; ⏲ 6.30am-5.30pm), the exquisite tomb of Mizra Ghiyas Beg should

AKBAR THE GREAT

Regarded as the greatest of the Mughals, Akbar was brought up in Afghanistan and although thrust into power at the tender age of 13, he expanded the Mughal empire to cover most of northern India. A wise and just ruler, Akbar followed a policy of Sulh-i-Kul (Peace for All) and abolished many of the restrictions placed on infidels, including the very unpopular 'pilgrimage tax' on Hindus.

Although Akbar's military campaigns were as bloody as any in the Mughal era – following his victory at Panipat, he is said to have built a tower of Hindu heads – the great Mughal is best remembered for his tolerance of other religions. Akbar counted Christians and Hindus among his many wives and went on to invent a philosophy known as Din-i-Ilahi (Faith of God), asserting the common truth in all religions.

Honouring the Sufi mystic Shaikh Salim Chishti, whom Akbar credited with bringing him a male heir, a 'perfect city' was constructed in the desert at Fatehpur Sikri, designed as a physical expression of Din-i-Ilahi. A community of intellectuals from many different religions was created to fulfil the emperor's love of debate.

In fact, the perfect city was Akbar's only folly. Built far from the nearest river, Fatehpur was plagued by water shortages and all the ingenious irrigation systems developed by Akbar's engineers were unable to solve the problem. Fatehpur was abandoned shortly after Akbar's death, along with most of his liberal attitudes.

not be missed. This Persian nobleman was Emperor Jehangir's wazir (chief minister). His daughter Nur Jahan, who married Jehangir, built the tomb between 1622 and 1628, in a style similar to the tomb she built for Jehangir near Lahore in Pakistan.

Though it lacks the magic of the Taj, many of its design elements foreshadow the Taj. The Itimad-ud-Daulah was the first Mughal structure totally built from marble and the first to make extensive use of pietra dura.

The mausoleum is on the east bank of the Yamuna, so you'll need an autorickshaw or taxi to get there – the return trip should cost about Rs 80 from Agra Fort. Combine a trip here with Chini-ka-Rauza and Mehtab Bagh, from where you can see the back view of the Taj.

CHINI-KA-RAUZA

This is the Persian-style, riverside tomb (Map p398; 6am-6pm) of Afzal Khan, a poet and high official in the court of Shah Jahan. It was built between 1628 and 1639. This relatively unknown mausoleum is hidden away down a shady avenue of trees on the east bank of the Yamuna. Bright blue tiles still cover part of the exterior and the interior is painted in floral designs. The upper storey offers fine views.

MEHTAB BAGH

This park (Map p398; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; 7am-dusk) is an attempt at re-creating a Mughal-style garden on the riverbank directly opposite the Taj Mahal. Even if you don't visit the garden itself, it's well worth coming here to enjoy the wonderful view of the back of the Taj – in some ways a better view than the view from the front, especially when it's reflected in the river. It's free to walk down to the Yamuna River on the path that runs alongside the park and view the Taj without any tourist crowds in a peaceful and natural ambience of buffaloes and wading birds. For safety reasons, it's best to leave before dusk.

TAJ NATURE WALK

Follow the stone pathways through this mini nature park (Taj East Gate Rd; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/50; 9am-6.30pm) for a pleasant nature ramble among birds and butterflies, with the Taj hovering in the background.

JAMA MASJID

This fine mosque (Map p398), built in the Kinari bazaar by Shah Jahan's daughter in 1648, has no minarets but features striking marble patterning on its domes.

SWIMMING

Hotel Amar is the best-value place for a swim, charging nonguests Rs 200 to use its outdoor pool and Rs 45 to use the gym. Other hotels with outdoor pools are Hotel Atithi (Rs 250), Hotel Yamuna View (Rs 350), Mansingh Palace (adult/child Rs 300/50), Taj View (Rs 350) and Clarks Shiraz Hotel (Rs 450).

Tours

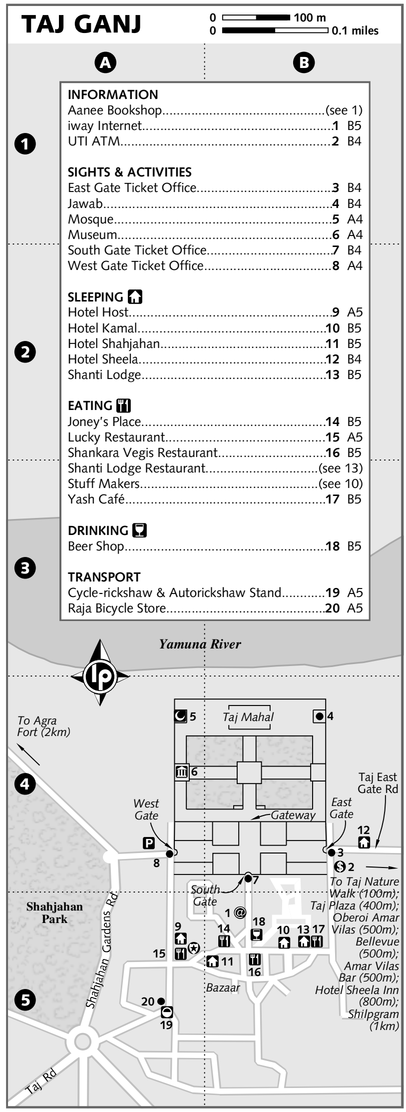
UP Tourism runs exhausting daily tours (incl entry fees Indian/foreigner Rs 400/1700) that leave Agra Cantonment train station at 10.15am, after picking up passengers arriving from Delhi on the Taj Express. The AC coach tour includes the Taj Mahal, Agra Fort and Fatehpur Sikri with a 1¼-hour stop in each place. Tours return to the station so that day-trippers can catch the Taj Express back to Delhi at 6.55pm. Contact either of the UP Tourism offices (see p397) to book a seat.

Sleeping

Agra unsurprisingly has plenty of accommodation and quite a few places offers views of the Taj. But while the budget range is generally good value, there's a dire lack of quality midrange hotels. The main places for budget accommodation are Taj Ganj, immediately south and east of the Taj, and Sadar Bazar to the southwest, while most midrange and top-end places are southeast along Fatehabad Rd.

BUDGET

Some of the hotels south of the Taj have a wonderful close-up view of the Taj, but from their rooftop restaurants rather than from the rooms.



Taj Ganj Area

Shanti Lodge (Map p403; ☎ 2231973; shantilodge2000@yahoo.co.in; Taj South Gate; s Rs 150, d Rs 200-300, r with AC Rs 500; ❄) Some rooms have TVs and the deluxe top-floor room (Rs 600) and rooftop restaurant have great Taj views at this popular budget hotel. Some rooms are pretty shambolic so check out a few – those in the newer section are better – but you can't beat the price.

Hotel Host (Map p403; ☎ 2331010; Taj West Gate; s/d with shared bathroom Rs 120/150, d Rs 150-250) All the rooms have TV in this good-value budget place on the road leading to the Taj West Gate. Avoid the stuffy windowless rooms.

Hotel Shahjahan (Map p403; ☎ 2233071; Taj South Gate; s/d with shared bathroom from Rs 70/120, s/d from Rs 150/250, r with AC Rs 700; ❄) Run by a helpful manager, there's a real mixed bag of rooms here – some good, some ordinary – and a rooftop restaurant.

Hotel Kamal (Map p403; ☎ 2330126; hotelkamal@hotmail.com; Taj South Gate; s/d from Rs 300/400, with AC from Rs 600/700; ❄) The best budget hotel with a rooftop close-up view of the Taj – great for early morning photography. Rooms vary in size, shape and window light, but are all simple and clean. Helpful, friendly staff and the restaurant is recommended.

Hotel Sheela (Map p403; ☎ 2331194; www.hotelsheelaagra.com; Taj East Gate Rd; s/d 350/400, with AC Rs 700/750; ❄ 💻) There are no Taj views but the location, around the corner from the East Gate, and the lovely palm-filled garden make this one of the best of the Taj Ganj budget places. The rooms are generally well kept and clean, and there's an interesting bamboo bungalow in the garden. The garden restaurant is a peaceful, shady place.

Hotel Sheela Inn (☎ 3293437; www.hotelsheelainn.com; Taj East Gate Rd; s Rs 300-500, d Rs 400-600, s/d with AC Rs 600/700;) The bright yellow Sheela Inn is 800m further east of the Taj and is a clean, newish, though slightly nondescript, hotel. Rooms are in various sizes, with tile floors and TVs, and a Taj view from the roof.

Taj Plaza (☎ 2232515; hoteltajplaza@yahoo.co.in; Taj East Gate Rd; s/d Rs 500/600, with AC Rs 800/1000;) Recently renovated, this bright modern hotel is spotless and well located, though the price has jumped from budget to almost midrange. All rooms have TV and hot water and four have a view of the Taj, as does the rooftop terrace restaurant.

Sadar Bazar

Tourists Rest House (Map p398; ☎ 2463961; dontworrychickencurry@hotmail.com; Kutchery Rd; s Rs 150-275, d Rs 250-350, s/d with AC Rs 350/450;) Regarded by many as Agra's best budget address, this is away from the bustle of Taj Ganj, but the shady central courtyard garden is an oasis of peace, a great place to meet other travellers and the helpful owners create a homy, secure atmosphere. Rooms are spotless with tiled floors, TV and hot water. Free pick-ups, free transport reservations and reliable taxi tours of Rajasthan (Rs 1100 per day) are available. It's popular, so book ahead.

Other Areas

Hotel Safari (Map p398; ☎ 324115; hotelsafari@hotmail.com; Shamsabad Rd; s/d Rs 300/350, with AC Rs 350/400;) All rooms are clean with hot water and TV and the staff is helpful. The rooftop terrace has a distant view of the Taj. Safari is run by the same family as Tourists Rest House so standards are high – but it lacks the ambience.

Hotel Sakura (Map p398; ☎ 2420169; ashu_sakura@yahoo.com; 49 Ajmer Rd; d Rs 200-500;) Location-wise, the only compelling reason to stay here is the proximity to the Idgah bus stand and deluxe buses to Jaipur, but it's a decent-value hotel. The restaurant is also recommended – lots of travellers spend time here waiting for the bus.

MIDRANGE

Good midrange hotels at a reasonable price are hard to find in Agra – many midrange places would be in the top-end price bracket anywhere else and the facilities and services offered rarely reflect the price. Most places are conveniently clustered together in Fatehabad Rd, so look at a few and try bargaining before making your choice.

Mayur Tourist Complex (Map p398; ☎ 2332302; mayur268@rediffmail.com; Fatehabad Rd; s/d Rs 1000/1150, with AC Rs 1300/1500;) If nothing else, Mayur is a change from Agra's bland midrange hotels. Rooms are cottage style and set in a large lawn area with kids' playground, swimming pool and a garden restaurant. The cottages are not flash but are cosy and clean, and ample parking would suit overlanders.

Amar Yatri Niwas (Map p398; ☎ 2233030; www.amaryatriniwas.com; Fatehabad Rd; s Rs 950-1200, d Rs 1200-1450;) Very clean, but with all the atmosphere of a hospital. The more expensive rooms are spacious, particularly the Mughal Room, and all have marble floors, TV and hot water.

Hotel Ashish Palace (Map p398; ☎ 2230032; vngupta@sancharnet.in; Fatehabad Rd; s/d Rs 1200/1500;) One of the newest hotels on Fatehabad Rd, Ashish Palace has smart rooms with marble finishes, TV and fridge, but the whole place feels a bit forlorn and neglected.

Hotel Atithi (Map p398; ☎ 2330880; www.hotelatithiagra.com; Fatehabad Rd; s Rs 1400-1650, d Rs 1650-2200;) The pool and lawn at the back are the main attractions at this hotel – overwise it's a bit soulless. Rooms are spacious and well equipped, but ultimately overpriced.

Hotel Amar (Map p398; ☎ 2331884; www.hotelamar.com; Fatehabad Rd; s Rs 2200-3600, d Rs 2600-4000;) Amar maintains a good standard and was undergoing some major front-end renovation when we visited. There's a good pool and gym at the back. The rooms are showing wear but the better rooms have a touch of maharaja style, and there's a pleasant restaurant and coffee shop.

Hotel Yamuna View (Map p398; ☎ 2361223; www.hotelyamunaviewagra.com; 6B the Mall; s/d Rs 3400/3900;) A pool in the garden, a water feature in the grand lobby, a plush Chinese restaurant and some spacious rooms are the main features in this hotel in a quiet part of Sadar Bazar.

Mansingh Palace (Map p398; ☎ 2331771; www.mansinghhotels.com; Fatehabad Rd; s/d/ste from Rs 4500/5000/10,000;) Built of red sandstone, this stylish hotel has plush rooms and is crammed with Mughal design themes, along with cool green marble, wood panelling and exotic furnishings. The garden has an unusually shaped pool and outdoor BBQ area, there's a gym and the quality Sheesh Mahal restaurant has live *ghazal*s (Urdu songs) nightly.

TOP END

Clarks Shiraz Hotel (Map p398; ☎ 2226121; www.hotelclarksshiraz.com; 54 Taj Rd; s Rs 4000-5500, d Rs 4500-5800, Taj-facing Rs 6200/6500;) One of Agra's original five-star hotels, Clarks is showing a bit of age but it's good value for Agra and has plenty of facilities, including two excellent restaurants, bars, a gym, a shady garden pool area and Ayurvedic massages. Rooms are well furnished and some have distant Taj views.

Taj View (Map p398; ☎ 2232400; www.tajhotels.com; Fatehabad Rd; d US$165, d with Taj view US$190-215;) Cool elegance and Indian style feature in the communal areas with an open-plan foyer, restaurant and bar, and a flow through to the outdoor pool and landscaped gardens. Renovated rooms are elegant but disappointingly ordinary for this price.

Mughal Sheraton (Map p398; ☎ 2331701; mughal.sheraton@welcomgroup.com; Fatehabad Rd; s US$205-350, d US$230-375, ste US$550-1200;) This sprawling red-brick luxury hotel is set amid tranquil gardens. Everything is shining, elegant and exclusive to guests, with a lovely pool, tennis, badminton, minigolf and kids' activities on offer. One of the three restaurants serves Northwest Frontier BBQs.

Oberoi Amar Vilas (☎ 2231515; www.oberoihotels.com; Taj East Gate Rd; d US$600-650, ste US$1100-3300;) Forget about being Agra's best hotel – this is one of the best in India. The elegant interior design is suffused with Mughal style, as are the exterior fountain courtyard and the swimming pool set in a water garden. Most rooms and the restaurant have fine views of the Taj. If you can't afford to stay (the walk-in rates are insane but discounts are available in the off season and through agents), take a look around this modern palace and sip a beer or cocktail in Agra's finest bar.

Eating

Delicious Agra specialities can be found in the bazaars. Peitha is a square sweet made from pumpkin and glucose that is flavoured with rosewater, coconut or saffron. Dalmoth is Agra's famous version of namkin (spicy nibbles). From October to March look out for gajak, a slightly spicy sesame-seed biscuit strip.

For such a touristy city, Agra isn't bursting with great restaurants – the cream can be found in the top hotels – but there are plenty of reasonable travellers restaurants in the Taj Ganj area, a few minor gems around Sadar Bazaar, and several terrace or rooftop restaurants where the quality of food is secondary to a view of the Taj.

TAJ GANJ AREA

This lively but congested and dusty area directly south of the Taj has plenty of budget rooftop restaurants, where the meals and menus appear to be carbon copies. None are licensed but it's often possible to order in a clandestine beer, which may arrive wrapped in newspaper or even in a teapot.

Joney's Place (Map p403; mains Rs 10-30; 5am-10.30pm) In the heart of Taj Ganj, this little cabin with pink chairs and an open 'kitchen' is a travellers institution. Open at the crack of dawn for early risers, Joney has been whipping up veg snacks, toasted sandwiches and creamy lassis for years.

Shankara Vegis Restaurant (Map p403; meals Rs 25-60) This relaxed rooftop restaurant has no Taj view but does have all the vegetarian favourites, as well as music and games like carom.

Stuff Makers (Map p403; meals Rs 25-70) Eat downstairs in the thatched hut at Hotel Kamal or join the crowd on the rooftop terrace with its fairy lights and sweet early morning Taj views. The food is reliable but uninspired, with all the backpacker favourites.

Yash Café (Map p403; mains Rs 25-90) This laid-back 1st-floor café has wicker chairs, sports channels on TV, movies in the evening, and a good range of veg and nonveg meals from thalis to pizzas. Also offers a shower and storage space to day visitors.

Lucky Restaurant (Map p403; meals Rs 20-100) A convivial place to hang out, with reliable food and a rooftop section.

Shanti Lodge Restaurant (Map p403; mains Rs 50-100) The rooftop Taj view here is brilliant so this is a great place for breakfast or an evening meal – there's some shade at the front for hot afternoons.

SADAR BAZAAR

Lakshmi Vilas (Map p398; Taj Rd; meals Rs 35-50; 8am-11pm) This South Indian specialist is plain in décor but clean and whips up over 30 dosa varieties, as well as idli (rice dumpling), vadai (fried snack of lentil or potato) and noodles.

Tourists Rest House (Map p398; ☎ 2363961; Kutchery Rd; meals Rs 30-80) The courtyard garden restaurant here is always full of chattering travellers enjoying candle-lit atmosphere; the veg menu is short but well regarded.

Zorba the Buddha (Map p398; meals Rs 80-150; noon-4.30pm & 6-9.30pm, closed Jun) Vases of flowers on neat little tables greet guests at this Osho-inspired bistro-style veg restaurant. It's clean and popular for its healthy soups, salads and indulgent ice creams.

Park (Map p398; Taj Rd; meals Rs 50-175) The large dining room at the Park has a hint of elegance with wood panelling and soft music. Veg and nonveg Indian, Chinese and continental food includes chicken au gratin, fish dishes and Mughlai tandoor specialities.

Dasaprakash (Map p398; ☎ 2363535, 1 Gwalior Rd; meals Rs 65-180) Highly recommended by locals for consistently good South Indian veg food, Dasaprakash whips up spectacular thalis, dosas and a few token continental dishes. The dessert sundaes are tempting but pricey (Rs 80 to 95). Comfortable booth seating and screens make for intimate dining.

OTHER AREAS

Only Restaurant (Map p398; ☎ 2226834; 45 the Mall; mains Rs 60-225; 11am-3pm & 6-11pm) Beloved of tour groups, Only has character and the food is good, if a little pricey. Bamboo-lined walls and red tablecloths set the scene, and attentive staff serve up a big range of veg and nonveg dishes in styles such as Mughlai, Afghan, Chinese and continental. There's live music in the evening in season (November to March).

our pick Bellevue (☎ 2231515; Taj East Gate Rd; mains Rs 70-200; 6.30am-10.30pm) Although the more casual of the two restaurants in Amar Vilas, Bellevue is all class and a fine place to enjoy a sumptuous breakfast buffet (US$20 for two people) or lunch with a Taj view through the large windows.

Mughal Room (Map p398; ☎ 2226121; 54 Taj Rd; mains Rs 80-200; 12.30-3.45pm & 7-11.30pm) On the top floor of Clarks Shiraz Hotel, you can dine in style with a distant view of the Taj and Agra Fort. There's live classical music here every evening and the food is thoughtfully prepared Indian, Chinese and continental. If you're really hungry, try Akbar's, a buffet restaurant also at Clarks Shiraz, where you can help yourself to breakfast (Rs 250), lunch and dinner (Rs 550).

Drinking & Entertainment

Beer shop (Map p403; 10am-11pm) In Taj Ganj, this is the place to pick up a cheap bottle of Kingfisher (Rs 60) to enjoy on a rooftop.

Jaiwal Bar (Map p398; 3 Taj Rd, 10am-11pm) In Sadar Bazar, this small bar is one of the few not in a midrange or top-end hotel. A beer costs Rs 70 and snacks are available.

Amar Vilas Bar (Taj East Gate Rd; drinks Rs 150-250; 11am-11pm) For a beer or cocktail in sheer opulence, look no further than this superb bar at Oberoi Amar Vilas. A terrace opens out to views of the Taj.

Catch live Indian classical music and *ghazal*s at several restaurants and top-end hotels.

Shopping

Agra is well known for marble items inlaid with coloured stones, similar to the pietra dura work on the Taj. Sadar Bazaar (Map p398) and the area around the Taj are full of emporiums of one kind or another, but prices here are more expensive than in the bazaars of the old town area. Prices are set according to the quality of detailed workmanship, not the size of the item. Be careful when buying marble, as fake marble (usually soapstone that scratches easily) is common.

Other popular buys include rugs, leather and gemstones, though the latter are imported from Rajasthan and are cheaper in Jaipur.

Kinari bazaar (Map p398) is a crowded tangle of streets but if you brave the mad traffic you can find traditional market stalls selling everything from textiles and handicrafts to fruit and produce.

About a kilometre along the traffic-quiet road from Taj East Gate, Shilpgram (10am-10pm Oct-Mar) is an open-air collection of stalls selling handicrafts and artworks that also has a café and bar. Every February a week-long food, craft and culture festival takes place.

Getting There & Away

AIR

Agra's Kheria airport is 7km from the city centre, but Indian Airlines (Map p398; ☎ 2226820; Clarks Shiraz Hotel, 54 Taj Rd; 10am-1.15pm & 2-5pm Mon-Sat) has ceased its Delhi–Agra–Khajuraho–Varanasi flights and there are currently no scheduled flights to or from Agra.

BUS

Most long-haul buses leave from Idgah bus station (Map p398; ☎ 2420324; Ajmer Rd). Hourly buses run to Delhi's Sarai Kale Khan bus station (Rs 91, five hours) via Mathura (Rs 30, 1½ hours) on the multilane motorway. Deluxe AC buses (Rs 166) depart at 7.30am and 3.30pm. Hourly buses go to Jaipur (Rs 124, six hours) and two buses daily go to Khajuraho (Rs 175, 10 hours) leaving at 5am and 6.30am. Frequent buses head off to Fatehpur Sikri (Rs 17, one hour) and Bharatpur (Rs 35, 1½ hours).

From Agra Fort bus station buses leave for Dehra Dun (Rs 210, 12 hours), Haridwar (Rs 190, 11 hours), Lucknow (Rs 197, 10 hours) and Delhi (Rs 105, five hours) via Mathura (Rs 30, 1½ hours).

Rajasthan government buses (Map p398) depart from Hotel Sakura, very close to Idgah bus station. The white deluxe buses run hourly to Jaipur (Rs 174, 5½ hours) between 6.30am and 2.30pm and then at 4.30pm, 5.30pm, 7.30pm, 10pm and midnight. Between March and October AC buses (Rs 250) run three times daily.

TRAIN

The train is easily the best way to travel to/from Delhi, Varanasi, Jaipur and Haridwar (for Rishikesh). Agra Cantonment (Cantt) train station (Map p398; ☎ 2421204) is an important stop on the main Delhi–Mumbai (Bombay) line, with several trains daily from both New Delhi and Hazrat Nizamuddin train stations. The fastest and most comfortable train to and from Delhi is the daily AC Shatabdi Express (chair/executive ex Delhi Rs 370/720, ex Agra Rs 395/760, two hours). It leaves New Delhi at 6.15am and departs from Agra for the return trip at 8.30pm, making it ideal for day-tripping.

A cheaper alternative is the daily Taj Express (2nd/chair Rs 56/211, three hours), which leaves Delhi's Hazrat Nizamuddin train station at 7.15am and departs from Agra for the return trip at 6.55pm. This gives you less time in Agra, but it connects with the daily tour (see p403). Be extra cautious with your luggage on this route.

Most east–west trains now leave from Agra Fort station. For Varanasi the best option is the nightly Marudhar Express, which leaves Agra Fort train station at 9.15pm, reaching Varanasi around 9.30am the next morning (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 243/687/985). The same train also runs west to Jaipur, leaving Agra at 6.15am, reaching Jaipur (Rs 117/330/473) at 11.30am and Jodhpur (Rs 220/622/892) at 6.20pm.

Agra also has several long-haul daily trains from Agra Fort to Kolkata (Calcutta; (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 365/1029/1479, 20 to 30 hours).

For Khajuraho, take any train to Jhansi (sleeper/3AC Rs 108/305, three hours) and a bus from there. Other trains run to Mumbai, Pune, Goa, Chennai (Madras) and Thiruvananthapuram (Trivandrum).

Getting Around

AUTORICKSHAW

Just outside the Agra Cantonment train station is the prepaid autorickshaw booth (Map p398; 24hr). It costs Rs 15 for a short 1km ride, Rs 30 to Sadar Bazaar and Rs 50 to Taj Ganj. A three-hour return tour to the Taj Mahal and Agra Fort costs Rs 160, a four-hour tour costs Rs 200 and an eight-hour tour costs Rs 300. A round trip, including waiting time, to Sikandra for Akbar's Mausoleum costs Rs 120. Autorickshaws are not permitted to come within 500m of the Taj Mahal itself. The chances of getting an autorickshaw driver to agree to any of the above fares away from the prepaid stand is wishful thinking – expect to be asked for at least double and bargain hard.

Keep an eye out for the newer green-and-yellow autorickshaws that are starting to become more common in Agra. These are run on CNG (compressed natural gas) rather than petrol, and so are less environmentally destructive.

BICYCLE

Bicycles can be rented from Raja Bicycle Store (Map p403; per day Rs 50; 8am-8.30pm) in Taj Ganj, but getting between monuments is a long, hot ride and the traffic is horrendous.

CYCLE-RICKSHAW

Best for short distances and around Taj Ganj, pedal power is cheaper than autorickshaws and more environmentally friendly. Rides should cost between Rs 20 and Rs 40 depending on the distance travelled.

OTHER TRANSPORT

From the Taj Mahal the road east to Shilpgram is mostly free of traffic, but horse-drawn tongas, electric vikrams, camel carts and even an elephant provide exotic transport, and there are also free battery-operated buses (every 15 minutes from 6am to 7pm).

TAXI

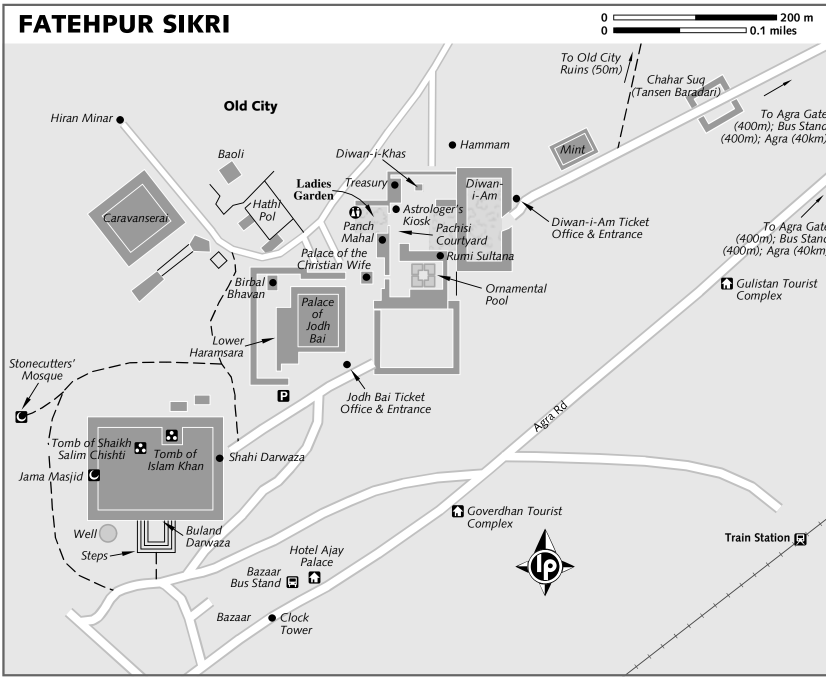
Just outside Agra Cantonment train station the prepaid taxi booth (24hr) gives a good idea of what taxis should cost. Taxis take up to four people: from the station to any five-star hotel is Rs 120 (AC Rs 150), while a three-hour tour costs Rs 300 (AC Rs 375) and a four-hour tour costs Rs 450 (AC Rs 650). An eight-hour tour is Rs 650 (AC Rs 950) or Rs 950 (AC Rs 1400) if it includes Fatehpur Sikri. A four-hour trip to Fatehpur Sikri costs Rs 600 (AC Rs 900). A return trip to Mathura costs Rs 750 or Rs 950 if it includes Vrindavan, while a return trip to the wonderful bird sanctuary at Bharatpur costs Rs 950, including waiting time. Further afield, one way to Delhi is Rs 2500 and Jaipur Rs 2700.

FATEHPUR SIKRI

☎ 05613 / pop 28,750

This magnificent fortified ghost city, 40km west of Agra, was the short-lived capital of the Mughal empire between 1571 and 1585, during the reign of Emperor Akbar. Akbar visited Sikri to consult the Sufi saint Shaikh Salim Chisti, who predicted the birth of an heir to the Mughal throne. When the prophecy came true, Akbar built his new capital here. Although a brilliant Indo-Islamic masterpiece, the city was erected in an area that suffered from water shortages and was abandoned shortly after Akbar's death. The well-preserved palace buildings and the still-used mosque are a superb reminder of the Mughals at their architectural peak, and you can wander around other ruins scattered behind the mosque and the mint.

SAVING THE BEARS



Just a few years ago, travellers on the road between Agra and Fatehpur Sikri would have seen captive sloth bears by the roadside, forced to dance like circus animals for money. You won't see them there anymore – although you may still see them elsewhere in northern India – thanks to the efforts of a passionate group of people who are working to stop this cruel practice and save the bears.

India's first sanctuary for 'dancing' bears, the Agra Bear Rescue Facility, was established by Wildlife SOS (☎ 9810114563, Delhi office 011-24621939; www.wildlifesos.com) in 2002 when an eight-hectare site was secured inside the Sur Sarovar Bird Sanctuary, 17km west of Agra. The sanctuary provides refuge, rehabilitation and veterinary care for more than 130 sloth bears that have been rescued from Qalandar gypsies. The bears are poached from the forests as cubs – their mothers often killed – and sold in illegal markets to Qalanders, who have used the dancing bears as a source of income for centuries. A metal rod is inserted through their muzzle so that a rope or nose ring can be attached and they spend much of their miserable lives in pain chained to a stake or in a cage. Their canine teeth are crudely knocked out, and the bears are beaten into submission to teach them to 'perform'.

When bears are brought into the facility, they are given veterinary treatment and placed in a 90-day quarantine before moving to a socialisation pen where they can learn to interact with other bears, and finally to a larger enclosure. Because the bears have been captive most of their lives, it's unlikely they can ever be released into the wild, but the goal of Wildlife SOS is to stamp out the practice of dancing bears – which has been illegal in India since 1972 but still enslaves some 800 bears – and thus stop the poaching of cubs. An important part of this is finding an alternative source of income for the Qalander tribespeople and educating them about the cruelty of their former profession. A number of young Qalander men are even employed at the sanctuary helping care for the bears.

The Agra Bear Rescue Facility welcomes small groups of visitors who are interested in seeing first-hand this important rehabilitation work. It's moving to see the passion of the people who work here, and wonderful to witness the bears enjoying their new-found health and freedom. To visit, first contact the Wildlife SOS by phone or email. To enter you need to go into the Sur Sarovar Bird Sanctuary (Rs 350) – since it's owned by the forestry department, everyone must pay the entry fee; however, official donors can have the fee waived by prior arrangement.

For more information and if you want to donate, see the Wildlife SOS website or contact one of the fund partners Free the Bears (www.freethebears.org.au) or World Society for the Protection of Animals (WSPA; www.wspa.org.uk).

Most people visit this World Heritage site as a day trip from Agra, but you can stay in the nearby town, and the red sandstone palaces are at their most atmospheric at sunset.

Orientation & Information

The palace buildings lie along the top of a ridge with the small town of Fatehpur Sikri just to the south. The Jama Masjid and the ruins near it and behind the mint can be visited free of charge. Swarms of unofficial guides will follow you relentlessly, demanding a ridiculous fee of Rs 300, but if you want a guide it's best to hire an official one near a ticket office (Rs 50 to 100). The purpose of many buildings is uncertain and much of what the guides say is pure fiction.

Sights

JAMA MASJID

This beautiful and expansive mosque, also known as the Dargah Mosque, was completed in 1571 and contains elements of Persian and Indian design. The main entrance is through the highly impressive 54m-high Buland Darwaza (Victory Gate), perhaps the largest in Asia, and built to commemorate Akbar's military victory in Gujarat. A Quranic inscription inside the archway quotes Jesus saying: 'The world is a bridge, pass over it but build no house upon it. He who hopes for an hour may hope for eternity', which seems appropriate considering the fate of the city.

Inside the courtyard is the superb white marble tomb of Shaikh Salim Chishti, completed in 1581. Inside the mausoleum are brightly coloured flower murals and the canopy is decorated with mother-of-pearl shell. Just as Akbar came to the saint four centuries ago hoping for a son, childless women visit his tomb today and tie a thread to the jalis (marble lattice screens), which are among the finest in India. To the right of the tomb lie stone slabs marking the graves of royal family members and nearby is the entrance to an underground tunnel (barred by a locked gate) that reputedly goes all the way to Agra Fort!

Around the perimeter of the courtyard is a shaded arched arcade occupied by various artisans and souvenir vendors.

PALACES & PAVILIONS

The first of the palace buildings (Indian/foreigner Rs 20/260, video Rs 25; dawn-dusk) you enter from the south is the largest, the Palace of Jodh Bai. Constructed around a courtyard, it blends traditional Indian columns, Islamic cupolas and blue Persian roof tiles.

The Palace of the Christian Wife was used by Akbar's Goan Christian wife Mariam, and you can see the remains of the paintings that once covered the inside. Mariam married Akbar in 1562, gave birth to Jehangir in 1569 at Fatehpur Sikri and died in Agra in 1623.

Birbal Bhavan, ornately carved inside and out, was probably used by two of Akbar's senior wives.

The function of the Lower Haramsara is controversial – it may have housed servants but it looks more like stables for the horses, camels and elephants.

The most intricately carved structure is the wonderful Rumi Sultana, which is entirely covered with a mass of exuberant carving.

The whimsical Panch Mahal is a five-storey pavilion that was used by the court ladies. Each of the storeys is reduced until the top one consists of only a tiny kiosk. The lower floor has 84 columns, all different.

The Treasury has sea monsters carved on the ceiling struts to protect the fabulous wealth once stored there, while the so-called Astrologer's Kiosk in front has roof supports carved in a serpentine Jain style.

The Diwan-i-Khas (Hall of Private Audiences) has an ordinary exterior, but the interior is dominated by a magnificently carved stone column in the centre of the building. The pillar flares to create a flat-topped plinth linked to the four corners of the room by narrow stone bridges, from where Akbar is believed to have debated with scholars who stood at the ends of the four bridges. Outside is the Pachisi Courtyard where Akbar is said to have played the game pachisi using slave girls as the pieces.

The Diwan-i-Am (Hall of Public Audiences) is where Akbar dispensed justice 'without harshness or ill-will', according to the information board.

Plenty of ruins are scattered behind the mosque, including the caravanserai, a vast courtyard surrounded by rooms where visiting merchants stayed, and the bizarre 21m Hiran Minar, a tower decorated with hundreds of stone representations of elephant tusks. Badly defaced elephants still guard Hathi Pol (Elephant Gate), while the remains of the small Stonecutters' Mosque and a hammam (bath) are nearby. Other unnamed ruins can be explored north of the mint, including some in the middle of a village.

Hotel Ajay Palace (☎ 282950; Agra Rd; d with shared/private bathroom Rs 150/200; meals Rs 20-80) There are just four rooms in this guesthouse close to the main monuments and right by the bus stand. It's squat toilets only, but rooms are neat and the hosts are friendly.

Goverdhan Tourist Complex (☎ 282643; www.hotelfatehpursikriviews.com; Agra Rd; s/d Rs 450/650, d with AC Rs 800;) About 200m from the Jama Masjid, Goverdhan has some spacious rooms, a garden and some nice touches, such as a small library and free internet. Fatehpur Sikri's culinary speciality is khataie, the biscuits you can see piled high in the bazaar.

Getting There & Away

Tour buses usually stop for 1½ hours, which is not long enough. Make a day of it by catching a bus (Rs 17, one hour) from Agra's Idgah bus stand; buses depart every 30 minutes between 7am and 7pm. Get on a small bus direct to Fatehpur Sikri town rather than one of the big buses going to Bharatpur that will drop you near Agra Gate, a 1km walk from the monuments. The last bus back to Agra from the bazaar bus stand leaves at 7pm.

Autorickshaws are not allowed to make the Agra to Fatehpur Sikri trip, but a taxi should cost Rs 600 return including waiting time.

Buses from the bazaar bus stand leave regularly for Bharatpur (Rs 15, 30 minutes) and Jaipur (Rs 80, 4½ hours).

MATHURA

☎ 0565 / pop 319,235

Braj Bhoomi – the 'Land of Eternal Love' and the name given to the region where the popular god Krishna is believed to have been born and spent his early years – existed only in the collective consciousness of Hindus until it was rediscovered by 16th-century scholars in the physical world in and around Mathura, 58km northwest of Agra.

Mathura was once a Buddhist centre with 20 monasteries that housed 3000 monks, but during the 8th century Buddhism began to give way to Hinduism. In 1017 most of the Buddhist temples and Hindu shrines were levelled by the Afghan warlord Mahmud of Ghazni. More destruction occurred in the 16th century when Aurangzeb flattened the Kesava Deo Temple during one of his many demolition sprees and built a mosque in its place.

Nowadays the area is a religious centre full of Hindu temples that attract floods of pilgrims, particularly during Janmastami (Krishna's birthday) in August/September.

Information

A UP Tourism office (☎ 2505351; Station Rd; ⌚ 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) is here. The State Bank of India (Station Rd; ⌚ 10am-4pm Mon-Fri, 10am-1pm Sat) exchanges travellers cheques and cash in US dollars, British pounds and euros. A UTI Bank ATM is opposite Hotel Mukund Palace on Junction Rd.

SRI KRISHNA JANMBHOOMI

Among the foundations of the mural-filled Kesava Deo Temple (⌚ 5am-noon & 4-9pm) is a small, bare room with a slab of rock on which Krishna is said to have been born 3500 years ago. He was obliged to make his entry into the world in these undignified surroundings because his parents had been imprisoned by the tyrannical King Kansa, Krishna's uncle.

Surrounding the temple are gardens and arcades of shops that sell Krishna souvenirs. Next door is Katra Masjid, a mosque built by Aurangzeb, which is guarded round the clock by soldiers to prevent a repeat of the events at Ayodhya in 1992 (see p424).

About 200m away is Potara Kund, a tank where baby Krishna's nappies were supposedly washed.

ARCHAEOLOGICAL MUSEUM

This large museum (☎ 2500847; Museum Rd; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/25, camera Rs 25; ⌚ 10.30am-4.30pm Tue-Sun) is well worth visiting for its superb collection of religious sculptures by the Mathura school, which flourished from the 3rd century BC to the 12th century AD. The world-class skills of the unknown craftsmen who created these artworks centuries ago are more than impressive.

VISHRAM GHAT & AROUND

A string of ghats and bustling temples line the Yamuna River north of the main road bridge. The most popular is Vishram Ghat, where Krishna is said to have rested at after killing King Kansa. Today colourful boats gather along the banks touting for boat rides along the Yamuna River (Rs 50 for half an hour). Beside the ghat is the 17m Sati Burj, a four-storey tower built by the son of Behari Mal of Jaipur in 1570 to commemorate his mother's sati (self-immolation on her husband's funeral pyre). Nearby in the bazaar is Dwarkadheesh Temple, which was built in 1814 by Seth Gokuldass in honour of – you guessed it – Krishna.

GITA TEMPLE

This serene marble temple (⌚ dawn-dusk), on the road to Vrindavan, has the entire Bhagavad Gita written on a red pillar in the garden.

Mathura has a scattering of hotels, particularly around Station Rd and around Sri Krishna Janmbhoomi. Krishna devotees can stay in the International Guest House (☎ 2423888; d Rs 50-150) at Sri Krishna Janmbhoomi, which has basic but clean rooms.

Agra Hotel (☎ 2403318; Bengali Ghat; s/d Rs 225/300, d with AC Rs 600; ❄) The riverside location on the ghats just south of Vishram Ghat and close to the bustling bazaar makes this Mathura's most interesting budget hotel. Hotel Brijwasi Royal (☎ 240 1224; www.brijwasiroyal.com; Station Rd; s/d/ste from Rs 1500/1700/3200; 💻) The comfortable rooms in this centrally located midrange hotel have bathtubs and overlook a buffalo pond and lawn area. The multicuisine veg Status Restaurant has a striking Krishna

Mathura is 58km northwest of Agra and 141km south of Delhi. From the new Mathura bus stand (☎ 2406468) half-hourly buses (Rs 80, four hours) run to southern Delhi's Sarai Kale Khan bus station, and even more frequently buses go to Agra (Rs 30, 1½ hours). Most local buses, such as those to Vrindavan, leave from the old Mathura bus stand.

Several trains between Delhi and Agra stop at Mathura Junction train station (☎ 2405830). The fastest train from Delhi is the Taj Express, which departs from Hazrat Nizamuddin station at 7.15am (2nd class/chair Rs 44/169, two hours). Frequent direct trains also run to Agra (2nd class/chair Rs 26/142, one hour), Bharatpur, Sawai Madhopur (for Ranthambore National Park) and Kota.

The International Society for Krishna Consciousness (Iskcon; ☎ 2540343; www.iskcon.com) is based at the elaborately carved, white-marble Krishna Balaram temple complex. Also known as the Hare Krishnas, the organisation was founded in New York in the 1960s by Swami Prabhupada (d 1977). Several hundred foreigners attend courses and seminars here annually. It's possible to stay at the guesthouse behind the temple complex.

Rangaji temple dates from 1851 and is a bizarre mixture of architectural styles – a Rajput entrance gate, a soaring South Indian gopuram (intricately carved gateway tower), decorative Italianate pillars and a golden mast.

The cavernous, red sandstone Govind Dev temple, built in 1590 by Raja Man Singh of Amber, has cute bells carved on its pillars. Resident monkeys are adept at stealing sunglasses and anything else not tied down.

The castlelike, 10-storey Pagal Baba temple (admission Rs 2) has an amusing succession of animated puppets and diaromas behind glass cases on the ground floor, which depict scenes from the lives of Rama and Krishna.

The glittery Krishna temple, at the town's entrance, is modern and adorned with mirrors, enamel art and chandeliers. On the right is a fake cave passageway (admission Rs 3) where you walk past a long line of slightly moving tableaux depicting scenes from Krishna's life.

Radha Ballabh temple, built in 1626, Madan Mohan temple and Nidhivan temple are also worth a visit.

LUCKNOW

Liberally sprinkled with British Raj-era buildings, the ruins of the historic Residency and boasting two superb mausoleums, Lucknow oozes historical interest, although you have to go looking for it in the sprawling congestion that characterises the capital of Uttar Pradesh.

The city rose to prominence as the home of the nawabs of Avadh (Oudh). They controlled a region of northern-central India for about a century after the decline of the Mughal empire and most of the city's monuments date from this period.

The Shiite nawabs built huge entrance gates embellished with their royal two-fish symbol all over the city to impress their mainly Hindu subjects, as well as grandiose tombs for themselves. They were great patrons of the culinary and other arts, particularly dance and music. Lucknow's reputation as a city of culture, gracious living and rich cuisine has continued to this day.

In 1856 the British annexed Avadh, exiling Nawab Wajid Ali Shah (see the boxed text, p416) to a palace in Kolkata. The disruption this caused was a factor in the Indian Uprising of 1857 and the famous Siege of Lucknow (see the boxed text, p414).

Although many travellers bypass Lucknow on their way between Agra and Varanasi, a day or two spent here is well worth it.

Orientation

Lucknow sprawls over a wide area, but the central accommodation and shopping area is known as Hazratganj, which is split by the main street, Mahatma Gandhi (MG) Rd, about 3km northeast of the Charlbagh bus stand and the train stations. The historic monuments are northwest of the city near the Gomti River.

Sights

RESIDENCY

The large collection of gardens and ruins that make up the Residency (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/105; ⌚ dawn-dusk) offer a fascinating historical glimpse into the beginning of the end for the British Raj. All that remains are the crumbling but well-preserved ruins of the church, mosque, school, post office, jail, sheep farm, banquet hall and houses that once made up the Residency compound. The Residency was built for the British Resident by the local nawab, and completed in 1800. It became the stage for the most dramatic events of the 1857 Uprising – the Siege of Lucknow (see the boxed text, below).

The red-brick ruins are peaceful today, but thousands died on both sides during the 87 days of constant siege, sniper fire and bombardment. The Residency compound has been left as it was at the time of the final relief and the walls are still pockmarked from bullets and cannon balls.

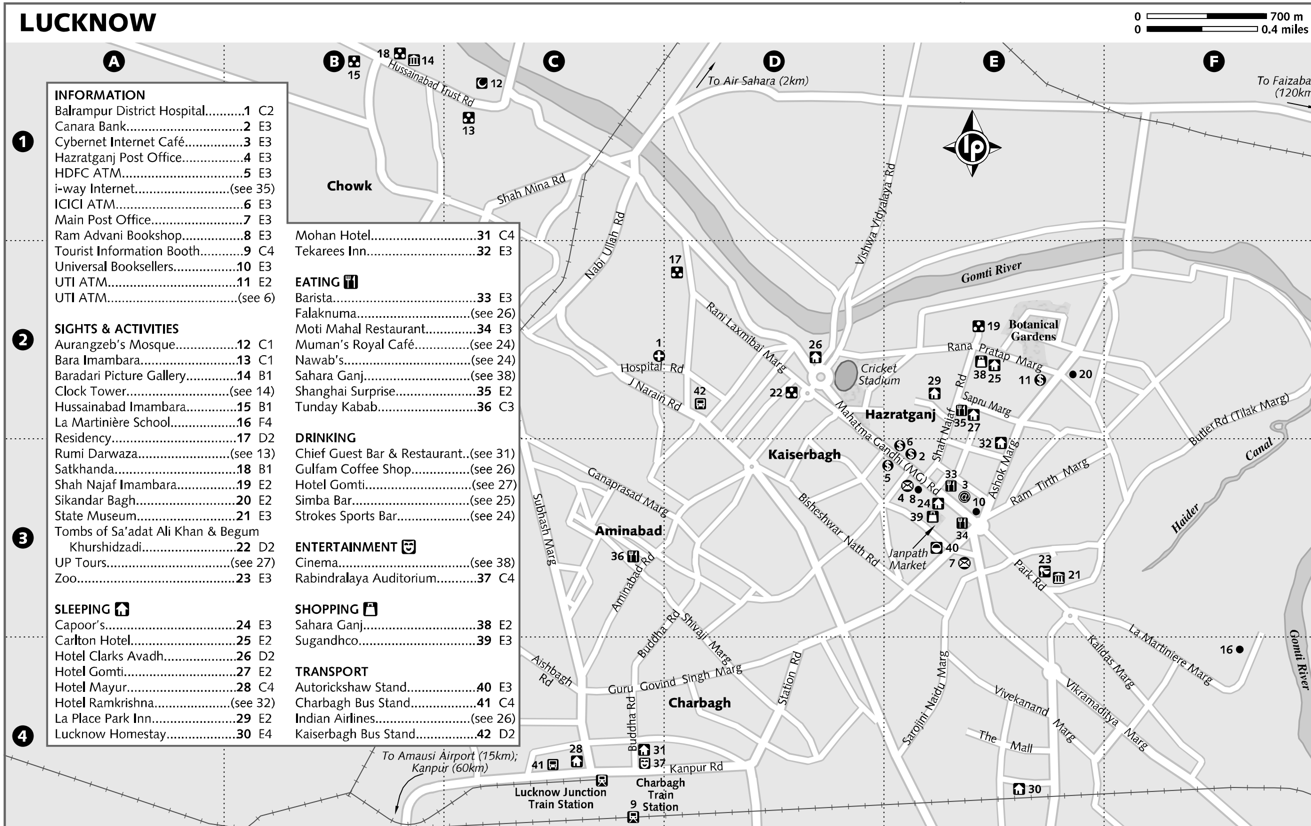
The focus is the well-designed museum (⌚ 10am-4.30pm Mon-Sat) in the main Residency building. It includes a scale model of the original buildings, paintings of the nawabs and battle scenes, and poignant marks from cannon balls' impacts on the walls. Downstairs are the huge basement rooms where many of the British women and children lived throughout the siege – battle scene dioramas now tell the tale. The cemetery around the ruined St Mary's church is where 2000 of the defenders were buried, including their leader Sir Henry Lawrence, 'who tried to do his duty' according to the famous inscription on his weathered gravestone.

BARA IMAMBARA

This colossal but decaying tomb (Hussainabad Trust Rd; Indian/foreigner Rs 20/300; ⌚ dawn-dusk) is a maze of courtyards, two imposing gates, a large step-well (baori) and a mosque (only Muslims are allowed inside). It was built in the 1780s by Nawab Asaf-ud-Daula as a famine relief project. He, his senior wife and his architect are buried here. Keep hold of your ticket as it includes free entry to Hussainabad Imambara and the Baradari art gallery.

The central hall, a50m long, 16m wide and 15m high, is one of the world's largest vaulted galleries. *Tazia*s, small replicas of Imam Hussain's tomb in Karbala, Iraq, are stored inside and are paraded around during the Shiite mourning ceremony of Muharram.

An external stairway leads to a very unusual labyrinth of passageways known as the Bhulbhulaiya. The guides here vehemently claim that visiting the labyrinth is dangerous and illegal without a guide. If you prefer to look around everything on your own, you can – official guide rates are quoted as Rs 165 for the main hall and Rs 75 for the labyrinth.



AN EPIC SIEGE

Upon the outbreak of the 1857 Indian Uprising, also known as the First War of Independence, or the Indian Mutiny by the British, all the British inhabitants of Lucknow – around 1300 – took refuge with Sir Henry Lawrence in his Residency.

In total, 2994 men, women and children were crammed into the Residency buildings. Most were Indian and only half the total were soldiers. Conditions soon became appalling as the surrounded and helpless captives prayed for a relief force or a miracle. Food, drink and medicines became very scarce, and cholera, typhoid and smallpox claimed more lives than snipers' bullets.

It took 87 days for a small relief force to break through, but they too became trapped inside, and the siege continued for another 60 gruesome days. Published accounts, many written by female survivors, reveal a stiff upper lip in the face of extreme adversity.

The Residency was eventually relieved, but not before 2000 had died inside, the buildings had been reduced to ruins and the edifice of British rule in India had been rocked to its foundations.

Beside the Bara Imambara, and also built by Asaf-ud-Daula, is the unusual but imposing Rumi Darwaza, said to be a copy of an entrance gate in Istanbul. 'Rumi' (relating to Rome) is the term Muslims applied to Istanbul when it was still Byzantium, the capital of the Eastern Roman empire. Over the road is Aurangzeb's mosque, but the interior is less impressive than the exterior.

HUSSAINABAD (CHOTA) IMAMBARA & AROUND

Just 500m up the road from the Bara Imambara is another tomb (Hussainabad Trust Rd; admission for foreigners only possible with Bara Imambara ticket; dawn-dusk) that was constructed by Mohammed Ali Shah in 1832. His tomb is here alongside his mother's. Smaller than the Bara Imambara but adorned with calligraphy, it has a much more serene and intimate atmosphere.

In the garden is a tank and two replicas of the Taj Mahal that are the tombs of Mohammed Ali Shah's daughter and her husband. A traditional hammam can be seen as well as Mohammed's silver throne and red crown, countless chandeliers and some tazias.

The decaying watchtower on the other side of the road looks like a medieval painting of the Tower of Babel. Known as Satkhanda (Seven Storey Tower), it actually has only four storeys because construction was abandoned in 1840 when Mohammed Ali Shah died.

The 67m red-brick clock tower, reputedly the tallest in India, was built in the 1880s in memory of Sir George Couper, a reform-minded Governor of UP (United Provinces in those days). Nearby is a baradari (summer palace; admission only possible with Bara Imambara ticket; 8am-6pm Tue-Sun), which overlooks an artificial lake and houses large portraits and photos of the nawabs of Avadh.

SIKANDAR BAGH

This walled garden (Rana Pratap Marg; dawn-dusk) was created by Wajid Ali Shah, the last nawab (see below), for his favourite queen, Sikandar Mahal. The splendid gateway, the tiny mosque and part of the wall are original. Hundreds died here in a pitched battle between Indian 'mutineers' and a British and Indian relief force during the Siege of Lucknow (see p414). The main gate is locked, but the small side gate is usually open.

ZOO & MUSEUM

The large, shady zoo (☎ 2239588; Park Rd; admission Rs 10; 8.30am-7pm Tue-Sun) is worth a visit if only to escape Lucknow's chaotic streets. Lions, elephants, deer, bears and monkeys are on view and the enclosures aren't the worst in India.

Within the zoo is the fine State Museum (☎ 2206158; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/50, camera Rs 20; 10.30am-4pm Tue-Sun), which houses sculptural masterpieces dating back to the 3rd century AD. Graceful and intricately carved Mathura sculptures range from dancing girls to scenes from the life of Buddha. Other galleries display the skills of local artisans and artists who flourished under the patronage of the nawabs. In the garden behind the museum is a dumping ground for Raj-era statuary, which provides a perfect End of Empire photo opportunity.

THE LAST NAWAB

Wajid Ali Shah was deposed by the British East India Company when it took over Avadh in 1856, and he lived in Kolkata on a fat pension of Rs 1,200,000 a year until his death in 1887. He was seen as a debauched, overdressed fop who squandered his vast income on his own pleasures rather than on the uplifting of his poverty-stricken subjects. He lived in his palace cocooned by an army of wives, muta (temporary) wives, concubines, eunuchs, servants and slaves.

But since Independence his image has been given a makeover, and he has been described as a talented, multilingual Renaissance prince, a gourmet who appreciated good food, a poet, playwright, dancer, choreographer and theatrical producer – the Lloyd Webber of his day. He wrote and starred in his own lavishly mounted raha (musicals) and had hundreds of artistic types on his payroll. It is said that he was a good Muslim who never drank alcohol and said his prayers five times a day.

Satyajit Ray's complex parable about colonialism, The Chess Players (1977), is a fascinating film about the two colliding worlds of the last nawab and the British administrators.

LA MARTINIÈRE SCHOOL

This prestigious boarding school (☎ 2223863; La Martiniere Marg), on the eastern edge of the city, was designed and built by the Frenchman Major General Claude Martin as a palatial home. In 1800 it became his tomb – he is buried in the basement. His architectural abilities were, to say the least, a little confused – the façade is part Roman archways, part Gothic horror movie, and part Disneyland castle with a jumble of turrets and gargoyles piled merrily atop a long line of Corinthian columns.

OTHER SIGHTS

The impressive Shah Najaf Imambara (Rana Pratap Marg; dawn-dusk) is the tomb of Nawab Ghazi-ud-din Haidar, who died in 1827, and three of his wives, including one known as Mubarak Mahal who was a European.

Not far from here are two other large tombs (MG Rd; dawn-dusk) of Nawab Sa'adat Ali Khan (1798–1814) and his wife Begum Khurshid-zadi. The tombs are next to each other and can only be viewed from the outside.

Tours

UP Tours (☎ 2612659; Hotel Gomti, 6 Sapru Marg; tours Rs 520; 9.30am-7pm Mon-Sat) runs a four-hour daily tour of Lucknow. This is a good deal as it includes guide and entry fees to three imambaras (tombs dedicated to a Shiite Muslim holy man) and the Residency. The tour will pick up from a number of hotels. It also offers tonga tours by horse-drawn cart for Rs 300.

Sleeping

The best place to look for a bed in Lucknow is along MG Rd and just north in the commercial Hazratganj area.

BUDGET

The usual gamut of cheap, seedy hotels exists between the bus and train stations, but decent budget hotels are in short supply.

Lucknow Homestay (☎ 2235460; naheed2k@gmail.com; 110D Mall Ave; r Rs 300) This lovely family homestay in a leafy neighbourhood southeast of Hazratganj is run by an engaging couple. The seven rooms are simple but comfortable (two with private bathroom), home-cooked meals are available and there's wifi. Call ahead for availability and directions.

Hotel Ramkrishna (☎ 2451824; 17/2 Ashok Marg; s/d from Rs 200/250, d with AC 650) The AC rooms are tidy and the cheaper rooms, while not flash, are reasonable value at this well-located hotel just north of MG Rd.

Hotel Mayur (☎ 2451824; Subhash Marg; s/d from Rs 275/350, s/d with AC Rs 550/650) One of the better cheapies near the train station – the more expensive rooms have TV and hot water and are worth the extra cost.

Hotel Gomti (☎ 2212291; hotelgomti@up-tourism.com; 6 Sapru Marg; s/d Rs 450/550, s with AC Rs 775-1100, d with AC Rs 950-1200) This UP Tourism hotel is better equipped than most with a range of rooms, restaurant, bar and gardens. The old-fashioned rooms are a bit threadbare and don't really live up to the chandeliers in the foyer.

MIDRANGE

Capoor's (☎ 2623958; capoors@yahoo.com; 52 MG Rd; s Rs 900-1100, d Rs 1050-1350, ste Rs 1550-1950) Perfectly located in the heart of Hazratganj, Capoor's is the pick of Lucknow's hotels in this range – if only for its old-fashioned ambience – and is often full. Some of the rooms are a little dark but have a certain charm and all are AC. A popular restaurant and bar add to the busy atmosphere.

Mohan Hotel (☎ 2635797; mohanhotel@rediffmail.com; Buddha Rd; s Rs 700-1150, d Rs 900-1400) Mohan is the best of the hotels close to the train station but unless you're planning a quick exit, this isn't Lucknow's prime real estate. All rooms have AC, TV and fridge, but it's pretty gloomy. There's a good restaurant and bar attached, and 24-hour checkout is handy.

Carlton Hotel (☎ 2622413; Rana Pratap Marg; s/d Rs 1150/1350) Built by a Mr Carlton in a palatial maharaja style in 1948, this place is now very run-down but renovations are promised and it has a real Raj-era charm. Rooms are musty but enormous, and the lawn and garden create a peaceful oasis.

Tekarees Inn (☎ 4016241; www.tekareesinn.com; 17/3 Ashok Marg; s Rs 990-1250, d 1350-1600) Although a small, nondescript business-style hotel, Tekarees is an excellent midrange choice – it's central, rooms are spotless with tiled floors, TV and fridge, and the staff are helpful.

TOP END

La Place Park Inn (☎ 4004040; www.parkinnlucknow.com; 6 Shah Najaf Rd; s/d/ste Rs 3600/4200/5200) This hotel claims to treat every guest as a nawab. Modern, well-furnished rooms have bathtubs, there's an open-air rooftop grill restaurant and 24-hour coffee shop. It's clearly business-oriented – but for this standard it lacks a pool or health club.

Hotel Clarks Avadh (☎ 2620131; www.clarksavadh.com; 8 MG Rd; d/ste from Rs 5000/9000;) Lucknow's best all-round hotel displays a cool elegance and restrained décor. Slick rooms have baths and views of either the Gomti River or the cricket stadium. The elevated outdoor pool is superb, and there's a gym, a jazzy bar and an excellent top-floor restaurant.

Eating

RESTAURANTS

The refined palates of the nawabs left Lucknow with a reputation for rich Mughlai cuisine. The city is famous for its wide range of kebabs and for dum pukht – the 'art' of steam pressure cooking, in which meat and vegetables are cooked in a sealed clay pot. Huge rumali roti (paper-thin chapatis) are served in many small Muslim-style restaurants in the old city. They arrive folded up and should be eaten with a goat or lamb curry like bhuna ghosht or rogan josh.

The popular dessert kulfi faluda (ice cream with long chickpea flour noodles) is served in several places in Aminabad. The sweet orange-coloured rice dish known as zarda is also popular.

Hazratganj's MG Rd is full of gourmet delights, and a number of restaurants have live ghazal music in the evening.

Tunday Kabab (☎ 5524046; Aminabad Rd; dishes Rs 8-35) In the bustling Aminabad district, this renowned local kababi serves up reliable plates of mutton biryani, kebabs and tandoori chicken at unbeatable prices. Rickshaw drivers know how to find it.

Moti Mahal Restaurant (MG Rd; meals Rs 40-90) Downstairs is a sweet and snack shop, while hidden away upstairs is a dimly lit restaurant serving up tasty, well-presented food. Try the Lucknow dum aloo (potatoes stuffed with nuts and paneer in a tomato-based sauce) followed by kulfi faluda.

Muman's Royal Café (MG Rd; chaat Rs 10-40, mains Rs 70-150) Even if you don't step inside this popular family restaurant, don't miss the 'world-famous-in-Lucknow' chaat (spicy snack) stand at the front where mixed *chaat*s are served in an aloo (potato) basket. Inside you can dine on chicken Mughlai, tandoor kebabs and pizza.

Nawab's (Capoor's; MG Rd; Rs 80-180) Portraits of the nawabs look down from the walls as you sample the traditional food that the talented chefs here have perfected, including kebabs, biryanis and slow-cooked regional specialities.

Shanghai Surprise (☎ 2201556; Sapru Marg; mains Rs 80-270; noon-4pm & 7-11pm) This smart subterranean restaurant specialises in Thai, Chinese and an attempt at Japanese cuisine – everything from tom yum and nasi goreng to lemon chicken. Prawn and duck also feature on the menu and while the flavours aren't straight from the Orient, the food is tasty.

Falaknuma (Hotel Clarks Avadh, 5 MG Rd; meals Rs 160-280) Lucknow's best hotel also lays claim to having its best restaurant. The stylish rooftop dining room has bird's-eye views of either the Gomti River or the cricket stadium. It serves up sumptuous nawab cuisine, such as kakori (minced lamb) and galawat (minced mutton) kebabs.

QUICK EATS

Sahara Ganj (cnr Shah Najaf Rd & Rana Pratap Marg) A glitzy new shopping mall – the third-biggest in India – with a food court and fast-food chains. It's popular with Lucknow's youth.

Barista (MG Rd; coffees & sandwiches Rs 30-50) This modern and reliable Indian coffee chain provides board games along with a great range of hot and cold coffees, shakes, sundaes and snacks.

Drinking & Entertainment

Lucknow's lingering British influence extends to a penchant for bars, so there's no excuse for an early night. As well as the bars listed below, other good ones can be found at the Gomti Hotel, the nostalgic, Raj-era Simba Bar at the Carlton Hotel and the Gulfam Coffee Shop at Hotel Clarks Avadh.

Lucknow has a strong tradition in the performing arts, and has its own schools and styles of Kathak dance (classical North Indian dance). Many restaurants, such as Chief Guest Restaurant, Falaknuma and Nawab's, have live Indian music in the evening, usually *ghazal*s.

our pick Strokes Sports Bar (Capoor's, MG Rd; admission Rs 300 per couple after 7pm; noon-11pm, till 3am Sat) With metallic décor, zebra print chairs and a backlit bar, this is as funky as it gets. On Saturday nights it becomes a minidisco, but only couples are allowed in (Rs 500 per couple). You get the entry cost back in coupons to spend on food and drinks. The small bar next door is always free.

Chief Guest Bar & Restaurant (Mohan Hotel, Buddha Rd) Enjoy a meal and a beer at this hotel bar while listening to live *ghazal*s from 8pm (except Tuesday).

Rabindralaya Auditorium (☎ 2455670; Kanpur Rd) Opposite the train stations, the auditorium hosts classical music, dance and theatrical performances.

There's a multiplex cinema at the Sahara Ganj shopping mall.

Shopping

Lucknow is famous for the delicately embroidered muslin cloth known as chikan, which is worn by men and women. It is sold in the small but relatively traffic-free Janpath Market just south of MG Rd in Hazratganj. Also in this market is the sweet-smelling Sugandhco, a century-old family business that sells attar – pure essence oil extracted from flowers by a traditional method.

Getting There & Away

AIR

Amausi airport is 15km southwest of Lucknow. Indian Airlines (☎ 2220927; Hotel Clarks Avadh, 8 MG Rd; 9am-5pm Mon-Fri, 9am-2pm Sat) operates daily flights to Delhi (US$88) and Mumbai (US$196).

Air Sahara (☎ 377675; www.airsahara.net; Sahara India Tower, Aliganj) has discount daily flights to Delhi and Mumbai.

BUS

From Charbagh bus stand (☎ 2450988; Kanpur Rd), near the train stations, frequent buses leave for Faizabad (Rs 80, three hours), Gorakhpur (Rs 150, 8½ hours) and Allahabad (non-AC/AC Rs 109/146, five hours). Several buses run each day to Varanasi (non-AC/AC Rs 160/256, 8½ hours) and Agra (Rs 197, 10 hours).

From Kaiserbagh bus stand (☎ 2222503; J Narain Rd) buses run to Delhi (Rs 255, 13 hours), as well as to Faizabad and Gorakhpur.

TRAIN

The two main stations, Charbagh (☎ 2635841; Kanpur Rd) and Lucknow Junction (☎ 2635877), are side by side; Northern Railway trains run to both stations, while Northeastern Railway trains run only to the latter. Essentially, Charbagh handles all trains travelling between Delhi and Kolkata, while Lucknow Junction handles many of the trains heading to the cities in the south (see the boxed text, below).

Getting Around

TO/FROM THE AIRPORT

Taxis charge around Rs 300 and autorickshaws Rs 150 for the 15km trip to Amausi airport.

LOCAL TRANSPORT

A short cycle-rickshaw ride is Rs 10, and from the train station to the Residency costs Rs 30. Autorickshaws are the best way out to the Bara Imambara area (Rs 60 from the train station). A four-hour autorickshaw tour covering all the main sights costs Rs 200, while taxis charge around Rs 350. Eight-seater vikrams run on fixed routes and charge Rs 2 to 8. Local buses are usually too jam-packed to use.

ALLAHABAD

☎ 0532 / pop 1,049,579

Allahabad, 135km west of Varanasi, holds an important place in the Hindu religion. It's here that two of India's most significant and holy rivers, the Ganges and the Yamuna, meet. The mythical subterranean Saraswati River (River of Enlightenment) is also believed to join them here. On the banks of this confluence the biggest gathering of humanity in the world, the Kumbh Mela, takes place every 12 years, but every year there is a smaller religious fair, the Magh Mela. Of more immediate interest to travellers, though, are Allahabad's grand Raj-era buildings, Mughal fort and tombs and the historic legacy of the Nehru family.

Orientation

Allahabad's Civil Lines is a district of broad avenues, Raj-era bungalows, hotels, restaurants, ice-cream parlours, bakeries and the more modern shops. The Civil Lines bus stand, which is the main bus terminal, is also here in the southeast corner. This area is divided from Chowk, the crowded, older part of town, by Allahabad Junction train station and the railway line. Sangam and Akbar's Fort are 7km southeast of Civil Lines.

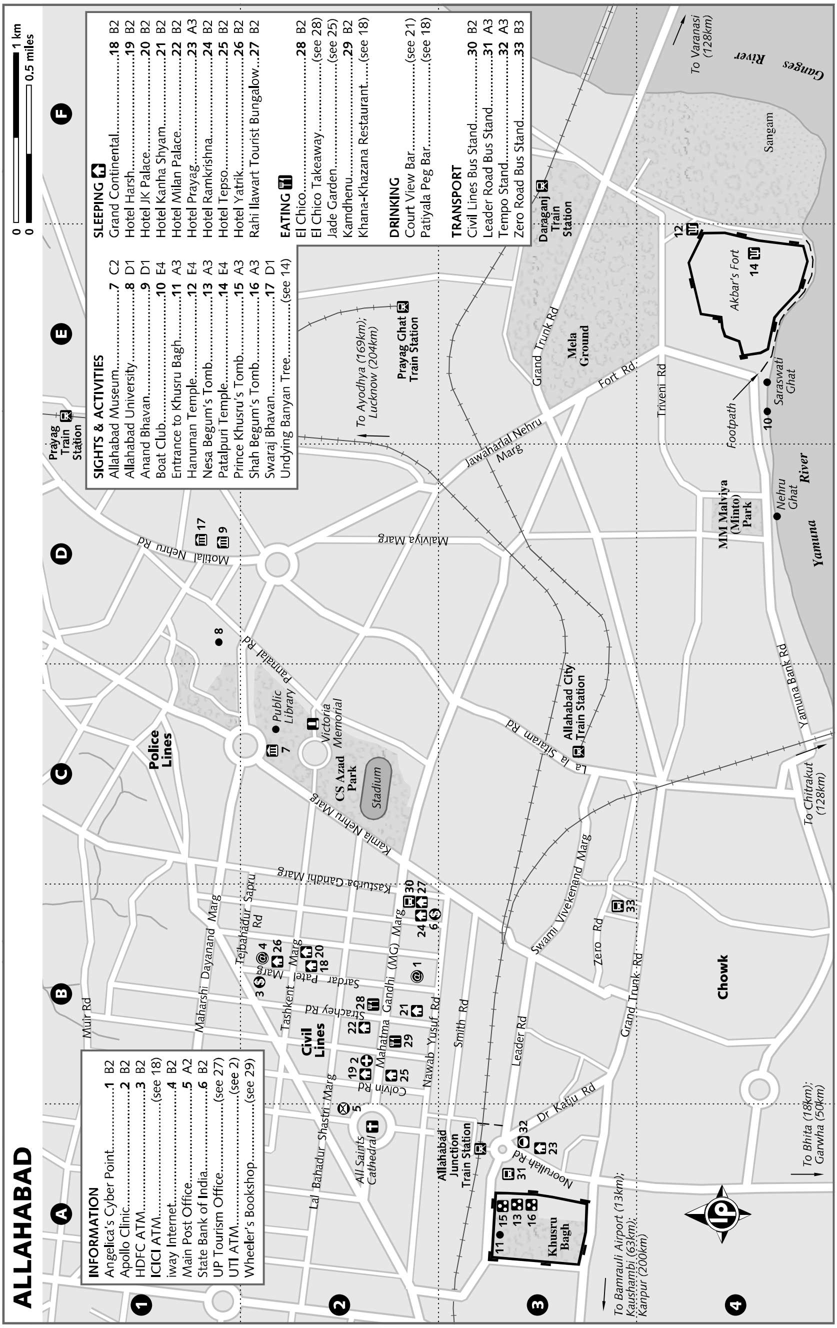
Sights & Activities

SANGAM

This is the point where the shallow, muddy Ganges meets the clearer, deeper Yamuna. Hindu pilgrims come all year to bathe and take a boat out to the auspicious spot where the two rivers meet. A row boat should not cost more than Rs 30 per person if you share, but boat owners are desperate to get foreign tourists on board at inflated prices. A private boat for a half-hour trip is about Rs 200.



The number of pilgrims increases during the annual Magh Mela (mid-January to mid-February). Astrologers calculate the holiest time to enter the water and draw up a 'Holy Dip Schedule'. The most propitious time of all happens only every 12 years when the massive Kumbh Mela takes place. Ardh Mela (half-mela) is every six years. Both of these attract millions of sadhus and pilgrims. In the early 1950s, 350 pilgrims were killed in a stampede to the soul-cleansing water (an incident recreated in Vikram Seth's novel A Suitable Boy). The most recent Ardh Mela was in 2007, while the next Kumbh Mela here is 2013.

Around the corner from Sangam are the Saraswati and Nehru Ghats, home to a boat club (10-seater boats Rs 300) and a nightly ganga aarti (river worship) ceremony.

AKBAR'S FORT & TEMPLES

Built by the Mughal Emperor Akbar and completed in 1583 after decades of construction, the fort stands on the northern bank of the Yamuna. It has massive walls with three gateways flanked by towers. Most of the fort is occupied by the Indian army and cannot be visited, but a small door in the fort's eastern wall near Sangam leads to one part that you can visit, the underground Patalpuri temple (admission Rs 21; ⏰ 7am-5pm). This unique temple is crowded with all sorts of idols – pick up some coins from the change dealers outside so you can leave small offerings as you go. Outside the temple – though its roots can be seen beneath ground – is the Undying Banyan Tree from which pilgrims used to leap to their deaths, believing it would liberate them from the cycle of rebirth.

Nearby is a Hanuman temple, which is little more than a corrugated-iron shed. Underneath, however, is an unusual supine Hanuman statue that is usually hidden under the masses of flowers thrown onto it by devotees. It is said that each year during the monsoon the Ganges River rises to touch the feet of the sleeping Hanuman before receding.

ANAND BHAVAN & SWARAJ BHAVAN

The picturesque two-storey Anand Bhavan (☎ 2467071; admission Rs 5; 9.30am-5pm Tue-Sun) is a shrine to the Nehru family, which has produced five generations of leading politicians from Motilal Nehru to the latest political figure Rahul Gandhi. This stately home is where Mahatma Gandhi, the academic Jawaharlal Nehru and others successfully planned the overthrow of the British Raj. It is full of books, personal effects and photos from those stirring times. Indira Gandhi (Jawaharlal Nehru's daughter) was married here in 1942.

Next door is Swaraj Bhavan (☎ 2467674; admission Rs 2; 9.30am-5.30pm Tue-Sun), which was bought by Motilal Nehru in 1900, but is now very run-down. It can only be visited on group tours that last 15 minutes. The secret underground meeting room reveals the dangers faced by the freedom fighters who were frequently arrested.

KHUSRU BAGH

This intriguing park is surrounded by a high wall and contains three large and ornate but contrasting Mughal tombs (admission free; dawn-dusk). One is that of Prince Khusru, the tragic eldest son of Emperor Jehangir who tried to assassinate his father but was blinded and imprisoned, finally dying in 1622. If Khusru's coup had succeeded, his brother, Shah Jahan, would not have become emperor and the Taj Mahal would not exist. The other tombs belong to Shah Begum, Khusru's mother (Jehangir's first wife), and Nesa Begum, Khusru's sister. If the caretaker is around, ask to see inside the tombs – Nesa Begum's tomb has a wonderfully decorated interior while Khusru's has some high-quality fretwork windows.

ALLAHABAD MUSEUM

This extensive museum (☎ 2601200; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; Kamla Nehru Marg; 10.15am-4.30pm Tue-Sun), at the top of CS Azad Park, has archaeological and Nehru family items, modern paintings, miniatures and ancient sculptures.

BUDGET

Decent budget accommodation is in short supply, so book ahead or consider one of the cheaper midrange hotels.

Hotel Harsh (☎ 2622197; 16 MG Marg; s/d from Rs 180/200) This run-down colonial bungalow is forlorn and neglected, but it's cheap and the rooms are typically huge.

Hotel Prayag (☎ 2242826; Noorullah Rd; d with shared bathroom Rs 200, d from Rs 275, with AC from Rs 575;) Noisy Noorullah Rd leading from the rear of the train station has dozens of cheap and cheerless hotels. This old-fashioned place has a range of rooms and is the best of an average lot.

Hotel Ramkrishna (☎ 2604785; s/d/tr from Rs 350/450/500, with AC Rs 700/800/900;) The newest and best of the budget (or lower midrange) hotels, this place just south of the MG Marg has clean, smart rooms, but fills up fast.

Hotel Tepso (☎ 2561409; MG Marg; d with/without AC Rs 650/500;) Rooms arranged around a tatty central garden vary in quality – the AC rooms are better but ask for one with a window. All have TV and hot water. The attached Jade restaurant is good.

Rahi Ilawart Tourist Bungalow (☎ 2601440; fax 2611374; 35 MG Marg; dm Rs 100, s/d Rs 500/550, s/d with AC from Rs 975/1050;) Better than some UP government hotels, the décor is institutional and uninspiring, but even the cheaper rooms are reasonably clean. The restaurant is good and the bar is bright and busy.

MIDRANGE & TOP END

Hotel JK Palace (☎ 2260616; Tashkent Marg; s/d Rs 500/700, with AC Rs 800/1000;) An unusual wedding cake façade reveals spacious but far from flashy rooms with TV. The front rooms all have shared balconies but are noisier than those at the back. Reception is hidden away among shops at the rear.

Hotel Milan Palace (☎ 2421505; www.hotelmilanpalace.com; 4/2 Strachey Rd; s/d from $US35/45, ste US$80;) Allahabad's most stylish hotel, this centrally located ultramodern boutique hotel features a cool glass and mock-classical façade, central AC and slick rooms. No bar, but a smart restaurant.

Hotel Yatrik (☎ 2260921; yatrik-hotel@rediffmail; 33 Sardar Patel Marg; s/d/ste Rs 1600/1700/2700;) The marble lobby, heritage furniture and artworks give this hotel plenty of character, and the lush gardens and swimming pool are hard to resist. Rooms are a little threadbare, but it's still the best value in this class.

Grand Continental (☎ 2260631; www.birhotel.com; Sardar Patel Marg; s Rs 1900-2500, d Rs 2200-2800, ste Rs 3500;) Allahabad's flashiest hotel has a swimming pool set in a garden courtyard, well-appointed rooms, bright décor, and a good restaurant and bar.

Hotel Kanha Shyam (☎ 2560123; www.hotelkanhashyam.com; Strachey Rd; s/d Rs 2500/3000, ste Rs 7000;) The multistorey, multistar Kanha Shayam has had a bit of a facelift recently and boasts a new swimming pool, spa and sauna. Rooms are still a bit old fashioned, but the 24-hour coffee shop and the top-floor restaurant (Mughlai cuisine) and bar are winners.

Eating

Allahabadians have a sweet tooth and MG Marg is lined with shops selling ice creams, shakes, cakes and sweets. Outdoor eating is all the rage with many stalls along MG Marg setting up tables and chairs on the footpath in the evening. For fine dining, head to the hotel restaurants.

Kamdhenu (MG Marg; snacks Rs 10-30, meals Rs 20-50) Downstairs are homemade sweets, cakes, samosas and ice cream, while upstairs the small but busy fast-food-style restaurant offers pizzas, burgers and South Indian dishes.

Jade Garden (☎ 2561408; mains Rs 70-145; Hotel Tepso, MG Marg; 7am-11pm) Spotless hotel restaurant with attentive black-tie staff. Popular for a big range of Indian and Chinese, nonveg sizzlers, salads and tandoori.

Khana-Khazana Restaurant (Grand Continental, Sardar Patel Marg; meals Rs 70-160) By day this AC hotel restaurant serves up a tempting array of continental snacks, such as burgers, pizzas and club sandwiches. In the evening there's an interesting variety of Indian, Chinese and continental veg and nonveg dishes, including sizzlers, pasta, tandoori kebabs and Bengali fish curry.

El Chico (MG Marg; mains Rs 80-200) Swish El Chico is a popular place that's been dishing out reliable Indian, Chinese and continental veg and nonveg dishes for more than 40 years. It's a little pricey, but the extensive menu includes fish dishes and sizzlers. Next door, El Chico Takeaway (snacks Rs 10 to 35) tempts diners with ice creams, cakes, cheesecake and savoury snacks.

Drinking

The Patiyala Peg Bar at the Grand Continental has live ghazal music nightly from 7.30pm. Court View Bar, on the top floor of the Hotel Kahna Shyam, is a stylish place for a beer.

AROUND ALLAHABAD

Once known as Kosam, Kaushambi, 63km southwest of Allahabad, is an ancient Buddhist centre that was visited by Buddha. A huge fortress near the village contains the broken remains of an Ashoka pillar. Buses for Kaushambi depart irregularly from Allahabad's Leader Rd bus stand.

It's believed that Brahma, Vishnu and Shiva were 'born' and taken on their incarnations in Chitrakut, 128km from Allahabad. This town, known as a mini Varanasi because of its many temples and ghats, is a popular Hindu pilgrimage destination. UP Tourism runs the Rahi Tourist Bungalow (☎ 015198-224219; rahitbbchitrakoot@up-tourism.com; dm/s/d Rs 80/375/400, s/d/tr with AC Rs 675/725/900; ❄), with reasonable rooms. Buses for Chitrakut depart from Allahabad's Zero Rd bus stand.

FAIZABAD & AYODHYA

☎ 05278 / pop 208,164 & 49,593

The chaotic central UP town of Faizabad, once the capital of Avadh, is primarily a base and jumping-off point for the auspicious Hindu and Jain religious centre of Ayodhya, 7km to the east. Being the birthplace of Rama, Ayodhya is one of Hinduism's seven holy cities, but it is also where five Jain *tirthankar*s (holy men) were born. The Atharvaveda described Ayodhya as 'a city built by gods and being as prosperous as paradise itself', but today it's just a dusty pilgrimage town full of temples and monkeys.

Ayodhya became tragically synonymous with Hindu extremism when in 1992 rioting Hindus tore down the Babri Masjid, a mosque built by the Mughals in the 15th century, which they claimed stood on the site of an earlier Rama temple. They put up Ram Janam Bhumi in its place. Following tit-for-tat reprisals, the problem has not been resolved and the Supreme Court has ordered archaeological investigations at the site to verify whether the Hindu claims are correct.

Information

There's a UP Tourist Office (☎ 05278-223214; Station Rd; ⌚ 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) in Faizabad and a State Bank of India ATM about 200m from the train station on Station Rd.

Sights

In Faizabad, take a cycle-rickshaw to the Bahu Begum ka Maquabara (⌚ dawn-dusk), the Begum's unique mausoleum. It has three domes built above each other with wonderfully ornate decoration on the walls and ceilings.

A 20-minute tempo ride (Rs 10) brings you to Ayodhya, where a pleasant traffic-free temple tour starts at the town's most popular temple, Hanumangarhi (⌚ dawn-dusk), just off the main street. Walk up the 76 steps to the ornate carved gateway and the fortresslike outer walls, and join the throng inside offering prasad (food offerings) while musicians croon bhajans.

A further 100m up the road is Dashrath Bhavan (⌚ dawn-dusk), a temple that is approached through a colourful entranceway. The atmosphere inside is peaceful, with musicians playing and orange-clad sadhus carving beads or reading scriptures.

A few minutes walk further on is the impressive Kanak Bhavan (Palace of Gold; ⌚ dawn-dusk), an ancient but often rebuilt palace-cum-temple.

Another 300m away is the high-security Ram Janam Bhumi (⌚ 7-11am & 2-6pm). You must show your passport, and all bags, cameras and mobile phones must be left outside. Everyone is thoroughly searched several times, so it is a considerable effort for the chance to file past the makeshift tent of a shrine that supposedly marks Rama's birthplace.

A five-minute walk on the other side of the main road brings you to Ramkatha Museum (admission free; ⌚ 10.30am-4.30pm Tue-Sun), a large yellow-and-red building containing murals in the foyer. It has displays of shadow puppets used in the Thai version of the Ram Lila, ancient sculptures and images of Rama and Sita.

VARANASI

☎ 0542 / pop 1,211,749

Few places in India are as colourful, charismatic or spiritual as the bathing ghats lining the Ganges in Varanasi. The city of Shiva is one of the holiest places in India, where Hindu pilgrims come to wash away a lifetime of sins in the Ganges or to cremate their loved ones. Varanasi, previously named Benares and Kashi (City of Life) – it was renamed after the Varuna and Asi Rivers, which meet here – has always been an auspicious place to die, since expiring here offers moksha (liberation from the cycle of birth and death). The city is the beating heart of the Hindu universe, a crossing place between the physical and spiritual worlds, and the Ganges is viewed as a river of salvation, an everlasting symbol of hope to past, present and future generations. The magical but sometimes overwhelming city is where the most intimate rituals of life and death take place in public on the city's ghats. The accessibility to the practices of an ancient but still living religious tradition is what captivates many visitors, and a walk along the ghats or a boat ride on the river is one of India's most absorbing experiences.

History

Varanasi has been a centre of learning and civilisation for over 2000 years, and claims to be one of the oldest living cities in the world. Mark Twain wrote that 'Benares is older than history, older than tradition, older even than legend, and looks twice as old as all of them put together'.

Its history dates back to 1400 BC, but it was around the 8th century AD that Varanasi rose in prominence when Shankaracharya, a reformer of Hinduism, established Shiva worship as the principal sect. The Afghans destroyed Varanasi around AD 1300, after laying waste to nearby Sarnath, but the fanatical Mughal emperor Aurangzeb was the most destructive, looting and destroying almost all of the temples. The old city of Varanasi may look antique, but few buildings are more than a couple of hundred years old.

Orientation

The old city of Varanasi is situated along the western bank of the Ganges and extends back from the riverbank ghats in a labyrinth of alleys called *gali*s that are too narrow for traffic. The *gali*s can be disorienting but the hotels are usually well signposted and however lost you become, you will eventually land up at a ghat where you can get your bearings. It pays to remember the names and relative locations of the major ghats – Manikarnika, Dasaswamedh, Mansarowar and Assi.

Immediately south of the train station are the less city congested areas of Lahurabir and Chetganj where you'll find plenty of hotels and restaurants. Behind the station is the peaceful Cantonment area, home to most of the top-end hotels.

GHATS
Spiritual life in Varanasi revolves around the ghats, the long string of bathing steps leading down to the water on the western bank of the Ganges. Most are used for bathing but there are also several 'burning ghats' where bodies are cremated in public – the main burning ghat is Manikarnika and you'll often see funeral processions threading their way through the backstreets to this ghat. The best time to visit the ghats is at dawn when the river is bathed in a mellow light as pilgrims come to perform puja (literally 'respect'; offering or prayers) to the rising sun, and at sunset when the main ganga aarti ceremony takes place at Dasaswamedh Ghat.

Around 80 ghats border the river, but the main group extends from Assi Ghat, near the university, northwards to Raj Ghat, near the road and rail bridge. A one-hour boat trip from Dasaswamedh Ghat south to Harishchandra Ghat and back provides a good introduction to the river scene (see p431).

For most of the year you can walk freely along the whole length of the ghats, although during and immediately after the monsoon the water level is too high for this. It's a unique, world-class 'people-watching' walk as you mingle with the fascinating mixture of people who come to the Ganges not only for a ritual bath but also to wash clothes, do yoga, offer blessings, buy paan (a mixture of betel nut and leaves for chewing), sell flowers, get a massage, play cricket, wash their buffaloes, improve their karma by giving to beggars or simply hang around. This is traditional India at its most colourful and picturesque and photo opportunities abound.

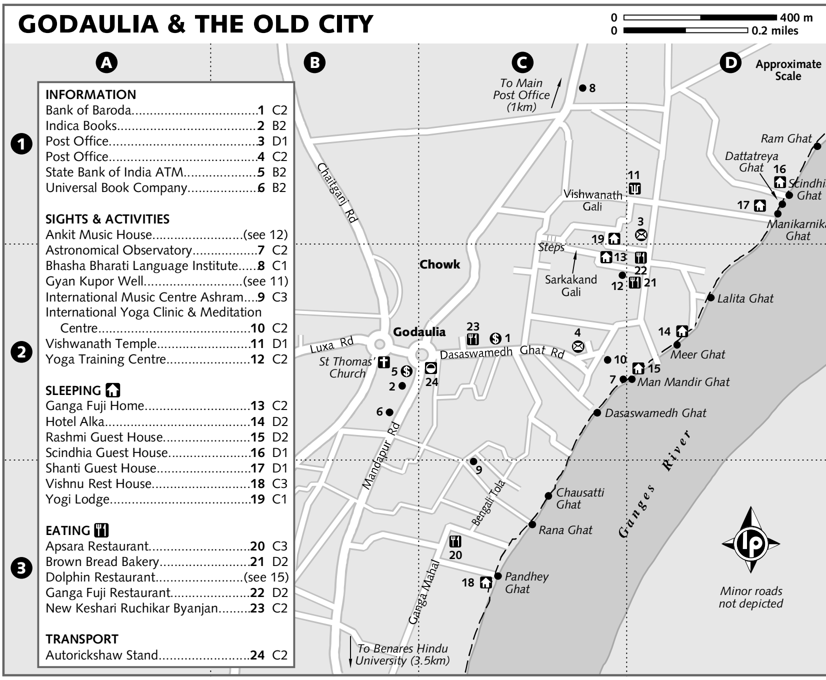
Assi Ghat, furthest south of the main ghats, is particularly important as the River Asi meets the Ganges near here and pilgrims come to worship a Shiva lingam beneath a pipal tree. The ghats themselves were undergoing much-needed renovation at the time of writing, and there are some interesting shops, cafés and excellent hotels here. Boat owners wait to take pilgrims and tourists upstream to Dasaswamedh Ghat. Nearby Tulsi Ghat, named after a 16th-century Hindu poet, has fallen down towards the river but in the month of Kartika (October/November) a festival devoted to Krishna is celebrated here. The NGO campaigning for a cleaner Ganges also has its research laboratory here (see the boxed text, p430). Next along, the Bachraj Ghat has three Jain temples. Many of the ghats are owned by maharajas or other princely rulers, such as Shivala Ghat, built by the local maharaja of Benares. The Dandi Ghat is used by ascetics known as Dandi Panths, and nearby is the very popular Hanuman Ghat.

Harishchandra Ghat is a cremation ghat – smaller and secondary in importance to Manikarnika – and one of the oldest ghats in Varanasi. Above it, Kedar Ghat has a shrine popular with Bengalis and South Indians. Mansarowar Ghat was built by Raja Man Singh of Amber and named after the Tibetan lake at the foot of Mt Kailash, Shiva's Himalayan home. Someswar Ghat (Lord of the Moon Ghat) is said to be able to heal diseases. The Munshi Ghat is very photogenic, while Ahalya Bai's Ghat is named after the female Maratha ruler of Indore.

Varanasi's liveliest and most colourful ghat is Dasaswamedh Ghat, easily reached at the end of the main road from Godaulia Crossing.

THE VARANASI SHAKEDOWN



Of all northern Indian cities, Varanasi and Agra have the worst reputations for hassles, touts, crazed rickshaw drivers following you around and sundry scams. While the attention here, particularly around the ghats and old city, is more intense than elsewhere, it would a shame to let it spoil your enjoyment of Varanasi.

The first issue is getting to your accommodation when you first arrive – and not the one your autorickshaw or taxi driver wants to take you to. With advance notice, an increasing number of hotels will pick you up or arrange to meet you at a certain point, so call ahead, especially if you're arriving after dark. Don't listen to anyone who tries to take you to a 'better' hotel or offers to be your 'friend' or 'guide'. Remember that most hotels in Varanasi operate on a commission basis so ignore nonsense from autorickshaw drivers about your hotel being closed, full, burnt down, very bad, or infested with mosquitoes or gangsters. Be firm. For hotels down by the ghats, ask the autorickshaw driver to take you to a landmark near your hotel and walk from there as vehicles are not allowed in the narrow alleys of the old city (that's one thing they will say that is true!).

While wandering around the ghats you will most likely have to put up with persistent offers from touts and drivers of 'cheapest and best' boat trips, tour operators, travel agents, silk shops and money changers (to name a few). Take it in good humour but resist most of these offers, particularly if the tout wants to lead you away to some obscure location. Authorised guides can be organised through the India Tourism or UP Tourism office. It's safer – and cheaper – to arrange boat trips in groups. Don't take photos at the 'burning' ghats and resist offers to 'follow me for a better view', where you'll be pressured for money and possibly be placed in an uncomfortable situation.

While most of this is little more than a mild irritation, Varanasi has a darker side and a criminal element operates mainly around the train station and bus station, so take extra care with your valuables in these places. The old city is potentially unsafe after dark, and hotels in this area often advise their guests to return by 10pm and some lock their doors at 10pm or 11pm – carry a torch after dark and don't walk alone late at night.

Remember, though, that not everyone is out to fleece you and meeting locals is part of the experience – act with confidence and humour and don't be too paranoid!

The name indicates that Brahma sacrificed (medh) 10 (das) horses (aswa) here. In spite of the oppressive boat owners, flower sellers and touts trying to drag you off to a silk shop, it's a wonderful place to linger and people-watch while soaking up the atmosphere. Note its statues and the shrine of Sitala, goddess of smallpox. Every evening at 7pm an elaborate ganga aarti ceremony with puja, fire and dance) is staged here.

A little further north, Raja Man Singh's Man Mandir Ghat was built in 1600, but was poorly restored in the 19th century. The northern corner of the ghat has a fine stone balcony and Raja Jai Singh II of Jaipur erected one of his unusual observatories on this ghat in 1710.

Meer Ghat leads to a Nepali temple, which has erotic sculptures. Manikarnika Ghat is the main burning ghat and the most auspicious place for a Hindu to be cremated. Dead bodies are handled by outcasts known as doms, and they are carried through the alleyways of the old city to the holy Ganges on a bamboo stretcher swathed in cloth. The corpse is doused in the Ganges prior to cremation. Huge piles of firewood are stacked along the top of the ghat, each log carefully weighed on giant scales so that the price of cremation can be calculated. Each type of wood has its own price, with sandalwood being the most expensive. There is an art to using just enough wood to completely incinerate a corpse. You can watch cremations, but photography is strictly prohibited, and always show reverence by behaving respectfully. You're guaranteed to be led by a priest or guide to an upper floor from where you can watch cremations taking place, then asked for a donation towards the cost of wood (in dollars) – make a donation but don't be pressured into giving the outrageous sums demanded.

Above the steps here is a tank known as the Manikarnika Well. Parvati is said to have dropped her earring here and Shiva dug the tank to recover it, filling the depression with his sweat. The Charanpaduka, a slab of stone between the well and the ghat, bears footprints made by Vishnu. Privileged VIPs are cremated at the Charanpaduka, which also has a temple dedicated to Ganesh.

Dattatreya Ghat bears the footprint of the Brahmin saint of that name in a small temple

HELPING THE GREAT MOTHER TO BREATHE AGAIN

The Ganges River, or Great Mother as it is known to Hindus, provides millions of Indians with an important link to their spirituality. Every day about 60,000 people go down to the Varanasi ghats to take a holy dip along a 7km stretch of the river. Along this same area, 30 large sewers are continuously discharging into the river.

The Ganges River is so heavily polluted at Varanasi that the water is septic – no dissolved oxygen exists. The statistics get worse. Samples from the river show the water has 1.5 million faecal coliform bacteria per 100mL of water. In water that is safe for bathing this figure should be less than 500!

The problem extends far beyond Varanasi – 400 million people live along the basin of the Ganges River. The levels mean that waterborne diseases run rampant among many villages that use water from the river.

The battle to clean up the Ganges River has been on since 1982 when the nonprofit Sankat Mochan Foundation established its Swatcha Ganga Abhiyan (Clean Ganges Campaign). Between 1986 and 1993 there was enough lobbying to see the government invest about US$25 million to set up three sewage treatment plants and an electric crematorium.

Unfortunately there have been many problems with the plants, which are very power intensive; Varanasi regularly has long blackout periods. In addition, their operation causes a build-up of pollution in nearby villages and is also the cause of sewage backing up throughout Varanasi; this in turn flows out into bathing areas, out through manhole covers and into the streets.

A plan for a better sewage treatment system, which has lower costs and is far more effective than the current system, has been developed by the foundation in collaboration with international agencies. The plan has not yet been accepted by the government, but the signs are good.

The Swatcha Ganga Environmental Education Centre at Tulsi Ghat runs environmental education courses with schools, local villages, pilgrims and boatmen. Changes have started to creep in, albeit slowly.

Visitors who wish to make a contribution, financially or through voluntary work efforts, should contact Professor Veer Bhadra Mishra at the Sankat Mochan Foundation (☎ 2313884; members.tripod.com/sankatmochan; Tulsi Ghat).

nearby. Scindhia Ghat was originally built in 1830, but was so huge and magnificent that it collapsed into the river and had to be rebuilt. Ram Ghat was built by a maharaja of Jaipur.

Panchganga Ghat, as its name indicates, is where five rivers are supposed to meet. Dominating the ghat is Aurangzeb's smaller mosque, also known as the Alamgir Mosque, which he built on the site of a large Vishnu temple erected by the Maratha chieftain Beni Madhur Rao Scindia. Gai Ghat has a figure of a cow made of stone upon it. Trilochan Ghat has two turrets emerging from the river, and the water between them is especially holy. Raj Ghat was the ferry pier until the road and rail bridge was completed here.

VISHWANATH TEMPLE

Also called the Golden Temple (Map p429), this is the most popular Hindu temple in Varanasi and is dedicated to Vishveswara – Shiva as lord of the universe. The current temple was built in 1776 by Ahalya Bai of Indore, while the 800kg of gold plating on the tower and dome was supplied by Maharaja Ranjit Singh of Lahore 50 years later.

There has been a succession of Shiva temples in the vicinity, but they were routinely destroyed by Muslim invaders. Aurangzeb continued this tradition, knocking down the previous temple and building the Gyanvapi Mosque, which still exists inside the temple complex.

The area is full of soldiers because of security issues and communal tensions. Cameras and mobile phones must be deposited before you enter the area. Non-Hindus are not allowed inside the temple itself so most travellers find it pointless to go through the security rigmarole, but you can view it for free from the 2nd floor of a shop across the street.

Next to Vishwanath Temple is the Gyan Kupor Well (Well of Knowledge; Map p429). The faithful believe drinking its water leads to a higher spiritual plane, though they are prevented from doing so by both tradition and a strong security screen. The well is said to contain the Shiva lingam that was removed from the previous temple and hidden to protect it from Aurangzeb.

BENARES HINDU UNIVERSITY

Varanasi has long been a centre of learning and that tradition continues today at the large and well-regarded Benares Hindu University (BHU; Map p426; www.bhu.ac.in), which was established in 1916. Founded by nationalist Pandit Malaviya as a centre for education in Indian art, music, culture and philosophy, and for the study of Sanskrit, it now offers courses in just about every subject and has 15,000 students, including 2000 foreigners. If you're interested in studying here, contact the International Students Centre (☎ 2307639; Tagore House).

The wide tree-lined streets and parkland of the 5-sq-km campus offer a peaceful atmosphere a world away from the city outside. On campus is Bharat Kala Bhavan (☎ 316337; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/100, camera Rs 20; 🕑 11am-4.30pm Mon-Sat), a roomy museum with a wonderful collection of miniature paintings, as well as 12th-century palm-leaf manuscripts, sculptures and local history displays. An upstairs gallery is dedicated to Alice Boner, a Swiss sculptor and art historian who spent many years in Varanasi.

The New Vishwanath Temple (🕑 4am-noon & 1-9pm), unlike most temples in Varanasi, is open to all, irrespective of religion, but architecturally is nothing special.

The university is a 40-minute autorickshaw ride (Rs 150) from the train station and around 15 minutes from Assi Ghat (Rs 50).

RAMNAGAR FORT & MUSEUM

On the eastern bank of the Ganges, inside a crumbling but impressive 17th-century fort and palace, is a haphazard museum (Map p426; ☎ 2339322; admission Rs 7; 🕑 9am-noon & 2-5.30pm). Exhibits include palanquins, howdahs, an astrological clock, clothing, weapons and other collectables. The maharaja still patronises the annual month-long Ram Lila drama festival (see p395) held around here.

Ferries (Rs 6 return, 10 minutes, every 30 minutes from 5am to 8pm) operate a shuttle service across the river, but from November to June you can also cross on the somewhat unsteady pontoon bridge.

OTHER SIGHTS

The small Durga Temple (Map p426; Durgakund Rd; 🕑 dawn-dusk) was built in the 18th century by a Bengali maharani and is stained red with ochre. Designed in North Indian Nagara style with a multitiered sikhara (spire), it is dedicated to Durga. Non-Hindus can enter the courtyard but not the inner sanctum.

Near the Durga Temple is the modern marble, sikhara-style Tulsi Manas Temple (Map p426; Durgakund Rd; 🕑 6.30-11.30am & 3-9pm), built in 1964. The two-tier walls are engraved with verses and scenes from the Ram Charit Manas, the Hindi version of the Ramayana. Its author, poet Tulsi Das, lived here while writing it.

The Bharat Mata Temple (Map p426; Vidyapeeth Rd; camera/video Rs 10/20; 🕑 dawn-dusk), built in 1918, has an unusual marble relief map of the Indian subcontinent inside.

Man Singh built a palace at Man Mandir Ghat in 1600 and in the next century Jai Singh II added an astronomical observatory (Map p429; Man Mandir Ghat; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; 🕑 dawn-dusk). Although vaguely interesting, it's not on the scale of the observatories in Delhi and Jaipur and it's hard to justify the entrance fee.

GANGES DOLPHIN

The Ganges dolphin (susu) is a freshwater river dolphin that can be spotted throughout the Ganges river system. They are blind and rely on echo-location to get around and find small fish to eat.

Usually seen alone or in small groups, the dolphins grow to 2m long and live for around 20 years. The young are chocolate brown but the adults are grey. The Ganges dolphins are endangered and protected – it is estimated that less than 4000 and as few as 2000 have survived fishermen's nets, poaching for their meat and oil, chemical and sewage pollution, and habitat restriction due to dams and barrages. It's a miracle that any have survived.

Keep an eye out for them in Varanasi, and in Patna in Bihar, which is home to the Vikramshila Gangetic Dolphin Sanctuary, an 8km stretch of the river designated as a protected area.

Ganges is a quintessential Varanasi experience. The best time to make the trip is from 5.30am when it is cool, the early morning light is particularly inspiring, and all the colour and clamour of pilgrims bathing and performing puja unfolds before you. An hour-long trip south from Dasaswamedh Ghat to Harishchandra Ghat and back is popular, but be prepared to see a burning corpse at Harishchandra. Early evening is also a good time to be on the river, when you can light a lotus flower candle (Rs 10) and set it adrift on the water. You can also watch the nightly ganga aarti ceremony at Dasaswamedh Ghat directly from the boat.

The rate for hiring a boat that takes up to four people is Rs 70 to 100 per hour, but the boatmen usually ask foreign tourists for up to Rs 600 before agreeing to much less. Deal directly with a boatman and be patient but firm. Although you'll have the best bargaining power at Dasaswamedh, boats can also be arranged at smaller nearby ghats, such as Meer and Manmandir.

Other boat trips are available further along the ghats – from Assi Ghat you could be rowed north to Harishchandra (an eight-person boat for two hours costs Rs 200).

STEAM BATHS, MASSAGES & SWIMMING

Hotel Surya (Map p426; ☎ 2508466; www.hotelsuryavns.com; the Mall) offers a range of massage and Ayurvedic treatments, including Ayurvedic massage (Rs 500), steam bath (Rs 100), oil massage (Rs 400), sirodhara (medicated oil) massage (Rs 800) and facials (Rs 300 to Rs 400).

At Palace on the Ganges, Prakruthi (Map p426; ☎ 2315050; Assi Ghat; 8am-7pm) is an Ayurvedic massage centre offering steam bath (Rs 150) and Keralan massage therapies from Rs 600.

Nonguests can use the outdoor swimming pools at Hotel Surya (Rs 150), complete with waterfall, Hotel Clarks Varanasi (Rs 200) or Taj Ganges (Rs 350).

VOLUNTEERING

Varanasi offers opportunities for volunteering at local schools. One such place is the Learn for Life Society (www.learn-for-life.org) near Meer Ghat, which can be contacted through the nearby Brown Bread Bakery (p435). The small school here was established for disadvantaged children and travellers are welcome to turn up and help out. See the website for details on sponsorship or volunteering.

Courses

HINDI LANGUAGE

The long-running Bhasha Bharati Language Institute (Map p429; ☎ 2420447; www.bhashabharati.com), near Chowk police station, runs Hindi-language courses. Thirty-hour courses cost Rs 200 per person per hour for one-on-one lessons that emphasise speaking and listening. A family homestay can be arranged (US$300 per week including lessons and meals), which is probably best for learning the language quickly.

MUSIC & DANCE

Varanasi's old city has several music centres where you can learn to play instruments such as the sitar and tabla. The family-run but grandly named International Music Centre Ashram (Map p429; ☎ 2452303; keshavaraonayak@hotmail.com) is hidden in the tangle of backstreets near Rana Ghat but worth seeking out. Sitar, tabla flute and classical dance tuition is Rs 150 per hour, and concerts are held every Saturday and Wednesday evening at 8pm (Rs 50).

Ankit Music House (☎ 9336567134; Sakarkand Gali), near Ganga Fuji Guesthouse, also offers sitar and tabla tuition for Rs 100 an hour, plus a free trial class.

YOGA & MEDITATION

Varanasi has plenty of opportunities for yoga courses, but beware of 'fake' yoga teachers who are mainly interested in a hands-on lesson with young females. Some guesthouses also advertise yoga classes on their rooftops, which are occasionally free to guests. The following are all genuine places located around the old city.

International Yoga Clinic & Meditation Centre (Map p429; ☎ 2397139; gurujivyas@satyam.net.in) Near Man Mandir Ghat but difficult to find, Yogi Prakash Shankar Vyas teaches hatha, pranayama, kriya and spiritual yoga. The cost per hour is Rs 100 for one student, Rs 75 each for two students and Rs 50 each for three students.

Yoga Training Centre (Map p429; ☎ 9919857895; yoga_sunil@hotmail.com; Sakarkand Gali) Three times a day Sunil Kumar Jhingan runs two-hour courses (8am, 10am and 4pm; Rs 200) at his centre near Dasaswamedh Ghat. He teaches an integrated blend of hatha, Iyengar, pranayama and ashtanga, and serious students can continue on certificate and diploma courses.

Malaviya Bhavan (Map p426; ☎ 2307208; Benares Hindu University) Four-week physical yoga certificate course (one hour per day) for Rs 5500, and for just another Rs 300 a four-month diploma course that also covers Hindu philosophy. Students must obtain a student visa.

Tours

If time is short, contact the UP Tourism office (Map p426; ☎ 2506670; Varanasi Junction train station; 6am-7pm) for details of the seven-hour guided tour by taxi of the major sites, including Sarnath and a 5.30am boat ride (see p431), which costs Rs 1400 for up to four people. Half-day tours cost Rs 800.

Sleeping

Varanasi has three main areas for accommodation. Most budget hotels are concentrated in the most interesting part of the city – the tangle of narrow streets back from the ghats along the Ganges River. If you want a more peaceful location but still close to the river, there are some excellent choices around Assi Ghat. Most of the top-end hotels are in the Cantonment area north of the train station, and there are more budget and midrange places in Lahurabir and Chetganj areas.

Varanasi has an active paying-guest house scheme with around 75 family homes available for accommodation from Rs 100 to Rs 700 a night. They can be hit and miss – the UP Tourism office has a full list.

BUDGET

Old City & the Ghats

There are loads of budget hotels and a few upmarket places scattered around the old city and ghats. They vary in quality from the basic old backpacker stand-bys to newer places taking full advantage of fine views over the Ganges.

Yogi Lodge (Map p429; ☎ 2392588; yogilodge@yahoo.com; Kalika Gali; dm/s/d Rs 55/100/150) A long-running favourite with hippie types going for the bargain-basement prices and laid-back ambience. Rooms are pretty basic, and all have shared showers and squat toilets.

Vishnu Rest House (Map p429; ☎ 2450206; Pandhey Ghat; d Rs 150-300) The ghat-side location still draws travellers to this long-running guesthouse, but it's pretty pokey accommodation – the cheaper rooms have shared bathroom and all toilets are squat types.

Shanti Guest House (Map p429; ☎ 2392568; varanasishanti@yahoo.com; Manikarnika Ghat; dm Rs 55, s/d Rs 150/200, d with AC Rs 500;) The biggest attraction here is the very social 24-hour rooftop restaurant, which overlooks Manikarnika Ghat. The restaurant has a free pool table, yoga classes can be arranged and free morning boat rides are organised for guests in the high season. Rooms are a bit gloomy and could do with a paint, but the price is right at this backpacker favourite.

Scindhia Guest House (Map p429; ☎ 2420319; www.scindhiaguesthouse.com; Scindhia Ghat; d with shared bathroom Rs 200, d Rs 350-450, with AC Rs 600-1200;) This well-kept and clean ghat-side hotel sets a high standard – the best rooms have great river views and balconies, but are well into the midrange price bracket. Other facilities include a library, a veg restaurant, and boat trips organised direct from Scindhia Ghat.

Ganga Fuji Home (Map p429; ☎ 3093949; raj327333@yahoo.com; Sakarkand Gali; s/d with shared bathroom from Rs 150/200, s/d from Rs 300/350, d with AC from Rs 700;) Back from the ghats in a relatively quite location, Ganga Fuji is run by an exuberant and helpful family. The best and brightest rooms are at the top but all are clean, and the brand-new top-floor restaurant offers panoramic city views and live entertainment in the evenings.

Sahi River View Guesthouse (Map p426; ☎ 2366730; sahi_rvgh@sify.com; Assi Ghat; d Rs 200-400, with AC Rs 900;) Friendly Mr Sahi and family will look after you with home-cooked meals at this simple but comfortable guesthouse, overlooking Assi Ghat. Rooms of all shapes and sizes are spread over a number of floors in this old house, entered via a narrow laneway from the ghat. Rooms vary a lot but all have hot water, and a few have river views.

Hotel Alka (Map p429; ☎ 2401681; www.hotelalkavns.com; Meer Ghat; r with shared bathroom Rs 200, r Rs 250-700, r with AC Rs 550-990;) With a lovely leafy terrace restaurant nudging over the river, Alka is the best of the ghat-side budget options. All rooms are clean and modern with TV, and the more expensive ones are midrange standard with wonderful views from the balconies.

Other Areas

Hotel Ajaya (Map p426; ☎ 2203707; fax 2202224; Kabir Chaura Rd; s/d from Rs 200/300, with AC Rs 500/700;) The rooms vary a lot in this generally well-kept place near Hotel Buddha – those with AC are much nicer and some have balconies. The hotel also has a restaurant and bar.

Hotel Buddha (Map p426; ☎ 2203686; hotel buddha@rediffmail.com; s Rs 350-400, d Rs 450-500, d with AC from Rs 650/750;) Buddha has long been one of the better budget hotels in the Lahurabir area with light modern rooms with TV, built around an interestingly designed open central area. A huge marriage hall has recently been added which could make staying here interesting in the wedding season (November to February).

MIDRANGE

Old City & the Ghats

Hotel Haifa (Map p426; ☎ 2312960; www.hotelhaifa.com; s/d Rs 550/650, with AC Rs 850/950;) Next door to Divya, Haifa is also recommended for its clean rooms and quality restaurant serving Middle Eastern food. All rooms have TV and hot water, and there's a covered rooftop dining area.

Hotel Divya (Map p426; ☎ 2311305; www.hoteldivya.com; s/d Rs 600/750, with AC from Rs 850/1000;) This new hotel back from Assi Ghat is immaculate and stylish, and well run by a charming woman. There's a good range of rooms, all with TV and hot water, an excellent restaurant as well a rooftop terrace. The location is easily accessible by taxi or autorickshaw but still close to the old city.

our pick Hotel Ganges View (Map p426; ☎ 2313218; hotelgangesview@yahoo.com; Assi Ghat; r with/without AC Rs 2500/1200;) This beautifully restored and maintained traditional-style house overlooking Assi Ghat is crammed with artworks and antiques. Concerts, lectures and book readings are occasionally held. Home-cooked meals are another feature and are served in the charming dining room. Book ahead.

Rashmi Guest House (Map p429; ☎ 24027778; www.palaceonriver.com; Man Mandir Ghat; d Rs 1500, river view Rs 2500-4200;) The only truly midrange hotel on the river north of Assi Ghat, Rashmi has clean, modern rooms with central AC, TV and bright orange décor. You really pay the price for the 'river-view' rooms, but the rooftop restaurant offers the best views of all.

Other Areas

Hotel Surya (Map p426; ☎ 2508466; www.hotelsuryavns.com; 20/51 the Mall; s/d Rs 350/500, s/d with AC Rs 600/800;) Rooms are built around an enormous garden and lawn area that makes this hotel popular with overlanding tour groups. It's an excellent-value and well-designed place with clean, modern rooms, a beautiful swimming pool, a quality restaurant and a massage centre. If you don't mind staying this far from the ghats, it's a top choice. Camping is also allowed (Rs 75 per person).

Hotel Vaibhav (Map p426; ☎ 2501359; www.hotelvaibhav.com; 56 Patel Nagar; s/d Rs 450/600, with AC from Rs 850/950;) The well-furnished rooms have Indian art on the walls and there's a green-themed restaurant and subterranean bar.

Pallavi International Hotel (Map p426; ☎ 2356939; Hathwa Pl; s/d Rs 850/950, s/d with AC Rs 1200/1400;) The antique-filled former palace of the maharaja of Bahadur is now a slightly eccentric heritage hotel where every room is different – a few are modern, some are traditional, while others have strange log-cabin décor. The gardens, interior courtyards and small pool help create a tranquil atmosphere.

Hotel Pradeep (Map p426; ☎ 2204963; www.hotelpradeep.com; Kabir Chaura Rd; s Rs 1100-2100, d Rs 1400-2600;) Behind the unusual classical façade are very smart AC rooms with bathrooms and minibars (some with balconies), but the standout feature here is the amazing rooftop garden restaurant Eden (opposite).

TOP END

Palace on Ganges (Map p426; ☎ 2315050; www.palaceonganges.com; Assi Ghat; d Rs 2990;) This immaculate heritage accommodation is an interior decorator's dream with each room carefully themed on a regional Indian style, using antique furnishings and colourful design themes – the colonial, Rajasthan and Jodhpur rooms are among the best. Some front rooms have balconies or views over Assi Ghat. The hotel has a library and quality multicuisine rooftop restaurant.

can walk, cycle or take a ride in a maharaja's buggy around the 5-hectare grounds, which contain fruit trees, a tennis court, pool, an outdoor yoga centre and the old maharaja's guesthouse.

Eating

In the old city, look out for locally grown langda aam (mangoes) in summer or sitafal (custard apples) in autumn. Singhara is a blackish root that tastes like water chestnut.

OLD CITY & THE GHATS

Apsara Restaurant (Map p429; ☎ 3258554; 24/42 Ganga Mahal; meals around Rs 20-50) This popular, reasonably priced AC restaurant has a cosy feel with cushioned seats, good music and friendly staff. The endless menu tries to please everyone with Indian, Chinese, continental, Japanese, Israeli and Korean food.

Open Hand Shop & Café (Map p426; ☎ 2369751; drinks & snacks Rs 15-60; Mon-Sat) Enjoy plunger coffee, juices, varied teas, tasty quiches and homemade cakes while browsing the handmade crafts and textiles on the narrow balcony of this stylish café-cum-shop near Assi Ghat.

Haifa Restaurant (Map p426; Hotel Haifa; meals Rs 30-70) Near Assi Ghat, this hotel restaurant is popular for its Middle Eastern food, including a dynamite thali.

Ganga Fuji Restaurant (Map p429; Kalika Gali; meals Rs 25-80) Free live Indian classical music is played every evening at 7.30pm, which makes this otherwise ordinary multicuisine restaurant a special place to consider for dinner.

Vaatika Café (Map p426; Assi Ghat; meals Rs 25-90) This outdoor dhaba (snack bar) almost in the river and overlooking Assi Ghat serves up pies, pasta and pizzas baked in a wood-fired oven and is a relaxing place for breakfast.

New Keshari Ruchikar Byanjan (Map p429; Dasaswamedh Ghat Rd; meals Rs 40-100) The upstairs veg restaurant is the brightest along this busy road and popular with families. Downstairs, premium ice creams are Rs 40 – the chiku (a sweet variety of fruit) one is delicious.

Bread of Life Bakery (Map p426; ☎ 227 5012; www.bolbar.com; 322 Shivala Rd; bakery items Rs 10-65, meals Rs 55-110; 8am-9pm) A clean and pleasant oasis on busy Shivala Rd. As well as tempting sweets and pastries from the bakery – bagels, cheesecake, apple strudel and carrot cake – there are continental and Chinese dishes, soups, salads, pasta and sandwiches. For breakfast try the muesli or French toast. Eat with a conscience as profits go to a local charity – check the website for information.

Brown Bread Bakery (Map p429; 17 Tripura Bhairavi; mains Rs 20-110;) In the alleys of the old city not far from Dasaswamedh Ghat, this laid-back café is the perfect spot to relax on cushions at the low tables. Home-baked bread, cakes, pastries and creamy smoothies are great snacks but the huge menu includes dynamite sizzlers, pizza, Tibetan, Chinese and Indian dishes. The restaurant supports a couple of local charities, including the nearby Learn for Life school for children (p432).

I:ba (Map p426; mains Rs 36-120) Modern glass-top tables, loungy furniture, funky décor and an emphasis on Eastern cuisines, such as Japanese and Thai, set this new place apart from most Varanasi restaurants. It's also a good place for lunch, with tasty wraps and pastas.

Lotus Lounge (Map p426; Mansarowar Ghat; mains Rs 20-140; 7am-10pm) The location of this new open-sided restaurant – overlooking Mansarowar Ghat on the water's edge – is hard to beat. With a mosaic floor and loungey furniture it's a great place to relax and enjoy an ambitious menu of mostly continental food including Thai curry and Tibetan momos, with Goan specialities thrown in.

Yafah Restaurant (Map p426; Hotel Divya; meals Rs 40-220) Next door to Haifa, Middle Eastern flavours waft from this elegant restaurant. Baba ghanouj, tahini, moussaka and falafel share the menu with Indian and Chinese dishes. Occasionally there's live classical music.

Dolphin Restaurant (Map p429; meals Rs 45-225; 6am-11pm) Perched high above Man Mandir Ghat, this rooftop restaurant at Rashmi Guest House is a fine place for breakfast after a morning boat ride or for an evening meal. Watch food being prepared through the glass-walled kitchen or sit out on the breezy balcony.

OTHER AREAS

Canton Restaurant (Map p426; Hotel Surya, the Mall; meals Rs 30-120) It's worth making the trip into the Cantonment area to check out this restaurant at Hotel Surya. The AC dining room has a colonial elegance and on warm evenings you can eat out in the garden. The menu is probably a bit ambitious – there's Indian, Chinese, continental, Korean and even Mexican dishes – but the food is good, with some unusual offerings such as fish Portuguese.

Poonam & Eden Restaurant (Map p426; Hotel Pradeep, Kabir Chaura Rd; meals Rs 75-130) The rooftop Eden restaurant, complete with garden, manicured lawn and wrought-iron furniture is a lovely place for a candlelit evening meal, while the downstairs Poonam features quality Indian specialities in smart surroundings.

El Parador (Map p426; ☎ 9839716157; off Parade Kothi; meals Rs 60-160; 8am-10pm) Fancy a buffalo steak, followed by waffles for dessert? Not far from the station this established restaurant, run by a Nepali family, offers something different. It's pricey (most mains are over Rs 100), but with homemade pasta, chicken souvlaki, crepes and Tibetan momos, it's worthwhile. Dine on the rooftop terrace amid the herbs or in the quaint 1st-floor restaurant.

Varuna Restaurant (Map p426; Hotel Taj Ganges, Raja Bazaar Rd; meals Rs 150-450; 7-10.30pm) One of Varanasi's top restaurants, Varuna is elegant without being stuffy and extravagant without being too expensive. Specialities include classic North Indian and Afghan dishes, the sumptuous maharaja thali and tandoor kebabs. Live sitar and tabla music nightly from 7.30pm.

Drinking & Entertainment

There's a discreet wine shop on Shivala Rd between Godaulia Crossing and Assi Ghat, but otherwise head to midrange and top-end hotels away from the old city for the bars.

Prinsep Bar (Map p426; Hotel Taj Ganges, Raja Bazaar Rd) For a quiet drink with a dash of history try this tiny bar, named after James Prinsep who drew wonderful illustrations of Varanasi's ghats and temples. A kingfisher is Rs 150, cocktails Rs 200. Other good bars include the Patiala Peg at Hotel Meraden Grand and Gazal Bar at Hotel Vaibhav.

The Ganga Fuji Restaurant has nightly live classical music, as does the rooftop Nirmala Restaurant at Ganga Fuji Home and the upmarket Varuna Restaurant at Hotel Taj Ganges.

The International Music Centre Ashram (Map p429; see p432) has concerts on Wednesday and Saturday evenings.

Shopping

Varanasi is justifiably famous for silk brocades and beautiful Benares saris, but being led by touts and rickshaw drivers to a silk shop is all part of the Varanasi shuffle and virtually everyone will try to rip you off. Don't believe much of what the silk salesmen say, even in 'government' emporiums.

Ganga Silk (Map p426; Shivala Rd) A good place to start is this small shop above the Bread of Life Bakery. Prices are fixed and the staff can explain the different types of silk.

Open Hand Shop & Café (Map p426; ☎ 2369751; www.openhandonline.com; Mon-Sat) A wide choice of quality handmade goods at fixed prices, including textiles, wood and paper products, is for sale at the Open Hand near Assi Ghat.

Baba Blacksheep (Map p426; ☎ 2454342; Bhelpura) This small shop is recommended for reasonably priced silks and pashmina shawls, and a conspicuous lack of the 'hard sell'. Silk scarves start at Rs 200.

Benaras Art Culture (Map p426; ☎ 2313615; Shivala Rd) Although many of the artworks at this fixed-price gallery are expensive, it's worth a browse through the wonderful centuries-old haveli (traditional, ornately decorated residence) to see quality carvings, sculptures and art.

Rickshaw drivers may offer to take you to the silk shops of the Muslim Quarter and it's worth taking them up on the offer as there's a string of small showrooms with handloom workshops attached. Although it's unlikely that much of what's on sale is produced in these workshops, it's fascinating to see how the brocades and patterns are created, and if your bargaining skills are good the silks on offer are reasonably priced (don't forget to factor in the commission!)

Varanasi is also a good place to shop for sitars and tablas, but be careful when choosing musical instruments as some will crack or change shape when subjected to a different climate. Talk to musicians, for example at Ganga Fuji Restaurant, about the different prices and types of instrument before venturing into a shop. Ankit Music House (p432) is also a good place to ask about locally manufactured sitars (starting from Rs 3000) and tablas (from Rs 2500). The cost depends primarily on the type of wood used. Mango is cheapest, while teak and vijaysar are the highest quality timbers.

Ingenious locally made toys, Bhadohi carpets, brass ornaments, perfumes and textiles are other popular purchases.

Getting There & Away

AIR

From Varanasi's Babatpur airport, Indian Airlines (Map p426; ☎ 2502529; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat), with its office located off the Mall, has direct daily flights to Delhi (US$112), Mumbai (US$184), Khajuraho (US$82) and Kathmandu (US$110). Jet Airways (Map p426; ☎ 2506444; Krishnayatan Bldg, Kennedy Rd, Cantonment; 9am-5pm Mon-Fri, 9am-2pm Sat) flies to Delhi and Khajuraho for similar fares.

Air Sahara (Map p426; ☎ 2507872; Mint House, Cantonment; 9am-5pm Mon-Fri, 9am-2pm Sat) flies daily to Delhi and Mumbai, often at discount web fares.

BUS

Varanasi's small but chaotic bus station (Map p426; ☎ 2203476) is a few hundred metres east of Varanasi Junction train station. Frequent express buses run to Allahabad (non-AC/AC Rs 60/107, three hours), Faizabad (Rs 105, seven hours), Gorakhpur (Rs 121, seven hours) and Lucknow (Rs 160, 8½ hours). Two buses run daily to Khajuraho (Rs 248, 12 hours) departing at 4.30am, while one AC bus goes to Bodhgaya (Rs 252, seven hours).

Buses to Sarnath (Rs 10, 40 minutes) leave from outside the Varanasi Junction train station, as do share jeeps (Rs 20) to Mughal Serai train station.

TRAIN

Luggage theft has been reported on trains to and from Varanasi so take extra care. There have also been some reports of drugged food and drink, so it's best to politely decline any offers from strangers.

Varanasi Junction train station (Map p426; ☎ 132), also known as Varanasi Cantonment (Cantt) train station, is the main station. Foreign tourist quota tickets must be purchased at the Foreign Tourist Assistance Bureau (8am-8pm Mon-Sat, 8am-2pm Sun) near the UP Tourism information office in Varanasi Junction train station.

Many of the faster trains between Delhi and Kolkata stop at Mughal Serai train station (☎ 255703), 12km southeast of Varanasi. You can make reservations at Varanasi Junction train station for trains leaving from Mughal Serai. Share jeeps (Rs 20, 40 minutes) are the best way to travel between the two stations, but buses and taxis are also available.

NEPAL

From Varanasi's bus station buses leave for Sunauli (Rs 172, 10 hours, nine daily), on the border with Nepal, from around 5am.

Paul Travels (Map p426; ☎ 2208137; Parade Kothi) and other travel agents sell a 'through' bus ticket from Varanasi to Kathmandu or Pokhara for Rs 600 departing in the morning and including breakfast and a night stay on the Nepali side of the border at Sunauli. You pay quite a bit extra for the convenience and you have no choice of bus on the last leg of the journey. It also offers tickets just to Sunauli (Rs 300) and Lumbini (Rs 400).

By train the best option is to get to Gorakhpur and then transfer to a local bus to Sunauli.

To get around the long bus journey, many travellers fly direct from Varanasi to Kathmandu (US$110) with Indian Airlines, which has daily flights – Nepal visas are available on arrival.

Getting Around

BUS

Local buses squeeze in every passenger they can and then some more, but they only charge Rs 5. You can pick them up outside the Varanasi Junction train station.

CYCLE-RICKSHAW

Useful for short distances or in the old city where autorickshaws and taxis are banned. Drivers are always pestering foreigners and their first price is usually way above the real price. A short trip is Rs 10 (Godaulia Crossing to Assi Ghat) but even a long trip (from the train station to Godaulia) should only cost Rs 30.

TAXI & AUTORICKSHAW

Prepaid booths for taxis and autorickshaws are outside Varanasi Junction train station. From the station to Dasaswamedh Ghat costs Rs 150 by taxi, or Rs 60 by autorickshaw, while to Benares Hindu University costs Rs 200 by taxi and Rs 80 by autorickshaw. To tour around by autorickshaw should cost Rs 70 per hour, depending on how far you want to go. Drivers always ask for more at the start so bargain.

SARNATH

Buddha came to Sarnath, 10km northeast of Varanasi, to preach his message of the middle way to nirvana after he achieved enlightenment at Bodhgaya. He gave his famous first sermon here to a handful of followers in a deer park, which has been recreated. In the 3rd century BC Ashoka had magnificent stupas and monasteries erected as well as an engraved pillar. When the Chinese traveller Xuan Zang dropped by in AD 640, Sarnath boasted a 100m-high stupa and 1500 monks living in large monasteries. However, soon after, Buddhism went into decline, and when Muslim invaders destroyed and desecrated the city's buildings, Sarnath disappeared altogether. It was not rediscovered until 1835 when British archaeologists started excavations and Sarnath regained some of its past glory.

Today it's one of the four important sites on the Buddhist circuit (along with Bodhgaya, Kushinagar and Lumbini in Nepal), and attracts followers from around the world. An easy day or half-day trip from Varanasi, Sarnath is a green and peaceful place to spend some time and, along with the Buddhist ruins and monasteries, there's an excellent museum.

Information

There's tourist information at the Rahi UP Tourist Bungalow, but at the time of writing a new Modern Reception Centre (MRC; Ashoka Marg) was due to open opposite the archaeological museum, with an internet café, tourist information and money-changing facilities.

The post office (🕑 10am-6pm Mon-Fri, 10am-1pm Sat) is opposite Rahi UP Tourist Bungalow.

Sights

Compare the differing designs of the modern Buddhist temples built by Tibetan, Chinese, Thai, Burmese and Japanese Buddhists and meet some of the 400 monks who live there.

DHAMEKH STUPA & BUDDHIST RUINS

Set in a peaceful park (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100, video Rs 25; 🕑 dawn-dusk) of monastery ruins is the impressive 34m Dhanekh Stupa, which marks the spot where the Buddha preached his first sermon. The floral and geometric carving dates back to the 5th century AD, but some of the brickwork is thought to be even older, dating from around 200 BC.

Emperor Ashoka is said to have meditated in the main shrine, but only its foundations have survived. Nearby is an Ashoka pillar with an edict engraved on it. The famous four-lion capital that used to be on top can now be seen in the nearby Archaeological Museum.

Just outside the park is the Sri Digamber Jain temple.

CHAUKHANDI STUPA

This large ruined stupa (🕑 dawn-dusk) dates back to the 5th century AD, and marks the spot where Buddha met his first disciples. The incongruous tower on top of the stupa is Mughal and was built there in the 16th century to commemorate the visit of Emperor Humayun.

MULGANDHA KUTI VIHAR & DEER PARK

This modern temple (☎ 2585595; 🕑 4-11am & 1.30-8pm) was completed in 1931 by the Mahabodhi Society. Inside is a bookshop and the walls are decorated with large frescoes by Japanese artist Kosetsu Nosi. Buddha's first sermon is chanted daily, starting between 6pm and 7pm depending on the season. A bodhi tree growing outside was transplanted in 1931 from the tree in Anuradhapura, Sri Lanka, which in turn is said to be the offspring of the original tree in Bodhgaya under which Buddha attained enlightenment.

Behind the temple is a large deer enclosure (admission Rs 2; dawn-dusk) together with some aviaries and a crocodile pool.

ARCHAEOLOGICAL MUSEUM

Don't miss this superb, modern museum (admission Rs 2; 10am-5pm Sat-Thu), which houses ancient treasures such as the amazing and well-preserved 3rd-century BC lion capital from the Ashoka pillar, which has been adopted as India's national emblem. Other finds include a huge stone umbrella that is ornately carved with Buddhist symbols, bas reliefs, sculptures and Buddha images unearthed from the Sarnath region. Cameras, mobile phones, lighters and bags must be left in free lockers at the front gate.

Sleeping & Eating

Sarnath is only 10km from Varanasi so it's easy to day trip, but it's possible to stay in some of the modern temples and dharamsalas. You can stay a couple of days at the Tibetan temple (Rs 50 to 100 or by donation) or the Japanese temple (by donation), but expect some language problems.

Sarnath has several places in the paying guesthouse scheme, including the basic but friendly Jain Paying Guest House (☎ 2595621; d Rs 100-350) and Agrawal Paying Guest House (☎ 221007; r Rs 400-500), a great choice with a beautiful garden, eight spotless rooms and a refined owner.

Rahi UP Tourist Bungalow (☎ 2595965; dm/s/d Rs 100/500/550, s/d with AC Rs 700/750;) UP Tourism place, with pleasant lawns, reasonable rooms and an airy restaurant.

Green Hut (meals Rs 15-60; 7am-9pm) Opposite the archaeological museum, this breezy open-sided restaurant lives up to its name with lots of plants and greenery. The extensive veg and nonveg menu includes dosas, snacks and chicken dishes.

Getting There & Away

Local buses (Rs 10, 40 minutes) depart regularly from the south side of Varanasi Junction train station. An autorickshaw (30 minutes) costs about Rs 100 return from the train station, or Rs 180 from the old city or Assi Ghat. A taxi costs around Rs 300 return.

GORAKHPUR

☎ 0551 / pop 624,570

Gorakhphur is uniquely placed at the crossroad between where the Buddha was born (Lumbini in Nepal) and died (Kushinagar), although for many travellers it's merely a waystation on the road between Varanasi and Nepal. As such it's a busy transport hub and well set up to accommodate travellers. There are no major tourist attractions in the city, although a Buddhist museum is near the lake on the southern outskirts and the Gorakhnath Temple, devoted to Guru Gorakhnath, is 4km west of the station.

Gita Press (☎ 2334721; www.gitapress.org), a renowned publisher, has a formidable range of religious books for sale and a huge art gallery of Hindu mythology on the 1st floor.

Information

Gorakhpur's train station is a convenient one-stop place for information. Inside is the UP Tourism office (☎ 2335450; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) and just outside on the concourse is a State Bank of India ATM and the excellent Railtel Cyber Express (per hr Rs 23; 24hr). Hotel Bobina can exchange travellers cheques and currency.

Break out the repellent as mosquitoes are brutal in Gorakhpur.

Sleeping & Eating

The street opposite the train station has a dozen or more cheap hotels and while the area is noisy and grubby, some of the choices are surprisingly good. With the bus station close by, this is the area of choice for backpackers looking for a quick entry and exit.

There are plenty of cheap dhabas opposite the train station.

Hotel Bobina (☎ 2336663; bobina@ndb.vsnl.net.in; Nepal Rd; s/d Rs 500/600, with AC from Rs 700/800;) With all the trappings of a mini-resort – palm trees in the garden, a small pool, very serviceable gym, and a good restaurant and bar – Bobina tries hard to impress. Rooms are very slick and better than the price suggests. It's 1.5km west of the train station.

Hotel Elora (☎ 2200647; s/d Rs 150/250, s/d with AC Rs 350/450;) This is an appealing cheapie with a breezy rooftop, and rooms with TV and hot water. Next door, Hotel Sunrise (☎ 2337458) is virtually identical.

Bobi's Restaurant (meals Rs 30-80; Main Rd) Opposite Hotel President on the busy main street south of the train station, Bobi's is clean and serves up reliable food.

Getting There & Away

Frequent (at least hourly) buses run from the main bus stand, about 300m south of the train station, to Faizabad (Rs 78, three hours), Kushinagar (Rs 29, 1½ hours) and Sunauli (Rs 56, 2½ hours) at the Nepal border. Buses to Varanasi (Rs 112, seven hours) leave from the Katchari bus stand, south of the main bus stand, but the train is a better option.

Touts are dead keen to sell you 'through' bus tickets to Kathmandu or Pokhara from Rs 395, but they are not a great deal with plenty of profit for the tout and no choice of bus on the final leg. There are no private buses to Sunauli – only local buses – and no through buses direct to Nepal.

Gorakhpur has direct train connections with Varanasi (2nd class/sleeper/3AC Rs 65/114/320, 5½ hours, four daily), Lucknow (Rs 73/126/357, six hours), Delhi (sleeper/3AC Rs 277/782, 16 hours) and Kolkata (Rs 292/823, 23 hours, departs 1pm). Counter No 811 serves foreign tourists.

☎ 05564 / pop 17,982

The last of the four main pilgrimage sites marking Buddha's life – the others are Lumbini (Nepal), Bodhgaya and Sarnath – Kushinagar is where Buddha died, breathing his last words: 'All things must pass. Work out your own salvation with diligence'. According to a Buddhist text, when he died 'the earth shook, stars shot from the heavens, the sky in the 10 directions burst forth in flames and the air filled with celestial music'. Devotees from several countries have built temples here to accommodate monks and the pilgrims who visit this holy site. The sites of interest are strung out along Buddha Marg, a peaceful, green area of town with a suitably reverent atmosphere.

Information

The tiny UP Tourism office (10am-5pm Mon-Sat) is opposite the Mahasulhamdadachan Thargyi Pagoda and can offer tea if nothing else.

Sights

The main places of interest in Kushinagar can be seen on a 2.5km (one way) L-shaped walk along Buddha Marg. All the sights are free and open from dawn to dusk unless otherwise indicated.

From the triple archway that marks the beginning of the street, the first temple you come across on the left is run by Linh Son Buddhists from Vietnam. The impressive complex includes a temple, meditation hall and gardens, and accommodation is available.

About 50m further on is the Burmese temple complex and the unmistakable golden Mahasukhamdadachan Thargyi Pagoda. The pagoda itself contains four Buddha images and the complex includes a school for local children.

The major site in Kushinagar is the Mahaparinirvana Temple, set among extensive lawns and with a circumambulatory path. The concrete temple houses the superb 5th-century reclining Buddha that was unearthed in 1876. Six metres long, most of it is covered in a gold cloth, this ancient death-bed statue is one of the world's most moving Buddhist icons. Behind the temple is an ancient 19m-tall stupa, and in the surrounding park are monastery ruins and a meditation garden. In the gardens just north of the temple is a huge bell erected by the Dalai Lama and Tibetan community.

Where the road turns left are more monastery ruins and the tiny and easy-to-miss Mathakuar Temple, where you can peer through the metal grill to admire an ancient Buddha statue inside.

Opposite the Japan-Sri Lanka Buddhist Centre is the Buddha Museum (☎ 274403; admission free; ⏰ 10.30am-4.30pm Tue-Sun). In a building that seems far too large for what's on offer are three main galleries exhibiting Buddhist relics, sculptures and terracottas unearthed from the Kushinagar region, as well as some Tibetan thangkas (rectangluar painting on cloth) and Mughal miniature paintings.

A little further on, the large and impressive Wat Thai complex (⏰ 9-11.30am & 1.30-4pm) features an elaborate temple, beautifully maintained gardens with bonsai-style trees, a monastery and a temple containing a gilded Buddha. There's also a Sunday school and health clinic, each of which welcome visitors.

Carry on walking for 10 minutes past rice and sugarcane fields and you reach Kushinagar's most auspicious site – the ruins of the huge 15m-high red-brick Ramabhar Stupa, said to have been built on the spot where the Buddha was cremated. A palm-lined path leads around the stupa and this is a good spot to ponder about the fleeting nature of life.

From here you can walk or take a cycle-rickshaw (Rs 10) back to the main road.

Sleeping & Eating

If you have an interest in Buddhism, several monasteries welcome guests by donation.

> MAITREYA PROJECT
> An ambitious project to build a 150m-high bronze Buddha statue and Buddhist complex is on the drawing board for Kushinagar – if and when it finally comes to fruition it will likely turn this sleepy village into a bigger Buddhist pilgrimage centre than Bodhgaya. The US$250 million building project is being planned by the Maitreya Trust, a Tibetan Buddhist foundation, with land already set aside and plans to build an education centre, hospital, temples, meditation halls, a museum and library. The centrepiece will be the world's largest Buddha statue. For information see www.maitreya.org.

Linh Son Buddhist temple (r Rs 100-200) has accommodation with simple, clean rooms with private bathroom and hot water. The Tibetan Temple (r with shared bathroom by donation) offers basic accommodation. Japan-Sri Lanka Buddhist Centre (☎ 273044; r by donation) has a beautiful meditation centre in the red-brick stupa at the front.

Pathik Niwas (☎ 271038; fax 272038; s/d Rs 500/600, huts Rs 1100/1400, s/d r with AC Rs 1400/1700; meals Rs 30-80; ❄) Opposite the Mahasukhamdadachan Thargyi Pagoda, this is a reasonable UP Tourism hotel and restaurant but still overpriced.

Two luxury hotels near the museum (a third was being built at the time of writing) seem a little out of place in Kushinagar, but they fill the need for jet-setting Buddhist tour groups.

Royal Residency (☎ 272250; s/d Rs 5000/5800; ❄) This huge whitewashed hotel with a cavernous, echoing lobby has comfortable rooms with all the mod cons, a restaurant and communal Japanese baths.

Getting There & Away

Kushinagar is 55km east of Gorakhpur and frequent buses (Rs 29, 1½ hours) connect the two. Get off at the entrance to the town at the triple archway. A day trip by taxi costs Rs 800.

SUNAULI & THE NEPAL BORDER

CROSSING INTO NEPAL

Border Hours

The border is open 24 hours but closes to vehicles at 10pm, and if you arrive in the middle of the night you may have to wake someone to get stamped out of India.

Foreign exchange

There's a State Bank of India in Sunauli and foreign-exchange places just across the border on the Nepal side. Indian currency is accepted (ie for bus fares) on the Nepal side but Rs 500 notes cannot be exchanged.

Onward Transport

Private buses leave from the Nepali side of the border for Kathmandu and Pokhara (both destinations cost NRs 180 to 220, and take 10 hours or more) roughly hourly between 6am and 1pm, and at 4pm and 8pm. Night travel takes longer and you miss the views. A taxi (NRs 850) is faster and a good option if you can find others to share the cost. In the early morning and evening, government buses leave for Kathmandu (NRs 170) from Bhairawa, a town 4km north of Sunauli that can be reached by rickshaw. Tickets are sold from a kiosk near the Hotel Yeti in Bhairawa, on the main road from Sunauli.

Visas

Visas (US$30 cash, not rupees) are available at the immigration post just across the border. If you just want to visit Buddha's birthplace at Lumbini, you can get a free, three-day visa at the border.

more facilities are available in the Nepali part of Sunauli, but Bhairawa, 4km away, is a more substantial settlement.

Buses drop you 200m from the Indian immigration office, so if your luggage is not too heavy you can ignore the crowd of cycle-rickshaw drivers.

Near the bus stand, Rahi Tourist Bungalow (☎ 238201; rahiniranjana@up-tourism.com; dm Rs 75, s/d from Rs 250/300, with AC Rs 500/600; ❄) is a UP Tourism concrete bunker but is the only recommended accommodation on the Indian side of Sunauli. There's a restaurant and the rooms are comfortable enough.

The Nepali side of Sunauli has a few cheap hotels, outdoor restaurants and a more upbeat atmosphere, but most travellers prefer to stay in Bhairawa, or get straight on a bus to Kathmandu or Pokhara.

Getting There & Away

Regular buses run from Sunauli to Gorakhpur (Rs 56, 2½ hours) with the last one leaving Sunauli at 9pm. Early morning and early evening buses run to Varanasi (Rs 150, 11 hours). A better option for onward transport is to take the bus to Gorakhpur and a train from there. We get lots of reader feedback about bullying and intimidation of travellers who have bought through tickets from Kathmandu or Pokhara to Varanasi. After crossing the border at Sunauli into India, travellers have reported being forced – often with threats – to buy an overpriced new ticket for a local bus. Travelling in either direction it's better to take a local bus to the border, walk across and take another onward bus (pay the conductor on board). The worst traveller reports concern touts at Baba Restaurant.

Uttarakhand (Uttaranchal)

For a small state, Uttarakhand (formerly Uttaranchal) packs in an incredible amount. You can be taking yoga classes at an ashram in Rishikesh and white-water rafting down the Ganges one day, trekking in the shadow of the Himalayas the next. Walk with pilgrims to ancient temples near the source of Ganges and Yamuna Rivers, or take puja (offering or prayers) with thousands of devotees on the ghats at Haridwar. Put your feet up and relax in Raj-era hill stations, or ride an elephant and take your camera on a hunt for tigers at Corbett or Rajaji National Parks. If you get your timing right, it's all possible in Uttarakhand.

This is a region where nature takes control – rolling forest-clad hills, snow-topped 6000m peaks, rivers, waterfalls, lakes and glaciers. The state is 90% hills and 80% forest. The sacred Ganges River, which rises at Gaumukh Glacier in the far north, winds its way down to the plains via the significant pilgrimage centres of Gangotri, Rishikesh and Haridwar.

The British, fleeing the oppressive heat of the plains in summer, built enduring hill stations in the Himalayan foothills with Raj-style houses, hotels, churches and boarding schools that still exist. Mussoorie and Nainital have a real holiday atmosphere year-round and distant Himalayan views. Further north, the high Himalaya attracts trekkers, mountaineers and skiers as well as pilgrims on the Char Dham and Hem Kund routes. But it's Rishikesh that draws most foreign tourists for its ashrams, yoga, meditation and all-round spirituality. Whatever your interest, square for square, this is one of India's richest regions for travellers.

UTTARAKHAND (UTTARANCHAL)

History

Uttarakhand consists of the culturally distinct Garwhal (in the west) and Kumaon (east) districts. Over the centuries various dynasties have dominated the region, including the Guptas, Kuturyi and Chand rajas. In the 18th century the Nepalese Gurkhas attacked first the kingdom of Kumaon, then Garwhal, prompting the British to step in and take most of the region as part of the Treaty of Sigauli in 1817.

After Independence the region was merged with Uttar Pradesh, but following a vocal separatist movement, the present-day state of Uttaranchal was formed in 2000. In 2007 the state was officially renamed Uttarakhand, a traditional name meaning 'northern country'.

Climate

The hill stations can be visited all year, although winters (December to February) are freezing cold, with snowfall likely in January, so make sure your room has heating. Further north the main trekking and pilgrim season runs from April to late October or early November, with a break in July and August when the monsoon rains arrive and landslides block roads. As in all mountainous regions the weather is fickle and can vary greatly during any season. Look at the altitude to get an idea of likely temperatures.

Information

Most towns have an Uttarakhand Tourism office, but the main responsibility for the region's tourism rests with the Garhwal Mandal Vikas Nigam (GMVN; www.gmvnl.com), which covers the western Garhwal district; and Kumaon Mandal Vikas Nigam (KMVN; www.kmvn.org) covering the eastern Kumaon district. The two manage a network of tourist bungalows throughout the state.

Activities

TREKKING

Whether walking through the hills and forests of Kumaon or tackling a 3500m mountain pass, Uttarakhand provides some of India's finest and most accessible trekking country. In the Garhwal district, the Char Dham pilgrim routes (p468) mean that public transport to many treks is excellent. But you can also get away from the crowds and head to spectacularly remote places like Har ki Dun Valley or the magical Nanda Devi Sanctuary, which has a limit on the number of walkers allowed in at one time. Trekking the Kuari Pass brings sublime views of Nanda Devi, India's second tallest peak, and follows in the footsteps of Viceroy Lord Curzon. In the eastern Kumaon region, nudging up against the Tibetan border, you can tackle challenging Pindari or Milam Glacier treks.

The best (safest) time to trek is either the premonsoon period (mid-May until the end of June), or the postmonsoon season (mid-September to mid-October). In July and August the major problem is landslides that cut roads to the trailheads and cause long delays. The Char Dham temples and other high-altitude treks close in winter (late November to March).

Clothes and equipment can be purchased new or secondhand or hired from local shops or from GMVN. On these treks and trails cheap, basic accommodation is available in private guesthouses, ashrams and GMVN or KMVN tourist bungalows and dormitory huts. Camping is another option and porters are not expensive to hire. Dhabas (snack bars) serve up rice, chapatis, vegetables and instant noodles.

Government-run GMVN (www.gmvnl.com) and KMVN (www.kmvn.org) organise all-inclusive treks for Rs 1500 to 3000 a day, but there are private trek companies offering much the same thing for Rs 1000 to 4000 a day depending on group numbers and the level of food and service required. However, it's easy to organise your own trek – guides costs around Rs 500 a day, cooks Rs 500 and porters Rs 300. Ponies may also be available for hire on some treks. On yatra (pilgrimage) trails and on popular treks a guide is not necessary, but on more remote treks it is recommended for safety reasons and to support the local subsistence economy. Porters make any trek easier and more enjoyable. Trekking maps are available from the Survey of India (www.surveyofindia.gov.in) For a more in-depth coverage of treks, see Lonely Planet's Trekking in the Indian Himalaya.

RAFTING & KAYAKING

White-water rafting on the fast-flowing Ganges and Alaknanda Rivers is fast growing in popularity, with a dozen or more companies setting up riverside rafting camps during the season (October to May). Rishikesh is the main place to organise rafting trips (p463) but agencies in Joshimath also arrange trips, usually starting from Rudraprayag. Kayaking is also gaining a foothold and there's a recommended outfit in Rishikesh (p463).

TOP TREKS

FESTIVALS IN UTTARAKHAND

Makar Sakranti day (Jan; Uttarkashi, p467) Religious images are borne aloft on palanquins and carried into town from outlying villages.
Magh Mela (Jan & Feb; Haridwar, p454) Hundreds of thousands more pilgrims than usual come to bathe in the soul-cleansing Ganges during this huge annual religious fair; every six years the Ardh Kumbh Mela is held, and every 12 years during the mega Kumbh Mela the town is packed out with pilgrims.
International Yoga Festival (2-7 Feb; Rishikesh, p459) Yoga and meditation masters from around the world converge and give demonstrations and lectures.
Shivaratri (usually Mar; Tapkeshwar Temple, opposite) A festival celebrated in style with carnival rides and stalls at a picturesque riverside cave temple on the outskirts of Dehra Dun.
Nanda Devi Fair (Sep; Almora, p480) During this five-day fair, thousands of devotees parade the image of the goddess around and watch dancing and other cultural shows.

SKIING

India's premier ski resort is Auli, near Joshimath in the northern Garwhal district. Although a small resort with only one chairlift and one rope tow, the snow is reliable (January to March) and the infrastructure is improving.

YOGA & MEDITATION

Yoga and meditation are big business in Rishikesh (p462), where you can stay in an ashram or just turn up to classes at one of dozens of yoga centres. Haridwar also has some less-touristed ashrams (p462).

Getting Around

Although Dehra Dun, Haridwar, Rishikesh and Ramnagar are accessible by train, tough old buses are the main means of travelling around Uttarakhand. Because of the popular pilgrim routes, they run to very remote areas deep in the Himalaya for most of the year. In addition, a vast network of crowded share jeeps crisscrosses the state, linking remote towns and villages in the hills to important road junctions and bus routes. They tout for customers on the highway in the direction of the next town or transport hub, but usually don't leave until full (or at least jam-packed). They charge slightly more than the equivalent bus ride. Pay 10 times the share-taxi rate and you can hire the whole vehicle and travel in comfort.

Some of the hairpin mountain roads are frightening to travel on – especially when you're on a bus being driven by a particularly impatient and insane driver – and are subject to landslides, especially after the monsoon. Don't expect to cover more than 25km an hour on most roads.

DEHRA DUN

☎ 0135 / pop 527,859 / elev 700m

Blessed with a moderate climate, the capital of Uttarakhand is best known for the institutions the British left behind – the huge Forest Research Institute Museum, the Indian Military Academy, the Wildlife Institute of India and the Survey of India.

What was once a green and pleasant town of rice and tea gardens has morphed into a hectic, congested city, and considering Rishikesh and Mussoorie are both only an hour away, most travellers merely pass through. But Dehra Dun is worth a stop for its lively Paltan bazaar, vibrant Tibetan community and energetic vibe.

FOREST RESEARCH INSTITUTE MUSEUM

The prime attraction of this museum (2759382; www.icfre.org; admission Rs 10, guide Rs 50; 9.30am-1pm & 1.30-5.30pm) is the building itself. Set in a 500-hectare park, the institute – where most of India's forest officers are trained – is larger than Buckingham Palace and one of the Raj's grandest buildings. Built between 1924 and 1929, designed by CG Blomfield, this red-brick colossus has Mughal towers, perfectly formed arches and Roman columns in a series of quadrangles edged by elegant cloisters. Six huge halls have rather old-fashioned and dry displays on every aspect of forestry in India. Highlights include beautiful animal, bird and plant paintings by Afshan Zaidi, exhibits on the medicinal uses of trees, and a cross-section of a 700-year-old deodar tree.

TAPKESHWAR TEMPLE

An unusual and popular Shiva shrine (dawn-dusk) is inside a small dripping cave in a scenic setting on the banks of the Tons Nadi River. Turn left at the bottom of the steps for the main shrine, and cross the bridge over the river to visit another cave shrine where you have to squeeze through a narrow cave to see an image of Mata Vaishno Devi.

RAM RAI DARBAR

This unique mausoleum (Paltan Bazaar; admission free; dawn-dusk) is made of white marble, and the four smaller tombs in the garden courtyard are those of Ram Rai's four wives. The entrance gate is adorned with colourful murals. Ram Rai, the errant son of the seventh Sikh guru, Har Rai, was excommunicated by his father. He formed his own Udasi sect which still runs schools and hospitals. When Ram Rai died in 1687, one of his supporters, the Mughal emperor, Aurangzeb, ordered the building of the mausoleum. As in other gurdwaras (Sikh temples), a free communal lunch of dhal, rice and chapatis is offered to anyone who wants it, although a donation is appreciated.

GEOLOGY MUSEUM

The Wadia Institute of Himalayan Geology has a small museum (2627387; 37 General Mahadev Singh Rd; admission free; 9.30am-1pm & 2.15-5.15pm Mon-Fri) which covers local rocks, glaciers and earthquakes. Fossils include a dinosaur egg and stacks of teeth.

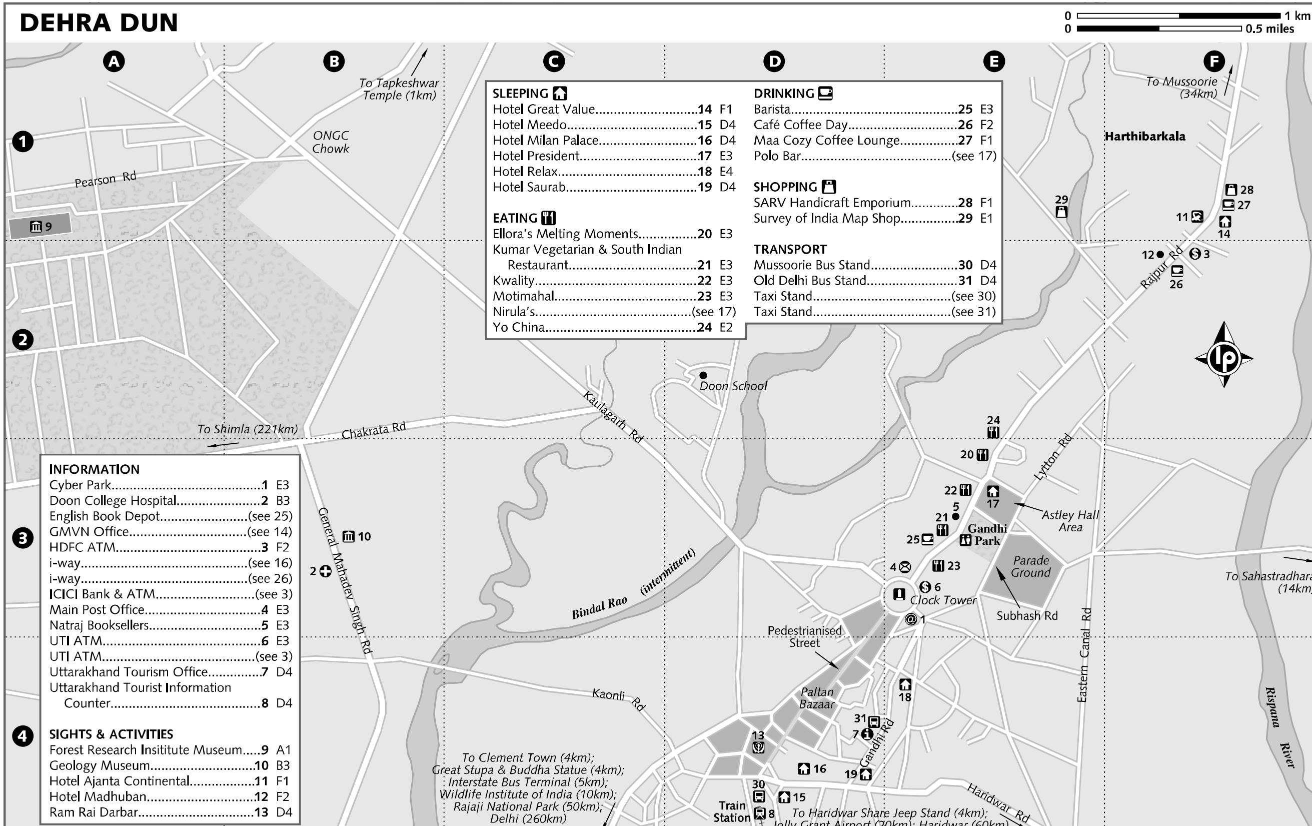
GREAT STUPA & BUDDHA STATUE

The region around Dehra Dun is home to a thriving Tibetan Buddhist community. Just south of the centre in Clement Town, the Mindrolling Monastery boasts a large college and the five-storey Great Stupa (9am-5pm). At over 60m it is claimed to be the world's tallest stupa and contains a series of shrine rooms displaying relics, murals and Tibetan art. Nearby, the 35m-high gold Buddha Statue, dedicated to the Dalai Lama, is set in a pretty garden.

HEALTH CLUB & SWIMMING

Hotel Madhuban (2749990; 97 Rajpur Rd) has a health club with a sauna, spa, gym and Ayurvedic massage. Nonguests can use the swimming pool at Hotel Ajanta Continental (2749595; 101 Rajpur Road) for Rs 300.

Sleeping



Hotel Meedo (2621544; Haridwar Rd; s Rs 200-300, d Rs 300-400) The best of an average bunch of cheap hotels by the train station, Meedo has a range of neglected rooms but all have TV and private bathroom (bucket hot water). Restaurant and bar next door.

Hotel Milan Palace (2626026; 64 Gandhi Rd; d Rs 400-600) This reasonable budget option set back from the main road has clean rooms with TV and hot water and helpful staff.

Hotel Saurab (2728041; 1 Raja Rd; s/d from Rs 500/600, with AC Rs 1100/1400;) Neatly furnished, comfortable rooms make this hotel, just off Gandhi Rd, a good deal. All rooms have hot water and TV, and there's a multicuisine restaurant.

Hotel Relax (2657776; www.hotelrelax-aketa.com; 7 Court Rd; s/d Rs 750/850, with AC Rs 950/1100;) Although a large hotel, the rooms are cosy enough with flowery bedspreads, TV and some with balcony.

Polo Bar (6 Astley Hall, Rajpur Rd) One of the more salubrious of Dehra Dun's many hotel bars, this one is at Hotel President.

Shopping

SARV Handicraft Emporium (☎ 2742141; 78 Rajpur Rd; 10am-7pm Mon-Sat) This small store has a great range of crafts and clothes with striking designs at reasonable prices. Money raised here benefits women working in Himalayan villages who have few employment opportunities.

Getting There & Away

AIR

Air Deccan has one daily flight from Delhi to Dehra Dun's Jolly Grant airport, about 20km east of the city on the Haridwar road. Internet fares for the one-hour flight start at Rs 1650. A taxi from the airport costs Rs 250.

BUS

Although a few buses still leave from the Old Delhi bus stand, almost all long-distance buses arrive and depart from the huge, modern Interstate Bus Terminal (ISBT) at Clement Town, 5km south of the city centre. To get there take a local bus (Rs 4), vikram 5 (Rs 4) or an autorickshaw (Rs 50). A few Mussoorie buses leave from here but most go from the Mussoorie bus stand next to the train station. For more bus details, see the table, p450.

TAXI

A taxi to Mussoorie officially costs Rs 400. A share taxi should cost Rs 50 per person and both can be found in front of the train station. Taxis charge Rs 650 to Rishikesh or Haridwar.

TRAIN

Dehra Dun is well connected by train to Delhi, and there are a handful of services to Lucknow, Varanasi, Kolkata (Calcutta) and Amritsar. The best service linking Dehra Dun and Delhi is the daily Shatabdi Express (chair/executive Rs 470/920) which leaves New Delhi at 6.55am and reaches Dehra Dun at 12.40pm. The return trip leaves Dehra Dun at 5pm. It's not worth paying the extra for executive class.

The daily Mussoorie Express (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 146/412/592, 11 hours) is an overnight service that leaves Delhi Sarai Rohilla station at 9.10pm, arriving at Dehra Dun at 8am. The return trip leaves Dehra Dun at 9.30pm.

Getting Around

Hundreds of eight-seater vikrams (shared autorickshaws; Rs 3 to 5 per trip) race along five fixed routes (look at the front for the number). No 5 vikrams go to the New Delhi bus stand at Clement Town. Autorickshaws cost Rs 30 for a short distance, up to 60 for a few kilometres or Rs 100 per hour for touring around the city.

MUSSOORIE

☎ 0135 / pop 29,319 / elev 2000m

Perched on a ridge 2km high, the 'Queen of Hill Stations' spends much of the year swathed in clouds. When the mist clears, views of the green Doon Valley and the distant white-capped Himalayan peaks are superb, and in the hot months the cooler temperatures and fresh mountain air make a welcome break from the plains below. It certainly gets cold up here in winter, with snowfall common in January. Although Mussoorie's main bazaars can at first seem like a tacky holiday camp for families and honeymooners, there are plenty of walks in the area, interesting Raj-era buildings, and an upbeat atmosphere.

Established by the British in 1823, Mussoorie became hugely popular with the Raj set. The ghosts of that era linger on in the architecture of the churches, libraries, hotels and summer palaces. The town is swamped with visitors between May and July, but at other times many of the 300 hotels have vacancies and their prices drop dramatically.

Orientation

Central Mussoorie consists of two developed areas: Gandhi Chowk (also called Library Bazaar) at the western end and the livelier Kulri Bazaar at the eastern end, and the two are linked by an almost traffic-free road, the Mall. Cycle-rickshaws will take you the 2km between the two ends but it's a pleasant, scenic walk. Beyond Kulri Bazaar a narrow road leads 5km to the settlement of Landour.

GUN HILL

From midway along the Mall Rd, a cable car (return Rs 50; 9am-8pm) runs up to Mussoorie's highest point, Gun Hill (2530m) which has views of several peaks, including Bandarpunch. A steep path also winds up to the viewpoint. The most popular time to go up is an hour or so before sunset and there's a mini-carnival atmosphere with kids' rides, food stalls, magic shops and honeymooners having their photos taken dressed up in Garhwali costumes.

WALKS

The walks around Mussoorie offer great views when the clouds don't get in the way. Camel's Back Rd is a popular 3km promenade from Kulri Bazaar to Gandhi Chowk, which passes a rock formation that looks like a camel. There are a couple of good mountain viewpoints along the way, including a teashop with a telescope (Rs 10). You can ride a horse (Rs 120 one way, Rs 150 return) along the trail if you start from the Gandhi Chowk end. An enjoyable, longer walk (5km one way) starts at the Picture Palace, goes past the Union Church and the clock tower to Landour and the Sisters' Bazaar area.

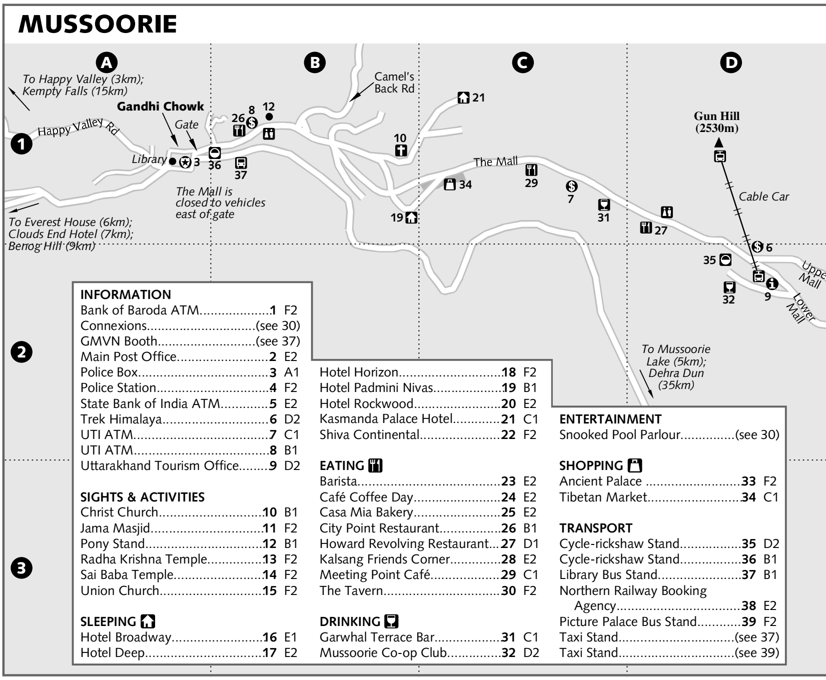
West of Gandhi Chowk, a more demanding walk is to the Jwalaji Temple on Benog Hill (about 18km return) via Clouds End Hotel. The walk passes through thick forest and offers some fine views. A slightly shorter walk is to the abandoned Everest House (12km return), former residence of Sir George Everest, first surveyor-general of India and namesake of the world's highest mountain. Trek Himalaya (☎ 2631302; Upper Mall; 11am-8pm) can organise guided walks to these points for around Rs 600 a day.

CHURCHES & TEMPLES

Christian churches of various denominations can be visited. The Union Church in Kulri Bazaar holds a service in English at 11am every Sunday, while the beautiful Christ Church (1863) is the oldest in Mussoorie and bears memorial plaques of colonial residents. More recent places of worship include a Sai Baba Temple, the Radha Krishna Temple, the Jama Masjid and a Buddhist temple (in Happy Valley).

Courses

Mussoorie is home to many schools and colleges, including the Landour Language School (☎ 2631487; www.landourlanguageschool.org; Landour; 1st Mon in Feb-2nd Fri in Dec). One of India's leading schools for teaching conversational Hindi at beginner, intermediate and advanced levels, group classes are Rs 140 per hour, private tutorials Rs 200 per hour. Course books (Rs 1000 to 1350) and enrolment fee (Rs 250) are extra.



Tours

GMVN booth (☎ 2632863; Library bus stand; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) GMVN organises two local tours – one to Kempty Falls (three-hour tour Rs 70) and the other to Dhanoltri, Surkhanda Devi Temple and Mussoorie Lake (full-day tour Rs 140).
Trek Himalaya (☎ 2631302; www.trekhimalaya.com; Upper Mall; 10am-8pm) Long-time local trekker Neelambar Badoni organises three-day treks to unspoilt Nagtibba for around US$100 per person (minimum five) as well as customised treks to Dodital, Har ki Dun, Gaumukh Glacier and safaris as far as Ladakh.

Sleeping

The absolute peak season is summer (May to July) when hotel prices shoot to ridiculous heights. There's a mid-peak during the honeymoon season around October and November, and over Christmas and New Year. At other times you should be able to get a bargain. The prices listed are for the mid-season unless otherwise specified.

Hotels are strung out between the two bazaars, with the better budget places around Kulri Bazaar and the top-end hotels closer to Library Bazaar. Check out is usually 10am.

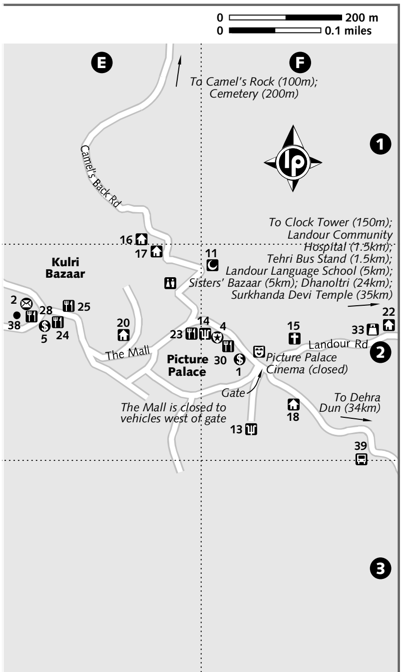
BUDGET

Budget places are few, but most hotels drop their rates to budget levels out of season.

Hotel Broadway (☎ 2632243; Camel's Back Rd, Kulri Bazaar; d Rs 200-350) Number one for backpackers, this historic 1880s wooden hotel with colourful flowerboxes in the windows oozes character without sacrificing comfort. Some rooms have good views and meals are available. Prices triple in peak season.

Hotel Deep (☎ 2632470; deephotel@hotmail.com; Camel's Back Rd; r Rs 100-700) Next door to Broadway, this is a candy-striped warren of a place with a huge range of rooms. In the off-season budget rooms are as little as Rs 100 (Rs 900 in summer), but there are also some spacious rooms and suites. There's a pleasant terrace with views.

Hotel Rockwood (☎ 2632850; the Mall, Kulri Bazaar; d Rs 1200-2000, off-season Rs 200-400) In the heart of the bazaar and an off-season bargain, the rooms are a mixed bag but some have a balcony.



MIDRANGE

Hotel Horizon (☎ 2632899; Picture Palace; d Rs 1600-1800, off-season discount 40%) A touch of style with hand-painted murals in all the rooms. You descend below reception to the rooms, most of which have views as well as TV and heating.

Shiva Continental (☎ 2632174; www.shivacon.com; Landour Rd; r Rs 1500-3000, off-season Rs 950-1950) This slightly eccentric hotel on the road up to Landour has marble décor, sculptures, a shady terrace and so many pot plants that they threaten to take over the place. Carpeted rooms are bright and most have views.

Hotel Padmini Nivas (☎ 2631093; www.hotelpadmininivas.com; the Mall; d Rs 1700-2300, ste Rs 2800-3200, off-season discount 50%; 💻) Built in 1840 by a British colonel and then bought by the Maharaja of Rajpipla, this green-roofed heritage hotel looks a bit ramshackle but has a real old-fashioned charm. Large rooms, suites and even a private cottage are well-appointed and beautifully furnished. The dining room, with its antique furniture, is an outstanding feature and the whole place is set on five acres of landscaped gardens.

our pick Kasmanda Palace Hotel (☎ 2632424; kasmanda@vsnl.com; off the Mall; d Rs 2800-4000, off-season discount 20%) Mussoorie's most romantic hotel, this white Romanesque castle was built in 1836 for a British officer and was bought by the Maharaja of Kasmanda in 1915. The red-carpeted hall has a superb staircase flanked by moth-eaten hunting trophies. All of the rooms have charm but the wood-panelled and antique-filled Maharaja Room is the royal best. The formal dining room and pretty garden area complete the picture.

Eating

Meeting Point Cafe (the Mall; meals Rs 25-45) Away from the bazaars, this is a pleasant little hangout with espresso coffee and Tibetan food.

Casa Mia Bakery (the Mall, Kulri Bazaar; snacks Rs 16-45) The best of the many bakeries, this one has a dazzling range of temptations, including croissants, cakes, muffins, apple pies and frozen drinks.

Howard Revolving Restaurant (the Mall; meals Rs 35-50) Halfway along the Mall, this is a novel place to eat – it's switched on when guests arrive ('No charges for revolving'!). Reasonable food, good views.

City Point Restaurant (the Mall, Gandhi Chowk; meals Rs 30-110) This small wood-panelled place is great for breakfast or a quick snack but also does curries and dishes such as khadai chicken for dinner.

Kalsang Friends Corner (☎ 2633710; the Mall; meals Rs 20-80) This deservedly popular place is one of several Tibetan restaurants in town. Along with momos (Tibetan dumplings) and noodles, mains include Thai papaya salad, chicken dishes and omelettes.

The Tavern (☎ 2632829; the Mall, Picture Palace; meals Rs 70-235) A favourite place to dine and hang out, Tavern boasts a global range of food from crispy roast lamb to Goan fish curry and just about everything in between. The décor is a bit British pub, but staff are welcoming and there's live music in the evening. Beer and cocktails are available at the bar.

Mussoorie has lots of cafés along the Mall, including branches of Barista and Café Coffee Day. For fine dining, you can't go past the restaurants at Hotel Padmini Nivas (opposite) and Kasmanda Palace Hotel (opposite).

Drinking & Entertainment

Mussoorie's family-holiday entertainment includes video game arcades and an indoor roller-skating rink.

Snooked Pool Parlour (the Mall, pool per hr Rs 80, snooker per hr Rs 100; ⏰ 10.30am-10.30pm) This pool parlour above the Tavern is a good place to keep yourself entertained and to meet locals. Downstairs there's live music every evening at the bar.

Mussoorie Co-op Club (☎ 2632828; Lower Mall; ⏰ 2-11pm) A throwback to the Raj, despite being built in 1957, this ramshackle club is a good place to come for a beer (Rs 100) and a game of billiards or snooker (Rs 100 per hour).

HANGING BY A WIRE

Uttarakhand has plenty of hills and a few of them have cable cars – usually called 'ropeways' locally – which not only make getting to the top a breeze, but are a source of great civic pride. Nainital's cable car (p475) takes you from the lake to Snow View for a glimpse of the Himalaya, while Mussoorie (p451) has a similar set-up. Haridwar has two that are specifically designed to take pilgrims up to hilltop temples (p455). But the pièce de résistance belongs to Joshimath, where a 4km-long cable car (p470) takes you more than 1000m up to the ski resort of Auli for magnificent views of Nanda Devi.

Garhwal Terrace Bar (the Mall; noon-11pm) Pleasant place for a beer with views down the Doon Valley.

Shopping

There's a Tibetan Market (the Mall; daily from 9am) with cheap clothing and other goods. Mussoorie has a wonderful collection of magic shops, where you can buy cheap but baffling magic tricks and whacky toys – great gifts for kids. They are scattered mainly along the Mall and at the top of the cable car.

Ancient Palace (☎ 2631622; Landour Rd; 10am-9pm) This shop is crammed with antiques and curios.

Getting There & Away

BUS

Frequent buses leave from the Mussoorie bus stand (next to the train station) in Dehra Dun for Mussoorie (Rs 28, 1½ hours). Some go to the Picture Palace bus stand (☎ 2632259) while others go to the Library bus stand (☎ 263 2258) at the other end of town. The return trip takes an hour. There are no direct buses to Rishikesh or Haridwar – you'll need to change at Dehra Dun.

It's possible to take the 'back roads' north into the Himalaya from Mussoorie. Enquire at the Library bus stand about buses to Yamunotri (Rs 174, six hours) which are irregular, or to Sankri for the Har ki Dun trek (Rs 120, seven hours), which may require a combination of buses and share jeeps. Local buses, such as those to Tehri Dam, leave from the Tehri bus stand on the way to Landour.

TAXI

From taxi stands at both bus stands you can hire taxis to Dehra Dun (Rs 400), Rishikesh (Rs 1100) or jeeps to Uttarkashi (Rs 2500). A shared taxi to Dehra Dun should cost Rs 50 per person.

TRAIN

The Northern Railway booking agency (☎ 2632846; the Mall, Kulri Bazaar; 8-11am & noon-3pm Mon-Sat, 8am-2pm Sun) sells tickets for trains from Haridwar.

Getting Around

Cycle-rickshaws along the Mall cost Rs 20. A full day of sightseeing around Mussoorie by taxi including Kempty Falls and Dhanoltri costs around Rs 1800.

AROUND MUSSOORIE

The most popular sight around Mussoorie is impressive Kempty Falls, 15km northwest, where you can swim in the crowded pool. A trip to Dhanoltri offers panoramic snowcapped Himalayan views and is a lovely picnic spot set among deodar forests 25km northeast of Mussoorie. About 9km further north is Surkhanda Devi Temple, at a height of 3030m, which is a 2km walk from the road. A taxi to Kempty Falls costs Rs 600 and to Dhanoltri and Surkhanda Devi temple the cost is Rs 900. See p451 for cheaper bus tours.

Propitiously located at the point where the Ganges emerges from the Himalaya, Haridwar (also called Hardwar) is Uttarakhand's holiest Hindu city and pilgrims arrive here in droves to bathe in the often fast-flowing Ganges. The sheer numbers of people gathering around Har-ki-Pairi Ghat give Haridwar a chaotic but reverent feel – as in Varanasi, it's easy to get caught up in the spiritual clamour here. Within the religious architecture of India, Haridwar is much more significant than Rishikesh, an hour further north, and every evening the river comes alive with flickering flames as floating offerings are released onto the Ganges.

Dotted around the city are impressive temples, both ancient and modern, dharamsalas (pilgrims' rest houses) and ashrams, some of which are the size of small villages. Famous for its Ayurvedic medicines, the city is relatively hassle-free and is also the gateway to nearby Rajaji National Park.

Haridwar is busy during the yatra season from April to November, but the big annual event is the Magh Mela in January or February, which every six years becomes a bigger Ardh Magh Mela. Every 12 years the mega Kumbh Mela (the next one in Haridwar is 2010) attracts millions of pilgrims.

Orientation

Haridwar's main street is Railway Rd, becoming Upper Rd, and runs parallel to the Ganges canal (the river proper runs further to the east). Generally only cycle-rickshaws are allowed between Laltarao bridge and Bhimgoda Jhula (bridge) so vehicles travel around the opposite bank of the river. The alleyways of Bara Bazaar run south of Har-ki-Pairi ghat.

Sights & Activities

HAR-KI-PAIRI GHAT

Har-ki-Pairi (The Footstep of God) is where Vishnu is said to have dropped some heavenly nectar and left a footprint behind. As such it is very sacred to Hindus and the place to wash away your sins. Pilgrims bathe here in its often fast currents and donate money to the priests and shrines.

The ghat sits on the western bank of the Ganges canal and every evening hundreds of worshippers gather for the ganga aarti (river worship ceremony). Officials in blue uniform collect donations (and give out receipts) and as the sun sets, bells ring out a rhythm, torches are lit, and leaf baskets with flower petals inside and a candle on top (Rs 5) are lit and put on the river to drift away downstream.

Tourists can mingle with the crowd to experience the rituals of an ancient religion that still retains its power in the modern age. Someone may claim to be a priest and help you with your puja before asking for Rs 200 or more. If you want to make a donation, give it to a genuine priest or uniformed collector or put money in a charity box.

The best times to visit the ghats are early morning or just before dusk.

MANSA DEVI & CHANDI DEVI TEMPLES

Take the cable car (return Rs 48; 7.30am-7pm Apr-Oct, 8.30am-6pm Nov-Mar) to the crowded hilltop temple of Mansa Devi, a wish-fulfilling goddess. The path to the cable car is lined with stalls selling packages of prasad (food offering used in religious ceremonies) to take up to the goddess on the hill. You can walk up (1.5km) but beware of prasad-stealing monkeys. Photography is forbidden in the temple.

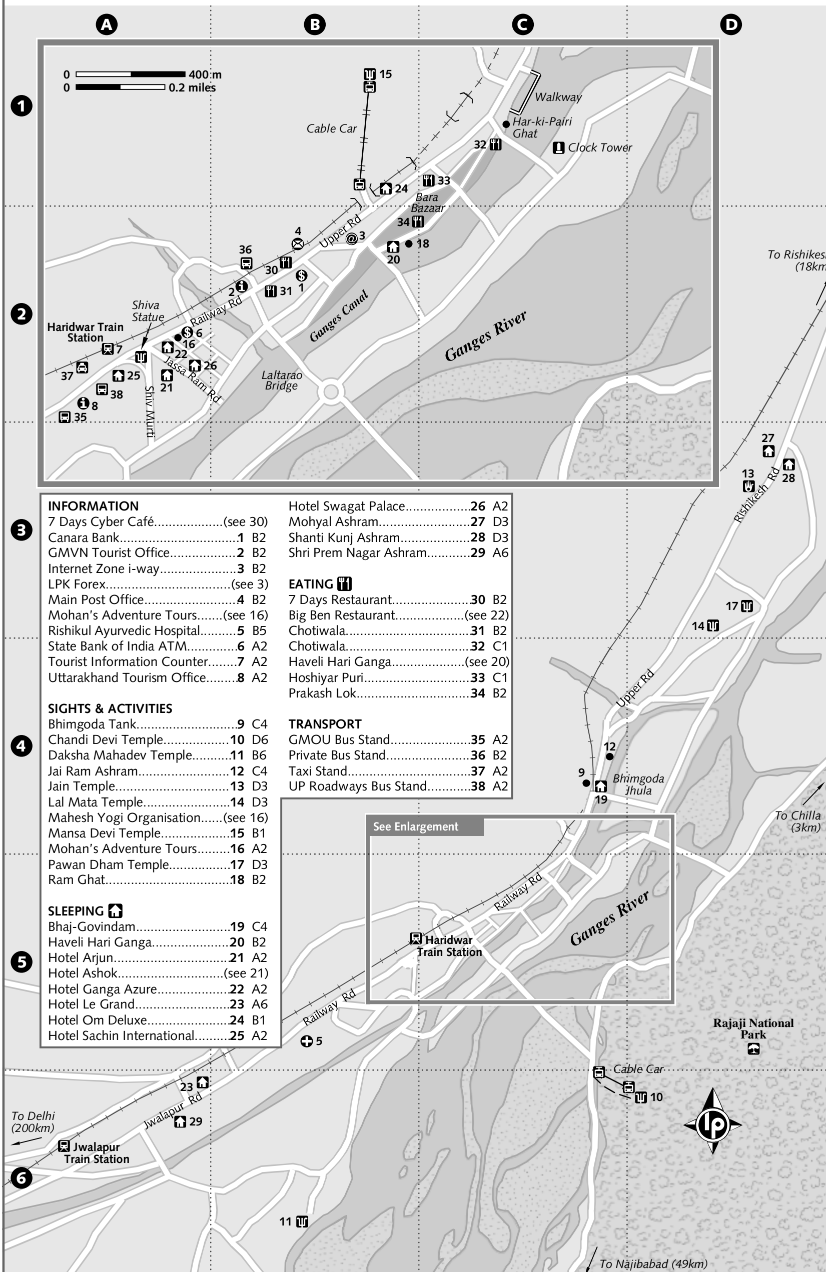
Many visitors and pilgrims combine this with a cable car (return Rs 70; 8am-6pm) up Neel Hill, 4km southeast of Haridwar, to Chandi Devi Temple, which was built by Raja Suchet Singh of Kashmir in 1929. Pay Rs 144 at Mansa Devi and you can ride on both cable cars and take an AC coach between the two temples.

Tours

From his office next to Chitra Talkies cinema, Sanjeev Mehta of Mohan's Adventure Tours (265543, mobile 9837100215; www.mohansadventure.in; Railway Rd; 8am-10.30pm) can organise any kind of tour, including cycling, trekking, fishing, bird-watching and rafting. He specialises in five-hour safaris (Rs 1750 per person) around Rajaji National Park (see p459). Sanjeev also runs three-day trips to Corbett Tiger Reserve.

Sleeping

Haridwar has loads of hotels catering to Hindu pilgrims. The busiest time of year is the yatra season from April to November – outside this time you should have no problem finding a room at discounts of 20% to 50%. See the boxed text, p462, for details on staying at an ashram.



BUDGET

Jassa Ram Rd and the other alleys running off Railway Rd have plenty of budget hotels and although some of the fancy foyers and neon signs may raise your hopes, none are very good. Rishikesh has far superior budget accommodation.

Hotel Ashok (2426469; Jassa Ram Rd; s Rs 110, d Rs 150-250;) A fairly grim cheapie where only the 'deluxe' rooms (with TV and hot water) are faintly appealing.

UTTARAKHAND (UTTARANCHAL)

HARIDWAR & AROUND

PRIESTLY PANDAS

'Where can I find my family panda?' This is a common question from Hindu pilgrims visiting Haridwar. Pandas (priests and pilgrim guides) also maintain accurate records of a family's history, which can date back hundreds of years. You can see them not only at the ghats but also at the train station. Pilgrims give a panda the name of their clan, caste, village, district and state and are then directed to their specific family panda.

Once found, their panda will record their visit and any births, marriages and deaths that have taken place since the last pilgrimage of a family member. In the past, pilgrims stayed with their trusted panda, who acted as banker, minder and cook. Today, this is not so common, but pandas still help with the many cremation rituals. Pandas can become wealthy as pilgrims donate not just generous sums of money, but also valuable items belonging to their deceased relatives.

Hotel Swagat Palace (☎ 221581; Jassa Ram Rd; d Rs 250-500; ❄) Reasonable value as the better rooms are spacious with TV and clean tiled floors.

Hotel Om Deluxe (☎ 226639; Upper Rd; d with/without AC Rs 750/450; ❄) Large, clean rooms (some with a balcony), a central location near the cable car to Mansa Devi Temple, and helpful staff make this a good option.

Hotel Arjun (☎ 421962; Jassa Ram Rd; d Rs 650, with AC Rs 950; ❄) The best of the bunch on Jassa Ram Rd – if you don't mind pink décor. Rooms are clean and bright, there's solar hot water and even an elevator. Prices drop by 50% in the off-season.

MIDRANGE & TOP END

Hotel Ganga Azure (☎ 220938; www.hotelgangaazure.com; Railway Rd; d Rs 500-700, with AC Rs 1500, off-season discount 20%; ❄) Centrally located a short walk from the train station, this hotel has an interesting inner courtyard with a multicoloured glass roof. The rooms aren't quite as interesting and some are a bit small, but there's a range to choose from.

Hotel Sachin International (☎ 222655; hotelsachin@haridwar.com; Railway Rd; s/d Rs 850/950, with AC Rs 1600/1800; ❄) Amid the transport hub, this is a large, nondescript but comfortable hotel with rooms around a central car park and a restaurant reached over a causeway.

Bhaj-Govindam (☎ 261682; haridwar@usnl.com; near Bhimgoda Jhula; huts Rs 800, with AC Rs 1250; ❄) Haridwar's most relaxing accommodation in a wonderful location on the bank of the Ganges, these comfortable bamboo huts are set in a pleasant garden and are equipped with fans, air cooler or AC, and tiled private bathrooms. The accommodation is absolute riverfront with its own private ghat – ask to be dropped at 'Bhimgoda Jhula'.

Hotel Le Grand (☎ 2429250; www.hotellegrand.com; Railway Rd; d Rs 1395-1795; ❄) An enormous echoing central foyer greets you at this stylish, upmarket hotel 2km south of the train station. Comfortable rooms have balconies and mod-cons. While the location is relatively quiet, it's removed from Haridwar's action.

our pick Haveli Hari Ganga (☎ 226443; www.haveliharıganga.com; 21 Ram Ghat; r Rs 2800-3400; ❄ 💻) Hidden away in Bara Bazaar, but right on the Ganges, this superb 1918 haveli (traditional, ornately decorated residence), is Haridwar's finest hotel. Airy courtyards, marble floors, hanging flower baskets and balconies overlooking the river give it a regal charm. Room rates include breakfast, steam bath, yoga and the hotel's own ganga aarti on its private ghat. The Ganges laps onto one terrace and downstairs an Ayurvedic health spa offers treatments as well as yoga classes.

Eating

Being a holy city, only vegetarian food and nonalcoholic drinks are available. In Bara Bazaar, Prakash Lok is an institution for its lassis and almond milk – that's all it serves!

Chotiwala (meals Rs 20-60) There are a couple of outlets for this popular veg restaurant – one on Upper Rd and another down on the river at Subhash Ghat. You may find the forlorn mascot (the chotiwallah) sitting out the front. The veg snacks and Chinese dishes are simple but tasty.

7 Days Restaurant (Upper Rd; meals Rs 15-65) This bright first-floor restaurant and internet café serves up dosas, pizzas, cheese burgers and Chinese dishes.

Hoshiyar Puri (Upper Rd; meals Rs 20-65; 🕐 11am-4pm & 7pm-4am) Established in 1937 and still with a loyal following – the kidney beans, lacha paratha (stuffed fried bread), aloo gobi (cauliflower and potato curry) and kheer (rice pudding) are lip-smacking good.

Big Ben Restaurant (Hotel Ganga Azure, Railway Rd; meals Rs 40-125; 8.30am-10.30pm;) Watch the passing parade and enjoy some of Haridwar's best comfort food in this restaurant with mirrors, soft music and polite staff. A big continental breakfast is Rs 85. Snack on soups and toasted sandwiches or tackle the special thali or gourmet Kashmiri dum aloo (spicy potato dish).

Haveli Hari Ganga (226443; 21 Ram Ghat; dinner buffet Rs 300; 8.30-11pm) For something special, the evening Indian vegetarian buffet at this lovely heritage hotel is the classiest in Haridwar.

RAJAJI NATIONAL PARK

elev 300-1000m

This unspoilt park (Indian/foreigner up to 3 days Rs 40/350, camera free/Rs 50, video 2500/5000; 15 Nov-15 Jun), covering 820 sq km in the forested foothills near Haridwar, is best known for its wild elephants, numbering around 450 to 500 at last count.

As well as elephants the park contains some 38 tigers and 250 leopards although they are not as easily seen as these numbers suggest. They have thousands of chital (spotted deer) and hundred of sambars (India's largest species of deer) to feed on. A handful of rarely seen sloth bears are hidden away. Over 300 species of birds also add interest.

The village of Chilla, 13km northeast of Haridwar, is the base for visiting the park. Elephant rides (per person Rs 200), which can take up to four passengers, are available on a first-come-first-served basis at sunrise and 3pm, but there are currently only two elephants. Contact the Forest Ranger's office, close to the Tourist Guesthouse at Chilla, where you can also pick up a brochure, pay entry fees and organise a jeep. Jeeps take up to eight people and cost Rs 700 for the standard safari (plus Rs 100 entry fee for the vehicle).

Before visiting, contact the GMVN tourist office (Map p456; 2244240; Railway Rd, Haridwar; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) and Mohan's Adventure Tours (Map p456; 220910; www.mohansadventure.com; Railway Rd, Haridwar; 8am-10.30pm), which offers Rajaji safaris even when the park is officially closed (most of the park is closed from 15 June to 15 November), including a five-hour trip (Rs 1400 per person) that includes a short safari, watching a parade of wild elephants and visiting a tribal village of Gujjar buffalo herders. If you're lucky, Sanjeev may take you to visit his legally adopted orphaned elephant.

Sleeping & Eating

Chilla Guesthouse (0138-226678; dm/hut/r Rs 150/900/990, r with AC Rs 1500;) is the GMVN resthouse and the most comfortable place to stay in Chilla. There's a good restaurant here and a pleasant garden.

Within the park there are nine historical but basic forest rest houses (Indian Rs 200-500, foreigner Rs 400-1000) at Asarohi, Beribara, Chilla, Kansrao, Kunnao, Motichur, Phandowala, Ranipur and Satyanarayan. The 1883 forest rest house in Chilla has three rooms downstairs and a suite upstairs with a balcony. The rest house at Satyanarayan is also recommended, while the one at Kansrao has retained all its original features. No food is available (except in Chilla) and if you don't have your own transport you will have to make a special arrangement with a jeep driver. To book a forest rest house, contact the director at the Rajaji National Park Office (/fax 0135-2621669; Rajaji National Park Office, 5/1 Ansari Marg, Dehra Dun). Mohan's Adventure Tours can also make booking for forest lodges.

Getting There & Away

RISHIKESH

0135 / pop 79,591 / elev 356m

Ever since the Beatles rocked up at the ashram of the Maharishi Mahesh Yogi in the late '60s, Rishikesh has been a magnet for spiritual seekers. Today it styles itself as the 'Yoga Capital of the World' – with some justification – as there are masses of ashrams and all kinds of yoga and meditation classes. Most of this action is north of the main town, where the exquisite setting on the fast-flowing Ganges, surrounded by forested hills, is conducive to meditation and mind expansion. In the evening, the breeze blows down the valley, setting temple bells ringing as sadhus (spiritual men), pilgrims and tourists prepare for the nightly ganga aarti ceremony.

Rishikesh is very New Age: you can learn to play the sitar or tabla on your hotel roof; try laughing yoga; practise humming or gong meditation; experience crystal healing and all styles of massage; have a go at chanting mantras; and listen to spiritually uplifting CDs as you sip Ayurvedic tea with your vegetarian meal.

But it's not all spiritual. Rishikesh is now a popular white-water rafting centre, backpacker hang-out, and gateway to treks in the Himalaya.

Orientation

Rishikesh is divided into two main areas: the crowded, unattractive downtown area (Rishikesh town), where you'll find the bus and train stations as well as the Triveni Ghat; and the riverside communities 2km upstream around Ram Jhula and Lakshman Jhula bridges, where most of the accommodation, ashrams, restaurants and travellers are ensconced. The two jhula (suspension bridges) that cross the river are pedestrian-only. Swarg Ashram, located on the eastern bank, is the traffic-free 'spiritual centre' of Rishikesh, while High Bank, west of Lakshman Jhula, is a small enclave popular with backpackers.

Dangers & Annoyances

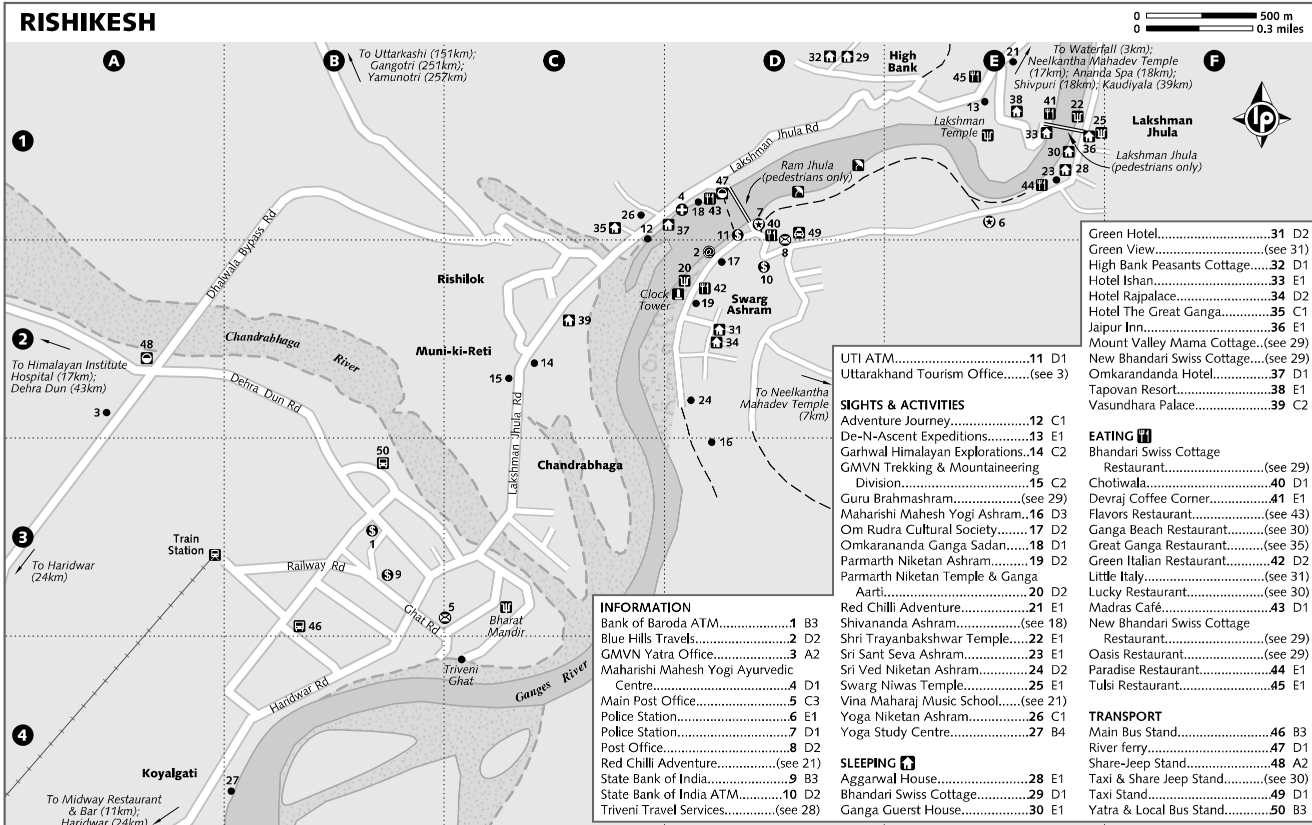
Travellers should be cautious of being befriended by sadhus – while many sadhus are on genuine spiritual journeys, the orange robes have been used as a disguise by fugitives from the law since medieval times and in modern times females walking alone may be at risk.

The current in the Ganges is very strong in places, and as inviting as a dip from one of the beaches may seem, people drown here every year. Don't swim out of your depth.

Sights & Activities

LAKSHMAN JHULA & AROUND

The defining image of Rishikesh is the view across the Lakshman Jhula hanging bridge to the huge 13-storey wedding-cake temples of Swarg Niwas and Shri Trayanbakshwar. Built by the organisation of the guru Kailashanand, they resemble fairyland castles and have dozens of shrines to Hindu deities on each level, interspersed with jewellery and textile shops – spiritual commercialism. Sunset is an especially good time to photograph the temples from the bridge itself, and you'll hear the bell-clanging and chanting of devotees in the morning and evening. Shops, restaurants and guesthouses sprawl on both sides of the river here and this has grown in recent years into the busiest and liveliest part of upper Rishikesh.



SWARG ASHRAM

A pleasant 2km walk south of Lakshman Jhula along the path skirting the east bank of the Ganges leads to the spiritual community of Swarg Ashram, made up of temples, ashrams, shops and the bathing ghats where religious ceremonies are performed at sunrise and sunset. The colourful ganga aarti ceremony is held at the riverside temple of the Parmarth Niketan Ashram, with singing, chanting, musicians and the lighting of candles.

WALKS & BEACHES

An easy walk to two small waterfalls starts 3km north of Lakshman Jhula bridge. The start of the 15-minute walk is marked by drink stalls and a roadside shrine, and the path is easy to find. Jeep taxis cost Rs 100 from Lakshman Jhula. Between here and Lakshman Jhula are several sandy beaches, sheltered from the road and popular with travellers escaping the crowds. Resist the temptation to swim in the Ganges here as the current can be deceptively strong.

For a longer hike, follow the dedicated pilgrims who take water from the Ganges to offer at Neelkantha Mahadev Temple, a 7km, three-hour walk along a forest path from Swarg Ashram. Neelkanth (Blue Throat) is another name for Shiva, who once drank poison churned up from the sea by gods and demons, which turned his throat blue. A much longer road (17km) via Lakshman Jhula also goes to the temple. A jeep taxi costs Rs 600 return.

MAHARISHI ASHRAM

Just south of Swarg Ashram, slowly being consumed by the forest undergrowth, is what's left of the original Maharishi Mahesh Yogi Ashram. It was abandoned in 1997 and is now back under the control of the forest department, but the shells of many buildings, meditation cells and lecture halls can still be seen, including Maharishi's own house and the guesthouse where the Beatles stayed and apparently wrote much of the White Album. The best way to appreciate it is to take the 'Beatles Ashram Tour' (Rs 100), run by former ashramite, Joshi. Contact Lucky Helpline Services (☎ 2440166) in Lakshman Jhula.

MEDITATION, YOGA & ASHRAMS

Rishikesh styles itself as the yoga capital of the world and yoga and meditation are the buzz words here. Lots of people are cashing in on this, and teaching and yoga styles vary tremendously, so check out a few classes before committing yourself to a course. Ashram stays are the best ways to truly immerse yourself in the spiritual vibe.

Overlooking the Ganges in Lakshman Jhula, the large rooms at Sri Sant Seva Ashram (☎ 2430465; r Rs 200-500; 💻) are popular so book ahead. The yoga classes are mixed styles organised by Swami Umesh Yogi. Sessions for beginners (Rs 70) run daily in the morning and evening. There are also courses in Ayurvedic massage and cooking.

Also on the river at Muni-ki-Reti, Omkarananda Ganga Sadan (☎ 2430763; www.iyengaryoga.in; Lakshman Jhula Rd; r Rs 200-400, minimum 3-day stay) has comfortable rooms and specialises in Iyengar

ASHRAM STAYS

While most travellers make a beeline for Rishikesh to partake in yoga, spirituality and stay in an ashram, Haridwar has several excellent ashrams where you'll be surrounded by serious ashramites and fewer foreigners. You can join in with ashram activities as long as you obey the strict rules. Everything – lodging, meals, religious practice – is usually free, but a donation is expected. Most ashrams try to be self-sufficient mini-utopias – some grow their own herbs that are made into Ayurvedic medicines, publish books and literature or run schools.

Shanti Kunj (☎ 260602; www.awgp.org; Rishikesh Rd) A large ashram set in beautiful gardens on the road to Rishikesh, this is an inspirational community, founded in 1971, that offers simple accommodation. It suits serious students of sadhana as meditation and mantras start at 5am followed by yagyar (fire ceremony) and meditation in a hall dominated by a model of the Himalaya. Contact the foreigners office (the 'Abroad Cell') for further information. The ashram has established its own university and runs 'spiritual camps' (in Hindi and English) running from nine days to one month.

Mohyal Ashram (☎ 261336; mohans_india@yahoo.com; Rishikesh Rd; ❄) This intimate ashram has peaceful lawns, marble floors and a meditation and yoga hall with wonderful acoustics. Spotless midrange accommodation, including meals and classes, is available at Rs 450 to 600 for a double (Rs 900 with AC) and Rs 1500 for a suite. Dorm beds cost Rs 100. The hatha yoga tuition costs Rs 150 per hour (minimum two people). Veg meals are available at Rs 30 (get a coupon from reception). This is not the usual strict ashram (although smoking, alcohol and meat are prohibited) and casual guests are welcome. Mr Dutta the helpful manager is used to dealing with foreign guests.

Shri Prem Nagar Ashram (☎ 226345; www.manavdharam.com; Jwalapur Rd) This large ashram was founded by Hansji Maharaj, who died in 1966. His extraordinary mausoleum features a pyramidical blue ceiling with eight steps representing the seven holy rivers and the sea. Meditation and singing take place daily at 5am and 7.30pm and the ashram has its own cows, Ayurvedic medicine factory and bookshop, as well as a huge, pillarless meeting hall and a ghat facing the Ganges. Plain accommodation has fans, private bathrooms and hot water.

yoga classes – there are daily classes (except Sunday; Rs 200) and intensive seven- to 10-day courses (Rs 750) on offer from October to May.

Founded by Swami Shivananda, the Shivananda Ashram (☎ 2430040; www.divinelifesociety.org; Lakshman Jhula Rd) is run by the Divine Life Society. Yoga and meditation classes are available, but two months' advance notice is required if you want to stay – email the ashram through its website.

Stays at the rather austere Yoga Niketan Ashram (☎ 2430227; www.yoganiketanashram.org; Lakshman Jhula Rd; r Rs 250, with AC Rs 450;) include comfortable rooms, all meals, hatha yoga classes, meditation sessions, lectures and the use of the library. But it is only for serious students – the minimum stay is 15 days and the day begins at 4.30am sharp.

According to locals, the Yoga Study Centre (☎ 2433837; off Haridwar Rd, Koyalgati) is one of Rishikesh's most highly regarded yoga schools and runs two- and three-week Iyengar yoga courses for all levels (payment by donation). A small ashram, it is on the river south of the town.

Dominating the centre of Swarg Ashram and drawing visitors to its evening aarti ceremony on the riverbank, the Parmarth Niketan Ashram (☎ 244008; www.parmarth.com; Swarg Ashram; r Rs 500) has a wonderfully ornate and serene garden courtyard. The price includes a room with a private bathroom, all meals and hatha yoga lessons.

The large Sri Ved Niketan Ashram (☎ 2430279; dm/s/d Rs 70/100/150) at the end of the Swarg Ashram road has a large inner courtyard, spacious meditation and yoga hall offering hatha, pranayama, meditation and philosophy classes, and spartan rooms with private bathrooms.

Behind Oasis Restaurant at High Bank, Guru Brahmashram (☎ 9219510654; www.mukthigaagi.com) is a branch of the Bangalore-based Mukthigaagi Foundation and specialises in meditation courses and a variety of holistic therapies.

MOTORCYCLING

Motorcycles and mopeds can be hired for Rs 200 to 250 a day around the Lakshman Jhula area. There are no specific shops – you just hire from private owners, so there's no insurance; ask around at guesthouses or look for rental signs.

MUSIC & DANCE CLASSES

Look out for flyers around Lakshman Jhula, Swarg Ashram and High Bank advertising music tuition and concerts.

Om Rudra Cultural Society (☎ 2434425; rudradance@rediffmail.com; Swarg Ashram; closed Jun-Aug) is run by an enterprising couple and offers Kathak dance, flute, tabla or Hindi lessons for Rs 900 per week.

In Lakshman Jhula, Vina Maharaj Music School (☎ 9412029817) offers sitar, tabla, harmonium and flute lessons at Rs 100 per hour and organises concerts.

RAFTING, KAYAKING & TREKKING

A number of companies offer half-day to multiday rafting trips, staying at rafting camps along the river bank. The official rafting season runs from 15 September to 30 June. A two- or three-hour trip starting 10km upstream and rafting back to Rishikesh starts at about Rs 400 per person, while a full day costs from Rs 1250. Most companies also offer all-inclusive Himalayan treks to places such as Kuari Pass, Har ki Dun and Gangotri from around Rs 2000 per day.

De-N-Ascent Expeditions (☎ 2442354; www.dna-expeditions.com; Lakshman Jhula) is currently the only place offering kayaking lessons and expeditions. Paddle and Eskimo roll with an experienced instructor for Rs 800 a day.

Recommended rafting and trekking companies include the following:

Adventure Journey (☎ 653791; www.theadventurejourney.com; Ram Jhula) Rafting trips and a private rafting camp.

Garhwal Himalayan Explorations (☎ 2433478; www.garhwalhimalayas.com; Lakshman Jhula Rd, Muni-ki-Reti; 8am-8pm) Himalayan trekking and rafting trips. The company runs three river camps – Ganga Nature Camp, the Himalayan Retreat and Himalayan Heights.

GMVN Trekking & Mountaineering Division (☎ 2430799; www.gmvnl.com; Lakshman Jhula Rd; 10am-5pm) Can arrange high-altitude treks in the Garhwal Himalaya and hires out trekking equipment, guides and porters. Ask about the Nanda Devi Sanctuary trek.

Red Chilli Adventure (☎ 2434021; www.redchilliadventure.com; Lakshman Jhula Rd; 8.30am-8.30pm;) Reliable outfit offering trekking and rafting trips.

Festivals & Events

In the first week of February, Rishikesh hosts the International Yoga Festival, attracting swamis and yoga masters from around the world for discourses and lectures. Most of the action is centred on the Parmarth Niketan Ashram in Swarg Ashram.

THE MAHARISHI & THE BEATLES

In February 1968 Rishikesh hit world headlines when the four Beatles and their partners stayed at Maharishi Mahesh Yogi's ashram in Swarg Ashram, following an interest and earlier visit by George Harrison. Ringo and his wife didn't like the vegetarian food, missed their children and left after a couple of weeks, but the others stayed for a month or two. They relaxed and wrote tons of songs, many of which ended up on their double album White Album. But rumours of the Maharishi's demands for money and his behaviour towards some female disciples eventually disillusioned all of them. 'You made a fool of everyone' John Lennon sang about the Maharishi. In later years, Harrison and McCartney went on record as saying the rumours were unfounded. The original ashram is now abandoned but nearly 40 years on, idealistic foreigners still swarm into Rishikesh seeking spiritual enlightenment from the teachers and healers in their tranquil ashrams scattered along the Ganges River.

Sleeping

Most of the accommodation is spread on both sides of the river around Lakshman Jhula; there are a handful of hotels at Swarg Ashram and directly across the river around Ram Jhula, and some good budget places at High Bank. For ashram stays see p462.

BUDGET

High Bank

This leafy travellers' enclave is a 20-minute walk up the hill from Lakshman Jhula and has some good accommodation where you might spot a langur monkey on your balcony. It gets pretty rowdy during peak season from November to March with backpackers staying up late and enjoying deep conversations.

Mount Valley Mama Cottage (☎ 2432817; d Rs 250, with shared bathroom Rs 120) The price is right at this small and simple guesthouse and it feels like someone's home – which is pretty much what it is. Mamma will look after you and cook up her famous thalis.

Bhandari Swiss Cottage (☎ 2432939; www.bhandariswisscottage.com; r Rs 150-600, d with AC Rs 800; 💻 ❄) A backpacker favourite with rooms in several budgets – the price goes up the higher up you stay, where the big balconies have expansive views of the river backed by green mountains.

New Bhandari Swiss Cottage (☎ 2431322; d Rs 300-800 ❄ 💻) Further up the hill, this is another large, popular place with a range of tidy accommodation, a massage centre and a good restaurant.

High Bank Peasants Cottage (☎ 2431167; d Rs 500-600, with AC Rs 1000-1200; ❄ 💻) Despite the name, this is High Bank's most upmarket accommodation with lovely gardens, wicker chairs on the balcony, spacious rooms and yoga sessions.

Lakshman Jhula

There are lots of good budget options on both sides of the river here and this is one of the liveliest parts of Rishikesh.

Ganga Guest House (☎ 2435955; d Rs 150) Not exactly spotless but you can't beat the price or riverside location of this basic guesthouse.

Aggarwal House (☎ 2433435; s Rs 100-150, d Rs 150-350) This small family-run guesthouse overlooks the river and a sandy beach. The terrace and some rooms have excellent sunset views.

Hotel Ishan (☎ 2431534; narendra_u@hotmail.com; r Rs 200-700; 💻) This long-running riverfront place near Lakshman Jhula looks a bit rough, but has a wide range of clean rooms, some with balconies overlooking the river. The top-floor room with TV and balcony (Rs 700) has a prime view.

Swarg Ashram

Green Hotel (☎ 2431242; www.hotelgreen.com; s Rs 100-250, d Rs 200-650, d with AC Rs 950; ❄) Wrapped around a courtyard, this three-storey hotel has a good-value but uninspiring range of rooms in several price brackets.

Hotel Rajpalace (☎ 2440079; rajholidays@hotmail.com; s Rs 250-550, d Rs 450-650, s/d with AC Rs 750/975; ❄) Small but well-run hotel with clean rooms. The rooftop terrace has views and facilities include a yoga hall and a travel agent offering tours and activities.

MIDRANGE & TOP END

Midrange and top-end hotels are in relatively short supply.

Lakshman Jhula

Jaipur Inn (☎ 2440221; www.jaipur-inn.com; s/d Rs 850/900;) In a good location close to the bridge, the clean and smart rooms with pastel décor, TVs and balcony views make this a good choice – go for the upper floor front rooms. The yoga hall can be used free of charge and the rooftop Ananda restaurant (meals Rs 40 to 95) serves just about any dish you want.

Tapovan Resort (☎ 2442091; www.tapovanresort.com; Lakshman Jhula; s/d from Rs 1000/1250, ste Rs 1850-2000;) This immaculate hotel on the western side of Lakshman Jhula lacks much in the way of character with its resort feel, but the rooms are plush and the more expensive ones have balconies with river views. There's a pleasant terrace, a garden, yoga classes, and the unusual circular restaurant is recommended.

Ram Jhula & Other Areas

Omkarananda Hotel (☎ 2430713; www.omkarananda-ashram.org; d Rs 750, with AC Rs 950;) Spotless new hotel on the river just south of Ram Jhula bridge. The bright, spacious rooms have TV and marble-lined bathrooms, and the upper-floor AC rooms have views across to Swarg Ashram.

Green View (☎ 2434948; d Rs 1000, with AC Rs 1500) Next door to Green Hotel in Swarg Ashram, this more upmarket annexe has bright rooms with hot showers and TVs. Ask about off-season discounts.

Hotel the Great Ganga (☎ 2442243; www.thegreatganga.com; Ram Jhula; s/d/ste Rs 1450/1650/4000;) Set in a complex of apartment blocks, this breezy hotel has great views from the balconies, despite being on the opposite side of the road from the river. Rooms have bathtub, minibar and marble floors. The multicuisine Great Ganga Restaurant is recommended.

Vasundhara Palace (☎ 2442345; www.vasundharapalace.com; Muni-ki-Reti; s/d Rs 1950/2450, ste Rs 4500;) Rishikesh's top hotel, this new place close to the river has luxurious, tastefully designed rooms, an elegant restaurant and a rooftop pool and health spa with river views – unfortunately views from the rooms are blocked by equally new apartments.

Eating

Virtually every restaurant in Rishikesh serves only vegetarian food, but there are lots of travellers' restaurants whipping up various interpretations of continental and Israeli food as well as Indian and Chinese.

LAKSHMAN JHULA

our pick Devraj Coffee Corner (meals Rs 20-80; 8am-9pm) With its prime position above the bridge and looking across the river to Shri Trayanbakshwar temple, this is a sublime spot for an early breakfast and is usually busy all day. Bakery items like brown bread with yak cheese, croissants and apple strudel sit comfortably alongside soups, pizzas and veg sizzlers. There's a good bookshop next door.

Ganga Beach Restaurant (Ganga Guest House; meals Rs 30-80) There's no real beach, but the riverside location, spacious terrace and cushioned chill-out area make this a relaxing spot. The big menu includes wood-fired pizzas and crepes.

Tulsi Restaurant (meals Rs 20-120) Up on the main road, this is a funky little bamboo-lined restaurant with soft lighting, good food and occasional live music.

On the east bank of the river is a string of restaurants with global menus catering to travellers. Recommendations include:

Lucky Restaurant (mains Rs 20-80) An awesome riverside garden shaded by a huge tree and a cushioned area.

Paradise Restaurant (mains Rs 20-75) Elevated open dining area with a view.

SWARG ASHRAM & RAM JHULA

Chotiwala (Swarg Ashram; meals Rs 20-60) There are two open-fronted Chotiwalas side-by-side – the original has been serving up thalis, South Indian food, ice creams and sweet lime sodas since 1958. They're easy to spot by the rotund mascots with the pointy hairdo (a choti) sitting out the front.

Madras Café (☎ 2433291; Ram Jhula; meals Rs 20-75) This local institution dishes up tasty South and North Indian food, thalis, mushroom curry, pancakes and the intriguing Himalayan health pilau, as well as offering super-thick lassis.

Flavors Restaurant (Ram Jhula; meals Rs 20-80) Near Madras, this new place also serves tasty Indian veg dishes, soups, and a few continental offerings.

Little Italy (Green Hotel; Swarg Ashram; meals Rs 25-85) Swarg's original Italian restaurant also works hard to produce authentic Mediterranean dishes along with espresso coffee and tiramisu.

Green Italian Restaurant (☎ 249304; mains Rs 35-85) Wood-fired pizzas and imported pastas including gnocchi and cannelloni make this small, glass-fronted restaurant in the heart of Swarg popular.

HIGH BANK
Backpackers gather at the popular restaurants on High Bank.

Oasis Restaurant (meals Rs 20-100) The loungiest restaurant in Rishikesh, with cushions, trance music and DVD movies showing in the evening. It's about 20m along a path northeast from Bhandari Swiss Cottage.

Bhandari Swiss Cottage Restaurant (meals Rs 40-100) All the favourites, including bakery items and some nonveg food, are available at this popular and informal indoor/outdoor restaurant. The set breakfasts, Ayurvedic tea, pizzas and sizzlers are hard to resist.

New Bhandari Swiss Cottage Restaurant (meals Rs 40-120) The restaurant here is more refined, with candlelit tables in the garden and hanging lanterns inside. The menu ransacks oodles of world cuisines from Mexican and Thai to Israeli and Tibetan. Great desserts include apple crumble.

AROUND RISHIKESH
Midway Restaurant & Bar (mains Rs 80-250; 11am-11pm) If you've been pining for meat and alcohol, grab a vikram or autorickshaw to this place 11km south of Rishikesh on the road to Haridwar. In a resort-style garden with artificial pond (paddleboats and all) it serves up tandoori chicken, rogan josh and other nonveg favourites, washed down with a cold beer.

Shopping
Swarg Ashram is the place to go for bookshops, Ayurvedic herbal medicines, clothing, handicrafts and tourist trinkets such as jewellery and Tibetan singing bowls, though there are also plenty of stalls around Lakshman Jhula. Many stalls sell strings of beads, rudraksh mala, made from the nuts of the rudraksh tree, which originally grew where Shiva's tears fell. Beads with different faces (mukhi) confer different blessings on the wearer.

Getting There & Away
BUS
There are regular buses to Haridwar and Dehra Dun; for Mussoorie change at Dehra Dun. During the yatra season (May to October), buses run north to pilgrimage centres, and to Joshimath and Uttarkashi year-round. See the table, opposite, for details of buses from Rishikesh.

Private deluxe and sleeper buses to Delhi (Rs 250), Jaipur (Rs 350) and Pushkar (Rs 450) can be booked at travel agents in Lakshman Jhula, Swarg Ashram and High Bank. They pick up in Lakshman Jhula and at the main bus stand.

SHARE JEEP & TAXI
Share jeeps leave when overfull from the corner of Dehra Dun Rd and Dhalwala Bypass Rd to Uttarkashi (Rs 170, five hours) and Joshimath (Rs 250, eight hours), mostly early in the morning. Share jeeps to Dehra Dun (Rs 40, one hour) can be picked up along Dehra Dun Rd, and share jeeps to Haridwar (Rs 25, one hour) leave from near the main bus stand.

Official taxi rates include Haridwar (Rs 460), Dehra Dun (Rs 650) and Uttarkashi (for Gangotri; Rs 2000).

The taxi stand in Swarg Ashram provides a local service on the eastern bank, mainly to waterfalls and temples. By road it's 16km back around to Rishikesh.

TRAIN
Bookings can be made at the reservation office (8am-6pm Mon-Sat, 8am-2pm Sun) at the train station, or at travel agents around Lakshman Jhula and Swarg Ashram for a fee. Only a handful of trains runs from Rishikesh to Haridwar, so it's usually better to reserve a seat or sleeper on a train from Haridwar and go to Haridwar by bus.

Getting Around
Shared vikrams run from the downtown Ghat Rd junction up past Ram Jhula (Rs 8 per person) and the High Bank turn-off (Rs 7) to Lakshman Jhula (Rs 8). To hire the entire vikram from downtown to Lakshman Jhula should cost Rs 30. To get to the eastern bank of the Ganges you either need to walk across one of the suspension bridges or take the ferry (Rs 5; 7.30am-6.30pm) from Ram Jhula. On the eastern bank of the Ganges, taxis and share jeeps hang around to take passengers to waterfalls and Neelkantha temple, but it's a 16km trip by road to get from one side of the river to the other.

AROUND RISHIKESH

☎ 01374 / pop 16,220 / elev 1158m

Uttarkashi, 155km from Rishikesh and the largest town in northern Garwhal, is a major stop on the road to Gangotri Temple and the Gaumukh Glacier trek, so it's an obvious place to break your journey and stock up on supplies at the local market. Guides and porters can also be arranged here.

The town is probably best known for the Nehru Institute of Mountaineering (☎ 222124; www.nimindia.org), which trains many of the guides running trekking and mountaineering outfits in India. The centre has a museum and outdoor climbing wall. Basic and advanced mountaineering and adventure courses are open to all – check the website for details and admission information.

Uttarkashi has plenty of budget hotels, the best being Hotel Monal (☎ 222270; d from Rs 600), on the Gangotri road 3km north of town. The GMVN Tourist Rest House (☎ 222271; dm/d Rs 150/700-990) is in a garden setting down by the river.

Buses depart in the morning for Gangotri (Rs 95, six hours) and Rishikesh (Rs 130, seven hours).

GARWHAL TEMPLE TREKS

Gangotri Temple & Gaumukh Glacier Trek

☎ 01377 / elev 3042m

In a grand, remote setting at an altitude of 3042m, Gangotri temple was originally constructed by Gorkha commander Amar Singh Thapa in the 18th century. The brave and devout take a dip in the freezing flow of an embryonic Ganges River. Nearby is the rock on which Shiva is said to have received the Ganga (Ganges) in his matted locks. Gangotri village has guesthouses, ashrams, dharamsalas and a GMVN Tourist Bungalow (☎ 222221; dm Rs 150, d Rs 400-900).

As the source of the Ganges (known as the Bhagirathi until it reaches Deoprayag), Gangotri is one of the holiest places in India. The trek (38km return) from Gangotri to the source of the river at Gaumukh (the Cow's Mouth) and back can be done in three days with a two-night stop at Bhojbasa (3790m), which has basic accommodation including a GMVN Tourist Bungalow (dm 240). Bhojbasa is 14km (six hours) from Gangotri temple, but only 5km (three hours) from the dramatic Gaumukh Glacier.

THE CHAR DHAM

The Char Dham of Garwhal refers to the four ancient temples that mark the spiritual sources of four sacred rivers, the Yamuna (Yamunotri), the Ganges (Gangotri), the Mandakini (Kedarnath) and the Alaknanda (Badrinath). Every year during the yatra (pilgrimage) season from April to November hundreds of thousands of dedicated Hindu pilgrims make these important treks – the exact dates that the temples are open are announced each year by local priests. Religious tourism is big business and numerous buses, share jeeps, porters, ponies and palanquins are on hand for transport, along with a well-established network of budget guesthouses, ashrams and government rest houses. As a result, getting to these temples is easy enough without the need for a guide or carrying supplies. For more information see Yamunotri Temple Trek (below), Gangotri Temple & Gaumukh Glacier Trek (p467), Kedarnath Temple Trek (below) and Badrinath Temple & Mana Village (p471).

The GMVN (www.gmvnl.com) runs a range of Char Dham packages from Delhi, Haridwar and Rishikesh. From Rishikesh a 10-day bus/taxi tour is Rs 7630/9850. Private tours are also available (see www.chardham.com). But all the temples are deep in the Himalaya at the end of long valleys, which makes visiting each one in turn very time-consuming and not a good idea for tourists. Only Gangotri and Badrinath temples can be visited without having to undertake a trek.

Buses run from Gangotri to Uttarkashi (Rs 90, six hours) and Rishikesh (Rs 215, 12 hours). The last bus leaves Gangotri at around 2pm. Share jeeps (Rs 150) also run between Gangotri and Uttarkashi.

Yamunotri Temple Trek

elev 3185m

Yamunotri Temple nestles in a valley close to the source of the Yamuna, Hinduism's second-most sacred river after the Ganges. For pilgrims Yamunotri is the least visited and so least developed of the Char Dham temples, but once you get to the trailhead it's an easy trek in.

The trek begins where the road ends at Janki Chatti, 7km beyond the village of Hanuman Chatti (2400m). There are hot springs and 1km away is a pretty village, Kharsali. From here it's a 5km, two-hour trek to Yamunotri Temple (3185m). High mountains close in around the temple and there are several hot springs where you can take a dip and others where pilgrims cook potatoes and rice to offer as prasad. The Yamuna River emerges from a frozen lake of ice and glaciers on the Kalinda Parvat mountain at an altitude of 4421m, 1km beyond the temple, but this is a very tough climb that requires mountaineering skills.

Accommodation is available in basic pilgrim's guesthouses or at the GMVN tourist lodges (www.gmvnl.com) at Yamunotri, Janki Chatti and Hanuman Chatti.

Buses run from Dehra Dun (Rs 120, eight hours), Mussoorie (Rs 100, six hours) and Rishikesh (Rs 180, eight hours) to Hanuman Chatti during the yatra season. Buses also run to Uttarkashi (Rs 60, six hours) for those heading to the next Char Dham stop, Gangotri.

Har ki Dun Valley Trek

The wonderfully remote Har ki Dun (3510m) is a botanical paradise crisscrossed by glacial streams and surrounded by pristine forests and snowy peaks. The area is preserved as Govind Wildlife Sanctuary & National Park (Indian/foreigner up to 3 days Rs 30/350, subsequent days Rs 20/175). You might be lucky enough to glimpse the elusive snow leopard above 3500m.

The trail begins at Sankri (also called Saur), and there are GMVN Tourist Bungalows (dm/d Rs 150/450) at Sankri, Taluka and Osla, but you have to stay in a Forest Department rest house or else camp in the valley itself. It's a 38km hike to Har ki Dun which takes three days – or two days if you take a share jeep (vehicle/seat Rs 500/50) to Taluka. A side-trip to Jamdar Glacier takes another day. The trek can be busy during June and October.

To get to Sankri, take a bus (Rs 120, nine hours) or a share jeep (vehicle/seat Rs 2500/250) from Gandhi Chowk in Mussoorie. If you cannot find a bus or share jeep going all the way, go as far as you can and then catch other buses or share jeeps.

Kedarnath Temple Trek

☎ 01364 / elev 3584m

Kedarnath is revered as the source of the Mandakini River, but this magnificent temple is primarily dedicated to the hump that Shiva (who had taken the form of a bull) left behind when he dove into the ground to escape the Pandavas. Other portions of Shiva's body are worshipped at the other four Panch Kedar shrines, which are hard to reach but can be visited: the arms at Tungnath; the face at Rudranath; the navel at Madmaheshwar; and the hair at Kalpeshwar. The actual source of the Mandakini River is 12km past Kedarnath.

The temple was originally built in the 8th century by Guru Shankara, who is buried behind the shrine. The surrounding scenery is superb, but Kedarnath attracts 100,000 pilgrims every year which means plenty of people, noise and litter. The site is so auspicious that pilgrims used to throw themselves from one of the cliffs behind the temple in the hope of instantly attaining moksha (liberation).

The tough 14km uphill trek to the temple (3584m) takes six hours on foot (five hours on a pony) and begins at Gaurikund, which has basic accommodation and a GMVN Tourist Bungalow (☎ 269202; dm/d Rs 150/600). Stalls store luggage, and porters and ponies can be hired. The wide, paved trail to the temple is lined with dhabas and chai stalls.

The whole area is a wildlife sanctuary and a musk deer breeding farm has been established at Khanchula Kharak, 32km from Gopeshwar on the road to Ukhimath. These tiny deer with big ears have been hunted to the brink of extinction.

There is more pilgrims' accommodation available near the temple, including the GMVN Tourist Bungalow (☎ 01364-263228; dm Rs 150, d Rs 400-950).

Buses run from Gaurikund to Rishikesh (Rs 165, 12 hours), or you can use share jeeps to make the same journey. Get off at Rudraprayag for connections to Joshimath, Badrinath and the eastern Kumaon district.

JOSHIMATH

Reached by a hair-raising mountain road from Rishikesh that hugs steep-sided valleys for the final few hours, Joshimath is a ramshackle two-street town that serves as the gateway to Auli ski resort, Badrinath Temple, and treks to the Valley of Flowers, Hem Kund and Kuari Pass. As such it's a major destination for Hindu and Sikh pilgrims as well as trekkers.

The town itself is a rather ugly administrative centre full of rusting rooftops, erratic power supply and limited places to eat, but it's a good base to organise some of Uttarakhand's best treks. Auli – with spectacular views of Nanda Devi – stands directly above Joshimath and can be reached by a 4km cable car (p470).

Information

There's a GMVN Tourist Office (☎ 222181; 🕑 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) located just above the town (follow the road past the cable-car station) and there's a State Bank of India ATM that accepts foreign cards.

Treks of anything from two to 10 days can be arranged. Ask at the tourist office about hiring guides and porters or try Eskimo Adventures (☎ 222630; eskimoadventures@rediffmail.com) near the GMVN Hotel, which can organise treks and rock-climbing expeditions from Rs 1000 per day, and rent equipment (for trekking and skiing), as well as offer whitewater rafting trips on the Ganges. Himalayan Snow Runner (☎ 222252; www.himalayansnowrunner.com), in the main market, offers similar service at higher prices. The owner, Ajay, also takes cultural tours to Bhotia and Garhwali villages in the region.

Sleeping & Eating

There are lots of cheap lodgings and a few hotels scattered around Joshimath.

Hotel Kamet (☎ 222155; Main Bazaar; d Rs 250-500) Good central budget option. Slightly worn rooms have TV and bucket hot water.

Hotel Snow Crest (☎ 222344; fax 222575; dm Rs 180, d Rs 700-1450) Right behind Kamet but more upmarket, the rooms here are clean and cosy, if a little small. The front rooms are brightest. There's a good restaurant serving a vegetarian menu of North and South Indian and Chinese. The rates are usually reduced by 40% except in May and June, and there's a 10-bed dorm.

Mawari Hotel (snacks Rs 35-80) Below Kamet, this is a busy dhaba churning out tasty thalis and dosas.

Getting There & Away

Although the main road up to Joshimath is maintained by the Indian Army, and a hydroelectric plant on the way to Badrinath has improved that road, the area around Joshimath is inevitably prone to landslides, particularly in the rainy season from mid-June to the end of August.

Buses (Rs 35, two hours) and share jeeps (Rs 50 per person, Rs 500 per jeep) run in convoy (due to a one-way traffic system) to Badrinath temple departing from Joshimath at 6.30am, 9am, 11.30am, 2pm and 4.30pm – check times the day before. Take the same buses to Govindghat, the start of the treks to the wonderful Valley of Flowers and dramatic Hem Kund.

Buses run from Joshimath to Rishikesh (Rs 200, 10 hours) and Haridwar (Rs 230, 11½ hours) roughly every half hour between 4am and 7am. They leave from outside the tiny GMOU booth (Upper Bazar Rd, ⌚ 4am-8pm), where you can also book tickets. To get to the eastern Kumaon region take any Rishikesh bus to Karnaprayag (Rs 65, 3½ hours), from where local buses and share jeeps can take you along the slow-going route to Kausani (Rs 65, five hours) or Almora (Rs 130, eight hours). Direct buses are few, however, so expect to make several changes en route.

AROUND JOSHIMATH

Auli

☎ 01389 / elev 3019m

Rising above Joshimath, 14km by road – and only 4km by the gondola-style cable car – Auli is India's premier ski resort. But you don't have to visit in winter to enjoy the awesome views of Nanda Devi from the top of the cable car station.

As a ski resort, Auli is hardly spectacular, with gentle 5km-long slopes, one 500m rope tow (Rs 100 per trip) which runs beside the main slope, and an 800m chairlift (Rs 200) which connects the upper and lower slopes. The snow is consistently good, though, and the setting is superb. The season runs from January to March and equipment hire and instruction can be arranged here or in Joshimath.

The state-of-the-art cable car (return Rs 400; ⌚ every 20 min 8am-6.50pm), India's longest, links Joshimath to the upper slopes above Auli. There's a café of sorts at the top.

There are two places to stay at Auli and both hire out ski equipment and provide ski lessons.

GMVN Tourist Rest House (☎ 223208; www.gmvnl.com; dm Rs 150-200, huts Rs 900, d Rs 1400) At the start of the chairlift, there are no views from the rooms here but the four-person dorms are certainly cheap and the flimsy huts are quite cosy inside (read: tiny). There's a restaurant and bar.

Cliff Top Club Resort (☎ 01389-223217; in Delhi 011-25616679; www.nivalink.com/clifftop; studio Rs 2600-4500, ste Rs 6000-8000) This hotel wouldn't look out of place in the Swiss Alps with its solid timber interior finish, cosy atmosphere and spacious rooms, some with views of Nanda Devi. Meals and all-inclusive ski packages are available.

VALLEY OF FLOWERS & HEM KUND TREK

British mountaineer Frank Smythe stumbled upon the Valley of Flowers in 1931. 'In all my mountain wandering,' he wrote, 'I have not seen a more beautiful valley where the human spirit may find repose.' The meadows (bugyal) of tall wild flowers are a glorious sight on a sunny day, rippling in the breeze, and framed by mighty 6000m mountains which have glaciers and snow decorating their peaks all year.

The 300 species of flowers make the valley a unique and valuable pharmaceutical resource that may soon be a World Heritage site. Unfortunately most flowers bloom during the monsoon season in July and August when the rains make access difficult and hazardous. But the peace and beauty that Smythe found here can be experienced at any season, and there's still a good chance of seeing a carpet of flowers in September.

The 87-sq-km Valley of Flowers National Park (Indian/foreigner for 3 days Rs 40/350, for subsequent days Rs 20/175; ⌚ 6am-6pm, last entry 3pm) starts less than 1km from Ghangaria village. Just 2km from the ticket office, the fabled valley begins and continues for another 5km. Tracks are easy to follow. No overnight stay is permitted here (or at Hem Kund) so all visitors must stay in Ghangaria.

A tougher trek from Ghangaria is to join the hundreds of Sikh pilgrims toiling up to the 4300m Hem Kund, the sacred lake where the Sikh guru, Gobind Singh, is believed to have meditated in a previous life. The pilgrim season runs from around 1 June to 1 October. Ponies (Rs 350) are available if you prefer to ride up the 6km zigzag track.

Also called Govinddham, Ghangaria is a one-street village in a wonderful deodar forest with a busy market, a handful of budget hotels and restaurants, hundreds of ponies, a pharmacy and a doctor. Water and electricity supplies are erratic. The Nature Interpretation Centre (3-8pm, 1 Jun-5 Oct) shows a film nightly at 7pm on the Valley of Flowers.

Hotel Priya (d with private bathrooms Rs 250) is one of the better places to stay, though it's not very good. Make sure you have plenty of bedding as nights can be freezing.

Ghangaria is a scenic but strenuous 14km, seven-hour uphill trek from Govindghat, but you can help the local economy by hiring a porter (Rs 350) or a pony (Rs 400). The return trip takes four to five hours.

At Govindghat you can stay at the huge gurdwara (payment by donation) where VIP rooms are basic but have private bathrooms, or the new Hotel Bhagat (01381-225226; d Rs 500-600) with very clean rooms and meals available.

All buses and share jeeps between Joshimath and Badrinath stop in Govindghat (check times locally), so you can easily get transport in either direction.

BADRINATH & MANA VILLAGE

01381 / elev 3133m

Basking in a superb setting in the shadow of snow-topped Nilkantha, Badrinath Temple appears almost lost in the tatty village that surrounds it. Sacred to Lord Vishnu, this vividly painted temple is the most easily accessible and most popular of the Char Dham temples. It was founded by Guru Shankara in the 8th century, but the current structure is much more recent. Below the temple are hot springs that reach a scalding 40°C.

A very scenic 3km walk beyond Badrinath along the Alaknanda River and past fields divided by dry-stone walls leads to tiny but charismatic Mana village, which is crammed with narrow stone laneways and traditional houses of varying designs – some have slate walls and roofs while others are wooden with cute balconies. You can wander around and watch the village ladies knitting colourful jerseys or weaving blankets or carpets while the men tend the sheep or play cards or carom. Carpets (Rs 150 for a small square, Rs 2000 for bigger ones), blankets and jerseys are all on sale.

Just outside the village in a small cave is the tiny, 5000-year-old Vyas Temple, and nearby is Bhima's Rock, a natural rock arch over a river that is said to have been made by Bhima, strongest of the Pandava brothers, whose tale is told in the Mahabharata. The 145m Vasudhara Waterfall can be seen from the village and is a 4km hike along the river. The villagers migrate to somewhere warmer and less remote – usually Joshimath – between November and April.

From the large bus station at the entrance to Badrinath buses run to Govindghat and Joshimath but check scheduled departure times or you may end up stranded.

Sleeping & Eating

Badrinath can be visited in a day from Joshimath, but it's a serene place to spend the night and there are plenty of places to stay and eat here during the pilgrimage season. Budget guesthouses are generally discounted to Rs 100 a room outside the short peak season of May and June.

Jagirdar Guest House (9412935549; r Rs 400) In a stone building across the river about 100m from the temple, this is a good budget place accustomed to travellers. You can camp here.

Sarovar Portico (222267; www.sarovarhotels.com; s/d Rs 3500/4000) A sign of the times and the deepening of pilgrims' pockets, this flashy new hotel seems a little out of place high in the Himalaya. Rooms are comfortable, though not luxurious, centrally heated and there's a good restaurant.

KUARI PASS TREK

Also known as the Curzon Trail (though Lord Curzon's party abandoned its attempt on the pass following an attack of wild bees), the trek over the Kuari Pass (3640m) was popular in the Raj era and is still one of Uttarakhand's finest and most accessible treks, affording magnificent views of the snow-clad peaks around Nanda Devi. The trailhead is at Auli and the 75km trek to Ghat past lakes, waterfalls, forests, meadows and small villages takes five days, though it's possible to do a shorter version finishing in Tapovan in three days. A tent, guide and your own food supplies are necessary, all of which can easily be organised in Joshimath.

Auli can be reached by bus or cable car from Joshimath. From Ghat share jeeps (Rs 35, 1½ hours) go to Nandaprayag, from where buses run to Joshimath or southwest to Rishikesh and Haridwar.

NANDA DEVI SANCTUARY TREK

The 630 sq km of breathtaking World Heritage scenery that makes up this sanctuary was closed to all visitors in 1983, but recently small-group treks have been permitted. Only 20 visitors a week are allowed inside this fabled Himalayan wonder between 1 May and 31 October. GMVN has an all-inclusive nine-day trek (Rs 2583 per person per day) for groups of three to five, which involves a 54km trek and start at Rishikesh. Approved private trekking companies are also permitted to do the trek but check carefully as some 'Nanda Devi' treks might not actually visit the sanctuary. Access is via Lata Village, near Joshimath, but don't try it on your own unless you want to experience living conditions in an Indian prison.

CORBETT TIGER RESERVE

☎ 05947 / elev 400-1210m

This famous reserve (⌚ 15 Nov-15 Jun) was established in 1936 as India's first national park. Originally called Hailey National Park, then Ramganga National Park, it was renamed in 1957 after the legendary tiger hunter, Jim Corbett (1875–1955), who put Kumaon on the map with his book The Man-Eaters of Kumaon. The British hunter was greatly revered by local people for shooting tigers that had developed a taste for human flesh, but he eventually shot more wildlife with his camera than with his gun.

The reserve Jim Corbett established inspired the India-wide Project Tiger programme which started in 1973 and saw the creation of 22 other reserves. However, sightings are down to chance as the 130 or so tigers in the reserve are neither baited nor tracked. Your best chance of spotting a tiger is late in the season (April to mid-June) when the forest cover is low and animals come out in search of water.

Notwithstanding tiger sightings, few serious wildlife enthusiasts will leave disappointed, as the 1318-sq-km park has a variety of wildlife and birdlife in grassland, sal forest and river habitats, and a beautiful location in the foothills of the Himalaya on the Ramganga River. Commonly seen wildlife include wild elephants (200 to 300 live in the reserve), sloth bears, langur monkeys (black face, long tail), rhesus macaques (red face and backside), peacocks, schools of otters and several types of deer including chital (spotted deer), sambars, hog deer and barking deer. You might also see leopards, mugger crocodiles, gharials, monitor lizards, wild boars and jackals. The Ramganga Reservoir attracts large numbers of migrating birds, especially from mid-December to the end of March and over 600 species have been spotted here.

Dotted around the park are machaans (observation towers) overlooking water holes which you can climb to unobtrusively watch for wildlife.

Be sure to bring binoculars (although you can hire them at park gates) and plenty of mosquito repellent and mineral water. If you're interested in the life of Jim Corbett, his former house at Kaladhungi, 26km east of Ramnagar, is now a museum (admission Rs 10; ⌚ 8am-5pm).

While the majority of the park is closed between 15 June and 15 November, the jungle around Jhirna Gate, 25km from Ramnagar in the southern part of the reserve, remains open all year, and short jeep safaris and elephant rides can be organised in Ramnagar. In 2004, the park started opening for day safaris (a maximum of 60 vehicles per day) a month early on 15 October from Amdanda Gate.

Orientation & Information

The main reception centre (☎ 251489; Ranikhet Rd; ⌚ 8.30am-noon & 1-5pm) is located on the main road in Ramnagar, almost opposite the bus stand. There is another centre (☎ 01382-224823; ⌚ 8.30am-1pm & 2-5pm) at Kotdwar, on the western edge of the reserve. Ramnagar is the nearest railhead and has plenty of jeeps for hire.

The main entry points for the park are Amdanda Gate (for Bijrani visitor centre), 1.5km north of Ramnagar and Dhangarhi Gate (for Dhikala), 18km north of Ramnagar.

Dhikala, 51km northwest of Ramnagar and deep inside the reserve, is the main accommodation centre within the park's core area, but it is only open to overnight guests, or as part of a tour booked through the reception centre at Ramnagar. Dhikala has a library and wildlife films are shown here for free at 7pm. Day-trippers are restricted to the Bijrani visitor centre (11km from Ramnagar), which has an interpretative centre and a restaurant and is close to the reserve entrance.

Two-hour elephant safaris (Indian/foreigner 4 passengers per elephant Rs 150/250) are available at Dhikala, Khinnanauli, Gairal and Jhirna Gate at 6am and 4pm on a first-come first-served basis.

Ramnagar has a couple of internet cafés (per hr Rs 30), and a State Bank of India ATM.

PERMITS & COSTS

Entry permits are bought at Dhangari Gate for Dhikala and at Amdanda Gate for day trips to Bijrani. In the off-season (15 June to 15 November) you can only enter through Jhirna Gate. However, from 15 October to 15 November, day visits are permitted through Amdanda Gate (Rs 200 plus jeep and guide fees; open 6.30am to 11am and 3pm to 5.30pm).

During the season the entry fee (Indian/foreigner Rs 50/450) covers three days. The jeep fee is Rs 100 at Bijrani and Rs 150 at Dhikala, and a compulsory guide fee (Rs 150) must also be paid.

Jeeps or the smaller Maruti Gypsies can be hired in Ramnagar. Half-day safaris should cost around Rs 600 per jeep or Rs 1200 for a full day, excluding the entry fees. Check prices at the reception centre and your hotel before hiring a jeep. This means a full-day safari for two people including an elephant ride costs Rs 3000.

Fishing permits (along the Ramnagar River outside the park) can be obtained at the reception centre.

Tours

The reception centre in Ramnagar runs a daily bus tour to Dhikala (Indian/foreigner Rs 600/1200) at 8.30am.

Sleeping & Eating

For serious wildlife viewing, Dhikala, deep inside the reserve, is the best place to stay, despite the high prices. Rates given for accommodation inside the reserve are for foreigners – Indians pay less than half. Book through the reception centre in Ramnagar except where indicated. Book ahead as space is limited and you must have accommodation arranged to stay within the park. The town of Ramnagar has budget accommodation, while upmarket resorts are strung out along the road skirting the eastern side of the park between Dhikuli and Dhangari Gate.

DHIKALA

Resembling 3AC train sleepers, Log Huts (dm Indian/foreigner Rs 100/200) offer 24 basic beds (no bedding supplied). Tourist Hutments (Rs 2400) offer the best accommodation in Dhikala and sleep up to six people. Dhikala has a couple of restaurants.

If you're after VIP accommodation, the Old Forest Rest House (r Rs 3000), the New Forest Rest House (r Rs 2600) and two cabins (Rs 2600) can be booked through the Chief Wildlife Warden (☎ 0135-2644691) in Dehra Dun. The Annexe (r Rs 1200) can be booked through KMVN (☎ 011-23350481) in Delhi.

ELSEWHERE IN THE RESERVE

Small rest houses (all Rs 600) in the park are at Kanda, Sultan Mailini, Lohachaur, Halduparao, Morghatti, Sendhikal, Mudiapani, Rathuadhab, Dhela, near Jhirna Gate and Kalagarh. Other places:

Bijrani Rest House (s/d Rs 600/1200) The first place in from Amdanda Gate; meals and elephant rides available.

Gairal Rest House (r Rs 1200) On the Ramnagar River accessed from Dhangari Gate; meals available.

Sarapduli Rest House (r Rs 1200) Also has a good location in the reserve's core area.

Khinnanauli Rest House (☎ 0135-2744225; r Rs 2000) Near Dhikala, deep in the reserve.

RAMNAGAR

At the southeast corner of the park, Ramnagar is the main service town and while it has a few facilities, hotels, restaurants and transport connections – mostly along Ranikhet Rd – it's a dusty, unappealing place.

Hotel Anand (☎ 254385; Ranikhet Rd; s/d Rs 200/350) This is the best of the budget places with clean rooms with bucket hot water and TV, although some rooms only have windows onto a corridor. The restaurant is worth trying (meals Rs 30 to 60). It's about 100m from the bus stand.

Corbett Inn (☎ 251755; kmv@kumaonindia.com; Ranikhet Rd; d Rs 590, with AC RS 990; ❄) Ramnagar's top hotel has clean, spacious rooms with balconies or verandas, and a helpful manager who can help organise safaris. The restaurant is open when the reserve is.

Govind Restaurant (Ranikhet Rd; meals Rs 20-130) Although a bit gloomy inside, the food is good and the menu huge with monster thalis (Rs 60 to 90), biryani, butter chicken and tasty stuffed tomatoes.

NORTH OF RAMNAGAR

Half a dozen upmarket resorts are strung along the Ramnagar–Ranikhet road that runs along the reserve's eastern boundary, and given the cost of accommodation at Dhikala, these are well worth considering. When most of the reserve is closed (15 June to 15 November) discounts of up to 50% are offered. Rates given here are for room only, but most have packages which include meals and safaris. All places have resident naturalists, recreational facilities, restaurants and bars.

Tiger Camp (☎ 2551963; www.tiger-camp.com; s Rs 1400-1900, d Rs 1850-2350, s/d cottages Rs 2400-2850;) This intimate, excellent-value resort is nestled in shady jungle-style garden by the Kosi River 8km from Ramnagar. Modern, cosy cottages and bungalows have all the facilities, and nature walks and village tours are offered.

Infinity Resorts (☎ 251279; s/d from Rs 4500/6000;) This impressive resort has luxurious rooms, a roundhouse with restaurant and bar, and a swimming pool in a lovely garden backing onto the Kosi River, where you can see hordes of golden mahseer fish. The resort owner founded the Corbett Foundation (www.corbettfoundation.org), a nonprofit eco-organisation that raises wildlife awareness and provides medical care and water to regional villagers.

Corbett Hideaway (☎ 284132; www.corbetthideaway.com; Dhikuli; cottages Rs 5750-6750;) The luxurious ochre cottages offer privacy, the riverside garden is relaxing and there's a poolside bar and thatched restaurant at this quality resort, 12km north of Ramnagar. Plenty of recreation and ecotourism activities.

NAINITAL

Kumaon's largest town and favourite hill resort, Nainital gets crowded with holidaying families and honeymooners during peak seasons. Occupying a steep forested valley around the deep, green volcanic lake Naini, it's an attractive, upbeat place founded by homesick Brits reminded of the Cumbrian Lake District. Disaster struck here in December 1880 when a major landslide buried a hotel and 150 people, creating the memorial recreation ground now known as the Flats.

Plenty of hotels are set in the forested hills around the lake, there's a busy bazaar and a spider web of walking tracks covers the forested hillsides to viewpoints overlooking the distant Himalayan peaks. For travellers it's a good place to kick back and relax, eat well, go horse riding or paddling on the lake, but avoid peak seasons – roughly May to mid-July and October – when Nainital is packed and hotel prices double.

Orientation

Tallital (Lake's Foot) is at the southeastern end of the lake where you'll find the bus stand and the main road heading west. The 1.5km promenade known as the Mall leads to Mallital (Lake's Head) at the northwestern end of the lake. Most hotels, guesthouses and restaurants are strung out along the Mall between Mallital and Tallital.

Sights & Activities

NAINI LAKE

This pretty lake is Nainital's centrepiece and is said to be one of the emerald green eyes of Shiva's wife, Sati (naina is Sanskrit for eye). Naina Devi Temple, rebuilt after the 1880 landslide, is on the precise spot where the eye is believed to have fallen. Nearby is the Jama Masjid and a gurdwara.

For holidaying families, a boat ride around the lake is de rigeur. Boatmen will row you for Rs 120 (Rs 50 one way) in the brightly painted gondola-like boats, or the Nainital Boat Club (Mallital) will sail you round for Rs 120 between 10am and 4pm. Pedal and rowing boats can also be hired for Rs 50 to 80 per hour.

SNOW VIEW & CABLE CAR

A cable car (adult/child return Rs 70/45; ⏰ 10.30am-5pm) runs up to the popular Snow View at 2270m, which on clear days has panoramic Himalayan views, including Nanda Devi. At the top you'll find the usual food, souvenir and carnival stalls, as well as Mountain Magic, an amusement park with rides that kids will love.

There's also a hotel (p477) with restaurant and bar. You can hike to Cheena/Naina Peak, 4km away.

A walk up to or back from Snow View can take in the tiny Gadhan Kunkyop Ling Gompa (monastery) of the Gelukpa order (of which the Dalai Lama is the spiritual leader). Take the road uphill from the Hotel City Heart and a path branches off to the gompa (the colourful prayer flags should be visible).

TIFFIN TOP & LAND'S END

A 4km walk west of the lake brings you to Tiffin Top (2292m), also called Dorothy's Seat, from where it's a lovely 30-minute walk to Land's End (2118m) through a forest of oak, deodar and pine.

NAINITAL ZOO

This small hillside zoo (admission Rs 20; camera Rs 20; ⏰ 10am-5pm Tue-Sun), a 15-minute walk from Tallital, has some large enclosures containing Himalayan animals, Siberian tigers and lots of pheasant species.

HORSE RIDING

Mangy horses gather west of town on the road to Ramnagar to take you on rides to beauty spots such as Dorothy Seat, Land's End and Tiffin Top. A three-hour ride costs Rs 175, or Rs 250 if you go with one of the touts down at Tallital (transport to the horses included).

ROCK CLIMBING & TREKKING

The enthusiasts at Nainital Mountaineering Club (☎ 235051; Mallital; 3hr course Indian/foreigner Rs 100/200) offer rock-climbing courses at the rock-climbing area, a 15m-high rock outcrop to the west of the town.

Mountain Rovers (☎ 231480; mountain_rovers@rediffmail.com; Bada Bazaar, Mallital) offers one- or three-day rock-climbing and abseiling courses from beginner to advanced levels for Rs 750/2000. They can also organise treks in the Kumaon region and to Pindari glacier.

For information on KMVN's remote rest houses, KMVN Parvat Tours (☎ 235656; www.kmvn.org; Tallital) can organise treks that last six to nine days.

Tours

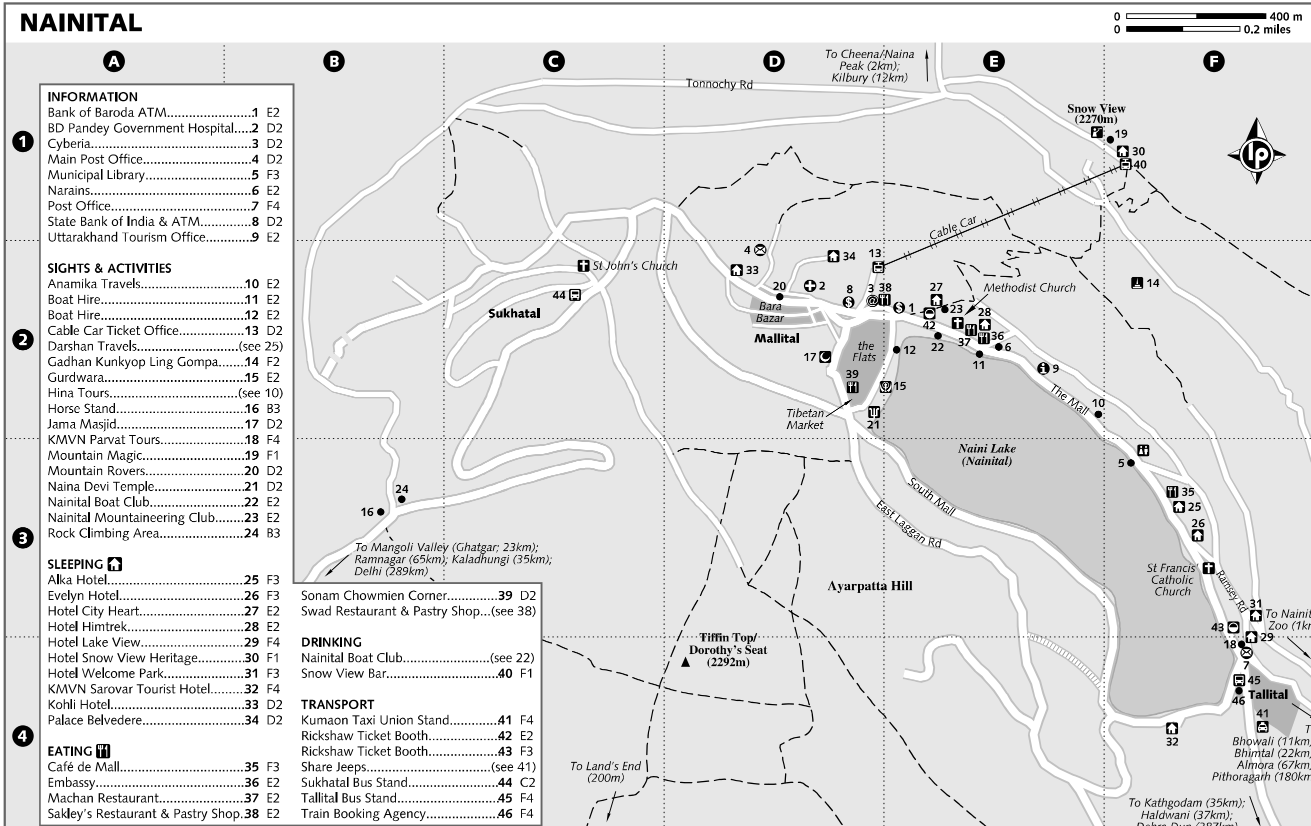
Travel agencies along the Mall such as Hina Tours (☎ 235860), Anamika Travels (☎ 235186) and Darshan Travels (☎ 235035) offer bus tours of the local lakes and tours to Corbett National Park from Rs 75 to 200.

Sleeping

Nainital is packed with hotels but they fill up fast in peak seasons when it's hard to find a bargain. The prices given below are for the peak season and virtually all hotels offer around 50% discounts in the off-season. The peak is generally 1 May to 30 June and some have a semipeak in October, at Diwali (October/November) and at Christmas. All hotels have a 10am check out.

Hotels set higher up the hillside have great views but require some strenuous walking to reach!

BUDGET



Kohli Hotel (☎ 236368; the Mall, Mallital; d Rs 300-600) Lovely lake views from the top rooms and terrace, and reasonable rates, make this a backpacker favourite. Light and clean rooms have TV and the private bathrooms have hot water.

KMVN Sarovar Tourist Hotel (☎ 235570; off the Mall, Tallital; dm/d year-round Rs 100/800) This uninspiring KMVN hotel rates a mention in the budget category because of its dorm rooms, which are a bargain in peak season.

Hotel Himtrek (☎ 235578; himtrekhotel@india4tourist.co.in; the Mall, Mallital; d Rs 400-700) A short hop off the Mall, Himtrek has a variety of good-sized rooms with TV, although the cheapest lack windows.

Hotel Lake View (☎ 235632; Ramsey Rd, Tallital; d Rs 500-1200) This is a simple guesthouse run by a friendly family. The cheaper rooms drop to Rs 250 in the off-season.

Hotel Snow View Heritage (☎ 238570; Snow View Peak; d Rs 800) It's hard to beat the location of this four-room Raj bungalow run by KMVN – perched in a magical spot on Snow View with easy access to great walks and complete peace once the cable car stops and the crowds depart. Rates include two rides on the cable car, which runs to the front door. Spacious old rooms have character as well as TV and hot water.

MIDRANGE

Most of the following hotels have budget range prices in the off-season.

Evelyn Hotel (☎ 235457; the Mall, Tallital; d Rs 1200-1800, ste Rs 3000-4000) This large Victorian-looking hotel overlooking the lake is quintessential Nainital – charming and slightly eccentric. It's a bit overwhelming in size with rooms terraced up the hillside amid pot plants and balconies – the higher rooms are cheaper but all are clean and well maintained.

Hotel City Heart (☎ 235228; www.cityhearthotel.netfirms.com; off the Mall, Mallital; d Rs 1200-2500) The rooftop terrace restaurant has fine lake views, and pot plants and colourful décor give this place plenty of character. Rooms range from small but cute to a fabulous deluxe room with a view – it's unquestionably a bargain in the off-season when rates drop by more than half.

Hotel Welcome Park (☎ 235552; www.hotelwelcomepark.com; Zoo Rd, Tallital; d/ste Rs 2050/2650) A bit of a hike up the hill but accessible by road, this modern hotel offers plain but comfortable rooms with balconies overlooking the lake.

Alka Hotel (☎ 235220; www.alkahotel.com; the Mall; d Rs 2100-2800, ste Rs 3600) All rooms are lake-facing at this modern, upmarket hotel with flash communal areas, artworks and water features. Rooms are small but neat. Nearby is a budget annexe.

TOP END

Palace Belvedere (☎ 237434; www.welcomheritage.com; off the Mall, Mallital; s/d/ste Rs 3300/4400/4900) Built in 1897, this was the summer palace of the rajas of Awagarh. Animal skins and old prints adorn the walls of this classy hotel with comfortable rooms and an elegant dining room/lounge/veranda.

Eating

Nainital has a host of restaurants, especially along the Mall and near the Tibetan Market.

Sonam Chowmien Corner (the Flats, Mallital; meals Rs 10-20) In the covered alley part of the Tibetan Market, this authentic Tibetan dhaba whips up fabulous chow mein and momos for next to nothing.

Swad Restaurant & Pastry Shop (off the Mall, Mallital; meals Rs 25-80, pastries from Rs 15) Thalis, momos and mouthwatering homemade chocolates and sweets keep this place busy.

Cafe de Mall (☎ 235527; the Mall, Tallital; meals Rs 20-130; 🕘 9am-4pm & 5.30-10.30pm) With a touch of the Parisian, this open-fronted lakeside café is a good place for breakfast but the menu ranges from fish curry to impressive veg sizzlers.

Sakley's Restaurant & Pastry Shop (☎ 235086; off the Mall, Mallital; meals Rs 25-150; 🕘 9am-10pm) This breezy, spotless restaurant serves up some unusual global items such as Thai prawn dishes, honey chicken, lamb, plenty of Chinese dishes, pizzas and sizzlers. Desserts include pastries and Black Forest cake.

Embassy (☎ 235597; the Mall, Mallital; meals Rs 30-180; 🕘 11am-11pm) In a log-cabin interior, this place has been serving up five pages of menu items for over 40 years. There's a veg and nonveg section with everything from dosas to big sizzler plates – for something different ask for dancing coffee. There's a good people-watching terrace.

Machan Restaurant (☎ 237672; the Mall, Mallital; meals Rs 40-120; 🕘 10am-11pm) Odd jungle-themed décor and a distinctive bamboo façade complement some pretty decent food including Western comfort food in the form of pizzas and burgers. Watch the chefs at work in the open kitchen.

Drinking & Entertainment

Nainital Boat Club (The Mall, Mallital; temp membership men/women/couples Rs 300/150/300; 🕘 10am-10pm) This lakeside club is a classic remnant of the Raj. The atmospheric bar is all timber beams, wicker chairs and buttoned-up barmen with handlebar moustaches and the outdoor decking is perfect for an afternoon drink overlooking the lake. Temporary membership is steep but facilities include card-playing rooms, snooker tables (Rs 40), a gym (Rs 30) and a library with books, magazines and newspapers. Dress code is no shorts or thongs and signs warn that 'decorum should be maintained'.

Snow View Bar (🕘 10am-7pm) Although there are no views from the rustic bar, it's worth dropping in for a beer (Rs 80) after walking around the viewpoint. It's below the cable car station.

Shopping

Nainital is crowded with souvenir shops and emporiums selling textiles, clothing and handicrafts from different regions of India. Intricately carved multicoloured candles are a local speciality. On the southwest side of the lake near the flats is a busy Tibetan Market with cheap clothing and crafts.

RANIKHET

Ranikhet, home to the Kumaon Regiment and bristling with good old-fashioned military atmosphere, spreads over rolling green hills with some lovely views over the distant Himalaya. The focus of the town is a busy bazaar area, but you don't have to walk far along the winding Mall Rd to be immersed in forest and tall English trees. Apart from a military museum, some peaceful walks and views of snowcapped peaks, there's not much to do in Ranikhet – it's much more of a retreat than some other hill stations, and in the off-season accommodation is excellent value.

The KRC Shawl & Tweed Shop & Factory (☎ 220 567; the Mall, ⏰ 9am-1pm & 3-6pm, shop closed Wed, factory closed Sun), run by a welfare organisation for army widows, is in a converted church where you can see workers at handlooms producing shawls and tweed.

From the southern end of the Mall it's a pleasant 1km walk to the Jhula Devi Temple, which is festooned with bells, and you can carry on for a further 3km to Chaubattia, another army town, where you can turn left through an archway to a viewpoint café near some fruit trees. Take a share jeep (Rs 15) back to the bazaar.

Sleeping, Eating & Drinking

Outside the two peak seasons (generally mid-April to mid-July and 1 October to mid-November) the prices given below are reduced by 30% to 50%.

Hotel Rajdeep (☎ 220017; Sadar Bazaar; d Rs 350-900) The best of a gloomy bunch of hotels in this area, Rajdeep has a big range of old-fashioned rooms from poky budget ones at the back to spacious rooms with veranda and view at the front.

Hotel Meghdoot (☎ 220475; the Mall; s Rs 500-850, d Rs 750-1100, ste Rs 1350) This big, old hotel, just past the army headquarters 3km from the bazaar, has some quaint historical touches, a range of clean, spacious rooms, and a veranda packed with pot plants and greenery. Off-season rates are a bargain here.

Ranikhet Inn (☎ 221929; Sadar Bazaar; d Rs 1400-1600) This stylish boutique hotel is head and shoulders above the others in Sadar Bazaar. Although showing a little wear, the rooms are spotless with tiled floors, TV and hot water, and the best rooms have balconies commanding the best views in town. The patio restaurant is recommended.

Ranikhet Club (☎ 226011; the Mall; d year-round Rs 2400-3000, ste Rs 4200) For a taste of Raj nostalgia, look no further than the four classic rooms at this at this 1860 heritage wooden bungalow. The gentrified army ambience is typified by the members bar, billiard room, card-playing rooms, tennis court and stylish restaurant (meals Rs 30 to 90).

Machan Restaurant (Sadar Bazaar; mains Rs 25-100) At the Ranikhet Inn, this terrace restaurant has a fine view and a good range of dishes from pizza to chicken tikka and biryani – the navratan korma is an interesting mixture that includes papaya.

Seven Peaks Bar (temporary membership Rs 50; noon-10pm) Although modernised, the bar at the Ranikhet Club still has a colonial feel – dress smartly after 7pm. Enjoy a Kingfisher or cocktail with a Himalayan view from the veranda.

ALMORA

☎ 05962 / pop 32,357 / elev 1650m

Clinging to a steep-sided valley, Almora is the sprawling regional capital of Kumaon, first established as a summer capital by the Chand Rajas of Kumaon in 1560. A cool climate and mountain views are attractions but don't be put off by the ugly, shambolic main street when you're first deposited at the bus stand – head one block south to the pedestrian-only cobbled Lalal Bazaar, lined with intricately carved and painted traditional wooden shop façades. It's a fascinating place to stroll, people-watch and shop. While otherwise not bursting with interest, Almora has some colonial-era buildings, reliable trekking outfits and a couple of community-based weaving enterprises. You'll often see Westerners floating around thanks to a hippy subculture of travellers living up around Kasar Devi temple.

Information

Internet access is available all over town, usually from Rs 25 per hour.

Post office (the Mall; 10am-5pm Mon-Fri, 10am-1pm Sat)

State Bank of India (the Mall; 10am-4pm Mon-Fri, 10am-1pm Sat) Only exchanges American Express travellers cheques and only up to US$500, and does not exchange currency. There's an ATM accepting foreign cards in front of Hotel Shikhar.

Uttarakhand Tourism office (☎ 230180; Upper Mall; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat)

Sights & Activities

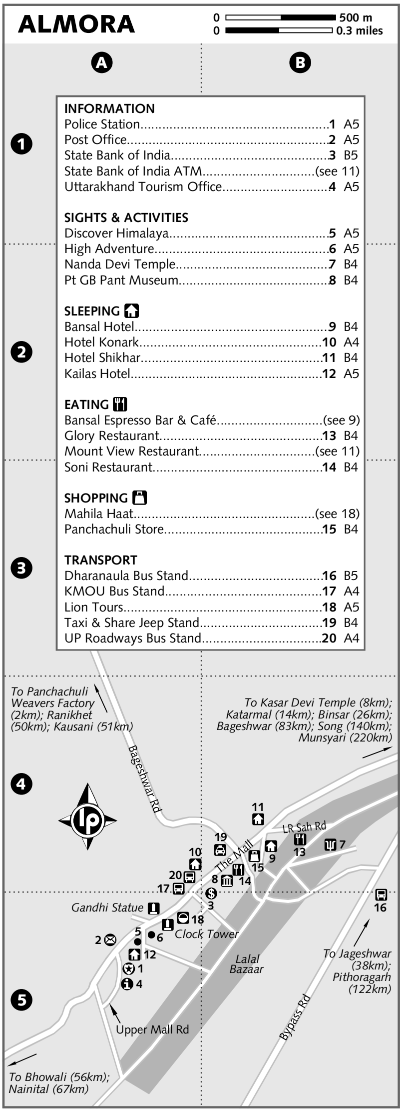
The stone Nanda Devi Temple in the Lalal Bazaar dates back to the Chand Raja era, and is covered in folk-art carvings, some erotic. Every September, the temple plays host to a fair (see p446).

The small Pt GB Pant Museum (the Mall; admission free; 10.30am-4.30pm Tue-Sun) houses local folk art and ancient Hindu sculptures.

The Panchachuli Weavers Factory (☎ 232310; off Bageshwar Rd; admission free; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) employs 300 women to weave shawls and carpets by hand and is an interesting place to visit. The shop here has a wider range of products than the small shop in the Mall. Taxis charge Rs 120 return to the factory, but you can walk the 3km easily enough.

For organised treks and information, including the Pindari and Milam Glacier treks, drop into Discover Himalaya (☎ 236890; discoverhimalaya@sancharnet.in; the Mall), which currently offers the best deals. Also check with near neighbour High Adventure (☎ 232277; highadventure@rediffmail.com; the Mall). Treks costs around Rs 500 to 2000 per person per day, depending on the size of the group and services provided.

Sleeping



Unlike most hill stations prices are not seasonal, but if it's not busy you can always try for a discount.

Kailas Hotel (☎ 230624; jawaharlalsah@india.com; off the Mall; d Rs 90-360) A slightly dilapidated but colourful and intriguing guesthouse run by Mr Shah, an engaging retired bank manager, who will regale you with tales of Almora and his philosophy on life. Staying here is like sleeping in a museum's attic, though the rooms are basic and a serious mixed bag – the large rooms (such as the 'honeymoon suite') at the top are easily the best. The cheapest rooms have common bath.

Bansal Hotel (☎ 230864; Lalal Bazaar; d Rs 200-250) Above Bansal Café in the bustling bazaar, this is a good budget choice with tidy rooms (some with TV) and a rooftop terrace. The top room has a view.

Hotel Konark (☎ 231217; the Mall; d Rs 400-500, tr Rs 600) Behind the pink façade, Konark has clean, modern though nondescript rooms with TV – some of the back rooms have views.

Hotel Shikhar (☎ 230253; www.hotelshikhar.com; the Mall; d Rs 150-1500;) Dominating the centre of town and built to take in the views, this large, boxlike hotel is perched on a hillside and offers a maze of rooms that covers all budgets. A spacious, comfortable room with a balcony, a hot shower and a TV goes for Rs 600. It also has the good Mount View Restaurant.

Eating

A local speciality is ball mithai (fudge covered in sugar), available in sweet shops for Rs 3.

Bansal Espresso Bar & Cafe (Lalal Bazaar; drinks & snacks Rs 12-25) This simple café in a lane between the Mall and Lalal Bazaar serves up a wide range of drinks and snacks, including good coffee, lassis, chat and samosas.

Soni Restaurant (the Mall; meals Rs 20-80) A popular Sikh dhaba serving tasty paneer (unfermented cheese), chicken and mutton dishes and egg curry.

Several other Shaivite shrines are in the old village, a 10-minute walk north of Baijnath.

Take a Bageshwar bus from Kausani, or a share jeep (Rs 20) to Garur and then another (Rs 20) to Baijnath. A return taxi from Kausani is Rs 400.

Pithoragarh is the main town of a little-visited region that borders Tibet and Nepal and has several Chand-era temples and an old fort. The town sits in a small valley that has been dubbed 'Little Kashmir' and picturesque hikes in the area include the rewarding climb up to Chandak (7km) for views of the Panchachuli (Five Chimneys) massif. Trekking permits are not normally needed but check with the district magistrate's office (☎ 222202) in Pithoragarh.

ROSE – VILLAGE VOLUNTEERS

The Rural Organisation for Social Elevation (ROSE) is a village-based charitable project that encourages 'village tourism' – international volunteers living and working with the rural communities. Based at Kanda village near Bageshwar in the Kumaon hills, ROSE works with local communities on agricultural and environmental projects, education and health care. Volunteers stay with ROSE founder Jeevan Verma and his family and contribute to projects including organic farming, housing construction, teaching in schools and administration. It's not all work, with plenty of opportunity to interact with villagers, learn Hindi, practice cooking and take excursions into the Himalaya. ROSE is affiliated with the Willing Workers on Organic Farms (WWOOF) organisation and we've had good first-hand feedback from volunteers. For information, contact ROSE (Jeevan Lal Verma, Village Sonargaon, PO Kanda, Uttarakhand 236 631), or check the website at www.rosekanda.info.

CROSSING INTO NEPAL

Border Hours

If you already have a visa the border is open 24 hours, but before 7am and after 5pm you may need to go in search of officials to stamp you in and out of the respective countries. The border is officially manned from 9am to 5pm.

Foreign Exchange

Banks in Banbassa and Mahendranagar will change Indian currency to Nepali rupees but there is no foreign currency exchange.

Onward Transport

From the border, take a rickshaw to Mahendranagar. The bus station is about 1km from the centre on the Mahendra Hwy, from where buses leave for Kathmandu (Rs 750, 16 hours) at 5am, 8.30am and 2.15pm. There's also a single Pokhara service at 10.30am (Rs 730, 16 hours).

Visas

Visas are available for US$30 at the border between 9am and 5pm.

365m-wide Pindari Glacier is at 3353m, so take it easy to avoid altitude sickness. Permits aren't needed but bring your passport.

The trek begins and finishes at Song (1140m), a village 36km north of Bageshwar. A guide and porters can be organised in both places or in Almora. Alternatively KMVN operates all-inclusive six-day treks out of Bageshwar for Rs 3500. KMVN dorms (mattresses on the floor Rs 150), basic guesthouses or dhaba huts (Rs 50 to 200) are dotted along the route and food is available. Accommodation can be a squeeze in May and June, so you may prefer to camp.

Buses (Rs 25, two hours) or share jeeps (Rs 50, 1½ hours) run between Song and Bageshwar, and buses can take you between Almora and Bageshwar via Kausani. A jeep taxi from Almora to Song costs around Rs 1600.

MILAM GLACIER TREK

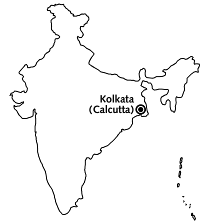
A challenging eight-day, 118km trek to this massive glacier at 3450m is reached along an ancient trade route to Tibet which was closed in 1962 following the war between India and China. It passes through magnificent rugged country to the east of Nanda Devi (7816m) and along the sometimes spectacular gorges of the Gori Ganga River. A popular but tough side trip to Nanda Devi East base camp adds another 30km or two days.

Permits are not required at present but check this information before you go as it might change, and bring your passport. You will also need a tent and your own food supplies as villages on the route may be deserted.

KMVN organises all-inclusive eight-day treks out of Munsyari for Rs 4500.

The trailhead is the spectacularly located village of Munsyari (2290m) where a guide, cook and porters can be hired. The plentiful accommodation in Munsyari includes a KMVN Rest House (☎ 05961-222339; dm Rs 100, d Rs 600-750).

A daily bus runs to Munsyari (Rs 170, 11 hours) from Almora; a jeep taxi costs around Rs 2500. Buses and share jeeps run to and from Pithoragarh (Rs 100, eight hours) and Bageshwar (Rs 75, six hours).



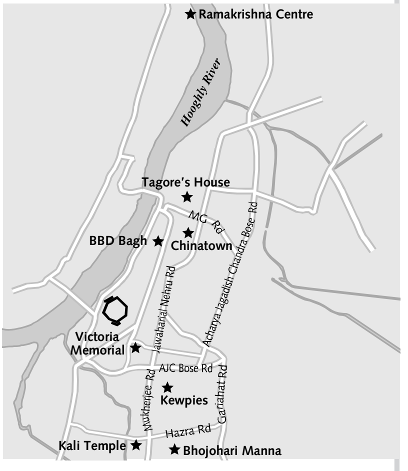
BANBASSA

pop 7138

Banbassa is the closest Indian village to the Nepal border post of Mahendranagar, 5km away, but you should check the current situation in Nepal before using this remote border crossing in view of Maoist activity in Nepal's western region – while the embassy insists everything is safe, trouble can flare up at any time. It certainly should not be attempted in the monsoon or immediate postmonsoon season because the roads in western Nepal are often impassable due to landslides and washed-out bridges.

Although Banbassa has a train station, only metre-gauge local trains run to the main railhead at Bareilly. A better option is the bus which runs to Almora and Delhi.

Kolkata (Calcutta)



Simultaneously noble and squalid, cultured and desperate, Kolkata is a daily festival of human existence. And it's all played out before your very eyes on teeming streets where not an inch of space is wasted. By its old spelling, Calcutta, India's second-biggest city conjures up images of human suffering to most Westerners. But Bengalis have long been infuriated by one-sided depictions of their vibrant capital. Kolkata is locally regarded as the intellectual and cultural capital of the nation. Several of India's great 19th- and 20th-century heroes were Kolkatans, including guru-philosopher Ramakrishna, Nobel Prize–winning poet Rabindranath Tagore and celebrated film director Satyajit Ray. Dozens of venues showcase Bengali dance, poetry, art, music, film and theatre. And while poverty certainly remains in-your-face, the dapper Bengali gentry continue to frequent grand old gentlemen's clubs, back horses at the Calcutta Racetrack and play soothing rounds of golf at some of India's finest courses.

As the former capital of British India, Kolkata retains a feast of dramatic colonial architecture, with more than a few fine buildings in photogenic states of semi-collapse. The city still has many slums but is also developing dynamic new-town suburbs, a rash of air-conditioned shopping malls and some of the best restaurants in India. This is a fabulous place to sample the mild, fruity tang of Bengali cuisine and share the city's passion for sweets.

Friendlier than India's other mega-cities, Kolkata is really a city you 'feel' more than just visit. But don't come between May and September unless you're prepared for a very serious drenching.

HIGHLIGHTS

- Be awed by the magnificent colonial folly that is the Victoria Memorial (p492)
- Enjoy bizarre random encounters while strolling between the faded colonial buildings and assorted religious monuments around BBD Bagh (p497)
- Savour lipsmackingly authentic Bengali cuisine at modest Bhojohari Manna (p507) or cosily homy Kewpies (p507)
- Contrast the urbane universalism on display at Tagore's House (p501) and the Ramakrishna Centre (p501) with the gruesome sensual fascination of Kali Temple (p499)
- Consider volunteering (p502) to help the destitute after a humbling visit to the rubbish-heap 'homes' around former Chinatown (p498)

HISTORY

In the Hindu epics, the God Shiva was understandably dismayed to happen upon the charred corpse of Sati, his newly wed wife (an incarnation of Kali). However, his decision to destroy the world in retribution was considered somewhat of an over-reaction by fellow deities. Vishnu interceded to stop Shiva's 'dance of destruction', but in so doing dismembered Sati's cadaver into 51 pieces. These gory chunks landed at widely disbursed points across India. One of her toes fell at Kalikata (now Kalighat, p499), where the site became honoured by a much revered temple.

Famed as Kalikata/Kalighat might have been, the place was still a fairly typical rural backwater when British merchant Job Charnock showed up in 1686. Charnock reckoned the Hooghly River bend would make an ideal settlement, and by 1698 the villages of Sutanuti, Gobindapur and Kalikata had been formally signed over to the British East India Company. The British thereupon created a miniature version of London-on-Hooghly, with stately buildings, wide boulevards, English churches and grand formal gardens. The grand illusion vanished abruptly at Calcutta's frayed edges where Indians servicing the Raj lived in cramped, overcrowded bastis (slums).

The most notable hiccup in the city's meteoric rise came in 1756, when Siraj-ud-Daula, the nawab of nearby Murshidabad, recaptured the city. Dozens of members of the colonial aristocracy were imprisoned in a cramped room beneath Fort William. By morning, around 40 of them were dead from suffocation. The British press exaggerated numbers, drumming up moral outrage back home: the legend of the 'Black Hole of Calcutta' was born.

The following year, Clive of India retook Calcutta for Britain and made peace with the nawab, who promptly sided with the French and was soundly defeated at the Battle of Plassey (now Palashi). A stronger fort was built and the town became British India's official capital, though well into the late 18th century one could still hunt tigers in the bamboo forests around where Sudder St lies today.

The late 19th century Bengali Renaissance movement saw a great cultural reawakening among middle-class Calcuttans. This was further galvanised by the massively unpopular 1905 division of Bengal, sowing the seeds of the Indian Independence movement. Bengal was reunited in 1911, but the British promptly transferred their colonial capital to less troublesome Delhi.

Initially loss of political power had little effect on Calcutta's economic status. However, the impact of partition was devastating. While West Pakistan and Punjab saw a fairly equal (if bloody) exchange of populations, migration in Bengal was almost entirely one way. Around four million Hindu refugees from East Bengal arrived, choking Calcutta's already overpopulated bustees. For a period, people really were dying of hunger in the streets, creating Calcutta's abiding image of abject poverty. No sooner had these refugees been absorbed than a second vast wave arrived during the 1971 India–Pakistan War.

After India's partition the port of Calcutta was hit very hard by the loss of its main natural hinterland, now behind closed Pakistan–Bangladesh borders. Labour unrest spiralled out of control, while the city's dominant party (Communist Party of India) spent most of its efforts attacking the feudal system of land ownership. Attempts to set strict rent controls and residents' rights were well intentioned but have since backfired. Kolkata rents remain amongst the lowest in India but when tenants pay as little as Rs 1 a month, landlords have zero interest in maintaining or upgrading properties. The sad result is that many fine old buildings are literally crumbling before one's eyes.

Since 2001 Calcutta has officially adopted the more phonetic spelling, Kolkata. Around the same time the city administration implemented a new business-friendly attitude that is now encouraging a very noticeable economic resurgence.

ORIENTATION

Kolkata sprawls outwards from the holy chocolate-sludge that is the Hooghly River. Apart from the gigantic Howrah (Haora) train station, most points of interest lie on the east bank.

Administrative Kolkata takes up several blocks of colonial-era buildings around BBD Bagh. North of here lanes are narrow and intriguingly vibrant. Well south in Alipore and Gariahat are the wealthier districts of the Bengali upper classes. Long-distance bus stations are around the top of a vast park called the Maidan. Budget travellers head for the nearby Sudder St area, Kolkata's equivalent of Bangkok's Khao San Rd. Here you'll find backpacker cafés, moneychangers, helpful travel agencies and Kolkata's savviest beggars. Upmarket dining and boutiques are most prevalent around Park, Camac and Elgin Sts. The central business district is around Shakespeare Sarani but corporate offices are increasingly relocating to Sector 5 of Salt Lake City, a new-town area that starts around several kilometres northeast of the centre.

Maps

Hawkers sell various city maps. None are perfect but the TTK Road Guide to Kolkata (Rs 75) is clearer than the IMS version. Catchcal (www.catchcal.com/map/map.html) has a searchable online map. The Geographical Survey of India (Map p494; ☎ 22475731; 13 Wood St; 10.30am-1pm & 2.30-5pm Mon-Fri) sells Rs 12 city maps. Very bureaucratic procedure.

Asiatic Society (Map p494; ☎ 22290779; www.asiaticsocietycal.com; 1 Park St; admission free; 🕐 10am-5pm Mon-Fri) Priceless collection of ancient books and illuminated manuscripts. A few of these are displayed in a mothballed one-room museum, including a letter signed by Shah Jahan and a 250 BC Ashokan inscription. Getting to see them involves a hilariously bureaucratic procedure involving five separate sign-ins on four different floors. Bring your passport.

National Library (Map pp488-9; ☎ 24791381; www.nlindia.org; 5 Alipore Rd; 🕐 9am-8pm Mon-Fri, 9.30am-6pm Sat & Sun) The largest collection in India. Books are too numerous for open shelving, so are accessed from vaults by request slip. Membership is free but requires two photos.

Apollo Gleneagles Clinic (Map pp488-9; ☎ 24618028; www.apollohospitals.com/Kolkata; 48/1F Lila Roy Sarani, Gariahat Rd; 🕐 8am-8pm) Health checks and dental work; its sister hospital in Salt Lake City offers 24-hour ambulance service.

Bellevue Clinic (Map p494; ☎ 22872321; www.bellevueclinic.com; 9 Loudon St) Hospital with 24-hour pharmacy.

STREET NAMES

After Independence, the Indian government changed any street name that had Raj-era connotations. The Communists continued the process. Humorously they chose to rename Harrington St so that the US consulate found itself on Ho Chi Minh Sarani.

Today most major Kolkata streets have two or even three names. Citizens and taxis still tend to go by the British-era names. But confusingly most maps, street signs and business cards use the new names (or sometimes both). This text uses what we found, quite unscientifically, to be the most commonly employed variant, italicised in the list below:

KOLKATA IN…

Two Days

From the north of the Maidan (p497), stroll at random through the crumbling colonial wonderland of BBD Bagh (p498). Collect a Marble Palace permit at West Bengal tourism (for tomorrow) then brace yourself for Chinatown (p498). Recover with a meal or coffee on Park St (p508) and tour the Indian Museum (p495). Reach the grandiose Victoria Memorial (p492) by 7.15pm for the sound-and-light show. Next day see the colourful Mullik Ghat flower market (p498) and head for Belur Math (p501) and Dakshineswar (p502), spiritual centres of the Ramakrishna movement. On the way back into town, stop off at the bizarre Marble Palace (p500). In the evening, fit in a cultural show at the Nandan Complex (p511).

Two Weeks

Kolkata's astounding contrasts aren't necessarily best appreciated by ticking off sights in standard touristic fashion. Consider approaching the city thematically.

Traditional Kolkata hand-drawn rickshaws (p514), effigy makers in Kumartuli (p501), sunset at Babu Ghat (p499), Mullik Ghat flower market (p499), sheep sacrifices at Kali Temple (p499)

Colonial Kolkata Victoria Memorial (p492), the main post office (p492), golf at the Tollygunge Club (p502), a flutter at the Maidan racecourse (p511), a drink at the Fairlawn Hotel (p510)

Modern Kolkata dancing at Tantra nightclub (p510), coffee at Barista (p510), simulator rides at Science City (p502), cocktails at Roxy (p510), browsing at Oxford Book Shop (p487)

Squalid Kolkata street kids on Howrah train station (p499), rubbish-pile homes in Chinatown (p498), volunteering (p502) to help the destitute

Multicultural Kolkata synagogues, mosques and churches of BBD Bagh (p497), Belur Math (p501), meditation evenings (p502), reading Tagore (p75), laughing-yoga at Rabindra Sarovar (p500)

SRL Ranbaxy Path Lab (Map p494; ☎ 22271315; 30B Chowringhee Rd; 7.30am-7.30pm Mon-Sat) Does same-day tests for dengue (Rs 1400) and Chikungunia (Rs 500).

Wockhardt Medical Centre (Map p494; ☎ 24754320/24754096; www.wockhardhospitals.net; 2/7 Sarat Bose Rd; consultation Rs 300; doctor available 9am-1pm) Good first stop for a doctor's consultation.

Woodlands Hospital (Map pp488-9; ☎ 24567075-89; 8/5 Alipore Rd)

Money

Most banks have ATMs accepting major international cards. There's a Camara Bank ATM on Kyd St, close to Sudder St. For foreign exchange, private moneychangers are much better than banks. Many will exchange travellers cheques but nobody seems to want Bangladesh Takas. There are dozens more booths around Sudder St. Shop around for rates.

Globe Forex (Map p494; ☎ 22828780; 11 Ho Chi Minh Sarani; 9.30am-6.30pm Mon-Fri, 9.30am-2.30pm Sat)

LKP Forex (Map p494; Hilson Hotel, Sudder St; 9am-9pm) Great rates and long hours in the foyer of a backpacker guest house.

Permits

FOREIGNERS' REGIONAL REGISTRATION OFFICE

You can get permits for Sikkim (free) in one working day at the Foreigners' Regional Registration Office (FRRO; Map p494; ☎ 22473301; 237A AJC Bose Rd; 10am-5pm Mon-Fri). For Manipur (Imphal only), Arunachal Pradesh (not Tawang) and Nagaland (Mon, Phek), FRRO has started offering limited-area permits for groups of four applicants, issued in 24 hours and for free. This sounds almost too good to be true. If it really works, please let us know! Each permit application requires one photo and a passport photocopy.

STATE OFFICES

The following can issue state-specific Inner Line permits to Indian nationals. However, except at Sikkim House, foreigners shouldn't expect any permit help whatsoever.

Arunachal Pradesh (Map pp488-9; ☎ 23341243; Arunachal Bhawan, Block CE 109, Sector 1, Salt Lake City)

Manipur (Map pp488-9; ☎ 24758163; Manipur Bhawan, 26 Rowland Rd)

Mizoram (Map pp488-9; ☎ 24757887; Mizoram Bhawan, 24 Old Ballygunge Rd) Take the lane beside 23 AC Rd for 100m. Enter to left through unmarked black gates.

Nagaland (Map p494; ☎ 22825247; Nagaland House, 1st fl, 11 Shakespeare Sarani)
Sikkim (Map p494; ☎ 22815328; Sikkim House, 4/1 Middleton St) Permits issued within 24 hours if the issuing officer is in town. Bring your passport, a passport photo, and photocopies of your passport's identity pages and Indian visa.

Photography

Electro Photo-Lab (Map p494; ☎ 22498743; 14 Sudder St; ⏰ 10am-10pm) Offers instant passport photos (Rs 60 for six mugshots), film developing and digi-prints.
Harico Electronics (Map p496; ☎ 22281345; 3B Chowringhee Rd) Stocks print- and slide-film, including Sensia 100 (Rs 220).

Post

Kolkata's imposing main post office (GPO; Map p496; Netaji Subhash Rd, BBD Bagh; ⏰ 8am-8pm Mon-Sat) is an attraction in itself, a statue of a traditional Bengali mail-runner standing beneath its vast central cupola. There's poste-restante service (passport required), a philatelic bureau and even a loveable little postal museum (☎ 22437331; Koilaghat St; ⏰ 11am-4pm Mon-Sat).

Convenient branch post offices include Park St (Map p494) and Mirza Ghalib St (Map p494).

Courier services:
DHL (Map p494; ☎ 22813132; 21 Camac St; ⏰ 24hr)
FedEx (☎ 22834325; Crescent Tower, AJC Bose Rd)

Telephone

The Central Telegraph Office (Map p496; Red Cross Pl; ⏰ 24hr) has phone and fax services, but calls are just as cheap from ubiquitous PCO/STD/ISD booths throughout the city. Electro Photo-Lab (see above) sells SIM cards for mobile phones.

Tourist Information

Cultural happenings are announced in the Telegraph newspaper's Metro section or buy a copy of the very useful Cal Calling (Rs 30) from the entranceway desk of West Bengal Tourism. CityInfo (www.explocity.com) is an advertisement-led listings pamphlet available free from better hotels.
India Tourism (Map p494; ☎ 22825813/22827731; 4 Shakespeare Sarani; ⏰ 10am-6pm Mon-Fri, 10am-1pm Sat) Gives away reasonably good Kolkata maps.
West Bengal Tourism (Map p496; ☎ 22488271; www.westbengaltourism.com; 3/2 BBD Bagh; ⏰ 10am-5.30pm Mon-Fri, 10am-1pm Sat) Somewhat chaotic, primarily selling tours.

Travel Agencies

There are dozens of travel agencies around Sudder St alone. Elsewhere useful addresses RCPL Travels (Map pp488-9; ☎ 24400665; travelcal@vsnl.net; www.kingdomofbhutan.info; 5/4 Ballygunge Pl) Bhutan specialists. include the following:
Travel People (Map p494; ☎ 22892291; www.travelppl.com; 227/2 AJC Bose Rd; ⏰ 9am-5pm) Professional and obliging.

Visa Extension

In an absolutely dire emergency, the FRRO (see Permits, p491) just might extend your Indian tourist visa by a few days. Don't count on it.

DANGERS & ANNOYANCES

Kolkata feels remarkably unthreatening. There's a fair share of beggar-hassle around the tourist ghetto of Sudder St and some tourists have got into trouble there by accepting late-night invitations to sample drugs or girls – a dangerous idea in any city.

A more day-to-day worry is crossing the road: the mad traffic takes no prisoners. Pickpockets sometimes cruise public transport. Bandhs (strikes) occur with monotonous regularity, closing shops and stopping all land transport (excluding planes but including taxis to the airport). Monsoon-season flooding is highly inconvenient but rickshaw-wallahs somehow manage to ferry passengers through knee-deep, waterlogged streets.

SIGHTS

Most attractions that don't charge for photography forbid it.

Chowringhee Area

All of the sites in this area appear on Map p494, except where otherwise noted.

VICTORIA MEMORIAL

Had it been built for a beautiful Indian princess rather than a dead colonial queen, the incredible Victoria Memorial (VM; ☎ 22235142; admission to grounds Rs 4, to interior Indian/foreigner Rs 20/150; ⏰ 10am-5pm Tue-Sun) would surely rate as one of India's greatest buildings. It's a vast, beautifully proportioned confection of white marble domes set in attractive, well-tended parkland. Think US Capitol meets Taj Mahal.

Built to commemorate Queen Victoria's 1901 diamond jubilee, the structure was finally finished nearly 20 years after her death. It's most photogenic viewed at sunset across reflecting ponds from the northeast. But the many interior galleries are worth seeing, specially the Kolkata Gallery, which traces an impressively even-handed history of the city, including the experience of Indians living under British rule. Some colonial statues offer a chuckle. Before the north door a sleepy Victoria seems to be nodding off on her throne. In the main entranceway King George V faces his wife Mary but looks more the queen himself in his camp posing britches. No wonder interior photography is forbidden.

By day, enter from north or south gates (though you can exit to the east). For the informative English-language sound-and-light show (Indian/foreigner Rs 10/20; 7.15pm Tue-Sun) enter from the east gate.

AROUND THE VM

In the evenings around the VM's north gate, local couples surreptitiously fondle (and more) in the surrounding gardens, take horse carriage rides along Queens Way or watch the sweetly gaudy play of musical fountains.

Loosely styled on the Buddhist stupa at Sarnath, the nearby Birla Planetarium (☎ 22231516; Chowringhee Rd) is one of the world's largest and looks impressive when floodlit. Its outer circle forms a small but well-presented, tomb-like gallery featuring astronomer busts and planetary pictures. But the star shows (admission Rs 20; 1.30pm & 6.30pm in English) are slow moving and rather stilted.

Whitewashed with a central crenellated tower, the 1847 St Paul's Cathedral (☎ 22230127; Cathedral Rd; 9am-noon & 3-6pm) would look quite at home in Cambridgeshire. Inside, its extraordinarily broad, unbutressed nave twitters with birdsong and retains the original hardwood pews. Don't miss the stained-glass west window by pre-Raphaelite maestro Sir Edward Burne-Jones.

The bright, ground-floor galley of the Academy of Fine Arts (☎ 22234302; 2 Cathedral Rd) has changing exhibitions (admission free; 3-8pm) featuring local contemporary artists. The dusty upstairs museum (admission Rs 5; noon-6.30pm Tue-Sun) has a room each of Mughal miniatures, old textiles, antique carpets and 20th-century paintings. There's also a special, air-conditioned shrine-like room displaying several watercolours by Bengali-Renaissance superstar Rabindranath Tagore (see also p501).

THE MAIDAN

After the 'Black Hole' fiasco, a moated 'second' Fort William (Map pp488–9; closed to public) was constructed in octagonal, Vaubanesque form (1758). The whole village of Gobindapur was flattened to give the new fort's cannons a clear line of fire. Though sad for then-residents, this created the Maidan (pronounced moi-dan), a vast 3km-long park that is today as

MOTHER TERESA

For many people, Mother Teresa (1910–97), was the living image of human sacrifice. Born Agnes Gonxha Bojaxhiu to Albanian parents in Uskup (now Skopje, Macedonia), she joined the Irish Order of Loreto nuns and worked for over a decade teaching in Calcutta's St Mary's High School (☎ 2298451; 92 Ripon St). Horrified by the city's spiralling poverty she established a new order, the Missionaries of Charity and, in 1952, opened Nirmal Hridy (Sacred Heart; see p499). This was the first of many refuges offering free shelter and a little human dignity to the destitute and dying. Although the order expanded into an international charity, Mother Teresa herself continued to live in absolute simplicity. She was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1979 and beatified by the Vatican in October 2003, the first official step towards being made a saint.

But this 'Saint of the Gutters' is not universally beloved. For some Kolkatans it's slightly galling to find their cultured, predominantly Hindu city popularly linked in the world's mind with a Catholic heroine whose work underlined the city's least appealing facet. Meanwhile Germaine Greer has accused Mother Teresa of religious imperialism, while Christopher Hitchens' book, The Missionary Position, decries the donations from dictators and corrupt tycoons. Many have questioned the Missionaries of Charity's minimal medical background and Teresa's staunchly Catholic position against contraception, which seems particularly untenable given Kolkata's growing AIDS and hepatitis epidemic. Of course, the organisation was never primarily focused on saving lives, simply offering a little love to the dying. Before Mother Teresa, even that was an unknown luxury for the truly destitute. But today, for the critics, it's not quite enough.

fundamental to Kolkata as Central Park is to New York City. Fort William remains hidden within a walled military zone, but for an amusingly far-fetched tale of someone who managed to get in, read Simon Winchester's Calcutta.

INDIAN MUSEUM

Around central lawns, Kolkata's main museum (☎ 22499979; www.indianmuseum-Calcutta.org; Chowringhee Rd; Indian/foreigner/camera Rs 10/150/50; 10am-4.30pm Tue-Sun) fills a glorious colonnaded palace with aging glass-and-hardwood display cabinets that are almost attractions in themselves. Exhibits range from fabulous Hindu bronzes to whole elephant skeletons. Notice the 2000-year-old eyeliner pencils, gag at the human embryos in formaldehyde and don't miss the impressive life-size reproduction of the 2nd-century BC Barhut Gateway. Before 1875, many exhibits were originally displayed by the Asiatic Society (see p490) in one of Asia's earliest museums.

PARK STREET CEMETERY

Today Park St is one of Kolkata's top commercial avenues. But when it was constructed in the 1760s, it was a simple causeway across uninhabited marshlands built for mourners to access the then-new Park Street Cemetery (Map pp488-9; cnr Park St & AJC Bose Rd; 7.30am-4.30pm). Today that cemetery remains a wonderful oasis of calm with mossy Raj-era graves – from rotundas to soaring pyramids – jostling for space in a lightly manicured jungle. Buying the guide booklet (Rs 100) supports its maintenance.

MOTHER TERESA'S MISSION

Mother Teresa's large, sober tomb is situated within the Sisters of Charity's Motherhouse (Map pp488-9; ☎ 2452277; 54a AJC Bose Rd; visits 8am-noon & 3-6pm Fri-Wed, prayers 4.30pm Fri, volunteer briefings 3pm Mon, Wed & Fri). There's a small museum displaying Teresa's worn sandals and battered enamel dinner-bowl. Upstairs, 'Mother's room' is preserved in all its simplicity with a crown-of-thorns above her modest camp bed. Serious pigrims or volunteers only are welcome as visitors disturb the running of the house.

BBD Bagh Area

All of the sites in this area appear on Map p496, except where otherwise noted.

NORTH OF THE MAIDAN

Curiosities around New Market (see p511) include the fascinatingly crumbling Futani Chambers, the perfect '50s-style façade of Elite Cinema, the brilliant colonial-era Metropolitan Building and the fanciful Tippu Sultan's Mosque. On an elegant palm-shaded courtyard tucked unexpectedly behind a barrier of hawkers' stalls, the luxurious Oberoi Grand (see p505) hotel offers blissfully elegant respite from the surrounding commotion.

Across Esplanade bus station, the north end of the Maidan is dotted with monuments. Circus performers, political firebrands and dealers in mystic medicines frequently entertain crowds around the Sahid Minar, a 48m-tall round-topped obelisk originally celebrating a British military leader. Beyond is a sombre WWI cenotaph and a statue of LBG Tilak, who disdains the perfectly framed (if gated) view of the grand 1799 Raj Bahvan (http://rajbhavankolkata.nic.in/main.asp; closed to public). Though designed to resemble Lord Curzon's English country house, the Raj Bahvan actually looks more like the US White House. It's now the highly guarded official residence of the West Bengal governor.

The vast Ranji Stadium in Eden Gardens hosts international cricket matches. Behind is a lake and picturesque Burmese pagoda, but they're currently out-of-bounds due to an arcane political squabble. Instead, walk past the western end of the low-domed West Bengal Assembly building for the most impressive view of the resplendent High Court building, a wonderful architectural mongrel halfway between Oxford college and Venetian opera set. In slightly more restrained style is the grand treasury building, whose arched cloisters are comically stacked with decades worth of dusty paperwork bundles that bureaucrats never need yet don't dare to throw away. Between the two is the imposing colonnaded cube of the former Calcutta Town Hall Building (4 Esplanade West). Here Kolkata Panorama (☎ 22131098; guided tour Indian/foreigner Rs 10/100; ⏰ 11am-6pm Tue-Sun) introduces the city's heritage through a lively collection of working models and interactive exhibits. It's well designed, though historically selective, and many foreigners will struggle to appreciate fully the detailed sections on Bengali popular culture.

Yet more colonnades buttress the stone-spired 1787 St John's Church (☎ 22436098; K Sankar Roy Rd; admission Rs 10; ⏰ 8am-5pm). In its somewhat overgrown grounds are two curious octagonal monuments, the mausoleum of Job Charnock, Kolkata's disputed 'founder', and a 1902 Black Hole Memorial that was hidden away here in 1940.

AROUND BBD BAGH

Aranged around BBD Bagh is much of Kolkata's finest colonial architecture. Originally called Tank Sq, its palm-lined central reservoir-lake ('tank') once supplied the young city's water. Some locals still use its later-colonial name Dalhousie Sq, commemorating British Lieutenant-Governor Lord Dalhousie. But with delicious irony, the square is now re-renamed after the nationalists who tried to assassinate him. In fact the BBD trio (Binoy, Badal and Dinesh) bungled their 1930 raid, killing instead an unlucky prisons inspector. Nonetheless the attack was a highly symbolic moment in the self-determination struggle. The assassination took place within the photogenic 1780 Writers' Building, whose glorious south façade looks something like a French provincial city hall. Originally built for clerks ('writers') of the East India Company, it's still a haven of pen-pushing bureaucracy.

There are many more imposing colonial edifices. The red-brick Standard Buildings (32 BBD Bagh) have carved nymphs and wonderful wrought-iron balconies at the rear. The former Standard Chartered Building (Netaji Subhash Rd) has a vaguely Moorish feel, while St Andrews Church has a fine Wren-style spire. The grandly domed, 1866 General Post Office (see p492) was built on the ruins of the original Fort William, site of the infamous 'Black Hole of Calcutta' (see p486).

BARABAZAAR & CHINATOWN

Scattered north and northeast of BBD Bagh lies an unexpected wealth of religious buildings. Alone none warrants a special trip, but weaving between them is a great excuse to explore some of Kolkata's most vibrantly chaotic alleys. Looking like a tall-spired church, Moghan David Synagogue (Canning St) is somewhat more impressive than BethEl Synagogue (Pollock St). The 1797 Portuguese-Catholic Holy Rosary Cathedral (Brabourne Rd; ⏰ 6am-11am) has eye-catching crown-topped side towers. Hidden away amid the bustle of Old China Bazaar St, the 1707 Armenian Church (Armenian St; ⏰ 9am-11am Sun) is claimed to be Kolkata's oldest place of Christian worship. It has a low but finely proportioned, whitewashed spire that's best spied from Bonfield Lane. To the east the 1926 red-sandstone Nakhoda Mosque (1 Zakaria St) rises impressively above the bustling shop fronts of ever-fascinating Rabindra Sarani. Its roof, bristling with domes and minarets, was modelled on Akbar's tomb at Sikandra. Less than 500m south lie the scanty remnants of Kolkata's ragged little Chinatown. Most Chinese have since moved away, and at first glance the area looks pretty unappealing. But if you wander up Damzen Lane you'll find two Chinese Temples (one now used as a local school) and a somewhat decrepit gateway (10 Damzen Lane) – built big enough for the family's domestic elephants. Just off the main road Chhatawali Gali (Lushun Sarani), notice the sad ruins of the once-grand 1924 Nangking Restaurant. To get a closer look you'll pass an extensive shoulder-high garbage heap. But it's more than garbage. At closer inspection you'll see that Kolkata streetfolk have burrowed homes right into it. Very humbling.

Hooghly Riverbank

The Hooghly might look unappealingly murky, but it's holy to Hindu Kolkatans whose main festivals often involve plunging divine puja images into its waters (see p487). The riverside ghats are interesting any morning or evening when die-hard devotees bathe and make offerings. A photogenic if distinctly seedy vantage point is Babu Ghat (Map pp488-9), hidden behind a grubby, pseudo-Greek gateway near Eden Gardens. Here the votive floating candles simply add to the spectacle of colourful sunsets viewed through the impressively elegant Vidyasagar Setu suspension bridge. Crossing that bridge takes you (eventually) to the Botanical Gardens (Map pp488-9; ☎ 26685357; 🕑 7am-5pm) that were founded in 1786 to develop a then newly discovered herbal bush called 'tea'. The gardens' 200-year-old banyan tree is claimed to have the second-largest canopy in the world.

HOWRAH (HAORA)

Howrah bridge (Rabindra Setu; Map pp488–9), Kolkata's 700m-long architectural icon, is a vibrating abstraction of steel cantilevers, traffic fumes and sweat. Although over 60 years old, it probably remains the world's busiest bridge. Beneath the east end, Mullik Ghat flower market is a sensory overload of sights and smells that's very photogenic. But beware that photography of the bridge itself is strictly prohibited. Nonetheless you might be able to sneak a discreet shot from one of the various river-ferries that ply across the Hooghly to the vast Howrah train station. This 1906 edifice has clusters of towers topped in terracotta tiles giving it a look reminiscent of a Spanish desert citadel. The station serves millions daily, emptying trains picked clean by legions of destitute street children who are the subject of much charity work and plenty of moving prose.

Some 500m south, the new open-air Railway Museum (admission Rs 5; 🕑 1-8pm Fri-Wed) has a two-storey model of Howrah train station, several 19th-century steam locos and a toy-train ride (adult/child Rs 20/10).

South Kolkata

KALIGHAT

Between Kalighat and Jatin Das Park Metro stations, Kalighat's Kali Temple (Map pp488-9; ☎ 22231516; 🕑 5am-2pm & 4-10pm) is Kolkata's holiest spot. The current structure, painted silver-grey with rainbow highlights, dates from 1809. Of course the site is many, many centuries older (see p486) and possibly the source of Kolkata's name. Inside, pilgrims jostle to present hibiscus offerings to the three-eyed Kali image whose crown can occasionally be glimpsed through the throng from the bell-pavilion. Priests loitering around the temple might whisk you to the front of the queue for an obligatory 'donation' (around Rs 50 per person). Behind the Mandir, goats are ritually beheaded to honour the ever-demanding goddess.

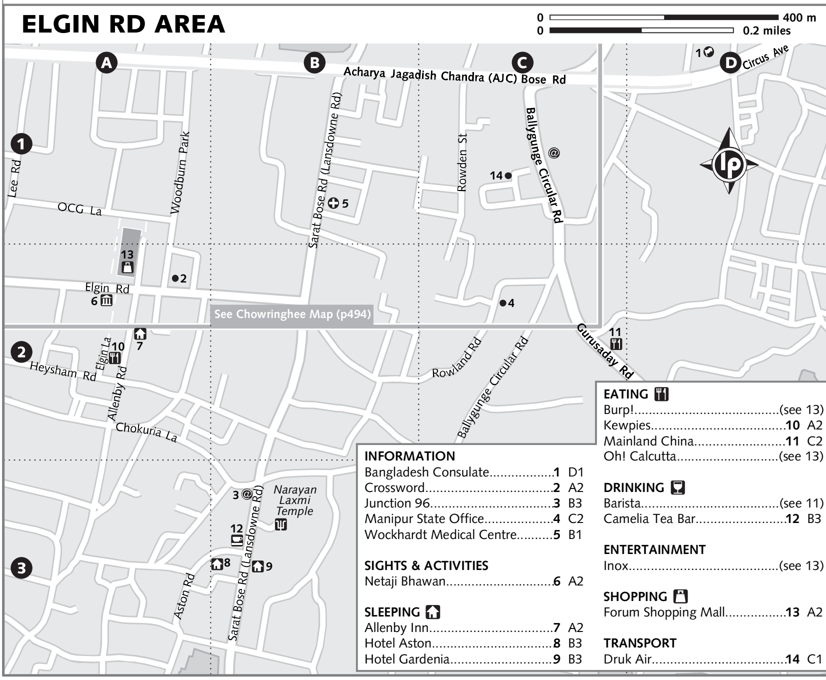
The temple is entered from the west along a narrow alley. Right next door is Mother Teresa's world famous, if surprisingly small, Nirmal Hriday (251 Kalighat Rd) home for the dying (see boxed text, p493), with neo-Mughal mini-domes pimpling the roof corners.

Surrounding alleys are full of market stalls selling votive flowers, brassware, religious artefacts and Kali pictures. Off Kalighat Rd you may spot pot-painter artisans at work.

A short walk away on the putrid Tolisnala Stream, Shanagar Burning Ghat hosts an impressive gaggle of monuments to celebrities cremated there.

ALIPORE

Kolkata's 16-hectare zoo (Map pp488-9; ☎ 24791152; Alipore Rd; admission Rs 10; 🕑 9am-5pm Fri-Wed) first opened in 1875. The spacious lawns and lakeside promenades are very popular with weekend picnickers and although some big-cat cages are rather confining, it rates as one of India's best zoos. Until he died in March 2006 the oldest resident had been Adwaita, an approximately 200-year-old giant tortoise, once the pet of controversial colonialist Robert Clive (see p48). Take bus 230 from Rabindra Sadan.



Directly south of the zoo's entrance, the access road to the National Library loops around the very regal Curzon Mansion, once the colonial Viceroy's residence. It's not (yet) a museum.

Around 1km southeast on Belvedere Rd are the delightfully tranquil Horticultural Gardens (Map pp488-9; admission Rs 10; 🕑 6-10am & 1-5pm).

ELGIN ROAD & GARIAHAT

Opposite the modern Forum Mall, Netaji Bhawan (Map p500; ☎ 24756139; www.netaji.org; 38/2 Elgin Rd; admission Rs 5; 🕑 11am-4pm Tue-Sun) is the former family home of Subhas Chandra Bose (p501), displaying personal effects of the iconic Independence fighter.

Further east CIMA (Centre for International Modern Art; Map pp488-9; ☎ 24858509; Sunny Towers, 2nd fl, 43 Ashutosh Chowdhury Rd; admission free; 🕑 11am-7pm Tue-Sat, 3-7pm Mon) is one of the best places in Kolkata to see cutting-edge contemporary Bengali art, though the exhibition space is not enormous.

The nearby Birla Mandir (Map pp488-9; Gariahat Rd; 6-11.30am & 4.30-9pm) is a large Lakshmi Narayan temple complex in cream-coloured sandstone whose three classically corn-cob shaped towers are more impressive for their size than their carvings. The temple was built between 1970 and 1996 by one of India's wealthiest clans.

RABINDRA SAROVAR

Scenic in the dawn haze, Rabrindra Sarovar (Map pp488–9) is a lake ringed by parkland where Kolkatans gather for early-morning yoga, meditation and group exercises. These include ho-ho ha-ha-ha group laugh-ins. At such informal Laughing Clubs (6am-7am), engagingly described by Tony Hawks in The Weekenders: Adventures in Calcutta, a good (even if forced) giggle can be refreshingly therapeutic.

Facing the park further east, the Birla Academy of Art & Culture (Map pp488-9; ☎ 24666802; 109 Southern Ave; admission Rs 2; 4-7pm Tue-Sun) has lively temporary exhibitions and an impressive three-storey Dakatkali statue in its grounds, visible through the gates: passers-by pay quiet homage.

Northeast of the lake, the Gariahat area is one of Kolkata's most popular local shopping areas.

North Kolkata

KOLKATA UNIVERSITY AREA

College St is the heartland of Kolkata's vibrant academic universe. The Asutosh Museum of Indian Art (Map pp488-9; ☎ 22410071; www.caluniv.ac.in; Centenary Bldg, 87/1 College St; admission Rs 10; 11.30am-4.30pm Mon-Fri) has priceless if slightly dry displays of fabulous antique Indian sculpture, brasswork and Bengali terracotta, with some more light-hearted toys and 20th-century folk art upstairs. The museum is down the first lane off College St as you walk north from Colootola Rd. It's within Kolkata University, facing some grand, older collegiate buildings. Nearby is the mythic Indian Coffee House (p509).

MARBLE PALACE

This extraordinarily grand 1853 mansion (Map pp488-9; ☎ 22393310; 46 Muktaram Babu St; 10am-4pm Tue-Wed & Fri-Sun) is indulgently overstuffed with statues and lavishly floored with marble inlay.

Yet its fine paintings droop in their dusty frames and the antique furniture is haphazardly draped in torn old dust sheets. It would make a great horror-movie set.

Although admission is technically free, guards, 'guides' and even the toilet monitor are expectant of tips. Importantly, before visiting you need to get a permission note from either West Bengal Tourism or India Tourism (see p492). However, some travellers report bribing their way in without.

To find the site from MG Rd metro station, walk two blocks north – away from the striking modernist Panchaiti Mosque (Chittaranjan Ave) – turning west between sari shops at 171 and 173 Chittaranjan Ave.

To continue to Tagore's House, walk west down Muktaram Babu St, turn right on Rabindra Sarani, and walk north for two blocks passing the wonderful olde-worlde Ram Prasad apothecary shop (204 Rabindra Sarani) and some interesting stone-carving workshops.

TAGORE'S HOUSE

Within Rabindra Bharati University, Rabindranath Tagore's comfortable 1784 family mansion has become a shrine-like museum (Rabindra Bharati Museum; Map pp488-9; ☎ 22695242; 246D Rabindra Sarani; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/50, student Rs 5/25; 10.30am-4.30pm Tue-Sun) to India's greatest modern poet. Even if his personal effects don't inspire you, some of the well-chosen quotations might spark an interest in Tagore's deeply universalist philosophy. There's also a decent gallery of paintings by his family and contemporaries. The photo of Tagore with Einstein could win a 'World's Wildest Hair' competition.

JAIN TEMPLES

Several eye-catching Jain temples are grouped together on Badridas Temple St. The best known of the temples is 1867 Sheetalnathji Jain Mandir (Map pp488-9; donation appropriate; 6am-11.30am & 3-7pm), a dazzling pastiche of colourful mosaics, spires, columns and slivered figurines. Directly opposite, the more sedate 1810 Dadaji Jain Mandir has a central marble tomb-temple patterned with silver studs. The temples are 1.6km from Shyam Bazar metro, two blocks south of Aurobindo Sarani via Raja Dinendra Rd.

In bird-filled gardens 250km west of Belgachia Metro, the Digambar Jain Mandir (Map pp488-9; 6am-noon & 5-7pm), has a tall lighthouse style tower. On closer examination the tower's 'lamp' actually contains a meditating ministatuette.

KUMARTULI

This fascinating district is named for the kumar (sculptors) who fashion giant puja effigies of the gods, eventually to be ritually immersed in the holy Hooghly. Different workshops in lanes off Rabindra Sarani specialise in certain body parts, creating the straw frames, adding clay coatings or painting the divine features with brilliant colours. Kumar workshops are busiest for the two months before the October/November Durga Puja festival (see p487).

BELUR MATH

Amid palms and manicured lawns, this extensive, peaceful religious centre (Map pp488-9; ☎ 26545892; www.sriramakrishna.org/belur.htm; Grand Trunk

SUBHAS CHANDRA BOSE

In the early 1940s the two most prominent figures in the Indian anticolonial campaign were Gandhi (who favoured nonviolence) and Subhas Chandra Bose (who certainly didn't). Eminently intelligent, Cambridge-educated Bose managed to become Chief Executive of Calcutta despite periods in jail after accusations of assault and terrorism. During WWII he fled first to Germany, then Japan. He formed the Indian National Army (INA) mostly by recruiting Indian soldiers from Japanese POW camps. The INA then marched with Japan's invading force towards northeastern India, getting bogged down, and eventually defeated in Manipur and Nagaland. Bose fled but later died in a mysterious plane crash.

Today his image is somewhat ambivalent in much of India. But in Bengal, Bose remains a hero nicknamed Netaji (revered leader). Patriotic songs are intoned before his many statues and Kolkata's airport is named for him.

In 2005 Shyam Benegal's biographical film Netaji Subhas Chandra Bose: The Forgotten Hero was taken to court by radical Bose supporters for suggesting that the Bengali hero secretly married a non-Indian.

Rd; 6.30am-noon & 3.30-8.30pm) is the headquarters of the Ramakrishna Mission. Its centrepiece is the huge 1938 Ramakrishna Mandir (6.30am-12.30 & 3.30-8pm), which somehow manages to look like a cathedral, Indian palace and Istanbul's Aya Sofya all at the same time. That's deliberate and perfectly in keeping with the message of 19th-century Indian sage Ramakrishna Paramahamsa who preached the unity of all religions.

Within the compound on the Hooghly riverbank, several smaller shrines (6.30am-11.30 & 3.30-5.15pm) include the Sri Sarada Devi Temple entombing the guru's wife. Larger yet essentially similar in design, the 1924 Swami Vivekananda Temple marks the cremation spot of the mission's founder and Ramakrishna's most famous disciple. Swami Vivekananda's room is also preserved.

Accessed from the car park is an interesting museum (admission Rs 3; 8.30-11.30am & 3.30-5.30pm Tue-Sun) that charts the life and times of Ramakrishna and associates.

Take minibus 10 from the Esplanade or bus 56 from Howrah train station. Continue your Ramakrishna experience with a boat across the Hooghly to Dakshineswar.

DAKSHINESWAR KALI TEMPLE

Shaped like an Indian Sacré Coeur, this 1847 Kali Temple (Map pp488-9; ☎ 25645222; 6.30am-noon & 3.30-9pm) was where Ramakrishna started his remarkable spiritual journey. Decorated with sepia photos, Ramakrishna's small room is now a place of special meditative reverence. Find it in the outer northwest corner of the temple precinct.

Taxis from Shyam Bazar metro cost Rs 85. However, arriving by (uncovered) river boat from Belur Math Ghat (Rs 7, 20 minutes) is an integral part of the Dakshineswar experience.

ACTIVITIES

Bowling

Several modern bowing alleys charge Rs 80 to 90 per game plus Rs 30 entry. Try Megabowl (Map p494; ☎ 22881311; 3rd fl, Metro Shopping Centre; 11am-9pm), Sparkz (Map pp488-9; ☎ 24481744; Diamond Harbour Rd, Alipore) beneath Majerhat Bridge or Nicco Superbowl (Map pp488-9; noon-10pm) beside Nicco Park (opposite).

Golf

The beautiful golf course at the Tollygunge Club (Map pp488-9; ☎ 24732316 ext 142; SP Mukherjee Rd) charges US$40 green fees for visitors but only Rs 150 if you're staying here. Renting clubs ranges Rs 100 to 300.

The magnificent Royal Calcutta Golf Club (Map pp488-9; ☎ 24731288; rcgc2vsnl.net; 18 Golf Club Rd) was established in 1829, making it the oldest golf club in the world outside Britain. Foreign guests unaccompanied by a member pay US$50 for an 18-hole round, but will need their own clubs.

Volunteering

Several organisations welcome foreign volunteers (see p1160).

COURSES

Cooking

Kali Travel Home (opposite) can arrange highly recommended three-hour Bengali cooking courses (US$14) led by local housewives in their homes. Three-days advance notice is usually required.

Meditation & Dance

The peaceful Aurobindo Bhawan (Map p494; ☎ 22822162; 8 Shakespeare Sarani) offers free, half-hour meditation sessions (7pm Thu & Sun) and various classical Indian dance lessons (Rs 100-150; 4pm): Orissan (Monday), Bharatnatyam (Thursday), Kathak (Friday and Saturday).

Yoga

Five-day yoga courses are organised by the Art of Living (☎ 24631018; aolkol@vsnl.net) at varying locations. Call well ahead for details.

KOLKATA FOR CHILDREN

Kolkata has two excellent hands-on places to really experience practical science. The Birla Industrial & Technological Museum (Map pp488-9; ☎ 22477241; 18A Gurusaday Rd; admission Rs 15; 10am-5.30pm) has loads of buttons to press and levers to pull, though some older galleries need repairing. The more dramatic Science City (Map pp488-9; ☎ 23434343; EM Bypass; admission Rs 20, rides Rs 10-40; 9am-9pm) is arranged like a theme park. Spherical, spiral and up-turned hemispherical buildings create a futuristic skyline around a thought-provoking physics garden. Twice hourly the Time Machine (Rs 10) gives short, sci-fi themed simulator rides, the Mirror-Maze is brilliantly disorientating and Evolution Park (Rs 10) walks you past animatronic dinosaurs in the eerie half dark.

The little Nehru Children's Museum (Map p494; ☎ 22483517; 94/1 Chowringhee Rd; adult/child Rs 5/3; 11am-7pm Wed-Sun, 3-7pm Tue) displays 400 dolls from 37 countries and has colourful dioramas retelling the Hindu epics. Nicco Park (☎ 23578101-4; Block BN, Sector 5, Salt Lake City; admission Rs 50, rides Rs 15-40; 11am-8pm) is a colourful theme park with a roller-coaster, a log flume and various fairground rides attractively arranged around a central lake. Last entry 7pm. Take bus 201 from Belgachia metro.

TOURS

West Bengal Tourism (Map p496; ☎ 22488271; www.westbengaltourism.com; BBD Bagh) operates a full-day city sightseeing tour (Rs 150; hdeparts 7.30am daily) that includes Belur Math, Dakshineswar temple and Eden Gardens. It arranges Hooghly River charter boats and runs special cruises during the Durga Puja festival (p487) to see the immersion of the idols. Two-day/one-night trips to the Sunderbans Tiger Reserve (p517) cost Rs 1200 to 3600 per head, including permits.

Enthusiastic expats at Kali Travel Home (☎ /fax 25587980; www.traveleastindia.com) offer accompanied city walks and longer customised tours around Bengal, Darjeeling and Sikkim.

SLEEPING

The great majority of foreigner-accepting budget accommodation is around the Sudder St traveller area. Standards vary wildly, but that area also offers some perfectly decent midrange hotels for around half the cost of equivalent standards elsewhere in Kolkata. Business travellers generally prefer southern Chowringhee or outer Kolkata.

Looks can be deceptive. Some bright façades mask lacklustre crash pads. Other great places are hidden within buildings that look like crumbling wrecks. Décor degrades fast in this climate, so the best choice is generally whichever was most recently renovated.

In summer you can get big off-season discounts, but AC will be virtually essential. In winter fan rooms are fine but demand is high, so you might just have to take whatever's available. Top-end hotels often cost less than half the rack-rate when booked through internet discounters. Taxes and service charges vary so widely (0% to 25%) that for fairness these have been included in our listed prices.

Most cheaper places lock their gates around 11pm so if planning to be late, forewarn the staff. Check-out time is 10am at several budget hotels.

Sudder & Park St Areas

The following places appear on Map p494.

BUDGET

If all our suggestions are full, there are dozens more similarly priced places within a stone's throw.

Salvation Army Red Shield Guest House (☎ 225 20599; 2 Sudder St; dm Rs 70, d with shared/private bathroom from Rs 150/250) Popular rooms and dingy, sex-segregated dorms are made much more palatable by the relaxing upstairs lounge area.

Centrepoint Guest House (☎ 22528184; ian_rashid@yahoo.com; 20 Mirza Ghalib St; dm Rs 80, s/d from Rs 200/250) The whole 4th floor is a sprawling bunk-bed dormitory that's brighter than most. Good for early risers.

Times Guest House (☎ 22521796; 3 Sudder St; s/d Rs 100/250) First impressions are highly off-putting but the double rooms are actually decent value with bathroom and natural light. Singles are basic with shared toilets. Above the Zurich Café, Tourist Inn (☎ 22523134; 1st fl, 4/1 Sudder St; s/d with shared bathroom Rs 120/240, q with bathroom Rs 500, d with AC Rs 800-1200;) In a creaky old house, this comparatively inviting cheapie also has two AC rooms with excellent bathrooms, mosaic floors and fully renovated interiors that bring out their colonial-era appeal.

Paragon Hotel (☎ 22522445; 2 Stuart Lane; dm Rs 80, s/d with shared bathroom from Rs 130/180, s/d with private bathroom from Rs 260/300) The narrow courtyard and open roof areas are such good places to meet fellow travellers that few seem to mind the jam-packed dorms or grotty, minuscule rooms. Bring your own padlock.

Modern Lodge (☎ 22524960; 1 Stuart Lane; r with shared/private bathroom from Rs 150/250) Not modern at all, but remarkably good value. The unusually well-kept, simple rooms have high ceilings, but fans and lamps share a single switch in cheaper rooms. No in-room plugs for battery charging.

Continental Guesthouse (☎ 22520663; Sudder St; s/d Rs 150/200, with toilet Rs 300/350) Good tiling but some peeling paint in the better rooms and the lower ceilings upstairs. Hot water by bucket.

Hotel Maria (☎ 22520860, 22224444; 5/1 Sudder St; s/d with shared bathroom Rs 150, s with private bathroom Rs 220, d with private bathroom Rs 250-300;) Somewhat mouldering but pleasantly set in a green courtyard. On-site Internet room available.

Timestar Hotel (☎ 22528028; 2 Tottie Lane; s/d from Rs 175/300) This crumbling colonial mansion house has grubby walls but newly tiled floors in the bathrooms.

Hotel Neelam (☎ 22269198; 11 Kyd St; s/d from Rs 200/350) Another once-grand colonial mansion that was recently repainted but not remodelled. Huge, creaky rooms have shared basic bathrooms.

Milan Guest House (☎ 30228621; 1st fl, 33/3 Mirza Ghalib; s/d Rs 200/300; ❄) Of many lacklustre budget places crammed into the same uninspiring side alley, the Milan is marginally the best value. Rooms are windowless and tend to overheat but are unusually well tended for the price. Optional AC costs Rs 300 extra.

Capital Guest House (☎ 22520598; 11B Chowringhee Lane; s with shared bathroom Rs 250-290, d with private bathroom from Rs 350-390; ❄) As charming as a prison, but with so many rooms that there's hope of a vacancy when other places are full.

MIDRANGE

Hotel VIP InterContinental (☎ 22520150; fax 22293715; 44 Mirza Ghalib St; fan s/d Rs 400/550, with AC from Rs 800/1000; ❄) Of three close-by 'VIP' hotels, the friendly little InterContinental has the best-value rooms, attractive with new moulded ceilings, marble floors and smart, small bathrooms. It's virtually unsigned beside a piano-rental shop.

Pioneer International (☎ 222520057; 1st fl, 1 Marquis St; d without/with AC Rs 450/650) The aged house is rotting and the wobbly wooden stairway unappetizing, but within, the hotel's six rooms are remarkably neat with new tiled floors. Reasonable value.

our pick Sunflower Guest House (☎ 22299401; 4th fl, 7 Royd St; s/d with fan Rs 600/650, d with AC Rs 850) One of Kolkata's best-kept accommodation secrets hides unexpectedly excellent rooms whose freshly tiled bathrooms have new geysers. It's within the archaic-looking 1865 Solomon Mansions building. Ride up in a wonderfully original if grimy 1940s lift with 2006 workings. The urbane owner might invite you to his private rooftop garden.

Hotel Gulshan Palace (☎ 22521009; www.gulshangroup.com; 42B Mirza Ghalib St; AC s/d from Rs 660/780; ❄) Decent value despite rather offish management. Deluxe rooms have two-tone wooden furniture and pleasant curtains.

Jaapon Guest House (☎ 22520657; jaapon_001@yahoo.com; 30F Mirza Ghalib St; s/d from Rs 660/880; ❄) This very friendly, all-AC mini-hotel is tucked away in a small alley. Some walls are slightly scuffed and lower rooms a little dark, but upper-floor deluxe rooms (s/d Rs 1100/1300) are a good choice.

Super Guest House (☎ 22520995; super_guesthouse@hotmail.com; 30A Mirza Ghalib St; d 660-990; ❄) Good, brightly decorated rooms with AC are dotted about three separate but very close-by locations.

Chowringhee YMCA (☎ 22521017; fax 22492234; 25 Chowringhee Rd; s/d Rs 700/1000 plus Rs 50 'membership'; ❄) Surely Kolkata's strangest accommodation, the YMCA has large, beautifully redecorated rooms with optional AC (Rs 250 extra). But reaching them takes you through a nightmarishly run-down Victorian building that would make an ideal setting for a cop-movie shoot-out scene. No reception, per se. Weird.

CKT Inn (☎ 22520130; fax 22520665; 3rd fl, 12/1 Lindsay St; s/d Rs 825/1100; ❄) In an office building with central AC and a lift, CKT furniture's has some slight '50s-style quirks and the water is usually hot. A pleasantly calm choice despite slightly rucked carpets.

Hotel Presidency Inn (☎ 22520057; www.hotelpresidencyinn.com; 2/1 Marquis St; s/d from Rs 900/1020; ❄ 💻) A blue-glass exterior conceals decent rooms with marble floors, pseudo antique flourishes and a fresh flower on arrival. Pricier rooms (Rs 1620) are larger but not significantly better.

Hotel Majestic International (☎ 22442266; 12/1 RAK Rd; d Rs 960-1440; ❄) This reworked old cinema has 40 quiet, comically over-ornate, marble-floored rooms, but many are small and opening the lift doors requires a crowbar!

Ashreen Guest House (☎ 22520889; ashreen_guesthouse@yahoo.com; 2 Cowie Lane; d Rs 395-495, d with AC Rs 720; ❄) Possibly Kolkata's best value mini-hotel, the rooms are sparkling clean with some playful interior touches. Rooms from Rs 440 have geysers and 'double ventilation' (ie corner windows) but Rs 395 ones tend to overheat. Service is remarkably proactive and helpful. The associated Aafreen Tower (☎ 22293280; aafreen_tower@yahoo.co.in; 9A Kyd St; d Rs 500, d with AC Rs 770; ❄) is similar but larger with glass elevators.

TOP END

Fairlawn Hotel (☎ 22521510; www.fairlawnhotel.com; 13A Sudder St; s/d US$52.20/63.80; ❄) Taking guests since 1936, the Fairlawn is a Raj-era home (built 1783) set behind an attractive garden-café. The hotel's unique sitting room is jammed full of family mementos and photos, but most rooms, while impeccably clean, are only relatively basic, midrange standard.

Housez 43 (☎ 22276020; housez43@gmail.com; 43 Mirza Ghalib St; s/d from Rs 2750/3300;) This handily central boutique hotel has gone overboard with bright colours and the sake-pot lamps are fun. Rooms are trendy and appealing… at least now that they're new.

Lytton Hotel (☎ 22491872/3; www.lyttonhotelindia.com; 14 Sudder St; standard s/d Rs 2860/3300, deluxe Rs 3080/3850;) This relaxing three-storey hotel has two good restaurants and corridor-décor enlivened by panels of Tiffany-style stained-glass. The fresh deluxe rooms have understated pseudo-period furniture and possibly the cleanest bathtubs in India. Professional, low-key service.

Park Hotel (☎ 22499000; www.theparkhotels.com; 17 Park St; d deluxe/luxury US$270/303;) If you'd choose the Hard Rock Hotel in Las Vegas, in Kolkata you'll love the Park. Pick the stylishly modern 'luxury' rooms with goldfish-bowl wash basins, pine floors and in-set lighting panels. The lobby is buffeted with live music from Someplace Else pub, while Kolkata's svelte chic-clique sip cocktails at the Aqua bar around a sizeable yet hard-to-find swimming pool.

our pick Oberoi Grand (☎ 22492323; www.oberoikolkata.com; 15 Chowringhee Rd; s/d from US$303/330;) A marvellous oasis of genteel calm, the Oberoi offers five-star perfection in a magnificent columned palace. Staff anticipate your needs, a sumptuous Banyan Tree spa massages away your problems and trickling fountains welcome you home.

Southern Chowringhee

Southern Chowringhee hotels tend to be pricey, but are very handy for the business district. The following options all appear on Map p494.

Sikkim House (☎ 22815328; 4/1 Middleton St; d/ste Rs 770/1160;) Large, clean but lacking panache, the functional all-AC rooms are especially good value for this pricey part of town.

Old Kenilworth Hotel (Purdey's Inn; ☎ 22825325; 7 Little Russel St; d without/with AC Rs 1800/2475;) Run by the same Anglo-Armenian family since 1948, this is more of a spacious homestay than a hotel. Recently repainted rooms are very large if not overly luxurious. Many have dining areas, sparse '50s-style furniture and unique Heath Robinson–style rope-drag fans on the high ceilings. There's a private lawn, but no restaurant.

The Astor (☎ 22491872/3; http://astorkolkata.com; 15 Shakespeare Sarani; s Rs 3080-3520, d/ste Rs 3850/4400;) Built in 1905, the exterior has the stolid grandeur of an Edwardian nursing home, while stairways display some period furniture and original wrought-iron banisters. Most rooms are comfortable but avoid the cheapest, windowless singles.

Senator Hotel (☎ 22893000; www.thesenatorhotel.com; 15 Camac St; s/d from US$127/138;) Mid-sized, well-located business hotel with several stylish flourishes. The wood-and-leather bed boards are fashionable, but bathtubs are rather small. Elite rooms (6th floor, US$195) are brighter with pistachio walls and flat-screen TVs.

Worth considering if seriously discounted online:

Golden Park (Map p494; ☎ 228833939; 13 Ho Chi Minh Sarani; s/d/ste Rs 7150/7590/10890;) The central atrium has a big 3-D Persian-style mural.

Hotel Hindusthan International (☎ 22802323; www.hindusthan.com; 235/1 AJC Bose Rd; d US$275-440;) Vast 1960s concrete hotel totally remodelled with parquet floors and sumptuous mattresses. Swimming pool could be cleaner. North-facing rooms somewhat noisy.

Elgin St Area

This area is a good, untouristy base for shopping and dining. All options appear on Map p500.

Hotel Aston (☎ 24863145; hotelaston@gmail.com; 3 Aston Rd; s/d Rs 1200/1440) In a quiet street behind the Samilton Hotel, the Aston's small but vaguely stylish new rooms have excellent marbled bathrooms.

Hotel Gardenia (☎ 24863249; palmantu@hotmail.com; 42/1B Sarat Bose Rd; s/d Rs 960/1320, executive Rs 1320/1560) Beside the colourful Lakshmi Narayan temple, the Gardenia's larger executive rooms are reasonable value and have a low-key sense of modernist style.

Allenby Inn (☎ 24855984; allenbyinn@vsnl.net; 1st fl, 1/2 Allenby St; s/d Rs 3300/3850;) Just 50m southeast of the Forum Mall, this stylishly upmarket guest house has dark-brown décor, green-tiled floors and plenty of abstract art. Some rooms are very large, though towels could be softer.

BBD Bagh Area

Total renovation should majestically revive the iconic 1840s Great Eastern Hotel (www.thegrandhotels.net; BBD Bagh) by the time you read this. Others options listed are handy for Chandni Chowk metro. The following are on Map p496.

Bengal Buddhist Association (Bauddha Dharmankur Sabha; ☎ 22117138; Robert St; tw Rs 200) Although intended for Buddhist students, tourists are welcome to rent these very clean, simple rooms with fan, mosquito nets and spotless shared bathrooms (cold water). Quiet location off a small courtyard.

Broadway Hotel (☎ 22363930; 1 http://business.vsnl.com/broadway; 27A Ganesh Chandra Ave; s/d/t Rs 445/545/700) Well-preserved old furniture gives the lovingly cleaned rooms a vaguely 1950s feel veering unintendedly towards the retro-trendy.

Hotel Embassy (☎ 22379040; ssa@cal.vsnl.net.in; 27 Princep St; s/d Rs 660/880, renovated s/d Rs 990/1320; ❄) In Kolkata's answer to New York's Flatiron Building, the Embassy has sad, sick-green corridors leading to rather better rooms. Choose the well-maintained, un-renovated ones whose old-yet-appealing feel is similar to equivalents at Hotel Broadway but with added AC. Slicker renovated rooms have less character and some damp patches.

Gypsy Inn (☎ 22126650; 2nd fl, 2 Chandni Chowk St; d non-AC/AC Rs 400/660; ❄) Brightly whitewashed new rooms have geysers if little style. Enter via the stairway behind that of similar Esplanade Chambers (☎ 22127101; s/d from Rs 660/880; ❄).

Howrah Train Station Area

Within a five-minute walk of the station there are numerous budget and lower midrange options. Chaotic traffic means that most suffer from deafening road noise, but there are two relatively peaceful budget exceptions. Both appear on Map pp488–9.

our pick Howrah Hotel (☎ 26413878; www.thehowrahhotel.com; 1 Mukhram Kanoria Rd; s/tr/q with shared bathroom Rs 125/270/380, d with shared bathroom Rs 205, s/tr/q with private bathroom Rs 215/370/485, d with private bathroom Rs 255-430) Luxury it ain't but this 1890 mansion has loads of character for such an ultra-budget place. The brilliantly antiquated reception has featured in three movies and the inner courtyard is an unexpected oasis of birdsong. Rooms are rather tatty but basically clean, many retaining original tile work, Italian chequer-board marble floors and high ceilings. The hotel is five minutes' walk from Howrath train station. Enter around the corner from the less appealing Hotel Bhimsain, which shares the same building.

Yatri Niwas (☎ 26601742; Howrah Train Station extension; dm Rs 100, d/tr Rs 350/400, d with AC Rs 500; ❄) An Esheresque convent-style façade hides a more Soviet interior. Expect a melee at reception where potential guests must show valid long-distance train tickets. Howrah train station is a five-minute walk. Maximum stay is one night, with check-out by 9am.

Outer Kolkata

our pick Tollygunge Club (☎ 24732316; www.tollygungeclub.org; d/ste Rs 3030/3704; 🏊) Set in idyllic calm amongst mature trees and golf greens, this otherwise-exclusive colonial-era club rents good, motel-standard guest rooms. Guests get temporary club membership allowing access to the wonderful Raj-era Wills Lounge bar and (except Monday) use of many sporting facilities, including especially reasonable rates for using the golf course. Book ahead.

ITC Sonar Bangla Sheraton Hotel (☎ 23454545; www.itcwelcomgroup.in; EM Bypass; s/d from US$250/275; ❄ 💻 🏊) Proudly eco-friendly, the rectilinear buildings of this 2003 'seven-star resort' are arranged around attractive lily ponds that naturally filter and recycle liquid waste. Luxurious rooms have a slightly Japanese vibe. With excellent restaurants, faultless service and a three-hole minigolf course, the hotel inspired a whole chapter in the paperback The Weekenders: Adventures in Calcutta. It's inconveniently far from the centre but close to Science City.

Airport Area

Although classier options exist further down VIP Rd, the following are walkably close to the terminals (around 1km): well placed if there's a strike.

Airways Lodge (☎ 25127280; Jessore Rd; s/d from Rs 220/330, with AC Rs 550/660; ❄) One of several cheapies around Airport Gate 2, the fan rooms are sweltering claustrophobic boxes but the AC rooms are refreshingly cool, with very slight hints of style in the wrought-iron furniture. Covered rooftop restaurant.

Hotel White Palace (☎ 25117402; 28/1 Italgacha Rd; s/d from Rs 770/880; ❄) This comparatively smart new place is 200m west of Airport Gate 1. Turn off Jessore Rd at a tiny mosque, then walk down the lane opposite the ultra-budget Om Lodge. AC costs Rs 200 extra.

EATING

Traveller Cafés

The Sudder St area has several backpacker-friendly places offering comfortably familiar standbys – from banana pancakes (around Rs 20) to burgers, milkshakes and toasted sandwiches complimented with fresh fruit juices, plus a range of good-value, if slightly unrefined, Indian dishes. These options can be found on Map p494.

Zurich Restaurant (3 Sudder St; mains Rs 14-65; 6.30am-10.30pm) Convivially comfortable diner atmosphere with good-value thalis (from Rs 35) and explanations of Indian menu items for the uninitiated.

Blue Sky Cafe (Chowringhee Lane; mains Rs 20-140; 6.30am-10pm;) Stylish high-backed zinc chairs at long glass tables encourages conversation amongst fellow travellers.

Fresh & Juicy (Chowringhee Lane; mains Rs 25-60; 6.30am-10pm) Five-table café lacking any décor but offering great value, with good food and excellent banana lassis.

Restaurants

The Times Food Guide (Rs 75) lists hundreds of restaurants, though reviews are suspiciously uncritical. Most restaurants levy a 12.5% tax and some posher places add a further 10% 'service charge'. Tips are welcome at cheaper places and expected at most expensive restaurants.

BENGALI

Bengali cuisine is a wonderful discovery, with a whole new vocabulary of names and flavours (see the boxed text, below). Portion sizes are typically small, so order two or three dishes, along with rice and sweet tomato-khejur (date palm) chutney.

Radhuni (Map p494; 17G Mirza Ghalib St; dishes Rs 15-80, rice Rs 8; 7.30am-11pm) Cheap, unpretentious place for local breakfasts and surprisingly creditable Bengali food.

our pick Bhojohari Manna (Map pp488-9; ☎ 24401933; www.bhojohorimanna.org; 9/18 Ekdalia Rd aka PC Sorcan Sarani; dishes Rs 15-170; noon-9pm;) Already an urban legend, this tiny restaurant-cum-takeaway serves absolutely sublime Bengali food at prices so reasonable you can just keep tasting. The mochar ghonto (Rs 25) is pure perfection. Gently spicy chingri malaikari (Rs 130) contains a prawn so big it speaks lobster. Sketches on the walls are by celebrated film-director Satyajit Roy's dad. Get near on tram 24 from Kalighat metro to Gariahat Rd.

Rupasi Bangla (Map p494; 1/1C Ripon St; dishes Rs 20-125, lunch thali Rs 55; noon-11pm) Cane, glass and wrought-iron furniture create a low-key but gently stylish ambiance in which to savour a great range of genuine Bengali cuisine. Friendly management can help you decipher unfamiliar menu terms.

Kewpies (Map p500; ☎ 24759880; 2 Elgin Lane; dishes Rs 50-170, thalis Rs 155-285; 12.30-3pm & 7.30-11pm Tue-Sun) Dining at Kewpies is almost like being invited to a dinner party in the chef's eclectic, gently old-fashioned home. First-rate Bengali food comes in small but fairly priced portions (minimum charge Rs 200 per person). Find it down the tiny alley beside Netaji Bhawan.

CHINESE

South of Sudder St, several places on Mirza Ghalib St serve Chinese food, including cheap-if-bland Hong Kong, midrange Golden Dragon and very swish Tung Fong.

Song Hay (Map p496; ☎ 22480974; 3 Waterloo St; lunch mains Rs 25-70, dinner mains Rs 44-150; 9am-10.30pm;) This modest, family restaurant looks pretty dowdy but serves prize-winning real Chinese food at very reasonable prices.

Mainland China (Map p500; ☎ 22837964; 3A Gurusaday Rd; mains Rs 150-600, rice Rs 90; 12.30-3.30pm & 7-11.30pm) World-class Chinese food in gently sophisticated surroundings. Superb lobster-

BENGALI CUISINE

Fruity and mildly spiced, Bengali food favours the sweet, rich notes of jaggary (palm sugar), daab (young coconut), malaikari (coconut milk) and posto (poppy seed). Chingri (river prawns) and excellent fish (particularly bhekti and ilish) are more characteristic than meat. Mustard fans will savour bhekti paturi (fish steamed in banana leaf). Excellent vegetarian choices include mochar ghonto (mashed banana-flower, potato and coconut) and doi begun (brinjal mini-eggplants in creamy sauce). Rice or sometimes luchi (small puris) are the usual accompaniment. A traditional soft drink is aampora shorbat made from cooked green mangoes with added lime zing.

Bengali desserts and sweets are legendary. Most characteristic is mishti dhoi (curd sweetened with jaggary), best when the crust dries to a fudge texture leaving the remainder lusciously moist.

A vast selection of recipes and a very handy five-page Bengali menu decoder can be found at http://milonee.net/bengali_recipes/list.html.

lemongrass soup (Rs 120), acceptable dimsum (Rs 110 to 130) and unusually drinkable Indian wines, notably the Sula Sauvignon Blanc (Rs 190 per glass). Reservations advised, enter behind Barista Coffee.

THAI

Many restaurants serve pseudo-Thai food, but for the real thing visit the calm Dynasty Restaurant (1st fl, Lytton Hotel, 14 Sutton St; mains Rs 85-260) or splurge at the world-class Baan Thai (Oberoi Grand, 15 Chowringhee Rd; mains Rs 250-600).

MULTICUISINE

Eating your way along Park St's many fine dining options could take weeks. Several restaurants are fashionably hip but the old faithfuls often turn out more reliable fare.

Peter Cat (Map p494; ☎ 22298841; Middleton Row; mains Rs 75-140, beers Rs 80-100; 11am-11.30pm;) Opposite KFC, this phenomenally popular Kolkata institution offers top-quality Indian cuisine, fizzing sizzlers, great chelo-kebabs and beers quaffed from pewter tankards. Waiters wear Rajasthani costumes in an atmosphere redolent of a mood-lit 1970s steakhouse.

Mocambo (Map p494; ☎ 22175372; Mirza Ghalib St; mains Rs 80-200; 11.30am-11.30pm) Although somewhat old-fashioned, reliable kebabs and European dishes like creamy Chicken Tetrazini ensure a very loyal following.

Bar-B-Q (Map p494; ☎ 22299078; 43 Park St; mains Rs 85-140, rice Rs 70, beers Rs 80; noon-4.30pm & 7-11pm) This enduring family favourite offers truly delicious Indian and Chinese food in separate nearby sections. Genteel head waiters are sharp-witted but obliging and décor is comfortably unpretentious.

On Track (Map p494; ☎ 22273955; Mirza Ghalib St; mains Rs 90-180; 11am-3pm & 7-11pm) An almost full-sized steam train heads straight for the window offering parents a unique, upmarket dining experience in leather-seated Pullman carriages while the kids play in the locomotive. Over-keen waiters flock like vultures, but food standards vary.

Oh! Calcutta (Map p500; ☎ 22837161; 4th fl, Forum Shopping Mall, Elgin Rd; mains Rs 150-650, rice Rs 75; 12.30-3pm & 7.15-11pm) High-class Bengali, Mughlai and continental cuisine in a suave pseudo-colonial atmosphere that's a delightfully calm contrast to the brash modernity of the surrounding mall.

Amber/Essence (Map p496; ☎ 22483477; 1st & 2nd fl, 11 Waterloo St; mains Rs 120-200; 1.30pm-11pm) The reliable Indian and continental food is the same on different floors but the slightly pricier 2nd-floor dining room has the nicer décor, being upmarket yet relaxed, with trendy grey-and-orange back-lit panelling.

Ivory (Map p494; ☎ 22811313; www.ivorykitchen.com/kol/; 5th fl, Block D, 22 Camac St; mains Rs 215-285, prawn mains Rs 400-500; noon-3pm & 7-11pm;) Fashionably suave Indian, Chinese and continental dining with some of the most original curries in town, originally dreamt up by India's leading celebrity chef. Excellent lunch buffets Rs 390 to 455.

INDIAN REGIONAL

Aminia (Map p496; Hogg St; mains Rs 25-55; 10.30am-10.30pm) This bright but old-fashioned budget eatery has high ceilings and more underemployed staff than there are menu items. Curries are tasty if greasy. Tandoori chicken costs just Rs 25 per quarter.

Drive Inn (Map p494; 10 Middleton St; mains Rs 30-60; 1-10pm) Plate-lickingly good Indian vegetarian food served in a modest open-air 'garden' with simple fan-pavilion tables. Try the stuffed capsicum.

Only Parathas (Map p494; ☎ 30588841; Lord Sinha Rd; mains Rs 36-150; noon-11pm;) Calm and relatively stylish, this new restaurant offers high-quality Punjabi vegetarian food, including (but not limited to) 133 types of paratha (bread).

Chennai Kitchen (Map p496; ☎ 22488509; P15/1 Chowringhee Sq; dosas Rs 25-55, thali Rs 69; noon-10pm Tue-Sun) Remarkably good South Indian food served in a stylishly retro-modernist diner-style atmosphere with glass waterfall, designer steel servingware and glass tables inlaid with spice designs.

our pick Teej (Map p494; ☎ 22170730; 2 Russel St; mains Rs 110-250, thalis Rs 150-250, house thali Rs 250; noon-3.30pm & 7-10.45pm;) Above a good sweet shop and Dominos pizzeria, this wonderfully atmospheric place has been superbly painted with Mughlai-style designs to look like a Rajasthani haveli (merchant's house). The excellent, 100% vegetarian food is predominantly Rajasthani, too. Superb Paneer Sartaj.

ITALIAN & TEX-MEX

Jalapenos (Map p494; 10 Wood St; mains Rs 85-185; 11.30am-10.15pm;) Approximations of Mexican food along with some pseudo Lebanese and Italian offerings in a pleasant if unremarkable interior.

Pizza Hut (Map p494; ☎ 22814343; 22 Camac St; pizzas Rs 90-415; 11am-11pm) Popular with travellers seeking a taste of home.

Fire and Ice (Map p494; ☎ 22884057; Kanak Bldg, Middleton St; mains Rs 160-300, beers Rs 100; 11am-11pm;) Modern Italian restaurant offering real pastas and pricey fresh-ground Italian coffee. Red designer ducting runs along high ceilings, while self-consciously handsome wait-staff sport black shirts, white aprons and bandanas.

Quick Eats

Snacks stalls (Map p494; Bertram St & Humayan Pl; snacks Rs 10-45; 10am-9pm) abound around New Market with puris on Bertram St, pastries round the corner outside CitiMart, espressos and pizza within the New Empire cinema, and great dosas, fresh juices and momos directly opposite across Humayan Pl. For baked potatoes, cheap biriyanis, chow mein and Rs 30 curry roti, look down nearby Madge Lane or further east around the Collin St/Ripon St junction triangle.

Türkişh Çörner (Map p494; Mirza Ghalib St 43; kebabs Rs 25-40; 10am-10pm) Takeaway kebabs, falafels and small but delicious shwarmas along with fascinating stories of the chef's escape from Iraq.

ROLL HOUSES

Bengal's trademark fast food is the kati roll. No, that's nothing like a bread roll. Take a paratha roti, fry it with a one-sided coating of egg then fill with sliced onions, chilli and your choice of stuffing – typically curried chicken, grilled meat or paneer (unfermented cheese). Roll it up in a twist of paper and it's ready to eat, generally on the street. Roll houses are usually just hole-in-the-wall serveries, like revered Hot Kati Rolls (Map p494; 1/1 Park St; rolls Rs 15-35; 11am-10.30pm). But the classic, recently relaunched 1932 roll house Nizams (Map p496; 23/24 Hogg St; rolls Rs 15-60, kebabs Rs 55-80; noon-11pm) has seating along with faintly Tintin-esque cartoon décor.

SWEETS, CAKES & PASTRIES

Ubiquitous Bengali sweet shops often also serve snack meals.

KC Das (Map p496; Lenin Sarani; sweets from Rs 10; 7.30am-9.30pm) This historic, if not especially atmospheric, Bengali sweet shop invented rasgulla (syrupy sponge balls) in 1868.

Jarokha/Gupta Brothers (Map p494; www.guptabros.com; Park Mansion, Mirza Ghalib St; sweets Rs 3-10; mains Rs 70-100; 7.30am-10.30pm) A wooden spiral stairway leads up to a haveli-style vegetarian dining room above this celebrated Bengali sweet shop.

Kookie Jar (Map p494; Rowden St; cakes from Rs 10; 8am-10pm) Kolkata's most heavenly cakes and brownies along with great pizza slices. No seating, but there are cafés next door.

Kathleen Confectioners (Map p494; 12 Mirza Ghalib St; snacks Rs 5-25; 8am-8pm) Appealing stand-and-eat chain bakery serving delicious savoury pastries and sickly sweet cake slices. There are many other branches, including one on AJC Bose Rd.

FOOD PLAZAS

Several comfortable outlets – organised fast-food-style – serve wide varieties of cuisines including regional Indian, continental and Chinese:

Burp! (Map p500; 5th fl, Forum Shopping Mall, Elgin Rd; Rs 20-70; 10.30am-10pm) Twelve-unit food court cooking up almost anything. Use a prepaid cashcard (refundable deposit Rs 20)

Food First (Map p494; 5 Camac St; 7.30am-11pm) Options include Nachos and Roesti.

Haldirans (Map p494; Chowringhee Rd; Rs 30-85; 10.30am-9.30pm) Great thalis and Bengalis sweets.

Ridhi Sidhi (Map p494; Emami Shopping Centre, 3 Lord Sinha Rd; mains Rs 20-40; 9.30am-10pm) Momos, dosas, chow mein.

Coffee & Tea Shops

COFFEE

Flury's (Map p494; Park St; coffees Rs 30-55, cakes Rs 45-115; 7.30am-9.45pm;) This wonderfully enticing Art Deco palace-café serves unusual, semi-sweet Belgian Mocha coffee and offers all-day breakfasts (Rs 100 to 200), but sandwiches and croissants aren't always fresh.

Ashalayam (Map p494; www.ashalayam.org; 1st fl, 44 Mirza Ghalib St; coffee Rs 6; 10.30am-7pm Mon-Fri, 10.30am-2pm Sat;) Calm, bright little charity craft-shop café serving cheap machine-frothed Nescafé (see p511).

Indian Coffee House (Map pp488-9; upper floors, 15 Bankim Chatterjee St; coffee Rs 7; 9am-9pm Mon-Sat) Once a meeting place of freedom fighters, bohemians and revolutionaries, this legendary place has crusty high ceilings, archaic fans and grimy walls ringing with deafening student conversation. It's perversely fascinating despite bland chow meins (Rs 25) and dishwater coffee.

Increasingly ubiquitous, the Starbucks-style chains Barista (Map p494; Humayan Pl; coffees Rs 24-50; 9am-10pm;) and Cafe Coffee Day (Map p494; 18K Park St; coffees Rs 20-50; 10.30am-11pm;) are reliably youthful places to linger in air-conditioned comfort. Both have numerous alternative branches (see maps).

TEA

our pick Dolly's Tea Shop (Map pp488-9; 24224650; Unit G62, Dakshinapan Shopping Centre, 2 Gariahat Rd; teas Rs 10-30, snacks Rs 15-50; 10.30am-7.30pm Mon-Fri, 10.30am-2.30pm Sat) If shopping at Dakshinapan, don't miss this characterful teahouse offering 24 different infusions and as many iced flavours. Regal matriarch Dolly is a tea writer-researcher whose magnetic presence attracts a wonderfully eclectic clientele.

Camellia Tea Bar (Map p500; 1st fl, Samilton Hotel, 37 Sarat Bose Rd; teas Rs 18-30; 6.30am-11.30pm) Multifarious teas served cocktail-style on a roof-garden. Try spicy Thai-chai or curious Irish Tea with ice-cream float.

Bars

Kolkata has an increasingly cutting-edge cocktail bar scene for those with thick wallets, but cheaper places are usually dingy and almost inevitably attract a 100% male clientele. Places in all ranges have a penchant for over-loud music.

Broadway Bar (Map p496; Broadway Hotel, 27A GC Ave; beers Rs 60; 11am-10.15pm) Back-street Paris? Chicago 1930s? Prague 1980s? This cavernous, unpretentious old pub defies easy parallels but has a compulsive left-bank fascination. Cheap booze, 20 ceiling fans, grimy walls, marble floors and, thankfully, no music. Clientele 100% male.

Fairlawn Hotel (Map p494; 13A Sudder St; beers Rs 80; 12.45-2pm & 7.30-9.30pm) Waving palms and an ideal location make the historic Fairlawn's calm garden café the perfect travellers place for a cold brew (no spirits).

Mirch Masala (Map pp488-9; 24618900; 49/2 Gariahat Rd; mains Rs 80-140, beers Rs 90; noon-3pm & 7am-10.30pm) Drinks and North Indian food served in a striking environment that's feels like a Bollywood Tex-Mex joint. Half a taxi-chassis has been added for good measure. Enter beneath Hotel Park Palace on Garcha 1st Lane, behind Pantaloons department store.

Blue & Beyond Restaurant (Map p494; 10th fl, Lindsay Hotel, Lindsay St; beers Rs 95, mains Rs 70-275; 12.30-10.30pm) Come for the fabulous views over New Market from the open-air rooftop terrace. Views are even better from the 9th-floor elevator landing.

Copper Chimney Lounge (Map p494; 22834161; 31 Shakespeare Sarani; beers Rs 110; noon-11pm;) Chic 21st-century neo-Ottoman bar with hookah water pipes (Rs 150), shimmering string-curtain dividers and mesmerising lighting effects. It's above a highly rated eponymous restaurant, behind HSCB bank. DJ on weekends.

Chowringhee Bar (Map p494; Oberoi Grand Hotel; beers Rs 120;) Not quite the colonial delight one might hope, but there's pleasant lighting, pool tables and soft live jazz some evenings. The next-door coffee shop stays open 24 hours.

Rocks (Map p496; 9 Waterloo St; beers Rs 120; 11am-midnight;) Three floors of bars guarded by snarling bouncers. The top has the most inviting décor, its wavy ceiling inset with 'stars'. The live Bengali music is high quality but has an even higher decibel level. Predominantly male clientele.

Roxy (Map p494; Park Hotel; small beer Rs 120; 6-11pm;) With a Clockwork Orange retro-futuristic atmosphere, Roxy is the best (and most expensive) of several fun pub-bars around and within the Park Hotel, including Someplace Else and Aqua Bar.

ENTERTAINMENT

Nightclubs

Kolkata's high-voltage nightclubs are mostly within top hotels. Variable cover charges range Rs 300 to 1000 per couple, commonly redeemable for drinks of the same value. Single women often go free but single men (known as 'stags') are generally excluded unless a guest at the hotel.

Tantra (Map p494; Park Hotel; 7pm-4am Wed & Fri, 7am-midnight Thu, 4pm-4am Sat & Sun;) The city's top spot. The relatively small but throbbing dance floor faces an alluring if not-so-quiet chill-out zone across the large central island of bar.

Marrakech (Map p494; Cinnamon Restaurant, 1st fl, 24 Park St; cover Rs 500, beers Rs 135; 6pm-midnight Mon-Thu, 6pm-2am Fri-Sun;) Appealingly Moroccan-themed club-bar with small dance floor. DJs crank up the volume after 10pm.

For 'stags' the best hope is Venom (Map p494; 8th fl, Fort Knox, 6 Camac St; 6pm-2am). If you don't get in, right beside it is DJ-bar Little High (Map p494; 8th fl, Fort Knox, 6 Camac St; no cover, beer Rs 100, hookah Rs 200; 7pm-midnight;), which lacks a dance floor but spins similar contemporary sounds.

Cultural Programmes

Kolkata's famous poetry, music, art, film and dance are regularly showcased at the Nandan Complex (AJC Bose Rd) comprising the Rabindra Sadan (Map p494; ☎ 22239936) and Sisir Mancha (Map p494; ☎ 22235317) theatre halls and an art-house cinema. Tourist Information offices and pamphlets (p492) give extensive listings of events here and at many other venues.

Cinemas

Cinemas are ubiquitous with at least nine around New Market alone.

Globe (Map p494; ☎ 22495636; Madge Lane) Great art-deco façade

Inox (Map p500; ☎ 23584499; 4th fl, Forum Shopping Mall, 10/3 Elgin Rd; tickets Rs 140-230) Modern multiplex.

Nandan Cinema (Map p494; ☎ 22231210; 1/1A AJC Bose Rd) For more intellectual, art-house films.

New Empire Cinema (Map p494; ☎ 22491299; 1-2 Humayan Pl)

Spectator Sports

Kolkata is sports mad. Dozens of clubs on the Maidan practise everything from cricket to kabaddi, especially at weekends. Even if you don't know Ganguly from a googly, the electric atmosphere of an international cricket match at Ranji Stadium in Eden Gardens is an unforgettable experience.

Arguably India's best place to watch horse racing is from the 19th-century grandstands at Maidan racecourse (☎ 22291104; www.rctconline.com; 12.30-3.20pm Nov–mid-Apr), the Victoria Memorial providing a beautiful backdrop. Over 40 meets annually; days vary. Enter from Acharya Jagdish Rd for the main stands (admission Rs 14).

SHOPPING

New Market has a grand colonial clocktower, but by day it's a pestilential nest of handicraft touts. Come before 8am, while touts are sleeping, to calmly appreciate the adjacent Hogg Market (fresh food and live chickens). Traditional, ultra-crowded shopping alleys spread in confusing profusion north of BBD Bagh, progress being slightly more manageable along Rabindra Sarani, which offers intriguing thematic groupings of trades at different points. Many Kolkatans prefer to shop in the southerly Gariahat district.

For more Western-style retail therapy, the five-storey Forum Shopping Mall (Map p500; Elgin Rd) is as good (or as bad) as small American equivalents. Metro Shopping Centre (Map p494; Ho Chi Minh Sarani) is similar, 22 Camac (Map p494; 22 Camac St) is snobbier, while Emami Shoppers' City (Map p494; 3 Lord Sinha Rd) is unthreateningly suburban.

Crafts & Souvenirs

GOVERNMENTAL EMPORIA

For good-quality souvenirs at decent fixed prices, head to the state-government emporia. A large number are gathered at Dakshinapan Shopping Centre (Map pp488-9; Gariahat Rd; 11am-7pm Mon-Fri, to 2pm Sat), which, along with Dolly's Tea Shop (opposite), just about justifies the long trek to this soul-crushing monstrosity of 1970s architecture. The fabrics are particularly good value and the Tripura Emporium has great deals on bamboo- and cane-ware.

Similar if dustier cane-ware is available more centrally at Assam Craft Emporium (Map p494; ☎ 22298331; Assam House, 8 Russel St; 10am-6pm Mon-Fri, 10am-2.30pm Sat). Nagaland Emporium (11 Shakespeare Sarani; 10am-6pm Mon-Fri, 10am-2pm Sat) sells Naga crafts, including traditional shawls. (Rs 300 to 1500) and double-face bronze 'trophy' necklaces for wannabe head-hunters.

Several more government emporia can be found along Chowringhee Rd, including the impressive if comparatively pricey Central Cottage Industries Emporium (Map p496; www.cottageemporiumindia.com; Metropolitan Bldg, 7 Chowringhee Rd; 10am-7pm Mon-Fri, to 2pm Sat) showcasing handicrafts from right across India.

Towards Salt Lake City, Swabhumi (Map pp488-9; www.swabhumi.com; admission Rs 20; noon-10pm) is a shopping centre-cum-cultural park with dozens of well-stocked craft stalls and boutiques plus rather dubious 'cultural performances'.

CHARITY COOPERATIVES

Buy gifts and support great causes:

Ankur Kala (Map pp488-9; ☎ 22478476; www.ankurkala.org; 76 Park St) Handicrafts from a cooperative training centre, empowering women from the slums.

Ashalayam (Map p494; www.ashalayam.org) Super greetings cards, handmade paper and fabrics funding the (ex)street kids who made them (see p509).

Women's Friendly Society (Map p494; 29 Park Lane; 8am-5pm Mon-Fri, 8am-1pm Sat) Hand-embroidered tableware, fabrics and children's clothes from another cooperative society for destitute women (founded 1886).

Clothing

Kolkata is great value for tailored or off-the-peg clothing, with smart shirts at just Rs 100 from Chowringhee Rd Hawkers Market. The choice around Newmarket is endless.

Music

Peddlers sell Bengali pop CDs on street corners, but for a vast selection of genres visit the flashy, AC chain shops Music World (Map p494; cnr Park St & Middleton Row; 10am-9pm) or Planet M (Map p494; Block B, 22 Camac St; 10.30am-8.30pm).

Musical Instruments

Shops and workshops along Rabindra Sarani sell a great range of musical instruments. For tablas and other percussion try numbers 248, 264 and 268B near Tagore's House (p501). For stringed instruments from esraj to sitar to violin, shops around number 8 are better. Family run since the 1850s, Mondal & Sons (Map p496; 8 Rabindra Sarani; 10am-6pm) counts Yehudi Menuhin among its satisfied customers.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

See p1167 for international destinations.

Air

Kolkata's Netaji Subhash Bose International Airport (NSBIA; 25118787) offers handy connections to Europe (London, Frankfurt) and several Asian cities. Arrive very early for international flights as security checks can take hours. On strike days (remarkably common) all road transport, including taxis, stops completely between 6am and 6pm, so consider sleeping within walking distance of the terminal before an important flight (see p506). Airline offices are generally open from 9.30am to 1pm and 2pm to 5pm Monday to Friday, give or take 15 minutes. A few also open on Saturday.

Boat

Ten days before departure, ferry tickets for Port Blair (Andaman Islands, see p1111) go on sale at the Shipping Corporation of India (Map p496; info 22482354, ticketing 22482141; Hare Rd; 10.30am-1pm). The ferries depart from Kidderpore Docks (Map pp488-9; Karl Marx Sarani), 3km southwest of the centre. Enter at Gate 3, right opposite Kidderpore commuter train station.

Bus

Esplanade bus stand (Map p496) is the departure point for destinations within West Bengal. Buses to Malda (Rs 400, nine hours) leave at 9.30am, 8.30pm and 10pm. For Darjeeling or Sikkim take one of many night buses to Siliguri (Rs 400 to 650, 12 hours), departing between 6pm and 8pm.

From Babughat bus stand (Map pp488–9) beside Eden Gardens commuter train station, many overnight services run to Ranchi, Puri and Bhubaneswar (all from Rs 160, 12 hours) departing between 5pm and 8pm. Whiteliners (24444444) has aircon buses (Rs 450).

For Dhaka (Bangladesh) direct buses depart Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays from Karunamoyee, Salt Lake City, operated by Bangladesh Road Transport Corporation (BRTC; Map p494; 21/A Mirza Ghalib St). Various private services, including Shyamoli Paribahan (Map p494; 22520802; 6/1 Marquis St), run daily (Rs 550, 13 hours), but involve changing vehicles at the Benapol border.

Train

Check carefully whether your train departs from Howrah (Haora; HWH, Map pp488–9) or Sealdah stations (SDAH, Map pp488–9). Both have trains to Delhi and Guwahati, though most longer distance services use Howrah.

Buying tickets is usually easier by internet, through Sudder St agencies or from city-centre booking offices. Indian Railways' Foreign Tourist Bureau (Map p496; ☎ 22224206; 6 Fairlie Pl; ⏰ 10am-5pm Mon-Sat, 10am-2pm Sun) has a tourist quota for most trains ex-Kolkata, but there's usually a queue and you must show foreign-exchange receipts or else pay US dollars, British pounds or euros. Next door and also one block south there are computerised booking offices (Map p496; ☎ 22227282; 14 Strand Rd South & 6 Fairlie Pl; ⏰ 8am-8pm Mon-Sat, 8am-2pm Sun) offering tickets on the wider train network, but you can't access the tourist quota here. Plan ahead. Other computerised booking offices (Map pp488-9; ⏰ 8am-2pm Mon-Sat) include one just north of Tollygunge Metro station

GETTING AROUND

To/From the Airport

NSBIA Airport is in the northeastern suburbs, some 5km east of Dum Dum metro station. Oddly, trains on the new suburban Airport Line only operate twice daily to Sealdah (Rs 10) at 7am and 9.40pm. Whiteliner Express buses from Tollygunge Metro (Rs 25 to 35, 80 minutes) run up to four times hourly between 8.20am and 8.30pm via Gariahat and Salt Lake City. Fixed-price taxis cost Rs 130/210 to Dum Dum metro/Sudder St.

Cheap but crowded options include minibus 151 from Airport Gate 1 (1.2km from the terminals) to BBD Bagh or frequent bus 30B from Airport Gate 2. The latter eventually grinds all the way to Babughat bus stand, but we'd suggest hopping off at Dum Dum station (Rs 5, 25 minutes) and continuing by metro (Rs 6, 20 minutes) to central Kolkata. (Dum Dum road passes Kolkata's original 1848 ordinance factory responsible for infamous hollow-tipped Dum-Dum bullets, internationally banned in 1899.)

Note that Airport Gate 2 is just a pedestrian-sized gateway in the perimeter wall opposite Oasis Lodge (Jessore Rd). From the airport's domestic terminal walk under the elevated railway and continue for around 10 minutes through the discouraging ruins of a derelict school-complex. Just when you think you must be wrong, you reach the outer perimeter road. Across that, beyond a huddle of rickshaws, there's a gap in the wall leading into busy Jessore Rd.

Bus
Local buses are passenger-crammed mechanical monsters hurtling along at frightening speeds wherever the chronic congestion abates. Routes can be a little confusing (eg 30B isn't the same as 30B/1) but at least Western-script numbers are used. Some buses even have signboards in English. Conductors somehow fight through the crowds to collect fares (Rs 2 to 10).

Ferry
The fastest way from central Kolkata to Howrah train station is generally by river ferry (tickets Rs 4, 8am to 8pm Monday to Saturday). These depart every 15 minutes from Armenian, Fairlie, Bishe June and Babu Ghats. Private and public ferries cost the same. They're packed at rush hour.

Metro
It's as crowded as any underground system at rush hour, but Kolkata's one-line Metro (tickets Rs 4 to 8; 7am to 9.45pm Monday to Saturday, 3pm to 9.45pm Sunday) remains the city's most stress-free form of public transport. Men beware not to sit in assigned 'Ladies' seats. For BBD Bagh use Central or Chandni Chowk stations, for Sudder St area use Esplanade or Park St.

Rickshaw

BANNING RICKSHAWS?

Is it morally unacceptable to have a barefooted man pulling you around the unsanitary, flooded streets by the sweat of his brow? Some believe so. No new tana-rickshaw licenses have been issued for years, and since 2003 the West Bengal administration has pondered outlawing them altogether. But others fear that impoverished rickshaw-wallahs (1800 licensed, many more unofficial) could be pushed into starvation if their business is banned. And are the less-practical cycle-rickshaws really so much kinder?

tion around New Market. During the monsoon the high-wheeled rickshaws can be the only transport able to get through the worst-flooded streets. Although rickshaw pullers sometimes charge foreigners disproportionate fares, many are virtually destitute, sleeping on the pavements beneath their rented chariots at night. Tips are heartily appreciated.

Outside the centre and in Howrah you'll find cycle-rickshaws.

Autorickshaws are not generally for hire but act as share taxis on fixed routes (Rs 4.50 per short hop).

Taxi

Kolkata's ubiquitous yellow Ambassador taxis are surprisingly cheap (from Rs 20 for a shorter trip). But be warned that the fare you pay will be roughly double the reading on the digital meter (or around 3.5 times the reading on now-rare old-style mechanical meters). This is official and not a scam. Exact rates for longer trips are calculated using conversion charts that every driver carries, but handing over twice the meter reading usually works without a fuss. Just make sure the meter's switched on.

A problem of taxi travel is the one-way system. Complex to start with, around 2pm the direction of traffic flow reverses on many roads. Not surprisingly many drivers are reluctant to make journeys around this chaotic time.

Prepaid taxis from a booth in front of Howrah station cost Rs 65 to Sudder St, Rs 190 to the airport.

Tram

Trams cost just Rs 3.50 per hop. The challenge is getting on, as stops aren't marked or set. Route 24 and 29 head from Esplanade to Alipore and Kalighat; the 29 continuing south to Tollygunge, the 24 usefully cutting across town to Gariahat market. Route 22 heads north up Rabindra Sarani. Route 14 heads east from BBD Bagh along Bipin Behan Ganguly St.

West Bengal

Emerging from the tempestuous Bay of Bengal in a maze of primeval mangroves, West Bengal stretches across the vast Ganges plain before abruptly rising towards the mighty ramparts of the Himalaya. This long, narrow state is India's most densely populated and straddles a breadth of society and geography unmatched in the country. As the cradle of the Indian Renaissance and national freedom movement, erstwhile Bengal has long been considered the country's cultural heartland, famous for its eminent writers, poets, artists, spiritualists and revolutionaries. Overshadowed perhaps by the reputation of its capital Kolkata (Calcutta), it is nonetheless surprising that this rich and diverse state receives so few foreign tourists.

In the World Heritage–listed Sunderbans, the Ganges delta hosts not only the world's most extensive mangrove forest, but also the greatest population of the elusive Royal Bengal tiger. On the Ganges plains a calm ocean of green paddies surrounds bustling trading towns, mud-and-thatch villages, and vestiges of Bengal's glorious and remarkable past: ornate, terracotta-tiled Hindu temples and monumental ruins of the Muslim nawabs (ruling princes).

As the ground starts to rise, the famous Darjeeling Himalayan Railway begins its ascent to the cooler climes of former British hill stations. The train switches back and loops its way to Darjeeling, still a summer retreat and a quintessential remnant of the Raj. Here, amid Himalayan giants and renowned tea estates, lies a network of mountain trails. Along with the quiet, orchid-growing haven of nearby Kalimpong, once part of Bhutan, these mountain retreats offer a glimpse into the Himalayan cultures of Sikkim, Bhutan, Nepal and Tibet.

History

Referred to as Vanga in the Mahabharata, this region has a long history predating the Aryan invasions of India. It was part of the Mauryan empire in the 3rd century BC before being overrun by the Guptas. For three centuries from around the 9th century AD, the Pala dynasty controlled a large area based in Bengal and including parts of Orissa, Bihar and modern Bangladesh.

Bengal was brought under Muslim control by Qutb-ud-din, first of the sultans of Delhi, at the end of the 12th century. Following the death of Aurangzeb in 1707, Bengal became an independent Muslim state.

The British established a trading post in Kolkata in 1698, which quickly prospered. Sensing rich pickings, Siraj-ud-daula, the nawab of Bengal, came down from his capital at Murshidabad and easily took Kolkata in 1756. Robert Clive defeated him the following year at the Battle of Plassey, helped by the treachery of Siraj-ud-daula's uncle, Mir Jafar, who commanded the greater part of the nawab's army. He was rewarded by succeeding his nephew as nawab, but after the Battle of Buxar in 1764 the British took full control of Bengal.

In 1947 Indian independence from Britain and the subsequent partition of the country saw the state of Bengal divided on religious grounds, causing the upheaval of millions of Bengalis (see p50).

Climate

The monsoon deluges West Bengal from mid-June until late September and the resulting flooding wreaks havoc with the roads and railways from the plains to the hills.

Activities

TREKKING

While pleasant walks along pine-scented trails are possible in all West Bengal's hill stations, the best multiday treks are organised from Kalimpong (see p546) and Darjeeling (see p542).

RAFTING

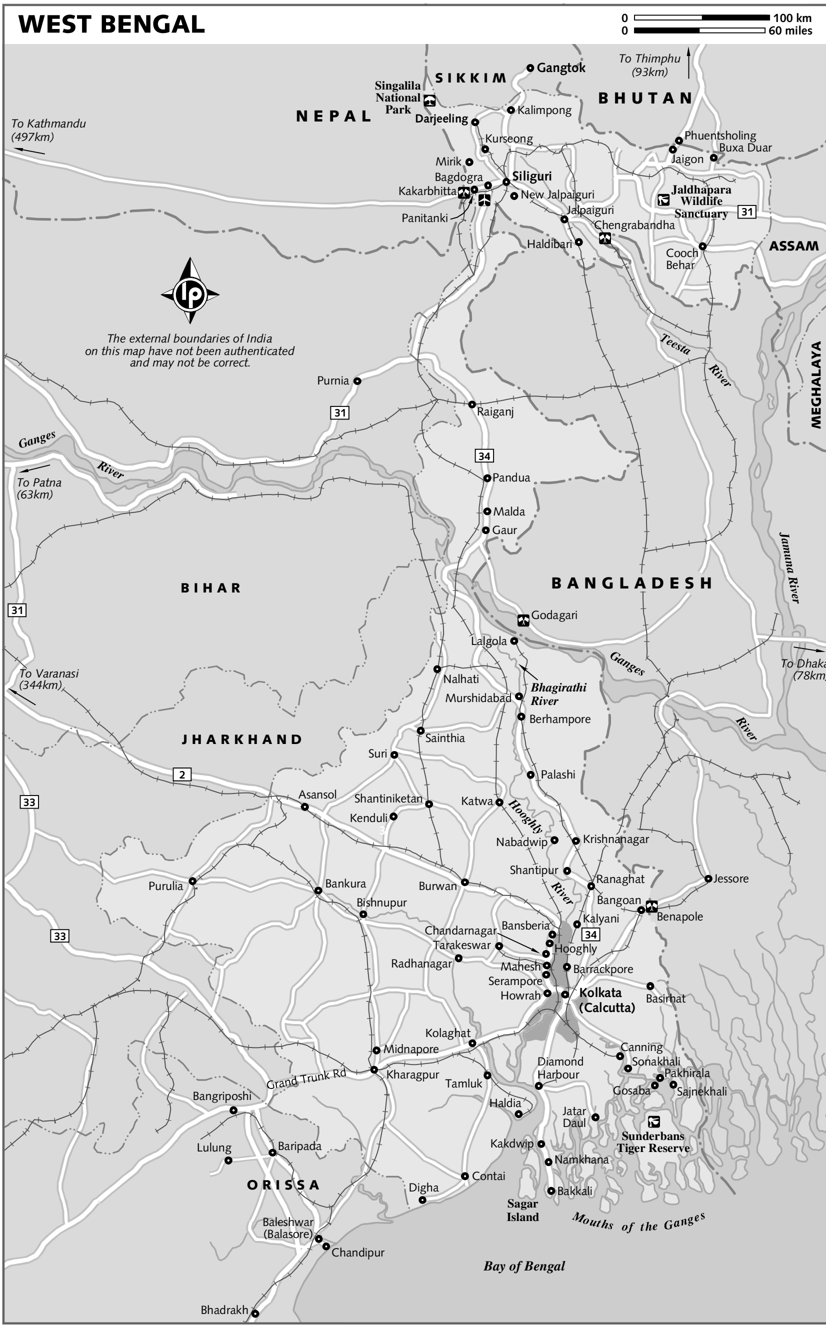
Adrenaline-pumping white-water rafting trips are held on the mighty Teesta and Rangeet Rivers from the tiny riverside town of Teesta Bazaar (p548), and can be organised in Darjeeling (see p537).

FAST FACTS

- Population: 80.2 million
- Area: 87,853 sq km
- Capital: Kolkata
- Main language: Bengali
- When to go: West Bengal Hills, October to December and March to May; Lower Plains, October to March

Getting There & Around

The vast majority who enter West Bengal arrive in Kolkata. Siliguri's Bagdogra airport has services to Kolkata, Delhi and Guwahati, as well as daily helicopter flights to Gangtok.



Most arriving by land do so on Indian Railways, which has main lines running south to Bhubaneswar and Chennai (Madras), and west to Gaya, Varanasi and Delhi. Other rail lines connect the state to Assam in the northeast and to Jharkhand in the southwest. There are also numerous long-distance buses that connect surrounding states.

Most cities and towns within West Bengal are connected by rail and bus, while overcrowded share jeeps ply the winding roads of the West Bengal Hills.

SOUTH OF KOLKATA

SUNDERBANS TIGER RESERVE

Home to one of the largest concentrations of tigers on the planet, this 2585-sq-km reserve (☎ 03218-55280; admission per day Rs 15) is a network of channels and semi-submerged mangroves that is part of the world's largest river delta. Royal Bengal tigers (officially estimated to number 274) not only lurk in the impenetrable depths of the mangrove forests, but also swim the delta's innumerable channels. Although they're known to have an appetite for humans (see the boxed text, p520), tigers are typically shy and sightings are a very rare exception. Nevertheless, a trip to this watery World Heritage site is rewarding with or without a glimpse of the big cats. Cruising the broad waterways through the world's biggest mangrove forest and watching wildlife, whether it be a spotted deer, 2m-long water monitor or luminescent kingfisher, is sublime and a world away from Kolkata's chaos.

The best time to visit the tiger reserve is between October and March. Visiting independently is difficult, with permits and tricky transport connections to organise, and it's not cheap; you'll have to bear the cost of boat rentals alone. Organised tours (see right) are the easy and comfortable alternative.

At Sajnekhali, the official gateway into the reserve, you'll find the Mangrove Interpretation Centre (admission Rs 2; 8.30am-5pm), with a small turtle and crocodile hatchery, displays on local conservation issues and a collection of pickled wildlife.

Boats are available for hire at Sajnekhali, costing Rs 400 for a three-hour island trip to Rs 1200 for a full day. You'll also need a guide (fixed rate is Rs 200 per day) and a boat permit (Rs 50 per day).

Permits

Foreigners need a permit to visit the Sunderbans Tiger Reserve. Free permits are issued at the West Bengal Tourism Centre (☎ 22488271; www.wbtourism.com; 3/2 BBD Bagh; 10.30am-4pm Mon-Fri, to 1pm Sat) in Kolkata. The process may take up to an hour and you'll need your passport.

Tours

Tours vary widely in prices, so it is worth shopping around. Tours typically include return transport from Kolkata, as well as all the fees and necessary permits, but do check what is and isn't included in your deal.

The West Bengal Tourism Centre (☎ 22488271; www.wbtourism.com; 3/2 BBD Bagh, Kolkata; 10.30am-4pm Mon-Fri, to 1pm Sat) organises weekly boat cruises during the high season (September to January), costing from Rs 1350 per person for one night and two half-days, including food and onboard accommodation. Trips with a worthwhile extra day start from Rs 2050.

A better option, especially if you want to sleep on dry land, is Sunderban Tiger Camp (☎ 033-32935749; www.sunderbantigercamp.com; year-round;). It provides expert guides and quality accommodation, with good food and even a bar. Tiger-spotting excursions are onboard comfortable river boats with ample shade, and there are sufficient tiger stories and glasses of tea to keep you awake. Traditional entertainment and walks to a local village are arranged for the evenings. All-inclusive prices range

LIVING AMONG TIGERS

For those who live and work in the Sunderbans, tigers are an everyday part of life. Muslims and Hindus alike revere the tiger-god Dakshin Roy and the forest saviour Bonobibi, who protects them from the man-eaters. Wives of men working in the Sunderbans have even taken to living their days as widows; only when their husbands return do they don their marital ornamentation.

Since tigers are less likely to attack if they suspect they're being watched, honey collectors and woodcutters wear masks painted with human faces on the backs of their heads. The tigers' extraordinary swimming prowess mean fishermen are not immune; at night tigers have been known to climb aboard fishing boats, which are anchored midstream, and abscond with not-so-happy prey.

Thanks to strategic perimeter fencing near villages, the numbers of human deaths attributed to tigers has dropped from an estimated 200 a year to about 30, despite an (official) increasing tiger population.

from Rs 2150/3440 per person for one-/two-night trips staying in comfortable tents to Rs 3400/6280 for more luxurious cottages.

Sleeping & Eating

Choices for the independent traveller are either overpriced or inconveniently located.

Kamal Kamini (☎ 03128-236035; d with shared bathroom Rs 80-200) Located far away in Gosaba's bazaar, this dingy, bottom-end option is the only choice if you're determined to see the Sunderbans as an independent traveller.

Sajnekhali Tourist Lodge (☎ 03218-214960; dm/d incl 1 meal & breakfast Rs 220/550) While perfectly located in Sajnekhali, its rooms are dark and dank. Some private tour operators use this accommodation option, so bookings are essential. Dorms can't be booked in advance.

Getting There & Away

From Kolkata (Babu Ghat) it's quickest to get a bus to Sonakhali (Rs 45, three hours); aim for the first departure at 6.30am. Then go by boat to Gosaba (Rs 11, 1½ hours, hourly), where there are shared cycle-rickshaws to Pakhirala (Rs 8, 45 minutes). From there, take another boat to Sajnekhali (Rs 4, 10 minutes). The last Kolkata bus leaves Sonakhali at 4.30pm.

DIAMOND HARBOUR

☎ 03174 / pop 37,238

Diamond Harbour, once the main port of the East India Company, rests 51km south of Kolkata, where the Hooghly turns south and flows into open sea. While it's a popular picnic spot, there isn't much to see besides a ruined Portuguese fort. However, it's a good staging area for points in the south.

Diamond Harbour Tourist Centre (Sagarika Tourist Lodge; ☎ /fax 255246; dm Rs 80, d from Rs 300, with AC from Rs 700; ❄) is a satisfactory overnight stop. The better rooms have their back to the ocean.

Buses from Kolkata (Rs 24, 1½ hours) come and go every 30 minutes.

SAGAR ISLAND

☎ 03210 / pop 185,301

According to legend, after the sage Kapil reduced King Sagar's 60,000 sons to ashes, it was at Sagar Island that the Ganges revived their souls by flowing over their dusty remains. Each year the Gangasagar Mela (p519) is held here, near the Kapil Muni Temple, honouring the legend.

Within sight of the temple, Larica Sagar Vihar (☎ 240226; dm Rs 100, d Rs 360-600) has large, clean rooms with mosquito nets and a decent restaurant (mains Rs 20 to 80). Other choices include a rather dark, dank youth hostel and various ashrams. Note that prices soar during the mela.

From Diamond Harbour, take a bus to Hardwood Point (Rs 20, one hour), where a ferry (Rs 6, 25 minutes) crosses the Hooghly to Sagar Island. Buses run the 30km from the ferry landing to the temple (Rs 25, 45 minutes).

BAKKALI

☎ 03210

Bakkali is a beach town located 132km south of Kolkata. The white-sand beach is rather desolate and exposed, but OK for a stroll. An hour north is the colourful fishing village of Namkhana.

A few minutes' walk from Bakkali's beach is the Bakkali Tourist Lodge (☎ 225260; dm/d Rs 80/400). It's rather run-down, but comfortable for a night or two.

A government bus departs from Kolkata's Esplanade for Bakkali daily at 7am (Rs 69, four hours).

☎ 03220

Digha, the 'Brighton of the East', is located on the Bay of Bengal, 185km southwest of Kolkata. While it's a nice escape from the city, this is not a spot for a surf. A less crowded seaside hideaway can be found 14km north at Shankarpur.

The bright, balconied Digha Tourist Lodge (☎ 266255; fax 266256; d from Rs 300, with AC Rs 700;) offers the best value, but look at a few rooms as they vary widely.

Several buses run daily from Kolkata's Esplanade (Rs 75, five hours).

NORTH OF KOLKATA

UP THE HOOGHLY

On the Hooghly River, 25km north of Kolkata, Serampore was a Danish trading centre until Denmark's holdings in India were transferred to the East India Company in 1845. At Serampore College there are impressive colonial buildings and a remarkable cast-iron gate donated by the Danish king. Further upriver is the former French outpost of Chandarnagar, where you can visit the Eglise du Sacre Coeur and the 18th-century mansion now housing the Cultural Institut de Chandarnagar (admission free; 11am-5.30pm, closed Thu & Sat), with collections documenting this colonial outpost.

In 1537 the Portuguese set up a factory in Hooghly, 41km north of Kolkata, which became an important trading port long before Kolkata rose to prominence. After a lengthy siege, the Portuguese were expelled from Hooghly in 1632 by Shah Jahan, but were allowed to return a year later. Climb the lofty minarets of the Imambara (admission Rs 4; 8am-5.30pm), where the view will take your breath away. The building was constructed in 1836 to host the Shiite procession of Muharram. Only 1km south of Hooghly, Chinsura was exchanged by the Dutch for the British possessions on the (Indonesian) island of Sumatra in 1825. There is a fort and a Dutch cemetery, 1km to the west.

About 6km north of Hooghly, Bansberia has two interesting temples. The 13 sikharas (spires) at Hansewari look like something you'd expect to see in St Petersburg, while the ornate terracotta tiles covering the Vasudev Temple resemble those seen in Bishnupur.

DURGA'S BATH

Since Durga is the goddess of all things and beings, it shouldn't come as a surprise that the list of ingredients required for rituals during the Durga Puja (p519) is a long and strange one. For instance, the goddess' daily bath requires no less than 75 items. These range from extracts of bitter fruit and dew collected off lotus pollens to soil from beneath a prostitute's door. Yes, from beneath a prostitute's door! It's believed that men leave their virtues behind when entering such an establishment, thus making the doorstep's soil a potent one. It's also thought that this ingredient symbolises the festival's inclusion of all levels of Bengali society. Fascinatingly, instead of bathing Durga's clay image itself, the bath is given to a mirror holding her reflection.

BISHNUPUR

☎ 03244 / pop 61,943

Known for its beautiful terracotta temples, Bishnupur flourished as the capital of the Malla kings from the 16th to the early 19th centuries. The architecture of these intriguing temples (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; dawn to dusk) is a bold mix of Bengali, Islamic and Orissan styles. Intricately detailed façades of numerous temples play out scenes of the Hindu epics Ramayana and Mahabharata. The most striking temples are the Jor Bangla, Madan Mohan, the multi-arched Ras Mancha and the elaborate Shyam Rai. Cycle-rickshaw-wallahs offer tours (the best way to negotiate the labyrinth of lanes) for Rs 100. There's a small museum (admission Rs 10; 11am-7pm Tue-Sun) that's worth a look for its painted manuscript covers, stone friezes, musical instruments and folk-art gallery.

Bishnupur is in Bankura district, famous for its pottery, particularly the stylised Bankura horse, and Baluchari silk saris.

Bishnupur Tourist Lodge (☎ 252013; dm Rs 80, d from Rs 300, with AC Rs 650;) is a typically sleepy government-run hotel with adequate, unremarkable rooms. It's close to the museum and a Rs 20 rickshaw ride from the train station.

Regular buses run to Kolkata (Rs 60, five hours) and to Shantiniketan (Rs 65, five hours). Three daily trains run to Kolkata (2nd class/chair Rs 84/278, four hours); the quickest depart at 7.30am and 5.30pm.

Shantiniketan is the epitome of its Bengali name, which means peaceful (shanti) abode (niketan). Rabindranath Tagore (see the boxed text, p75) founded a school here in 1901, which later developed into the Visva-Bharati University, with an emphasis on humanity's relationship with nature.

Spread through the leafy university grounds are eclectic statues, the celebrated Shantiniketan Murals and the Tagore Prayer Hall. Oddly, Tagore's car, a black Humber, sits silently behind a glass-walled garage, its fate sealed by the fact that it was used by him. The museum and art gallery (admission Rs 5; 10.30am-1pm & 2-4.30pm Thu-Mon, 10.30am-1pm Tue) in the Uttarayan complex are worth a peek if you're an aficionado of Tagore. The bookshop at the main gate has plenty of Tagore's titles (Rs 80 to Rs 250) in English.

Sleeping & Eating

There are several options in the quiet leafy streets of Bhubandanga and Jamboni.

Shantiniketan Tourist Lodge (☎ 252699; fax 252398; Bhubandanga; dm/d/d with AC Rs 80/350/850;) This government-run hotel is central, simple and clean enough, though the staff are indifferent and the restaurant has a very limited range of lack lustre dishes (mains Rs 40 to 100).

Hotel Santiniketan (☎ 254434; Bhubandanga; s/d/d with AC Rs 250/300/700;) This bold and balconied hotel has the best and cleanest rooms around. The ground-floor rooms are pleasantly cool, and there's a garden for relaxing and wishing you could order a beer. The restaurant (mains Rs 35 to 80) dishes up tasty curries, including a few South Indian dishes.

Chhuti Holiday Resort (☎ 252692; Jamboni; d from Rs 800, with AC Rs 1400;) This cluster of cottages looks great from the outside but the stone-floored cottages are small and can be damp. Its restaurant (mains Rs 50 to 100) is a cut above the others though, with a good range of Indian, Chinese and continental dishes.

About the only place to get a cold beer is the dimly lit bar down the side of the Hotel Embika (Bhubandanga).

Getting There & Away

Several trains ply between Bolpur station, 2km south of the university, and Kolkata daily. The best are 2337/8 (2nd class/chair Rs 72/235, 2½ hours) departing at 10.10am from Howrah and 1.10pm from Bolpur. To New Jalpaiguri choose between 5657 (sleeper/3AC Rs 190/505, eight hours) departing at 9.30am or 2503 (2nd class/chair Rs 126/425) departing at 11.28am. Numerous buses go to Murshidabad (Rs 45, four hours) and Bishnupur (Rs 65, five hours).

NABADWIP & MAYAPUR

☎ 03472 / pop 115,036

Nabadwip, 114km northwest of Kolkata, is an important Krishna pilgrimage centre, attracting throngs of devotees, and is an ancient centre of Sanskrit culture. The last Hindu king of Bengal, Lakshman Sen, moved his capital here from Gaur.

Across the river from Nabadwip, Mayapur is a centre for the Iskcon (Hare Krishna) movement. There's a large temple and the Iskcon Guest House (☎ 245620; d/q Rs 100/350), which runs a private bus to/from Kolkata (Rs 135, five hours; ring for details).

MURSHIDABAD & BERHAMPORE

☎ 03482 / pop 36,894

In Murshidabad, rural Bengali life and 18th-century architecture meld on the verdant shores of the Bhagirathi River. When Siraj-ud-daula was nawab of Bengal, Murshidabad was his capital, and he was assassinated here after the defeat at Plassey (now Palashi). The Bhagirathi River flows south to the Hooghly and was once the major trading route between inland India and the port of Kolkata, 221km south.

Hazarduari (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; 10am-5pm Sat-Thu), a palace famous for its 1000 doors (real and false), was built here for the nawabs in 1837. It now houses an astonishing collection of antiquities from the 18th and 19th centuries, including historical paintings such as Marshall's celebrated Burial of Sir John Moore. Beneath the lofty dome of Durbar Hall hangs a vast chandelier, rumoured to have been a gift from Queen Victoria. In the Archive Gallery rests a lustrous Arabic manuscript from the 13th century. The dilapidated Great Imambara stands on the palace grounds; its renovated interior deserves a look.

Murshid Quli Khan, who moved the capital here in 1705, is buried in a different section of town, beneath the stairs at the impressive ruins of the Katra Mosque. Siraj-ud-daula was assassinated at the Nimak Haram Deohri (Traitor's Gate). Within the Kathgola Gardens (admission Rs 7; 6.30am-5.30pm) is an interesting Jain Parswanath Temple and a museum.

Berhampore is 11km south of Murshidabad and acts as its bus and railway hub.

Sleeping & Eating

The few hotels here have private bathrooms with bucket hot water.

Hotel Samrat (251147; NH-34 Panchanantala; s/d from Rs 150/200, d with AC from Rs 600;) This is the best place to stay in Berhampore, with a range of satisfactory rooms and a basic restaurant (mains Rs 20 to 120).

Hotel Manjusha (270321; d Rs 300-400) This hotel in Murshidabad sits gloriously on the bank of the Bhagirathi, behind the Great Imambara. Downstairs rooms are cheapest, while rooms 201 to 203 have river and Hazarduari views.

Getting There & Around

There's a daily express train 3103/4 to/from Kolkata (2nd class/chair Rs 71/236, four hours), departing from Sealdah station (Kolkata) at 6.25pm and Berhampore at 6.24am. Regular buses leave for Kolkata (Rs 56, six hours) and Malda (Rs 45, five hours).

Shared autorickshaws (Rs 10) whizz between Murshidabad and Berhampore. Cyclerickshaw-wallahs offer guided half-day tours to see the spread-out sites for Rs 100.

MALDA

03512 / pop 161,448

Malda, 347km north of Kolkata, is a convenient base for visiting the ruins of Bengal's former capitals in nearby Gaur and Pandua. Malda is also famed for its Fajli mangoes ripening in spring.

Hotels are scattered along the highway and around the bus and train stations.

Continental Lodge (252388; fax 251505; 22 KJ Sanyal Rd; s/d Rs 150/250, d with AC from Rs 500;) is a friendly lodge almost directly opposite the bus station; it offers bright, clean rooms for every budget.

Hotel Pratapaditya (268104; Station Rd; s/d from Rs 160/225, d with AC Rs 650-1200;) is the quietest option and is just off the highway, only 500m from the train station (Rs 4 by rickshaw). It offers a wide variety of rooms, has helpful staff, and a good Indian and continental restaurant (mains Rs 35 to 75).

Hotel Purbanchal (266183; NH-34; s/d from Rs 250/300, with AC Rs 500/575;) has standard rooms that are rather small, but you can pay extra for a TV and more space.

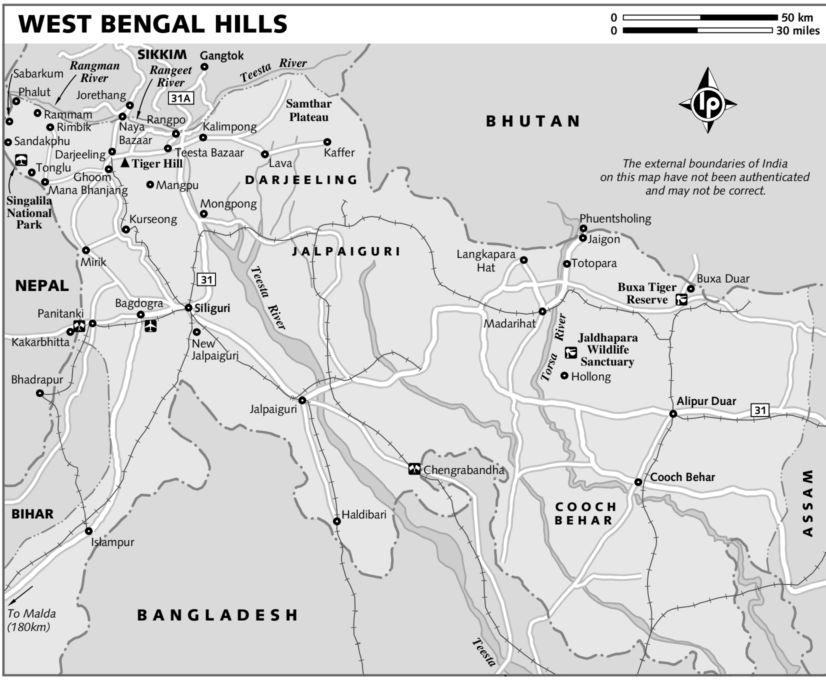
The best train from Kolkata (Sealdah station) is 2503 (2nd class/chair Rs 111/372, six hours), departing 9.05am Tuesday, Thursday and Sunday. Train 2503 continues to New Jalpaiguri (Rs 91/301, four hours), departing at 3.05pm. If returning to Kolkata, take the 2066 to Howrah (Rs 122/390, seven hours), departing 6am Monday to Saturday. Buses depart regularly for Siliguri (Rs 110, six hours), Berhampore/Murshidabad (Rs 53, five hours) and Kolkata (from Rs 120, 10 hours).

GAUR & PANDUA

Rising from the flooded paddy fields of Gaur (16km south of Malda) are mosques and other vestiges of the 13th- to 16th-century capital of the Muslim nawabs. Little remains from the 7th- to 12th-century pre-Muslim period, when Gaur was the capital of the successive Buddhist Pala and Hindu Sena dynasties.

Wander through the ruins of the impressive Baradwari Mosque and the intact arcaded aisle of its corridor, or beneath the fortress-like gateway of Dakhil Darwaza (1425). The Qadam Rasul Mosque enshrines the flat footprint of the Prophet Mohammed. The adjacent tomb of Fath Khan (1707) startlingly informs you that he 'vomited blood and died on this spot'. Lotus-flower motifs grace the terracotta façade of the Tantipara Mosque (1480), while remnants of colourful enamel cling to the Lattan and Chamkati mosques.

North of Pandua (18km north of Malda) are the vast ruins of the 14th-century Adina Masjid, once India's largest mosque. Within an intact section of arched and domed bays sits the tomb of Sikander Shah (1364–79), the builder of this mosque. About 2km away is the Eklakhi mausoleum, so-called because it cost Rs 1 lakh (Rs 100,000) to build.



The monuments are spread throughout Gaur and Pandua along some of the worst roads in India; it's worth hiring a taxi from Malda for half a day (Rs 500).

SILIGURI & NEW JALPAIGURI

0353 / pop 655,935 / elev 119m

The vibrant, crowded trading hub encompassing the twin towns of Siliguri and New Jalpaiguri (NJP) is the jumping-off point for Darjeeling, Kalimpong, Sikkim, the northeast states, eastern Nepal and Bhutan. For most travellers, Siliguri is an overnight transit point where there are good meals, great shopping and a glimpse of snowy peaks.

NJP Station Rd leads southward to NJP station, while branching eastward off Hill Cart Rd are Siliguri's other main streets, Sevoke and Bidhan Rds, which bound the bustling Hong Kong Market area.

KURSEONG

☎ 0354 / pop 40,067 / elev 1458m

Kurseong, 32km south of Darjeeling, is the little sister of the Queen of the Hills further up the track. It is a great stopover for those looking for a quiet alternative to the jostling crowds of Darjeeling. Kurseong – its name derived from the Lepcha word kurson-rip, a reference to the small white orchid prolific in this area – is also home to several churches and is surrounded by renowned tea estates. It is the southern terminus for the steam-powered toy trains of the Darjeeling Himalayan Railway.

Hill Cart Rd (Tenzing Norgay Rd) – the main thoroughfare from Siliguri to Darjeeling – and its close shadow, the railway line, wind through town passing tea and paneer sellers and tiny cubicles where 'suitings and shirtings' are sewn on chattering machines. Here you will struggle to find a souvenir shop.

There are numerous good walks in the area, including one to Eagle's Crag (2km return) that affords splendid views down the Teesta and the plains to the south. Along Pankhabari Rd, the graveyard at St Andrews has poignant reminders of the tea-planter era, while the organic Makaibari Tea Estates (☎ 2330181; ⏰ Tue-Sat) welcomes visitors to its aromatic factory. Old colonial buildings abound on the ridge above town, and the Forestry Museum, St Mary's Grotto, and the Kunsamnamdoling Gompa run by ani (Buddhist nuns) are well worth visiting.

You can check your email at Kashyup Computers & Systems (Hill Cart Rd; per hr Rs 30) and Cyberzone (Hotel Delhi Darbar, Hill Cart Rd; per hr Rs 25).

Kurseong Tourist Lodge (☎ 2344409; d Rs 800, with balcony Rs 900, mains Rs 30-80) This lodge exudes character with warm, wood-lined rooms that smell of polish and feature stunning views. The toy train whistles past the café where you can snack on momos, or you can enjoy a cold beer, a refreshing cuppa and a fine Indian, Chinese or continental meal at its scenic restaurant.

our pick Cochrane Place (☎ 2330703; www.imperialchai.com; 132 Pankhabari Rd; s/d from Rs 1750/2000, mains Rs 40-120) This exceptional boutique hotel surrounded by tea plantations and overlooking the twinkling lights of Siliguri is a destination in its own right. This much-extended colonial chalet is full of antique furniture and individually decorated rooms. Trainspotters will be beside themselves in Pandim (each room is named after a Himalayan peak). The owners are rightly proud of their kitchen, which re-creates tastes of the Raj and all meals are available either as set menus, part of the tariff or à la carte. The hotel is wheelchair friendly, provides airport (Bagdogra) and train station pick-up, and has a wealth of local knowledge to point you towards trails and sights in the region.

Glenary's Junction (Kurseong Train Station; snacks Rs 10-25; ⏰ 8am-7pm) Tucked into the cute station is a branch of Darjeeling's favourite cake shop. Sit down for biscuits, brownies, cakes, tea, coffee and assorted hot snacks, or browse the great photos of the Darjeeling Himalayan Railway's glory days.

DARJEELING

☎ 0354 / pop 109,160 / elev 2134m

Draped over a steep mountain ridge, surrounded by tea plantations and backed by a splendid Himalayan panorama, the archetypal hill station of Darjeeling is rightly West Bengal's premier drawcard. When you aren't gazing at Khangchendzonga (8598m), you can explore colonial mansions and churches, Buddhist and Hindu temples, botanical gardens and a zoo for Himalayan fauna. The steep narrow streets are crowded with colourful souvenir and handicraft shops, and a good steaming brew and excellent Indian and Tibetan fare are never far away. For the adventurous there are superb treks which trace ancient trade routes and provide magnificent viewpoints.

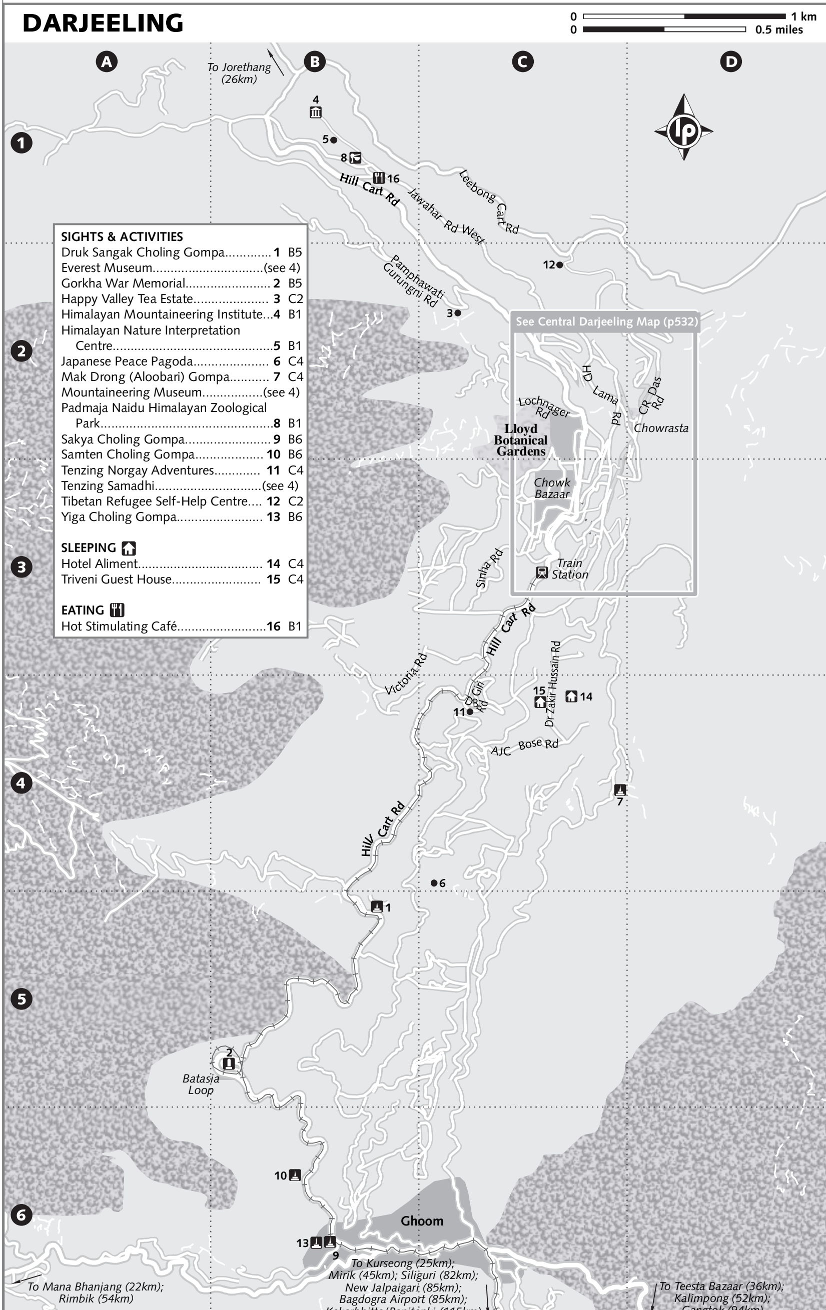
Most tourists visit after the monsoon (October and November) and during spring (mid-March to the end of May) when skies are dry, panoramas are clear and temperatures are pleasant.

History

This area belonged to the Buddhist chogyals (kings) of Sikkim until 1780, when it was annexed by the invading Gurkhas from Nepal. The Gurkhas' aggressive territorial expansion led to growing conflicts with the British and, after several battles, the East India Company gained control of the region in 1816. The company then returned most of the lands back to Sikkim in exchange for British control over any future border disputes.

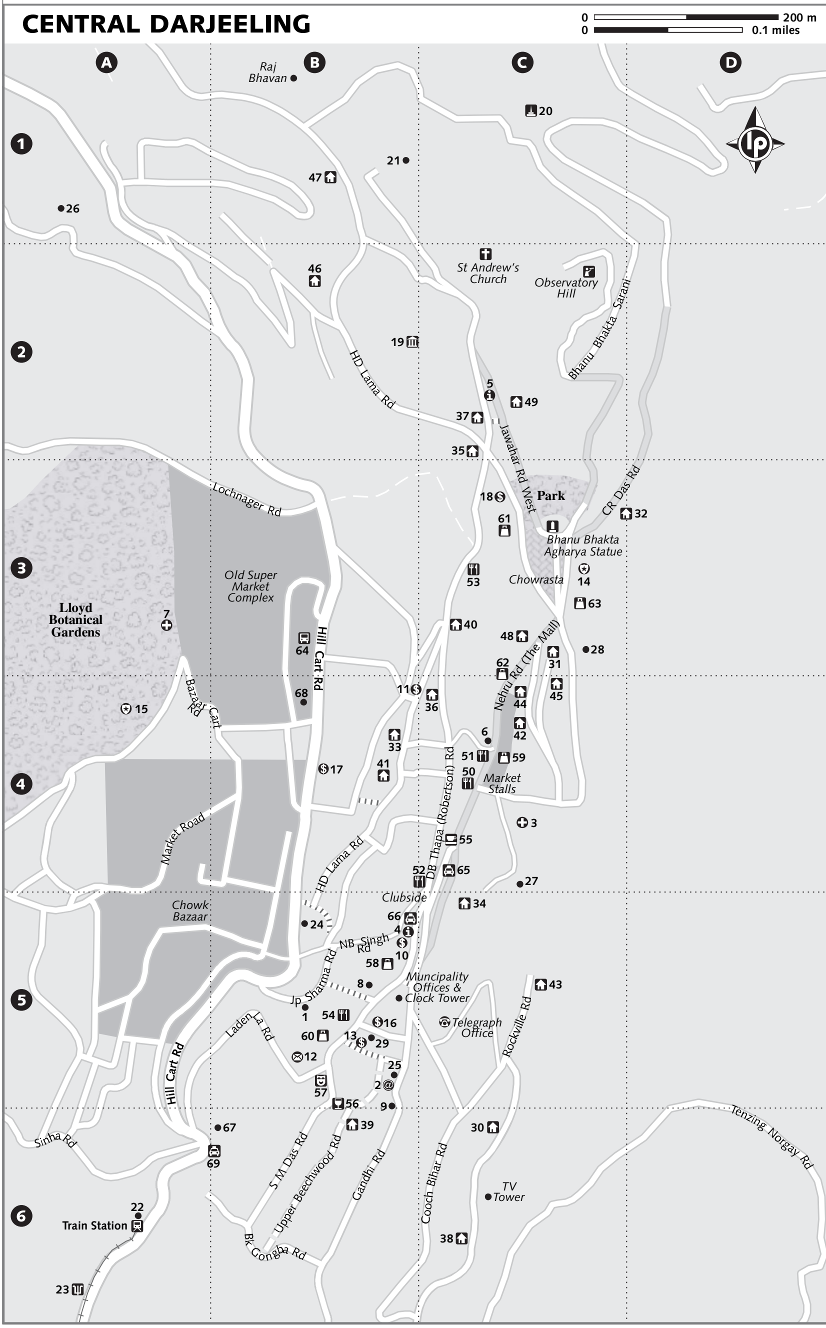
During one such dispute in 1828, two British officers stumbled across the Dorje Ling monastery, on a tranquil forested ridge, and passed word to Calcutta that it would be a perfect site for a sanatorium; they were sure to have also mentioned its strategic military importance in the region. The Chogyal of Sikkim (still grateful for the return of his kingdom) happily leased the uninhabited land to the East India Company in 1835 and a hill station was born.

Forest gradually made way for colonial houses and tea plantations, and by 1857 the population of Darjeeling reached 10,000, mainly because of a massive influx of Gurkha labourers from Nepal.



After Independence, the Gurkhas became the main political force in Darjeeling and friction with the state government led to calls for a separate state of Gorkhaland in the 1980s. In 1986, violence and riots orchestrated by the Gurkha National Liberation Front (GNLF) brought Darjeeling to a standstill. A compromise was hammered out in late 1988, which granted the newly formed Darjeeling Gorkha Hill Council (DGHC) a large measure of autonomy from the state government.

Although this appeased some Gurkhas, the breakaway Gorkhaland Liberation Organisation (GLO) and its armed wing, the Gorkha Volunteers' Cell (GVC), have continued to call for full secession. Since 2001 both the GVC and DGHC have been accused of political killings. Meanwhile the DGHC's internal wranglings over its relationship with Kolkata and Delhi have seen the introduction and dropping of 'Autonomous' in its name (and an 'A' in its acronym), and the proposal of a new council: Gorkha Hill Council, Darjeeling (GHCD).



Orientation

Darjeeling sprawls over a west-facing slope in a web of interconnecting roads and steep flights of steps. Near the top of town is the atmospheric and open square known as Chowrasta, the focal point of Victorian Darjeeling. North of Chowrasta is the forested Observatory Hill and skirting the hill is Bhanu Bhakta Sarani, from where there are stupendous views of Khangchendzonga. The zoo lies to the northwest, reached from Chowrasta on foot via HD Lama Rd.

Hill Cart Rd (aka Tenzing Norgay Rd), which runs the length of town, is Darjeeling's major vehicle thoroughfare. From the chaotic Chowk Bazaar it leads north towards the zoo and Himalayan Mountaineering Institute, and heads south past the train station en route to Ghoom. Nehru Rd (aka the Mall), the main shopping street, heads south from

See p542 for information on trekking around Darjeeling.

MOUNTAIN VIEWS

As with other hill stations, Himalayan views are a big attraction in Darjeeling. The skyline is dominated by Khangchendzonga, India's highest peak and the world's third-highest mountain. The name 'Khangchendzonga' is derived from the Tibetan words for 'big five-peaked snow fortress'. Views from lookouts along Bhanu Bhakta Sarani, which runs from Chowrasta around the north side of Observatory Hill, can be stunning in clear weather.

TIGER HILL

To set your eyes on a spectacular 250km stretch of Himalayan horizon, including Everest (8848m), Lhotse (8501m), Makalu (8475m), Khangchendzonga, Kabru (6691m) and Janu (7710m), rise early and get to Tiger Hill (Map p531; 2590m), 11km south of Darjeeling, above Ghoom.

The sunrise over the Himalaya from here is truly spectacular and has become a major tourist attraction, with convoys of jeeps leaving Darjeeling for Tiger Hill every morning during the high season around 4.30am. At the summit, you can either pay Rs 5 to stand in the pavilion grounds, or buy a ticket for one of the heated lounges in the pavilion (Rs 20 to 40, including a cup of chai).

Organised sunrise trips (usually with a detour to Batasia Loop on the way back) can be booked through a travel agency (left) or directly with jeep drivers at the Clubside taxi stand. It's also possible to jump on a jeep going to Tiger Hill from along Gandhi or Laden La Rds between 4am and 4.30am, allowing you to check whether skies are clear before you go. Return trips cost around Rs 65/450 per person/jeep.

Some people take the jeep one way to Tiger Hill and then spend their day wandering back to Darjeeling, visiting the gompas in Ghoom along the way.

TOY TRAIN

The Darjeeling Himalayan Railway (Map p532), known affectionately as the Toy Train, made its first journey along its precipice-topping, 2ft-wide tracks in September 1881 and is one of the few hill railways still operating in India. It's even listed as a World Heritage site. Besides its regular diesel service to/from New Jalpaiguri and steam service to/from Kurseong (p542), there are joy rides (Rs 240) during the high season that leave Darjeeling at 10am and 12.50pm for a two-hour steam-powered return trip to Ghoom. It's wise to book at least a day ahead at the train station (Hill Cart Rd).

TEA PLANTATIONS

Happy Valley Tea Estate (Map p531; Pamphawati Gurungni Rd; 8am-4pm Mon-Sat), below Hill Cart Rd, is worth visiting when the plucking and processing are in progress. March to May is the busiest time, but occasional plucking also occurs from June to November. An employee will whisk you through the aromatic factory and its various processes before politely demanding a tip – Rs 20 from each visitor is appropriate. Take the turn-off 500m northwest of the Office of the District Magistrate, or take Lochnager Rd from Chowk Bazaar.

See the boxed text, below, for more about Darjeeling tea.

OBSERVATORY HILL

Sacred to both Buddhists and Hindus, this hill was the site of the Dorje Ling monastery, the gompa that gave the city its name. Today, devotees of both religions come to a temple (Map p531) in a small cave, below the crest of the hill, to honour Mahakala, a Buddhist deity and an angry form of the Hindu god Shiva. The summit is marked by several shrines, a flurry of colourful prayer flags and the notes from numerous devotional bells. A path leading up to the hill through giant Japanese cedars starts about 300m along Bhanu Bhakta Sarani from Chowrasta. Be careful of the marauding monkeys.

GOMPAS & PAGODAS

Together, Darjeeling and Ghoom are home to a number of fascinating Buddhist monasteries. Probably the most scenic is Bhutia Busty Gompa (Map p532), with Khangchendzonga providing a spectacular backdrop. The shrine originally stood on Observatory Hill, but was rebuilt in its present location by the chogyals of Sikkim in the 19th century. The gompa houses a fine gold-accented mural and the original copy of the Tibetan Book of the Dead, but permission is required to see it. To get here, follow CR Das Rd downhill for 400m from Chowrasta and take the right fork where the road branches.

ANYONE FOR TEA?

The tea bush was first brought to Darjeeling from Assam by British planters looking for a way to break China's monopoly over the tea trade. Credit for the discovery of tea as it's drunk in the Western world should really go to the Khamti and Singpho tribes of Assam, who first introduced British explorers to the healing powers of fermented tea leaves brewed in hot water.

Darjeeling produces around 25% of India's tea, including some of the world's finest brews, but there's more to tea than just plucking and drying. After picking, the leaves are placed in a 'withering trough', where high-speed fans reduce the moisture content to around 30%, before they're rolled with heavy rollers to force the remaining water onto the surface. The rolled leaves are then fermented in a high-humidity chamber to produce their distinctive flavour; this is a fine art and too little or too much fermentation can spoil the entire batch. Fermentation is stopped by passing the leaves through a dry air chamber, which reduces the moisture to just 3%. With all this hot air flowing around, the smell of tea permeates every corner of the tea factory.

The finished tea is sorted into grades – unbroken leaves are set aside for Golden Flowery Orange Pekoe teas, while broken leaves end up as Golden Broken Orange Pekoe, Orange Fannings and Dust – and then graded by expert tasters, who march up and down long lines of teacups, sampling every crop and grading it according to colour, taste and fragrance. Low-grade leaves are blended into household teas, while the best leaves are sold to international tea traders. Teas from estates around Darjeeling and Kurseong (also marketed as Darjeeling tea) regularly and justifiably achieve the world's highest prices. To buy a brew, see p541.

Yiga Choling Gompa (Map p531; camera per photo Rs 10), the region's most famous monastery, exudes a feeling of warmth that is not lost on most who visit here. First built in 1850, it enshrines a 5m-high statue of the Maitreya Buddha (Future Buddha) along with 300 of the most beautifully bound Tibetan texts. It's just west of Ghoom, about a 10-minute walk off Hill Cart Rd. Other gompas of interest in this area include the fortresslike Sakya Choling Gompa (Map p531) and the Samten Choling Gompa (Map p531), with the protector Garuda atop its ornate Buddha backdrop. These gompas are both on Hill Cart Rd and can be reached by share jeep from Darjeeling (Rs 10).

About halfway between Ghoom and Darjeeling is the vast Druk Sangak Choling Gompa (Map p531), inaugurated by the Dalai Lama in 1993. Known for its vibrant frescoes, it houses 300 Himalayan monks who study philosophy, literature, astronomy, meditation, dance and music.

On the opposite side of the ridge is the welcoming Mak Drong Gompa (Map p531). It's also known as Aloobari Gompa and is a pleasant walk (45 minutes) from town.

Perched on a hillside at the end of AJC Bose Rd is the gleaming white Japanese Peace Pagoda (Map p531; pujas 4.30-6am & 4.30-6.30pm), one of more than 70 pagodas built by the Japanese Buddhist Nipponzan Myohoji organisation around the world. Drumming resonates through the forested grounds during their daily pujas (prayers). It's about a 35-minute walk from Clubside along Gandhi and AJC Bose Rds.

PADMAJA NAIDU HIMALAYAN ZOOLOGICAL PARK

This zoo (Map p531; admission incl Himalayan Mountaineering Institute Indian/foreigner Rs 20/100; 8.30am-4.30pm Fri-Wed, ticket counter closes 4pm) was established in 1958 to study, conserve and preserve Himalayan fauna. This is one of India's better zoos and the animals are cared for by dedicated keepers. Housed within the rocky and forested environment is India's only collection of Siberian tigers, as well as Himalayan black bears, red pandas, snow leopards and Tibetan wolves. The Himalayan Nature Interpretation Centre (admission Rs 5; 2.30-4pm) in the middle of the zoo has tacky wildlife dioramas featuring the snow leopard and clouded leopard.

The zoo is a pleasant 30-minute walk down from Chowrasta along Jawahar Rd West; alternatively, take a share jeep from the Chowk Bazaar bus/jeep station (Rs 10, about 10 minutes) or a private taxi (Rs 50).

HIMALAYAN MOUNTAINEERING INSTITUTE

Tucked away within the grounds of the zoological park, this prestigious mountaineering institute (Map p531; HMI; ☎ 2254087; www.exploredarjeeling.com/hmidarj.htm; admission incl zoo Indian/foreigner Rs 20/100; 8.30am-4.30pm Fri-Wed) was founded in 1954 and has provided training for some of India's leading mountaineers. Within the complex is the fascinating Everest Museum, which traces the history of attempts on the world's highest peak. Next door is the Mountaineering Museum, with a relief model of the Himalaya, dusty specimens of Himalayan fauna and more historic mountaineering equipment.

On a nearby hilltop, where Tenzing Norgay was cremated, stands the Tenzing Samadhi statue. The intrepid mountaineer lived in Darjeeling for most of his life and was the director of the institute for many years.

Various mountaineering courses are offered here (see p538).

TIBETAN REFUGEE SELF-HELP CENTRE

Established in 1959, this refugee centre (Map p531; Lebong Cart Rd; dawn-dusk Mon-Sat) comprises a home for the aged, school, orphanage, clinic, gompa and craft workshops that produce carpets, woodcarvings, leatherwork and woollen items. There's also an interesting photographic exhibition portraying the establishment and workings of the centre.

The refugees are welcoming, so wander through the workshops; the spinning wheels are a testament to their improvisational genius. The handicrafts are for sale in the showroom (☎ 2252552), which doesn't have as many knick-knacks as the souvenir shops in town, but the proceeds go straight back into the Tibetan community. See p541 for details regarding Tibetan rugs, and p1160 if you're interested in volunteering.

Share jeeps from the Chowk Bazaar bus/jeep station run along Lebong Cart Rd and pass the turn-off to the centre (Rs 10, about 20 minutes). You can also walk here from Chowrasta along CR Das Rd. It's easy to get lost, so ask for directions along the way. A chartered taxi costs around Rs 200 return.

LLOYD BOTANICAL GARDENS

These pleasant gardens (Map p532; ☎ 2252358; admission free; ⏰ 8am-4.30pm) contain an impressive collection of Himalayan plants, most famously orchids and rhododendrons, as well as temperate trees from around the world. It's a lovely respite from the bustle of central Darjeeling. Look for the magnificent wisterias planted in 1878, now escaping from their glasshouse. Follow the signs along Lochnager Rd from the Chowk Bazaar bus/jeep station. A map and guide (Rs 5) is available from the park office.

OTHER ATTRACTIONS

The most conspicuous Hindu temple in Darjeeling, Dhirdham Mandir (Map p532), is a replica of the famous Pashupatinath Temple in Kathmandu. It's easy to find – just below the Darjeeling train station. There's a great view over Darjeeling from its grounds.

If you're travelling on the Toy Train, or walking back from Tiger Hill, look out for the scenic and sobering Gorkha war memorial (Map p531; admission Rs 5; ⏰ dawn-dusk) where the train makes its famous Batasia Loop.

The Bengal Natural History Museum (Map p532; Bishop Eric Benjamin Rd; adult/child Rs 5/2; ⏰ 10am-4pm), established in 1903, houses a mildewed and moth-eaten collection of Himalayan and Bengali species – try not to laugh at the stuffed crocodile. The museum is hidden away in a compound just off Bishop Eric Benjamin Rd.

WHITE-WATER RAFTING

Darjeeling is the easiest place to organise white-water rafting trips along the Rangeet and Teesta Rivers. Rafting trips leave from Teesta Bazaar (p548), along the road to Kalimpong. The rapids are graded from Grade II to Grade IV, and the best times for rafting are September to November and March to June.

The DGHC (Map p532; ☎ 2255351; Jawahar Rd West; ⏰ 9am-7pm daily high season, 10am-4.30pm Mon-Sat, 10am-1pm Sun low season; moderate rapids 11/18/25km trip Rs 350/450/700, challenging rapids Rs 500/600/800) runs trips for minimums of four to six people and can also arrange transport to Teesta Bazaar (Rs 350) and accommodation at its Chitrey Wayside Inn (p548). Private companies, such as Samsara Tours, Travels & Treks (Map p532; ☎ 2252874; samsara1@sancharnet.in; Laden La Rd; tours Rs 1200-1700), offer similar routes, for a minimum of four people, and its prices include lunch and transport.

OTHER ACTIVITIES

The Darjeeling Gymkhana Club (Map p531; ☎ 2254341; Jawahar Rd West; membership per day/week Rs 50/250)

DARJEELING, EVEREST & TENZING

There's a statue in Siliguri and one in Darjeeling, and the road linking the two is named after him. Tenzing Norgay looms large in Darjeeling, where his son, Jamling, himself an Everest summitteer, lives in the family house from where he leads mountaineering and trekking expeditions.

Tenzing Norgay was just 18 years old in 1932 when he left his village of Thame, in the Khumbu region of Nepal, to seek adventure and income with the new trend: European-led mountaineering expeditions. Lining up for work with other hopeful sherpas at the Planters' Club in Darjeeling each season, Tenzing would eventually get his first tilt at Everest with Eric Shipton in 1935. These early expeditions approached Everest from the north (Tibet), after weeks of walking from Darjeeling via Kalimpong, Jelepla and Tibet's Chumbi Valley.

After several attempts on Everest and numerous successful climbs on other peaks over the next two decades, Tenzing Norgay joined John Hunt's British Everest expedition of 1953 and made history with the rangy bee keeper from New Zealand, Edmund Hillary. Tenzing became a world figure much in demand, but remained in Darjeeling to be with his family and to develop the Himalayan Mountaineering Institute.

British, Nepali and Indian nationalism ensured a spectacular and occasionally contentious celebration of the great climb. The 'who reached there first?' question was quickly elevated from innocent curiosity to nationalist politics by a sensationalist media. It is still the question at the top of the list when Jamling gives motivational speeches in the West. As detailed in Touching My Father's Soul, Jamling admits also asking this of his father, mentor and inspiration, 12 months prior to Tenzing's death. As for Jamling's own response to this impertinent question under a typically wet and grey Darjeeling sky: 'It doesn't matter, the peak is a dome that can support several climbers simultaneously.'

offers tennis, squash, badminton, roller-skating and table tennis; call to check the schedules.

Be an aristocrat for the day and join the Planters' Club Darjeeling (Map p532; ☎ 2254348; per day Rs 100). Lounge in style or rack them up in the billiards room (Rs 100 per person per hour) and pray the power doesn't cut out.

From Chowrasta, children can take a pony ride around Observatory Hill for Rs 40, or through tea estates to visit a monastery for Rs 80 per hour.

Courses

LANGUAGE

Beginner and advanced lessons in written and spoken Tibetan are offered at the Manjushree Centre of Tibetan Culture (Map p532; ☎ 2256714; www.manjushree-culture.org; 12 Ghandi Rd; 3-/6-/9-month courses Rs 9030/13,760/18,490 plus Rs 1350 registration; Mar-Dec). It also supplies discounted guesthouse accommodation for students.

MOUNTAINEERING

The Himalayan Mountaineering Institute (p536) runs 15-day adventure courses (US$325), including climbing, jungle survival and canoeing, and 28-day basic and advanced mountaineering courses (US$650), between March and December. Foreigners should apply directly to the centre at least three months in advance.

Tenzing Norgay Climbing Club (Map p531; ☎ 2258045; DB Giri Rd; per day Rs 300) runs indoor/outdoor climbing courses using modern equipment and techniques.

COOKING

The owner at Hot Stimulating Café (Map p531; Jawahar Rd West; lessons Rs 600) offers informal momo-making lessons.

Tours

During the high season the DGHC and other travel agencies offer a variety of tours around Darjeeling. The half-day 'seven-point tour' (Rs 75 per person) includes the zoo, Himalayan Mountaineering Institute, Tibetan Refugee Self-Help Centre and several viewpoints. See p534 for Tiger Hill sunrise-tour information.

Taxis can be hired for custom tours for around Rs 600 per half-day.

Sleeping

Darjeeling has an ever-increasing number of hotels crowding the ridge and only a small selection is mentioned here. Prices given are for the high season (October to early December and mid-March to June), when it is wise to book ahead. In the low season prices can drop by 50%; however, feel free to negotiate at any time. Most midrange hotels occupy the centre of town, while the top-end choices opt for the leafy havens north of Chowrasta. The nicest budget options stand atop the ridge, and reward travellers with vistas and exercise.

BUDGET

All choices below have private bathrooms and free hot water (either geyser or bucket), unless stated otherwise. Most hotels have both squat and sit-down flush toilets available.

Triveni Guest House (Map p531; ☎ 2253878; Dr Zakir Hussain Rd; dm Rs 60, s with shared bathroom Rs 80, d Rs 160-200) This is a simple lodge – the dorm has only three beds – but it's popular and very friendly. Rooms are spartan but clean and some have nice views, as does the inexpensive restaurant. Bucket hot water is Rs 10.

Hotel Long Island (Map p532; ☎ 2252043; Dr Zakir Hussain Rd; s Rs 150, d Rs 200-250) A basic option with simple rooms that have views. Toilets are attached but hot-water showers are shared.

Hotel Aliment (Map p531; ☎ 2255068; alimentweb@sify.com; Dr Zakir Hussain Rd; d Rs 250-400; 💻) A travellers favourite with good food (and cold beer), a library, rooftop patio, helpful owners and cosy wood-lined rooms. The upstairs rooms have a TV and valley views. All rooms have geysers, but they only operate for 1½ hours in the evening.

Andy's (Map p532; ☎ 2253125; Dr Zakir Hussain Rd; s/d from Rs 250/300) This simple, spotless, stone-walled place is a friendly option that has airy, carpeted rooms and a rooftop terrace with a great view. It asks for a 50% payment upfront.

Hotel Pagoda (Map p532; ☎ 2253498; Upper Beechwood Rd; d Rs 250, with shared bathroom Rs 200) Though lacking views, this is a conveniently located budget option offering small, clean rooms. It's tucked away on an alley off some steps above the post office on Laden La Rd.

Maple Tourist Lodge (Map p532; ☎ 2252813; Old Kuchery Rd; s/d Rs 360/475, with shared bathroom Rs 240/315) This option is housed in an old colonial house below Observatory Hill. Ground-floor rooms are a bit damp, though others are better. Room and meal packages are available.

MIDRANGE

The following all have TV and private bathrooms with geysers, unless stated otherwise.

Hotel Alice Villa (Map p532; ☎ 2254181; hotelalicevilla@yahoo.com; 41 HD Lama Rd; d from Rs 700) This small hotel occupies a charming old bungalow close to Chowrasta and provides inexpensive heritage accommodation. The rooms are spacious and well cared for with plenty of character and cosy open fireplaces.

Pineridge Hotel (Map p532; ☎ 2254074; pineridgehotel@yahoo.com; Nehru Rd; s/d from Rs 750/850) Pity the Pineridge. So much restoration potential and a great location, but the reality is drafty, dilapidated standard rooms and only slightly better deluxe rooms. There's still some Raj charm, and with a bucket of coal (Rs 150) glowing in the fireplace maybe you can forget the broken window.

Dekeling Hotel (Map p532; ☎ 2254159; www.dekeling.com; Clubside; d Rs 850-1050) A warm, friendly welcome is guaranteed at this spotless, Tibetan-run hotel. Most of the comfortable rooms have views (and are priced accordingly) and there are great, cosy, common areas and a scenic loft. Breakfast (Rs 250) is served upstairs, while the hotel's excellent restaurant, Dekevas (p540), is on the ground floor. For those looking for a quiet getaway, talk to the owners about their out-of-town Hawk's Nest Resort.

Bellevue Hotel (Map p532; ☎ 2254075; www.darjeeling-bellevuehotel.com; Chowrasta; d Rs 900-1500) This rambling complex comprises a variety of wood-panelled rooms. Most are spacious with grass-mat floors, a wood-burning bukhari (heater) and a conspicuously absent TV. The affable staff, communal breakfast/lounge area and the outlook over Chowrasta towards Khangchendzonga all make this a popular choice.

Main Olde Bellevue Hotel (Map p532; ☎ 2254178; www.darjeelinghotel.com; Nehru Rd; d Rs 1000-1500) This welcoming hotel comprises two buildings, the lower one more modern, with a huge lounge and terrace, but ordinary rooms, and the other a Raj place too derelict to be called charming and too rustic to be comfortable, but apparently due for renovation.

Hotel Seven Seventeen (Map p532; ☎ 2252017; www.hotel717.com; 26 HD Lama Rd; s/d/tr Rs 1000/1300/1600) An inviting Tibetan-themed place with exceptionally friendly service and clean, though small, rooms. Don't confuse it with the other, older Hotel Seven Seventeen, which is up the street and closer to the Chowk Bazaar bus/jeep station.

our pick Elgin (Map p532; ☎ 2257226; elgin@elginhotels.com; HD Lama Rd; s/d Rs 4100/4400) This delightful, grand yet friendly heritage hotel is brimming with colonial ambience. Most of the elegantly furnished rooms have separate sitting areas, open fireplaces and marble bathrooms. The restaurant is pukka and the lovely gardens are the perfect place to relax and enjoy high tea.

Mayfair Hill Resort (Map p532; ☎ 2256376; www.mayfairhotels.com; Jawahar Rd West; s/d from Rs 5000/6000) Originally a maharaja's summer palace, and soon to be renamed Mayfair Darjeeling, this plush and genteel choice sits among lovingly manicured gardens and sculptures near the Raj Bhavan. Soft carpets, sumptuous leather, coal fires and fine art add to the warm welcome. When you have finished watching DVDs in your palatial room, head to the Library Bar or take a brisk shuffle around Observatory Hill.

Eating

Darjeeling has a great choice of restaurants dishing up Indian, Chinese, Tibetan and some good international fare, but the availability of ingredients is much more seasonal than found on the plains. Note that most restaurants close their doors by 8pm or 9pm.

Hot Stimulating Café (Map p531; Jawahar Rd West; meals Rs 20-40) This tiny café, on the road to the zoo, offers beautiful views and serves up simple, cheap meals and chai.

Frank Ross Café (Map p532; ☎ 2258194; Nehru Rd; mains Rs 20-105) This option is strictly vegetarian and offers a global menu, including pizzas, burgers, South Indian snacks, and even enchiladas, tacos and nachos.

Hotel Lunar (Map p532; Ghandi Rd, mains Rs 25-75) Lunar is one of the best vegetarian restaurants in Darjeeling where you also can enjoy a great view and wonderful service. It's squeezed beneath Hotel Dekeling and above Dekevas.

Hotel Chanakya (Map p532; ☎ 2257495; DB Thapa Rd; mains Rs 30-70) An authentic Bengali diner where you can fill up with veg and nonveg thalis and be confident the chilli isn't toned down for Western tastes.

Kunga Restaurant (Map p532; ☎ 2253971; 51 Ghandi Rd, mains Rs 35-70) Kunga's Tibetan cuisine is tasteful simplicity. Its steamed momos are legendary as are its thugpas (noodle soups; gyathuk, thenthuk and bhagthuk). For a filling breakfast, try its muesli and fruit curd.

Park Restaurant (Map p532; ☎ 2255270; Laden La Rd; mains Rs 30-140) The Park is popular with local tourists and fills up quickly. Savour North Indian curries or select from the fish- and chicken-dominated Thai Lemon Grass menu – all satisfactorily executed. There's no alcohol licence but it's worth asking for a beer.

La Casse Croute (Map p532; ☎ 2257594; HD Lama Rd; mains Rs 35-120) A one-table pizza joint that satisfies those looking for a change of taste: excellent pizzas, paninis, salads and sandwiches. Also serves breakfast, pancakes and good coffee.

Dekevas Restaurant (Map p532; ☎ 2254159; mains Rs 40-80) Cosy Dekevas is known for great Tibetan fare of momos and noodle soups, and pizzas, but not legroom.

our pick Glenary's (Map p532; Nehru Rd; dishes Rs 50-120; 11.30am-9pm) This elegant restaurant atop the famous bakery and café (see below) delights patrons with good food, grand views, cold beer and superior service. The continental sizzlers (veg and nonveg), Chinese dishes, curries and tandoori specials are excellent, though we'd like to see a greater selection of Indian cuisine. The chicken rashmi kebab (chicken marinated in spiced yogurt before being baked tandoori style) is divine.

SELF-CATERING

Frank Ross Pharmacy (Map p532; ☎ 2258194; Nehru Rd) As well as pharmaceuticals you can stock up on general groceries and imported foods, such as excellent Druk marmalade from Bhutan to replace the fluorescent substance that your hotel provides.

Drinking

Where in the world is a better place to sip a cup of Darjeeling tea? If a cool pint is your idea of drinking, there are a couple of good choices.

TEA

Glenary's (Map p532; Nehru Rd; small pot Rs 22; 7.30am-8pm, till 9pm in high season) Below the restaurant, this café is home to massive windows and grand views – order your tea, select a cake, grab your book and sink into some wicker.

Goodricke, the House of Tea (Map p532; Nehru Rd) Sit and sip up to nine varieties of brewed tea from local estates – cup and cookies Rs 20 – before purchasing packaged tea.

Elgin (Map p532; ☎ 2257226; HD Lama Rd; high tea Rs 150; 4.30-5pm) Take high tea with cakes, sandwiches and shortbread in the sunroom or out in the gardens.

Windamere Hotel (Map p532; ☎ 2254041; Jawahar Rd West; high tea Rs 240; 4.30-6pm) High tea with biscuits and all.

BARS

Joey's Pub (Map p532; SM Das Rd; beer Rs 80; 1-10pm) This friendly pub, near the post office, is the most atmospheric choice and it's also a great place to meet other travellers. It has European footy on TV, warm rum and cold beer.

Buzz (Map p532; 6-10.30pm) This kitsch Hollywood bar is in the basement at Glenary's. It has live bands Saturday and Sunday at 6.30pm.

Also recommended:

Windamere Hotel (Map p532; ☎ 2254041; Jawahar Rd West; 1-8pm) Sofas, slippers, pink gin and cold beer.

Entertainment

Inox Theatre (Map p532; ☎ 2257226; www.inoxmovies.com; Rink Mall, cnr Laden La & SM Das Rds; tickets Rs 60-130) Three cinemas and several classes of seating.

Shopping

DARJEELING TEA

This is some of the finest tea in the world and is a very popular and portable souvenir. The best supplier here, with over 50 varieties, is Nathmull's Tea Rooms (Map p532; www.nathmulltea.com; Laden La Rd). Expect to pay Rs 50 per 100g for a decent tea and up to Rs 1000 per 100g for the finest brews. Try before you buy at Goodricke, The House of Tea (Map p532; Nehru Rd).

Cheaper tea is available in Chowk Bazaar, but the packaging isn't particularly sturdy. Avoid the tea in fancy boxes, because it's usually blended and packaged in Kolkata.

TIBETAN CARPETS

Tibetan Refugee Self-Help Centre (Map p531; Lebong Cart Rd; ⌚ dawn-dusk Mon-Sat) Gorgeous carpets made to order and shipped to your home address.

Hayden Hall (Map p532; ☎ 2253228; Laden La Rd; ⌚ 9am-6pm Mon-Sat) Closer to Chowrasta, this place sells carpets as part of its charitable work (Rs 3600 to 4000 for a 3ft x 6ft carpet).

TREKKING GEAR

The Trekking Shop (Map p531; Singalila Market, Nehru Rd) sells satisfactory Nepali counterfeit clothing, and waterproofs and jackets, as well as Chinese- and Russian-made boots (larger sizes are rare).

OTHER SOUVENIRS

There are numerous souvenir shops at Chowrasta and along Gandhi and Nehru Rds selling Nepali woodcarvings (including masks), thangkas (Tibetan cloth paintings), religious objects and jewellery.

Das Studios (Map p532; ☎ 2254004; Nehru Rd; ⌚ 9am-6pm Mon-Sat) Sells photographic prints of Khangchendzonga and other places around Darjeeling.

Chowk Bazaar is a crowded, noisy and fascinating place to buy tea, spices and incense. There are several so-called Buddha shops at Chowk Bazaar and on NB Singh Rd, selling prayer flags, thangkas and prayer wheels.

> PERMITS FOR SIKKIM
> Forms for Sikkim permits (p570) are available at the Office of the District Magistrate (Map p532; ☎ 2254233; Hill Cart Rd; ⌚ 11am-1pm & 2.30-4pm Mon-Fri), downhill from the Chowk Bazaar bus/jeep station. They must be filled out and stamped here, and then taken to the Foreigners' Regional Registration Office (Map p532; ☎ 2254278; Laden La Rd; ⌚ 9.30am-5pm), which also stamps your form. Then go back to the magistrate's office, which issues the permit while you wait. The whole process takes about 1½ hours and there's no fee – bring your passport.

Getting There & Away

AIR

The nearest airport is 90km away at Bagdogra, about 12km from Siliguri. See p526 for details about flights to/from Bagdogra.

Indian Airlines (Map p532; ☎ 2254230; ⌚ 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) is at Chowrasta. Clubside Tours & Travels (Map p532; ☎ 2254646; clubside@satyam.net.in; JP Sharma Rd; ⌚ 8.30am-6pm) and Pineridge Travels (Map p532; ☎ 2253912; pineridge@dte.vsnl.net.in; ⌚ 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) are Jet Airways agents.

BUS

From the Chowk Bazaar bus/jeep station (Map p532), regular buses depart for Mirik (Rs 40, three hours) and Siliguri (Rs 60, three hours). Tickets can be bought from the ground-floor counter at the Old Super Market Complex (Map p532) that backs on to the station.

Kasturi Tours & Travels (Map p532; ☎ 2254430; Old Super Market Complex; ⌚ 8am-7pm) and Diamond Treks, Tours & Travels (Map p532; ☎ 2258961; Old Super Market Complex; ⌚ 8am-7pm) can book 'luxury' buses from Siliguri to destinations such as Kolkata (Rs 380, 12 hours). Samsara Tours, Travels & Treks (Map p532; ☎ 2257194; samsara1@sancharnet.in; Laden La Rd) offers similar services. These tickets don't include transfers to Siliguri.

JEEP & TAXI

Numerous share jeeps and taxis leave the crowded south end of the Chowk Bazaar bus/jeep station for Siliguri (Rs 80, 2½ hours) and Kurseong (Rs 40, 1½ hours). Jeeps leave for Mirik (Rs 50, 2½ hours) about every 1½ hours. Ticket offices on the ground floor of the Old Super Market Complex sell advance tickets for the frequent jeeps to Kalimpong (Rs 90, two hours) and Gangtok (Rs 130, four hours).

At the northern end of the station, three to four jeeps a day leave for Jorenthang (Rs 80, two hours), where it's easy to get a connection to anywhere in northern or West Sikkim. You must already have a permit to enter Sikkim (see p541) via this route.

Darjeeling Transport Corporation (Map p532; ☎ 9832081338, 2258967; Laden La Rd) has jeeps to Gangtok (share/charter Rs 130/1300, four hours, share jeeps depart 8.30am and 1pm) and Siliguri (share/charter Rs 80/800, 2½ hours, hourly).

To New Jalpaiguri or Bagdogra, get a connection in Siliguri, or charter a jeep or taxi from Darjeeling (Rs 1000).

TRAIN

The nearest major train station is at New Jalpaiguri (NJP), near Siliguri. Tickets can be bought for major services out of NJP at the Darjeeling train station's computerised reservations counter (Map p532; ☎ 2252555; 🕑 8am-2pm).

Darjeeling Himalayan Railway

The diesel toy train leaves Darjeeling at 9.15am for NJP (2nd/1st class Rs 45/247, seven hours), stopping at Ghoom (Rs 20/96, 50 minutes), Kurseong (Rs 26/144, three hours) and Siliguri (Rs 38/217, 6½ hours). It's an exhausting haul to NJP, so if you simply want to experience the train, take the steam train to/from Kurseong or the joy ride (p535).

TO/FROM NEPAL

Foreigners can only cross the border into Nepal at Kakarbhitta/Panitanki (not at Pasupati).

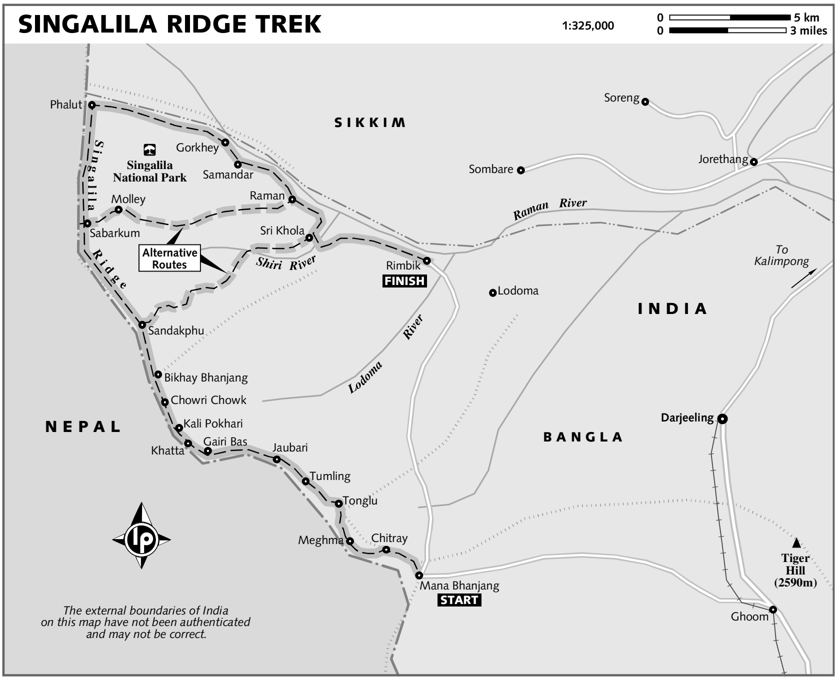
Diamond Treks, Tours & Travels (Map p532; ☎ 2258961; Old Super Market Complex) and Kasturi Tours & Travels (Map p532; ☎ 225 4430; Old Super Market Complex) sell tickets for buses from Darjeeling to Kathmandu (Rs 600). These are not direct buses and involve transfers in Siliguri and at the border – leaving room for problems. However, it's not difficult to do this yourself and you'll save some money. See p528 for Siliguri–Panitanki transport, as well as border and Nepali bus details.

Getting Around

Share jeeps to anywhere north of the city centre, eg North Point (Rs 5), leave from the northern end of the Chowk Bazaar bus/jeep station. To Ghoom, get a share jeep (Rs 12) from the Hill Cart Rd jeep stand at Chowk Bazaar (Map p532).

There are several taxi stands around town, but rates are absurd for short hops. You can hire a porter to carry your bags up to Chowrasta from Chowk Bazaar for around Rs 50.

TREKKING AROUND DARJEELING



A number of rewarding and picturesque treks are accessible from Darjeeling. October and November's clear skies and warm temperatures make it an ideal time to trek, as do the long days and rhododendron blooms of May and early June. The DGHC (Map p532; ☎ 2255351; Jawahar Rd West; 🕑 9am-7pm daily high season, 10am-4.30pm Mon-Sat, 10am-1pm Sun low season) produces the excellent Himalayan Treks leaflet, which includes a map and descriptions of major trekking routes.

Most popular is the Singalila Ridge Trek from Sandakphu to Phalut; it passes through scenic Singalila National Park (admission Rs 100, camera fee Rs 50) and offers Himalayan views. Guides (about Rs 350 per day) are mandatory and can be hired privately through travel agencies or at the trek's starting point in Mana Bhanjang, 26km from Darjeeling. Mana Bhanjang is served by morning buses from Darjeeling's Chowk Bazaar bus/jeep station (Rs 20, two hours). The usual trekking itinerary is described on below.

From Rimbik, there are connecting morning buses to Darjeeling (Rs 80, five hours). If you don't have five days, there are short cuts available at Sandakphu and Sabarkum. There are basic trekkers' huts (dm/d/tr Rs 100/400/500) at Mana Bhanjang, Tonglu, Garibas, Sandakphu, Phalut, Rammam, Srikhola and Rimbik – book through Glenary's (Map p532; Nehru Rd; 🕑 11.30am-9pm). You can organise meals at the huts for Rs 20 to 45. Other (better maintained) private accommodation options are available for similar prices along the route. All-inclusive guided treks on this route, including porters, meals and accommodation, are offered by Darjeeling travel agencies (p534) for Rs 1200 to 2000 per day depending on the level of service.

SINGALILA RIDGE TREK

Day	Route	Distance (km)
1	Mana Bhanjang (2130m) to Tonglu (3100m) via Meghma Gompa	14
2	Tonglu to Sandakphu (3636m) via Kalipokhri & Garibas	17
3	Sandakphu to Phalut (3600m) via Sabarkum	17
4	Phalut to Rammam (2530m) via Gorkey	16
5	Rammam to Rimbik (2290m) via Srikhola	19

Nearer to Kalimpong is the great Rochela Trek, which gives you a taste of the stunning Samthar Plateau (p548). You can trek for four to eight days through dense forests, visiting remote villages and crossing a pass at 3000m. Note that it takes four days, with camping, to reach the highpoint of Rochela from Kalimpong.

Recommended trekking agencies:

DGHC Tourist Reception Centre (Darjeeling, p534; Kalimpong, p544) Charges about Rs 2000 per day (all-inclusive) for Singalila Ridge and organises guides/porters (Rs 350 per day) for Rochela.

Gurudongma Tours & Travels (☎ 255204; www.gurudongma.com; Hilltop, Rinkingpong Rd, Kalimpong) Offering customised all-inclusive treks in this region, with knowledgeable guides and accommodation.

Samsara Tours, Travels & Treks (Map p532; ☎ 2252874; samsara1@sancharnet.in; Laden La Rd) Experienced agency offering reasonably priced rafting and trekking trips.

Tenzing Norgay Adventures (Map p531; ☎ 2253718; www.tenzing-norgay.com; DB Giri Rd) Professional outfit offering treks in Darjeeling, Sikkim, Tibet and Bhutan.

Trek Mate (Map p532; ☎ 2256611; chagpori@satyam.net.in; Nehru Rd) Readers have recommended the treks (Rs 1400 per person per day), while the rental gear is clean and well maintained.

If you need clothing or gear (and you should carry your own sleeping bag even if relying on huts), it can be rented from Trek Mate (sleeping bag Rs 30, down jacket Rs 20, boots Rs 30, rain gear Rs 15 per day). The Trekking Shop (p541) stocks clothing and boots. The DGHC in Kalimpong has a few tents for rent.

KALIMPONG

☎ 03552 / pop 42,980 / elev 1250m

This bustling bazaar town sprawls along a ridge overlooking the roaring Teesta River and within sight of Khangchendzonga. Kalimpong lacks Darjeeling's crowds and commercialism, yet it boasts Himalayan views, tranquil retreats, Buddha shops, temples and churches, and a fascinating nursery industry.

Kalimpong's early development as a trading centre focused on the wool trade with Tibet, across the Jelepla Pass. Like Darjeeling, Kalimpong once belonged to the chogyals of Sikkim, but it fell into the hands of the Bhutanese in the 18th century and later passed to the British, before becoming part of India at Independence. Scottish missionaries, particularly the Jesuits, made great efforts to win over the local Buddhists in the late 19th century and Dr Graham's famous orphanage and school is still running today.

The Gorkhaland movement is active in Kalimpong, so it's worth checking the security situation before you arrive. The Gurkha leader CK Pradhan was assassinated here in October 2002 after being implicated in an assassination attempt on the head of the GNLF, and is commemorated by a small shrine on the spot where he was gunned down.

Orientation & Information

Kalimpong is centred on its chaotic Motor Stand, where people mill and transport options come and go. Nearby are restaurants, cheap hotels and shopping, while most sights and quality accommodation are a few kilometres from town, accessed via DB Giri and Rinkingpong Rds.

The staff at the DGHC Tourist Reception Centre (☎ 257992; DB Giri Rd; ⏰ 9.30am-5pm) are very helpful, as is the private website www.kalimpong.org. The post office (☎ 255990; Rinkingpong Rd; ⏰ 9am-5pm Mon-Fri, till 4pm Sat) is next to the town hall.

The Central Bank (SDB Giri Rd; ⏰ 10am-3pm Mon-Fri, till noon Sat) and Soni Emporium (☎ 255030; DB Giri Rd; ⏰ 8am-8pm) exchange various currencies and travellers cheques for a small commission. Net Hut (per hr Rs 35; ⏰ 9am-8pm), near the Motor Stand, is a tight squeeze but the best internet option.

There is nowhere in Kalimpong to obtain permits for Sikkim, but free 15-day permits are available at the border at Rangpo (see p570). You need to present three passport photos.

WEST BENGAL

Sights

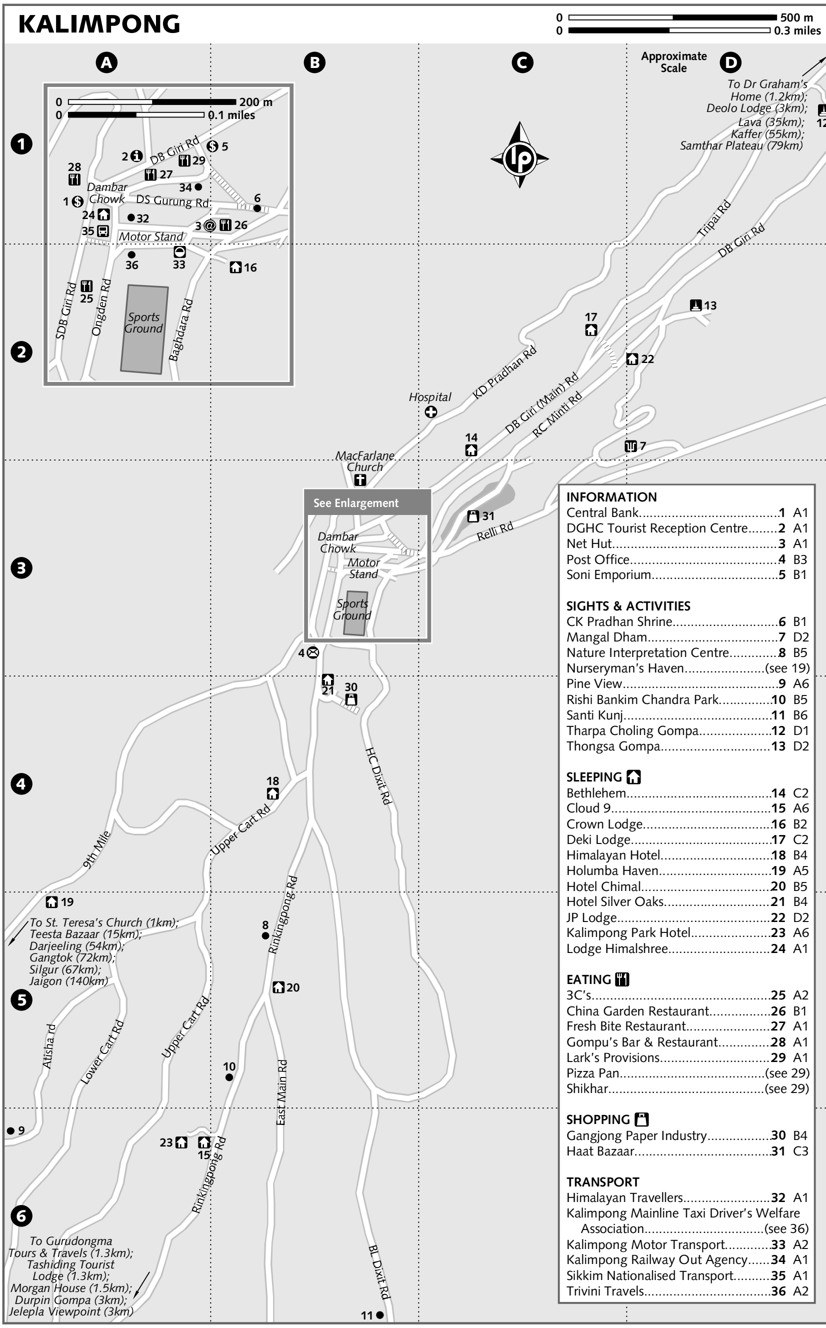
GOMPAS

Built in 1926, the Tharpa Choling Gompa, off KD Pradhan Rd, contains statues of the Bhaisajya, Sakyamuni and Maitreya Buddhas (past, present and future, respectively). Garuda protects each Buddha from above, his mouth devouring hatred and anger (the snake), while his feet hold down symbols of ignorance and worldly attachment. Interestingly, the controversial Dorje Shugden and other wrathful deities are kept in a locked room adjacent to the gompa. The small room is painted with images of flayed animals and humans. The controversy over the Dalai Lama's edict to not worship Shugden has split the local Tibetan community. It's a 30-minute walk (uphill) from town, past the top of Tripai Rd.

Near the top of RC Mintri Rd, past JP Lodge, is the ancient Thongsa Gompa (Bhutanese Monastery). The monastery was founded in 1692, but the present building, surrounded by 219 small prayer wheels, was built in the 19th century after the Gurkhas rampaged across Sikkim. Its old murals downstairs are fading, and upstairs you will find bright new frescoes.

Kalimpong's largest monastery, Zong Dog Palri Fo-Brang Gompa, aka Durpin Gompa, sits atop spectacular Durpin Hill (1372m) and was consecrated after its opening by the Dalai Lama in 1976. There are impressive wall and ceiling paintings in the main prayer room downstairs (photography is permitted), and interesting 3-D mandalas on the 2nd floor. Primarily Nyingpa, the monastery is a compilation of the many different sects of refugees who cooperated in its construction. From the highest storey you can see Siliguri on the plains and the top of Khangchendzonga. The monastery is located about 5km south of the town centre, and is best reached by chartered jeep (Rs 80 return). The Jelepla Viewpoint, about 300m below the gompa, looks out to the Himalaya and over the Relli and Teesta Rivers.

ST TERESA'S CHURCH



A fascinating missionary church built in 1929 by Swiss Jesuits and designed to gain acceptance from the locals, St Teresa's construction mimics a Bhutanese gompa. The carved apostles look like Buddhist monks, and the carvings on the doors resemble tashi tagye, the eight auspicious symbols of Himalayan Buddhism. The church is found off 9th Mile Rd, about 2km from town. Take a taxi or walk and ask for directions.

MANGAL DHAM

This ungainly modern temple (Relli Rd; ⏰ 6am-7pm) is sacred to Krishna. In its ballroomlike prayer hall there are eight vibrant, life-size dioramas from the Krishna Leela. The temple is dedicated to Guruji Shri Mangaldasji, who's commemorated in a shrine below the prayer hall. The temple is about 500m downhill from Thongsa Gompa, or you can walk from the centre along Relli Rd and turn left by the Roman Catholic church.

DR GRAHAM'S HOME

This working orphanage and school was built in 1900 by Dr JA Graham, a Scottish missionary, to educate the children of tea-estate workers, and now has more than 1300 students. There's a small museum (admission free; ⏰ 9am-3.30pm Mon-Fri) that commemorates the founder and his wife Katherine. The 1925 chapel above the school features fine stained-glass windows. The gate is 4km up the steep KD Pradhan Rd and the buildings are 650m from there. Many people charter a taxi to get here (Rs 80) and then walk back to town.

NURSERIES

Kalimpong is a major flower exporter and produces about 80% of India's gladioli, as well as many orchid varieties. Visit Nurseryman's Haven (☎ 256936; 9th Mile) to have a look at orchids; Santi Kunj (BL Dixit Rd; 8.30am-noon & 1.30-4pm Sun-Fri) to see anthuriums and the bird of paradise flower; and Pine View (www.pineviewcactus.com; Atisha Rd; admission Rs 5) to gaze at its eminently photographable cactus collection.

OTHER ATTRACTIONS

The Nature Interpretation Centre (Rinkingpong Rd; admission free; 10.30am-4pm Fri-Wed) has what must be the world's most educational badminton court. Around the court are a number of well-organised dioramas depicting the effects of human activity on the environment. It's an easy walk from the town centre. About 450m further up the hill is the small but serene Rishi Bankim Chandra Park (also known as Kalimpong Park).

Activities

The DGHC Tourist Reception Centre (☎ 257992; DB Giri Rd; 9.30am-5pm) can arrange treks (see p542) and the same rafting trips as the Darjeeling DGHC (see p537).

Gurudongma Tours & Travels (☎ 255204; www.gurudongma.com; Hilltop, Rinkingpong Rd) organises interesting tours, including trekking, rafting, mountain biking, bird-watching and fishing, around Kalimpong, Darjeeling and Sikkim.

Sleeping

The most memorable (and expensive) places to stay are well outside Kalimpong's busy core. You'll find cheaper options within walking distance of the Motor Stand. High-season rates (October to early December and mid-March to early June) are given below; prices can drop by 50% in the low season.

BUDGET

All hotels have private bathrooms and free bucket hot water, unless specified otherwise. Most give you the option of sit-down flush or squat toilets.

Lodge Himalshree (☎ 255070; Ongden Rd; s/d with shared bathroom Rs 100/150) This is a friendly but very basic little place on the top floor of a tall building right in the busiest part of town. The stairs are steep and the rooms are plain and clean. Hot-water buckets cost Rs 10.

Hotel Chimal (☎ 255776; Rinkingpong Rd; s/d from Rs 250/350) Hotel Chimal is set in lovely terraced gardens about 1km south of the Motor Stand. The rooms with private bathroom are basic affairs, but very clean, and the hosts are friendly and helpful.

Deki Lodge (☎ 255095; www.geocities.com/dekilodge; Tripai Rd; s/d/tr Rs 250/550/900) This older-style, Tibetan-owned lodge is close to the Thongsa and Tharpa Choling monasteries and still handy to town. It's a friendly place, with a pleasant café and rooftop viewing area.

Crown Lodge (☎ 255846; off Baghdara Rd; s/d Rs 350/600) The large rooms with TV, private bathrooms with geyser, and some comfortable furnishings with character make the Crown Lodge a good choice.

JP Lodge (☎ 257457; www.jplodge.com; RC Mintri Rd; d Rs 650, with shared bathroom Rs 450) The hosts here are very friendly and the smallish rooms are clean and bright, and most have views. There's an interesting wood-lined attic with views to lounge about in.

MIDRANGE & TOP END

All places listed here have private bathrooms and running hot water; most also have TVs.

Tashiding Tourist Lodge (☎ 255929; Rinkingpong Rd; s Rs 400-750, d Rs 800-1000) Set in overgrown gardens, with the feel of an abandoned Raj summer cottage, this rustic stone lodge looks charming from the outside but is very neglected inside. Furnishings are rudimentary and the bathrooms are of questionable functionality. For this price it is advised to check your room first.

Morgan House (☎ 255384; Rinkingpong Rd; s Rs 500-1500, d Rs 1100-2000) This is the upscale version of the nearby Tashiding Tourist Lodge – both government-managed heritage properties – and doesn't it show. Boasting a glorious setting and outward appearance, the uninterested staff and dog-eared rooms nevertheless disappoint.

Cloud 9 (☎ 259554; cloud9kpg@yahoo.com; Rinkingpong Rd; d Rs 700-800) A very friendly place, with wood-panelled rooms, a cosy TV lounge and a good restaurant and bar, serving Bhutanese, Tibetan and Chinese food, downstairs.

our pick Holumba Haven (☎ 256936; www.holumba.com; 9th Mile; s/d from Rs 850/1050) This welcoming guesthouse is situated in a splendid orchid nursery, Nurseryman's Haven, just 1km out of town. The spotless rooms are arranged in cottages secreted around the lush landscaped garden and springwater is piped directly into the rooms. Some cottages have attached kitchens, but excellent home-style meals are available in the dining room. The owners are an open encyclopaedia on Kalimpong's history and attractions.

Kalimpong Park Hotel (☎ 255304; www.indiamart.com/kalimpongparkhotel; s/d from Rs 1300/1800) This hotel, off Rinkingpong Rd, was the former home of the maharaja of Dinajpur and has oodles of Raj-era charm. Wicker chairs and flowers line the veranda, and there's a delightful bar and restaurant. The rooms in the new wing lack the charm of the old house.

Deolo Lodge (☎ 274452; Deolo Hill; d Rs 1500) Commanding outstanding views (when not lost in the cloud), this DGHC hotel sits atop Deolo Hill, high above and several kilometres from town. The spacious rooms are clean and the staff friendly; there's a multicuisine restaurant and ample clean mountain air.

Himalayan Hotel (☎ 254043; www.himalayanhotel.co.in; Upper Cart Rd; s/d Rs 1600/2500, with 3 meals Rs 2400/4100) This hotel was opened by the revered David MacDonald, an interpreter from Francis Younghusband's mission to Lhasa in 1904 and one of those who helped the 13th Dalai Lama escape Tibet in 1910. Now run by his grandson, the original rooms have loads of Raj appeal beneath high Himalayan-oak ceilings and the balcony is a great place to socialise or curl up with a book. The new suites mesh old-world charm with modern comfort; their terraces gaze upon Khangchendzonga.

Hotel Silver Oaks (☎ 255296; silveroaks@elginhotels.com; Rinkingpong Rd; s/d Rs 3800/4100) This Raj-era homestead has been delightfully renovated into a modern and very comfortable hotel. The rooms are spacious, beautifully furnished and offer grand views down the valley. The tariff includes all meals in the excellent restaurant and there's a sociable bar.

Eating

RESTAURANTS

Besides the options below, most midrange and top-end hotels have quality restaurants.

Shikhar (☎ 255966; DB Giri Rd; mains Rs 8-20) This hugely popular vegetarian restaurant with Tibetan and Indian snacks and meals is tucked under the Pizza Pan restaurant. Ultra-cheap momos and filling chow mein are the most popular orders.

Fresh Bite Restaurant (☎ 274042; DB Giri Rd; mains Rs 30-60) A menu covering everything from miso soup to buff steak spaghetti draws in locals and travellers. The food is quite good and the owner has a country retreat, which he will no doubt mention. The restaurant is upstairs, across from the DGHC.

China Garden Restaurant (☎ 257456; Lal Gulli; mains Rs 35-90) In the China Garden Hotel near the Motor Stand, this is Kalimpong's best Chinese restaurant. The authentic soups, noodles and the spicy ginger chicken attract aficionados, though several Indian curries have snuck onto the menu.

Gompu's Bar & Restaurant (☎ 257456; off SDB Giri Rd; mains Rs 40-90) Gompu's is famous for its massive momos (pork, chicken and veg), and has been pleasing locals and travellers with Tibetan, Bhutanese, Indian, Chinese and continental fare for ages. It's found within the hotel of the same name.

Pizza Pan (☎ 258650; DB Giri Rd; mains Rs 80-120) The 'acceptable pizzas for Kalimpong', as one local quipped, come in two sizes with a variety of veg and non-veg toppings, and are indeed acceptable, as is the coffee.

QUICK EATS

Kalimpong cheese has been produced in Kalimpong since the Jesuits established a dairy here in the 19th century. Kalimpong lollipops share a history with the cheese; they are made at the dairy from milk, sugar and butter.

Lark's Provisions (DB Giri Rd) The best place to pick up Kalimpong cheese (per kg Rs 150) and a packet of Kalimpong lollipops (Rs 25). Also sells groceries and crackers.

3C's (SDB Giri Rd; cakes & snacks Rs 5-30) A popular bakery and restaurant offering various pastries and cakes.

Shopping

As you wander around you will notice lots of Buddha shops. These are wholesale shops selling to retailers and distributors from all over India and worth a look for a bargain. Along RC Mintri Rd there's a profusion of fabric shops selling Tibetan cloth and Indian or Chinese silk brocade – both higher in quality and lower in cost than that seen in Darjeeling.

Gangjong Paper Industry (Primtam Rd; 🕙 10am-6pm) This small place, hiding below Hotel Silver Oaks, is a bit whiffy: apparently the fibre from the bark of the daphne tree that goes into this paper is resistant to all sorts of attack and decay. There's a small showroom selling attractive notebooks, greeting cards, lanterns etc coloured with natural dyes.

Haat Bazaar (btwn Relli & RC Mintri Rds) On Wednesday and Saturday, this normally quiet bazaar roars to life, attracting nearby villagers who can buy anything from flip-flops to aromatic spices.

Lava & Kaffer

The picturesque drive from Kalimpong passes through mist and moss-laden old-growth forests.

Daffey Munal Tourist Lodge (☎ 03552-277218; dm Rs 100, d with private bathroom & geyser Rs 600) has huge, clean rooms with fireplaces. It's a rambling old place in Kaffer run by the DGHC.

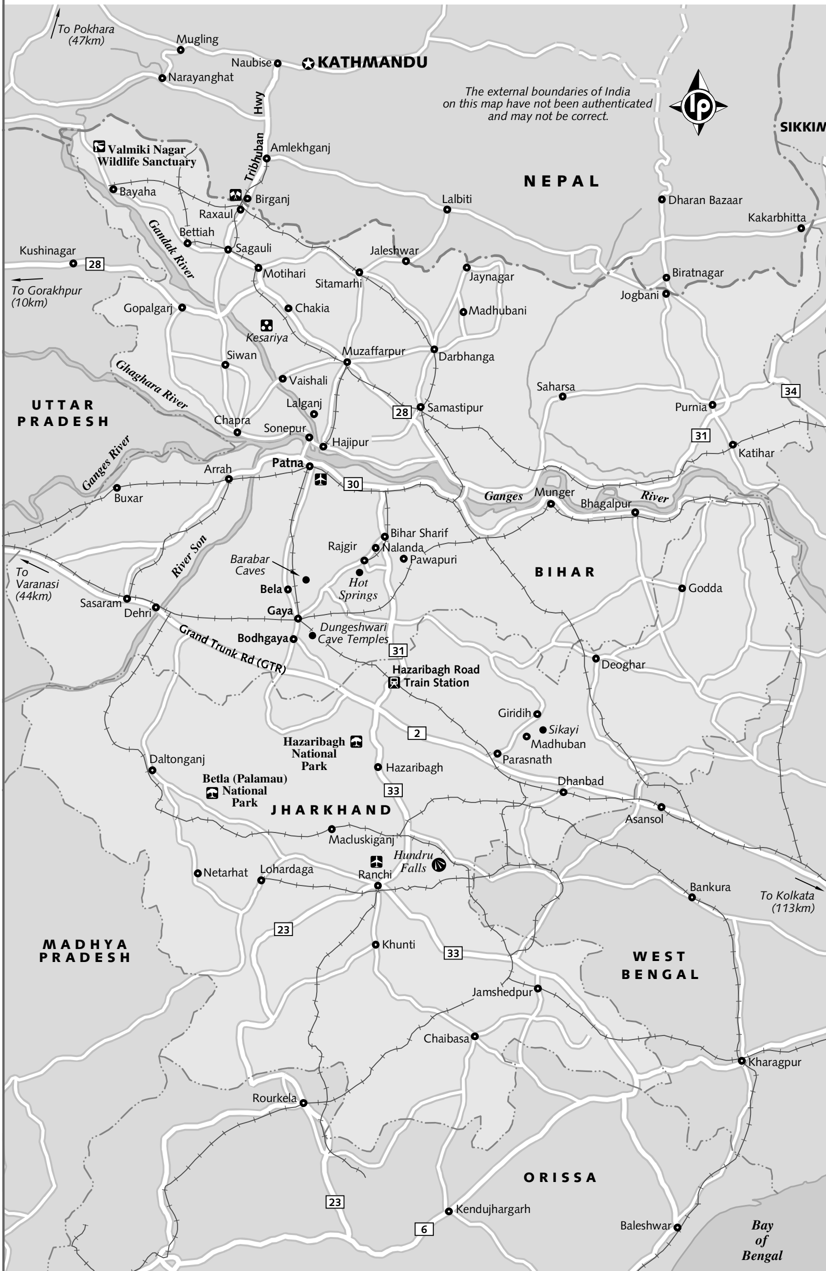
It'll arrange transport for its customers from Kalimpong.

Bihar & Jharkhand

The birthplace of Buddhism in India, Bihar occupies an important place in India's cultural and spiritual history. Siddhartha Gautama – the Buddha – spent much of his life here and attained enlightenment beneath a bodhi tree at Bodhgaya – making it the most significant Buddhist pilgrimage site in the world. Little more than a rural village, Bodhgaya is peppered with international monasteries and attracts devotees from around the world to meditate and soak up the powerful ambience. Following a trail of ancient and modern Buddhist sites, you can visit the extensive ruins of Nalanda, one of the ancient world's first universities, the many shrines and temples at nearby Rajgir, and the great Ashokan pillar at Vaishali.

After a controversial vote in the Indian Parliament in August 2000, Bihar was split along tribal lines, creating the new southern state of Jharkhand. Home to numerous waterfalls and lush forests, Jharkhand is notable as the key Jain pilgrimage site in east India, though the state's best-kept secret is Betla National Park, where you can ride atop an elephant into the forest's depths in search of an elusive tiger.



Unfortunately, the twin states of Bihar and Jharkhand are one of India's poorest and most troubled regions. Wracked by widespread government corruption, sporadic intercaste warfare, kidnappings, extortion, banditry and Naxalite violence, Bihar remains the least literate and most lawless part of India – maligned as a basket case and the antithesis of the economically prosperous 'new India'. All this keeps it well off most travellers' radars, but don't be put off. This is India, barely diluted by tourism and all the more intriguing for it.

- Plug your nose and wade into India's largest livestock fair at the Sonepur Mela (p551) – an event that makes Pushkar's camel fair look like a Sunday market

- Glimpse a tiger from atop an elephant deep within the forest of the Betla (Palamau) National Park (p567)

BIHAR & JHARKHAND

History

Prince Siddhartha Gautama arrived in Bihar during the 6th century BC and spent many years here, before leaving enlightened as the Buddha. The life of Mahavira, a contemporary of Buddha and the founder of Jainism, was also entwined with Bihar. In the 4th century BC, after Chandragupta Maurya seized power of the Magadha kingdom and its capital Pataliputra (now Patna), he expanded to the Indus Valley and created the first great Indian empire. His grandson, Ashoka, succeeded him and ruled the Mauryan empire from Pataliputra, which is rumoured to have been the largest city in the world at that time. Emperor Ashoka later embraced Buddhism, building stupas, monuments and his famous Ashokan pillars throughout northern India – notably at Sarnath (Uttar Pradesh) and Sanchi (Madhya Pradesh). In Bihar, Ashoka built the original shrine on the site of today's Mahabodhi Temple in Bodhgaya (p558) and the lion-topped pillar at Vaishali (p556).

Bihar continued to be coveted by a succession of major empires until the Magadha dynasty rose again to glory during the reign of the Guptas (4th and 5th centuries AD), followed by the Palas of Bengal, who ruled until 1197.

Bihar was part of the Bengal presidency under the British Raj until 1912, when a separate state was formed. Part of this state later became Orissa and, most recently in 2000, Jharkhand.

Information

Although there are state tourism offices in every major town, they are uniformly useless – if staffed at all! The most helpful place for practical information on Bihar and Jharkhand is the India tourism office (☎ 2345776; goitopatna@vsnl.net) in Patna. Also try the following websites:

FAST FACTS

- Population: 82.9 million (Bihar), 26.9 million (Jharkhand)
- Area: 173,877 sq km
- Capital: Patna (Bihar), Ranchi (Jharkhand)
- Main language: Hindi
- When to go: October to March

Dangers & Annoyances

The extreme poverty and general lawlessness in Bihar and Jharkhand can make buses and private hire cars targets for dacoits (bandits), who periodically use mock accidents and roadworks to stop vehicles. There has also been an alarming rise in banditry and violence reported aboard trains, despite an increasing military presence. Growing Maoist and Naxalite activity only adds to the region's reputation as the most dangerous in the country. While state authorities play down the law-and-order problems, newspaper reports and local attitudes suggest there is a long way to go towards cleaning up these states.

Foreign tourists are not specific targets and chances are you won't encounter any trouble, but it's a good idea to split up your valuables

FESTIVALS IN BIHAR & JHARKHAND

Pataliputra Mahotsava (Mar; Patna, p554) Patna celebrates its historic past with parades, sports, dancing and music.
Rajgir Mahotsava (24-26 Oct; Rajgir, p563) At the Indian Classical Performing Arts Festival, Indian folk dances are performed along with devotional song and instrumental music.
Chhath Festival (Oct/Nov; Bihar statewide) Biharis line river banks to celebrate this festival, which pays respects to Surya, the Sun God. At sunset on the sixth day after Diwali, married women, having fasted for two days, partially immerse themselves in nearby rivers offering fruits and flowers to the deity from bamboo baskets over a minimum two-hour period. The following sunrise, devotees return to the river and celebrate with prayers and traditional music.
Sonepur Mela (Nov/Dec; Sonepur, p556) With 700,000 devotees and countless thousands of animals taking part, this three-week festival is four times the size of Pushkar's camel fair and easily the region's largest and most odoriferous festival.

if making long journeys and avoid travelling after dusk. Always check the security situation before arriving: Bihar Times (www.bihartimes.com) and Patna Daily (www.patnadaily.com) have local news in English.

Flooding ensures that many roads, especially those on the northern flood plains, are unpassable during the monsoon and painfully potholed during the rest of the year, especially in Bihar.

For more information on security issues, see p1131.

> WHO ARE THE NAXALITES?
> Though the name would perfectly suit an alien species in an upcoming sci-fi movie, this term is used for various communist groups who continue to wage a violent struggle for land reform against landlords and India's power base on behalf of landless labourers and Adivasis (tribal people). During the spring of 1967, peasant cadres occupied land and staged a bloody uprising in the northern West Bengal village of Naxalbari, and from that day the guerrilla terrorists were termed Naxalites.

BIHAR

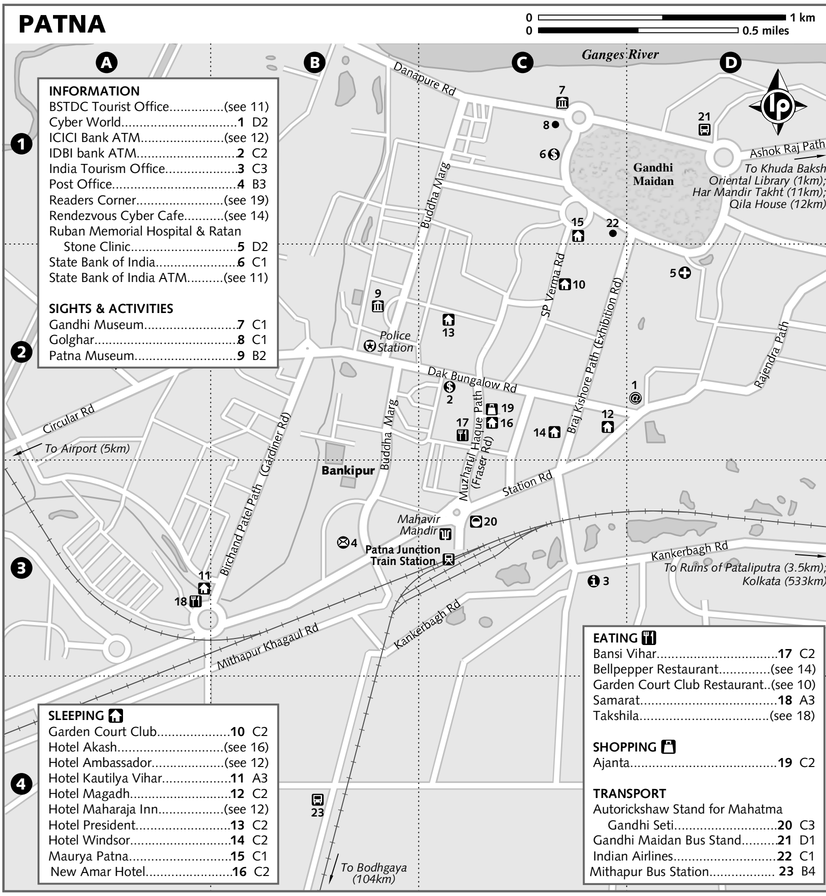
Bihar's busy capital spreads out over a vast area on the south bank of the swollen and polluted Ganges, just east of the river's confluence with three major tributaries. Unlike Varanasi, there is little of interest along the river itself and Patna has only a handful of worthwhile sights, but it's a major transport hub for the state and a useful base for visiting the Buddhist sites of Vaishali, Kesariya and Rajgir. The 7.5km-long Mahatma Gandhi Seti, one of the world's longest river bridges, spans the Ganges between Patna and Hajipur.

Patna was once a powerful city. Early in the 5th century BC, Ajatasatru shifted his capital of the Magadha kingdom from Rajgir to Pataliputra (Patna), fulfilling Buddha's prophecy that a great city would arise here. Emperors Chandragupta Maurya and Ashoka also called Pataliputra home and it remained one of India's most important cities for almost 1000 years. The ruins of this ancient city sit submersed in Kumrahar, a southern district of Patna.

Orientation

The old and newer parts of Patna stretch along the southern bank of the Ganges for about 15km. The main train station, airport and hotels are in the western half, known as Bankipur, while most of the historic sites are in the teeming older Chowk area to the east.



Although Fraser, Exhibition and Boring Rds are being officially renamed Muzharul Haque Path, Braj Kishore Path and Jal Prakash Rd, respectively, the old names are still more commonly used.

> LALOO – LORD OF BIHAR
> No chapter on Bihar would be complete without mention of India's most loathed and loved politician, Laloo Prasad Yadav. Although born into a low-caste family of cattle-herders, in a state where high-caste landowners have traditionally had a stranglehold on power, Laloo managed to mobilise the masses of his low-caste brethren and astonish all by rising to become chief minister of Bihar in 1990. Despite being a self-proclaimed champion of the poor, little improved for them under his rule and Bihar actually descended into bloody caste warfare. He remained in power until 1997, when he was arrested and accused of milking millions of dollars out of an animal-husbandry programme. He stepped down, and in a move that shocked the nation, he placed his illiterate wife Rabri Devi as chief minister. He served little time behind bars and is now back and as popular as ever. Although his wife was replaced as chief minister by Nitish Kumar in 2005, Laloo continues to live the high-profile life as Minister of Railways for the Indian government and has been credited with many improvements to the rail system. As Indiatimes once stated, 'Love him or loathe him, you can't ignore Laloo Prasad Yadav'.

Dangers & Annoyances

While Patna's streets are perfectly safe during the day, avoid walking alone after 8pm, as robbery can be a real problem. Groups should still take care and avoid carrying bags or valuables, which could encourage theft.

Sights & Activities

GANDHI MAIDAN AREA

Just south of the river, Gandhi Maidan is a large, flat park area around which are a couple of sights. For a dome with a view, head up to the landmark Golghar (Danapure Rd; admission free; 24hr), a short walk west of the maidan. This massive and bulbous beehive of a granary was built by the British army in 1786, in the hope of avoiding a repeat performance of the vicious 1770 famine – fortunately it was never required. Its dual spiralling staircases (250 steps each side), designed so that workers could climb up one side and down the other, lead to an unparalleled view of the city and Ganges. Nearby is the diminutive Gandhi Museum (☎ 2225339; Danapure Rd; admission free; 10am-6pm Sun-Fri), which contains a pictorial history of the Mahatma's life.

PATNA MUSEUM

Behind the vibrant but decaying Mughal- and Rajput-inspired exterior, this museum (☎ 2235731; Buddha Marg; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/250; 10.30am-4.30pm Tue-Sun) houses a splendid collection of stone sculptures dating from the Mauryan and Gupta periods, including the celebrated, larger-than-life statue of the voluptuous Yakshini. In another gallery is a motley collection of stuffed animals, including tigers, a large gharial crocodile and a bizarre three-eared and eight-legged goat kid! Upstairs there are several 17th-century thangkas (rectangular Tibetan painting on cloth), which were interestingly influenced by Indian frescoes. Some travellers may be put off by the high entry fee, but there's more. Upstairs in a locked gallery you must pay an additional Rs 500 to see the 'Relic of the Buddha': behind a glass case in a tiny casket within a small stupa is believed to be some of Buddha's ashes, retrieved from Vaishali – you'll have to take their word for it!

HAR MANDIR TAKHT

Behind a grand gate and sheltered from the mayhem of Patna's Chowk area is this Sikh shrine (☎ 2642000), one of the nation's four holiest. Its miniature marble domes, sweeping staircases and fine lattice work mark the spot where Guru Gobind Singh, the last of the 10 Sikh gurus, was born in 1660. It's 11km east of Gandhi Maidan.

KHUDA BAKSH ORIENTAL LIBRARY

This fascinating library (☎ 2300209; Ashok Raj Path; admission free; 9am-5pm Sat-Thu) was founded in 1900 and contains a renowned collection of Arabic and Persian manuscripts, Mughal and Rajput paintings, and even the Quran inscribed in a book only 25mm wide.

QILA HOUSE (JALAN MUSEUM)

This intriguing and eclectic private museum (☎ 2641121; Jalan Ave; by appointment only) overflows with antiques ranging from elaborate Mughal-period silverware to the humorously short bed of Napoleon Bonaparte. Look for Marie Antoinette's Sèvres porcelain and the garish Crown Derby dinner service picked out by the failing eyes of King George III.

RUINS OF PATALIPUTRA

While historic, these ruins (Kankerbagh Rd; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; 9am-5.30pm) are best visited in scuba gear – ground-water levels ensure they are submerged year-round. Excavations of this ancient capital have found evidence from the periods of Ajatasatru (491–459 BC), Chandragupta (321–297 BC) and Ashoka (274–237 BC). The ruins/ponds are surrounded by lovely gardens and a museum that details the site's historic past.

Festivals & Events

Patna honours its historic past every March with Pataliputra Mahotsava, a celebration featuring parades, sports, dancing and music.

MITHILA PAINTINGS

Bihar's unique and most famous folk art is its Mithila (or Madhubani) paintings. Traditionally, wives from Madhubani and surrounding villages started creating strong line drawings on the walls of their homes from the day of their marriage. Using pigments from spices, minerals, charcoal and vegetable matter, the women painted local deities and scenes from mythology, often intermingled with special events and aspects of everyday life.

These paintings, in both black and white and strong primary colours, are now being professionally produced on paper, canvas and textiles for sale in cities such as Patna. Original wall paintings can still be seen in homes around Madhubani, 160km northeast of Patna.

Sleeping

The modern western half of the city has plenty of accommodation choices, mainly around Fraser and Station Rds.

BUDGET

New Amar Hotel (☎ 2224157; s/d Rs 170/246) The bright-green New Amar is the best of several budget hotels down a small lane off Fraser Rd. Rooms are simple and cleanish.

The large gardens host a tempting pool (Rs 350 for nonguests), and there are two good restaurants and a bar. Rooms are tastefully furnished and centrally air-conditioned.

Eating & Drinking

Busy Fraser Rd, between the train station and Dak Bungalow Rd, is the main shopping street and is lined with restaurants and a few bars. For Patna's best restaurants, check out the big hotels, especially Maurya Patna and Hotel Chanakya; the latter also has a comfortable bar.

Bansi Vihar (Fraser Rd; mains Rs 30-70) Locals crowd into this spotless air-conditioned restaurant to enjoy cheap South Indian masala dosa (savoury crepe), Chinese specials and friendly service.

Garden Court Club (☎ 3096229; SP Verma Rd; mains Rs 35-80; 6am-11pm) Few places are as enjoyable for lunch or dinner as this plant-filled, open-air rooftop terrace, serving Indian and Chinese dishes.

Bellpepper Restaurant (Exhibition Rd; mains Rs 50-200; noon-3.30pm & 7-11pm;) This intimate, contemporary restaurant in the Hotel Windsor is popular for its sublime tandoori specialities. The murg tikka lababdar (tandoori chicken basted with garlic, ginger, green chillies, and pistachio and cashew nut paste) is divine, and Afghani dishes and Hyderabadi biryanis share the menu with Chinese specialities. No alcohol is served.

Samarat (Hotel Chanakya, Birchand Patel Path; mains Rs 130-225; noon-11pm;) Based in Hotel Chanakya, this is an elegant dining experience, with Indian, Chinese and continental dishes served in a bright and busy restaurant.

our pick Takshila (☎ 2220590; Hotel Chanakya, Birchand Patel Path; mains Rs 80-375; noon-3.30pm & 7.30-11pm) From the solid furniture and exposed brick décor to the succinct menu printed on a slab of wood, Takshila exudes the ambience of the North West Frontier. The speciality is meat-heavy Mughlai, Afghan and tandoor dishes – the signature dish raan-e-takshila is a whole leg of mutton marinated in spices and cooked in the tandoor for at least 45 minutes. Also in Hotel Chanakya.

Getting There & Away

AIR

Indian Airlines (☎ 2222554; Gandhi Maidan) flies daily to Delhi (US$124), Mumbai (US$172) and Ranchi (US$73). Air Deccan (www.airdeccan.net) offers cheaper internet fares to Delhi and Kolkata.

BUS

The new main bus station (Mithapur Bus Station) occupies a large, dusty space about 2km south of the train station, and is simply referred to as 'the new bus stand'. Services include buses to Gaya (Rs 50, three hours, hourly), Rajgir (Rs 50, four hours, hourly), Ranchi (Rs 180, 10 hours, 8pm and 9pm) and Raxaul (Rs 100, eight hours).

From the Gandhi Maidan bus stand government bus services go to Ranchi (Rs 170, 10 hours, four daily) and the Nepal border at Raxaul (Rs 109, eight hours, daily at 9.15am and 10pm).

CAR

Hiring a car and driver is a convenient option for visiting Kesariya, Vaishali or Nalanda for the day. Most hotels and the India tourism office can arrange this service for Rs 6.5 per kilometre (minimum 200km). Arrange an early start as few drivers will operate after dark.

TRAIN

Patna Junction is a chaotic station but there's a foreign-tourist ticket counter at window No 7 in the 1st-floor reservation office.

Although a little way off the main Delhi–Kolkata line, there are around eight daily trains to Kolkata (sleeper/3AC Rs 218/615, eight to 11 hours), 10 to Delhi (sleeper/3AC Rs 321/905 12 to 16 hours) and four to New Jalpaiguri (Siliguri, for Darjeeling and Sikkim; sleeper/3AC Rs 195/549, nine to 12 hours). Several daily services run to Varanasi (2nd class/sleeper Rs 65/112, five hours), Gaya (sleeper/chair Rs 101/142, 3½ hours, 11.30am and 9.35pm) and Ranchi (sleeper/chair Rs 170/370, 10 hours, 11.30am, 3.30pm and 9.35pm).

Getting Around

The airport is 7km west of the city centre. Autorickshaws to/from the city cost Rs 80, while taxis cost around Rs 180.

Shared autorickshaws shuttle back and forth between the train station and Gandhi Maidan bus stand (Rs 3). For short trips, cycle-rickshaws are Patna's most plentiful form of transport.

☎ 06654

According to the Gajendra Moksha legend, Sonepur is where Vishnu ended the prehistoric battle between the lords of the forest (elephants) and lords of the water (crocodiles). Each November/December, on the full moon of Kartik Purnima, the three-week Sonepur Mela (www.sonepurmela.com) begins to celebrate the infamous tale. During this auspicious time, devotees bathe in the Ganges while Asia's largest cattle fair takes place at Haathi bazaar. You'll see more than mere bovines for sale – elephants change hands for anything from Rs 10,000 to 100,000. Considering purchasing an alternative form of transport? Mark Shand's Travels on my Elephant is essential reading for the modern-day mahout (elephant rider/master).

BSTDC in Patna operates temporary cottages (☎ 2225411; dm/d Rs 50/1000) during the fair.

Sonepur is 25km north of Patna across the Mahatma Gandhi Seti bridge spanning the Ganges. Shared autorickshaws (Rs 5) run to the south side of the Mahatma Gandhi Seti from the stand near Mahavir Mandir. An autorickshaw direct to Sonepur should cost around Rs 150.

VAISHALI

☎ 06225

In the 6th century BC, Vaishali was home to one of the world's first democratic republics. It's also where Lord Mahavira, the 24th and final Jain tirthankar (teacher), was born and raised. Buddha preached his last sermon here, where today the ruins of the Kolhua Complex (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; ⏰ dawn-dusk) lay. Most remarkable is the noble lion atop the 2300-year-old Ashoka pillar. Another set of ruins, 3km away, contains a stupa where an eighth of Buddha's ashes were recovered. Nearby there's a small museum (admission Rs 2; ⏰ 10am-5pm Sat-Thu) and a gleaming Japanese Peace Pagoda.

Hotel Amrapali Vihar (☎ 229982; dm/d Rs 70/250), a BSTDC hotel, has bright rooms, as well as a dormitory.

Regular buses run to/from Hajipur and Muzaffarpur. To reach Hajipur from Patna, catch a shared autorickshaw to the south side of Mahatma Gandhi Seti and another from there. Hiring a car in Patna is the best way to visit Vaishali and Kesariya in a day.

KESARIYA

Rising 10 storeys out of the earth, where the dying Buddha donated his begging bowl, is an enthralling juxtaposition of history and nature. Each year archaeologists continue to remove nature's lush, forested veil, revealing what's likely the world's 2nd-tallest Buddhist stupa, dating from the Pala period. From above, the nine uniquely shaped terraces (seven currently exposed) form a gargantuan Buddhist tantric mandala diagram with a circumference of 425m.

Sporadic shared jeeps shuttle between Kesariya and Chakia (Rs 25, one hour), which is on the potholed highway between Patna and Raxaul, but due to a lack of accommodation in Kesariya and Chakia, most people hire a car in Patna and make it a long day trip.

RAXAUL

☎ 06255 / pop 41,347

Raxaul, a grimy, crowded border town, is virtually a twin town with Birganj in Nepal. Neither are places to hang around. If you must spend the night, head to Hotel Kaveri (☎ 221148; Main Rd; d from Rs 250), which has the cleanest rooms.

There are several early morning buses from Raxaul to Patna (Rs 100, eight hours). The Mithila Express train runs daily from Kolkata to Raxaul (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 256/723/1037) departing at 3.45pm and arriving at 8.25am.

BODHGAYA

☎ 0631 / pop 30,883

Buddhist pilgrims from around the world are drawn to Bodhgaya. It was here, 26 centuries ago, that Prince Siddhartha Gautama attained enlightenment beneath a bodhi tree and so became the Buddha. A beautifully serene temple marks the spot and a descendent of that original Bodhi Tree remains, its roots happily clutching the same soil as its celebrated ancestor.

Monasteries and temples, built by international Buddhist communities, are peppered around and attract pilgrims to study, meditate and absorb the ambience. Bodhgaya is not so much a town as a true Buddhist working centre surrounded by farmland and rural villages, but it has the best range of accommodation and eating in Bihar and the attendant accumulation of tourist paraphernalia and souvenir stalls.

The best time to visit is October through March, when Tibetan pilgrims come down from Dharamsala and Bodhgaya becomes a sea of maroon robes. The Dalai Lama himself often spends December and January here.

Sights & Activities

MAHABODHI TEMPLE

The spiritual centrepiece of Bodhgaya, adjacent to the spot where Buddha attained enlightenment and formulated his philosophy of life, is the magnificent World Heritage–listed Mahabodhi Temple (admission free, camera/video Rs 20/300; 🕑 5am-9pm).

The Mahabodhi Temple was built in the 6th century AD atop the site of a temple erected by Emperor Ashoka almost 800 years earlier. After being razed by 11th-century Muslim invaders, the temple underwent major restorations, the last in 1882. Topped by a 50m pyramidal spire, the ornate structure houses a 2m-high gilded image of a seated Buddha. Amazingly, four of the original sculpted stone railings surrounding the temple, dating from the Sunga period (184–72 BC), have survived amid the replicas.

Thankfully, before Ashoka's wife murdered the original Bodhi Tree, a sapling from it was carried to Anuradhapura, Sri Lanka, by Sanghamitta (Ashoka's daughter). That tree continues to flourish and from which, in turn, a cutting was carried back to Bodhgaya and planted where the original had stood. The red sandstone slab between the tree and the rear of the temple was placed there by Ashoka, and marks the spot of Buddha's enlightenment – it's referred to as the Vajrasan (Diamond Throne).

The temple complex is a serene network of paths, gardens, shrines, votive stupas and a meditation park. To the south is the Muchalinda Lake, a lotus pond surrounded by prayer flags and with a cobra statue rising from the centre. Legend has it Buddha meditated here on the sixth week after enlightenment and was sheltered from a violent storm by the snake god of the lake.

Pilgrims and visitors from all walks of life and religions come here to worship or just admire. An enthralling way to start or finish the day is with a stroll around the perimeter of the temple compound, threading your way through monks from around the world, each soaking up the ambience of this sacred place.

An audio headset guide (Rs 20), available from the camera ticket counter, offers a one-hour commentary in English, Hindi, Japanese or Korean.

MONASTERIES & TEMPLES

Thanks to most countries with a large Buddhist population having a temple or monastery here, Bodhgaya offers visitors a unique opportunity to peek into different Buddhist cultures. Head to the beautiful Indosan Nipponji Temple (Japanese temple) at 6am and 5pm daily for the free one-hour Zazen sessions (Zen meditation).

In an intriguing display of architecture, monasteries are designed in a representative style of their homeland. The most impressive is the Thai Monastery, a brightly coloured wat with shimmering gold leaf and manicured gardens. Meditation sessions are held here in the morning. The Tibetan Karma Temple and Namgyal Monastery each contain large prayer wheels, and the massive Indosan Nipponji Temple is donned with a Japanese pagoda roof. Other noteworthy monasteries include the Chinese, Burmese, Bhutanese, Vietnamese, Tamang, Daijokyo and Nepali. Monasteries are open sunrise to sunset.

OTHER ATTRACTIONS

At the end of Temple St and reached via a pleasant garden towers the 25m-high Great Buddha Statue (⏰ 7am-noon & 2-5pm). The impressive monument was unveiled by the Dalai Lama in 1989, and is surrounded by 10 smaller sculptures of Buddha's disciples. The statue is partially hollow and is said to contain some 20,000 bronze Buddhas.

The archaeological museum (☎ 2200739; admission Rs 2; ⏰ 10am-5pm Sat-Thu) contains a small collection of local Buddha figures, but pride of place goes to part of the original granite railings and pillars rescued from the Mahabodhi Temple.

Courses

Additional meditation courses to those below typically run from October through to March and are sometimes advertised at local restaurants and the Burmese Vihara.

Established by vipassana (the insight meditation technique of Theravada Buddhism in which mind and body are closely examined as changing phenomena) guru SN Goenka, the Bodhgaya Vipassana Meditation Centre (Dhamma Bodhi; ☎ 220437; www.dhamma.org) runs intensive 10-day vipassana courses twice each month throughout the year. The small compound is 4km west of town and runs on donations.

Three nine-day vipassana meditation and spiritual inquiry retreats are held by Insight Meditation Retreats (www.insightmeditation.org) from 7 January to 6 February at the Thai Monastery. Space is limited so book ahead. From mid-November you can inquire at the Burmese Vihara between 3pm and 4pm. Donations are requested.

The courses at the International Meditation Centre (☎ 2200707; per day Rs 100) are more informal and students can start and finish any time they choose, year-round.

The popular introductory 10-day meditation courses run by the Root Institute for Wisdom Culture (☎ 2200714; www.rootinstitute.com) go from late October through March and are excellent for beginners. A requested donation of Rs 5800 will cover your course, accommodation and meals. Intermediate level courses are also scheduled from December to February and, for serious students, a one-month Mahayana Vipassana retreat is organised during February. The institute also holds talks and meditation sessions that are open to all comers – the website has a full schedule.

Sleeping

Bodhgaya is packed with places to stay and everything is within walking distance or a short cycle-rickshaw ride of the Mahabodhi Temple. Prices listed are for the high season (November through March) – they can fall up to 50% in the low season so be prepared to negotiate.

BUDGET

Buddha Vihar (☎ 2200127; Bodhgaya Rd; dm Rs 75-100) The dormitory accommodation at the tourism complex is clean and cheap.

Deep Guest House (☎ 2200463; Bodhgaya Rd; d with shared/private bathroom Rs 200/300) Clean rooms and friendly service make this place near the bus stand a great choice. Rooms are bright and airy, and even the shared bathrooms are kept clean.

Mohammad's House (☎ 2200690; d with shared/private bathroom Rs 200/250) It may be a bit earthy for some, but just getting to this simple family homestay is an adventure. It's hidden among local homes north of the main road (ask directions). Rooms are very basic, but the

CHOOSING THE RIGHT CHARITY

Central Bihar is one of the poorest parts of India and with its influx of visitors and Buddhist pilgrims, Bodhgaya has become home to numerous charity organisations and schools that rely on donations and volunteers. Some of these are less than noble – set up by shady characters looking for an easy way to jump on the charity bandwagon and fleece tourists. Be wary of anyone who approaches you in the street looking for donations, including the young children who besiege tourists asking for money for everything from educational sponsorship to a new cricket bat – they speak several languages but are more than likely illiterate. Genuine charities advise that you don't give money directly to children. If you'd like to help, donate to legitimate institutions or visit local schools and offer to volunteer. The following organisations are worthy causes:

- Maitreya School (☎ 2200620; www.maitreyaeducation.org) One of the largest and most established school projects in Bodhgaya, Maitreya has over 500 students attending day and evening classes. As well as education, free uniforms, books, meals and health care are provided. You can sponsor a child for a year (US$140).
- Niranjana Public Welfare School (☎ 9934057511; www.npws.org) In Bakrour Village, this school provides education for some 300 local children and runs an orphanage. Donations, sponsorships and volunteers are welcome. Contact the curator Siddhartha Kumar.
- Prajna Vihar School Volunteers are sometimes required for this nonprofit village school just south of the Mahabodhi Temple. For information, contact the Burmese Vihar (☎ 2200721).
- Root Institute for Wisdom Culture (☎ 2200714; www.rootinstitute.com) This Buddhist meditation centre runs an established charitable health programme in the district, providing free health care to villagers via an onsite hospital and mobile clinic. Visitors are welcome to call in to the institute to see the health programme at work. Skilled volunteers (nurses, physiotherapists etc) are occasionally needed to train local health workers – see the volunteer section of the website.
- Samanvay Ashram (☎ 0631-2200506; samanvayashram@hotmail.com) Also called the Gandhi Ashram, this has been run for many years by Dwarko Sundrani, and works with disadvantaged village children providing education, clothing and medicine. Volunteers are welcome to help with fieldwork and activities with the children. Free lodging and meals, but volunteers are expected to take part in morning prayers, cooking and chores.
- Sujata Children's Welfare Foundation (☎ 9431207949; www.sujata.onestop.net) Sujata works with local orphans and poor children, providing free education, clothing and medical care. You can sponsor a child through the organisation's website, or volunteer with teaching skills and building projects at Sujata Village just outside Bodhgaya.
- Vajrabodhi Society (☎ 2330576; www.vajrabodhisocietyindia.org) This society currently runs two schools offering free literacy and education programmes for underprivileged children in the Bodhgaya district. There are also plans to build a hospital. You can sponsor the annual education of a child (Rs 12,000), make donations, or volunteer with teaching skills or community projects.

rooftop terrace offers pleasant views of rice paddies, sunsets and the distant Mahabodhi Temple.

Rahul Guest House (s/d Rs 150/250) The upstairs rooms with whitewashed walls, nice breezes and simple furnishings are better than those on the ground floor, but overall this budget place is clean. It's a short walk across the playing field near Kalchakra Maidan.

If you don't mind abiding by some simple rules and attending daily prayers, it's possible to stay at some of the monasteries. The Bhutanese Monastery (☎ 2200710; Buddha Rd; d with shared/private bathroom Rs 150/250) is a tranquil place typified by colourful surroundings, gardens and big rooms. The Tibetan Karma Temple (☎ 2200795; Temple St; d with shared bathroom Rs 200) has a similar feel. The Burmese Vihara (☎ 2200721; Bodhgaya Rd; r Rs 50) is popular with foreigners; there's a maximum stay of three days unless you're engaged in dharma studies.

MIDRANGE

Hotel Siddartha (☎ 2200127; Bodhgaya Rd; d Rs 400, with AC Rs 600) This is the best of the accommodation in the BSTDC tourism complex, though it's still a bit austere. Rooms are in an unusual circular building overlooking a quiet garden area. Rates are fixed year-round, making it good value from November to January.

Hotel Embassy (☎ 2200799; embassyhotelbodhgaya@yahoo.com; Bodhgaya Rd; s/d Rs 500/600, with AC Rs 800/900; ❄) This central, no-frills hotel is looking a bit old and dated, though all rooms have TV and hot water and the management is welcoming.

Kirti Guest House (☎ 2200744; near Kalchakra Maidan; s/d Rs 700/850) Run by the Tibetan Monastery and one of the best of the midrange places, Kirti has clean, bright rooms behind a monastery-like façade. Go for one of the front rooms opening out onto the balcony. All rooms have TV and hot water.

Hotel Uruvela International (☎ 2200235; s/d Rs 750/1000, with AC Rs 1000/1400; ❄) Spacious rooms, some a little ornate and overdecorated, have the usual facilities at this quiet, friendly hotel near the Japanese temple. Low-season discount is 40%.

Hotel Tathagat International (☎ 2200106; www.hoteltathagatbodhgaya.net; Bodhgaya Rd; s/d Rs 1125/1350, with AC Rs 1350/1700; ❄) Simple and conservatively furnished rooms, but it's clean and efficiently run. Some rooms have balconies and all have TV and hot water.

TOP END

Hotel Sujata (☎ 2200761; www.hotelsujata.com; Buddha Rd; s/d/ste Rs 2400/2800/3600; ❄) Swish, spacious rooms with soft beds, an excellent restaurant, and his and hers o-furo (communal Japanese baths) make this hotel, opposite the Thai Monastery, best value in the top-end range. Unfortunately, the Japanese bath is only available to groups of 10 or more.

Royal Residency (☎ 2200124; www.theroyalresidency.net/bodhgaya; Bodhgaya Rd; s/d US$120/150; ❄) Bodhgaya's most luxurious hotel is in a quiet location about 1.5km west of the centre. Fine woodwork, rich marble, pleasant gardens and comfy rooms, but still overpriced.

Eating

With such a diverse range of pilgrims and travellers filing in, Bodhgaya has plenty of places to eat. During the peak season from mid-November to February, when Tibetan pilgrims pour into Bodhgaya, temporary tent restaurants set up next to the Tibetan refugee market, at Kalchakra Maidan and near the Great Buddha Statue, serving a range of Tibetan dishes and sweets such as apple pie and cinnamon rolls.

There are decent restaurants along the main road in the village centre, while the best dining experiences are in a handful of midrange and top-end hotels.

Fujia Green (Kalchakra Maidan; mains Rs 15-70) A popular year-round tent restaurant, Fujia Green serves up wonderful Tibetan fare, such as momos (dumplings), thukpas and thenthuks (types of noodle soup), as well as tasty chicken dishes.

Swagat Restaurant (Bodhgaya Rd; mains Rs 50-150; ❄) At Hotel Tathagat International, this is a good choice with an innovative menu of veg and nonveg dishes, such as mutton badam pasanda (boneless mutton stuffed with almonds and cooked in an almond gravy), Portuguese-style fish and a creamy malai kofta.

Royal Residency (Bodhgaya Rd; mains Rs 70-150; ❄) Considering it's in Bodhgaya's most upmarket hotel, the restaurant itself is plain on décor and disappointingly cramped, but the food is good with some of the best Chinese and North Indian fare in town. This is the only restaurant in Bodhgaya to serve alcohol, but at Rs 250 for a beer it's a real luxury!

Other recommendations:

Gautam Lassi Corner (Bodhgaya Rd) Opposite Mahabodhi Temple, serves up creamy lassis, coffee, juice and chowmein for Rs 10.

Vishnu Restaurant (Bodhgaya Rd) Opposite the park, a reliable travellers' menu of Indian, Chinese, continental and Tibetan food. Cramped inside but there are shady tables out the front.

Om Restaurant (Bodhgaya Rd) Next door to Vishnu, this place is similar.

Opposite the Burmese Vihara on Bodhgaya Rd are the long-running and popular semi-tent restaurants Original Pole-Pole (mains Rs 20-80), Old Pole-Pole (mains Rs 20-80) and the Gautam (mains Rs 20-80). They're pretty basic and each has a varied but standard travellers' menu of breakfast fare, pancakes, pasta and Indian and Chinese, along with sweets such as chocolate-chip cookies or cinnamon rolls.

Shopping

Tibetan refugee market (Oct-Jan) A great place to pick up some winter woollens or textiles, and you'll be helping the Tibetan community in exile. Souvenir stalls set up opposite the temple selling everything from prayer flags and postcards to Buddha statues.

Getting There & Away

Overly crowded shared autorickshaws (Rs 8) and occasional buses (Rs 5) leave the Burmese Vihara for the 13km to Gaya. A private autorickshaw to Gaya should cost Rs 80.

The Gaya airport (2201155) is 8km from town. While there is only one Indian Airlines domestic flight a week to/from Kolkata (US$88), during the high season there are direct international flights from Bangkok and Yangoon.

DUNGESHWARI CAVE TEMPLES

The Dungeshwari cave temples, where Buddha underwent years of penance before descending to Bodhgaya, are 12km northeast of Bodhgaya. Three main caves contain several shrines for Buddhists and one for Hindus.

From Bodhgaya, grab a Gaya-bound shared autorickshaw to Khiryama (Rs 5), where you'll have to walk across the bridge. There you'll find a path on the right-hand side that leads you 5km to the caves. Alternatively, you can hire an autorickshaw in Bodhgaya for the entire trip (Rs 200).

GAYA

Gaya is a raucous, dusty town about 100km south of Patna. Although it's a centre for Hindu pilgrims, it's really only of interest to travellers as the transport hub for Bodhgaya, 13km away. Pilgrims come here to offer pinda (funeral cake) at the ghats along the river, and perform a lengthy circuit of the holy places around Gaya to free their ancestors from bondage to the earth.

There's a Bihar State tourist office (2420155; 10am-8pm Mon-Sat) and a State Bank of India ATM at the train station. The nearest foreign exchange for cash and travellers cheques is in Bodhgaya. There are several internet cafés (per hr Rs 20) along Swarajayapur Rd.

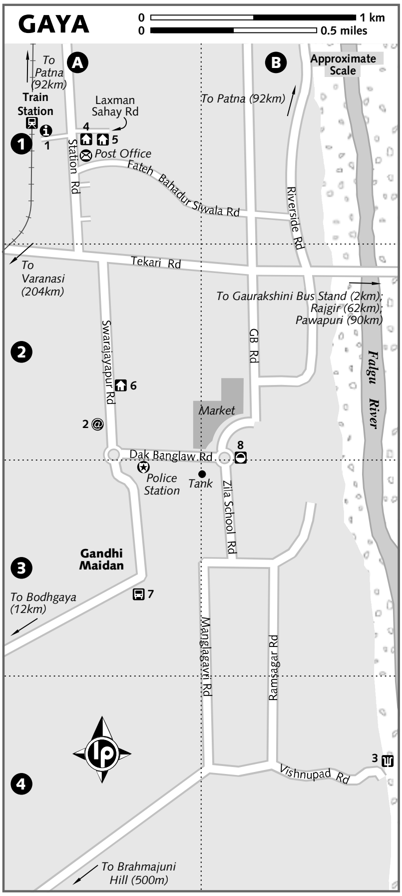
Sights & Activities

Close to the banks of the Falgu River south of town, the sikhara (spired) Vishnupad Temple was constructed in 1787 by Queen Ahalya Bai of Indore and houses a 40cm 'footprint' of Vishnu imprinted in solid rock. Non-Hindus are not permitted to enter, but you can get a look at the temple from the pink platform near the entrance. Along the ghats on the river's edge, Hindus bathe and light funeral pyres.

One thousand stone steps leads to the top of the Brahmajuni Hill, 1km southwest of the Vishnupad Temple, where Buddha is said to have preached the fire sermon. The view from the top of Gaya and the surrounding plains is expansive, and there's a small temple and cave here.



Sleeping & Eating

The main reason to stay overnight in Gaya is if you arrive late or have an early departure, otherwise Bodhgaya is a better place to stay.

Hotel Akash (2222205; Laxman Sahay Rd; s/d Rs 175/250) Standing out among the concrete clone hotels down the lane opposite the station, this is the pick of the budget places. The turquoise timber façade gives way to an Islamic-inspired inner courtyard. Basic rooms are reasonably clean with TV and there's a relaxing open-air area upstairs.

Hotel Vishnu International (2431146; Swarajayapur Rd; s Rs 250, d Rs 350-600, with AC Rs 1000;) With a castle-like façade, this reasonably new hotel is the best value in town. Clean, well kept, and most rooms have TV and hot water.

Ajatsatru Hotel (2434584; Station Rd; d Rs 375, d with AC Rs 800;) Directly opposite the station, rooms here vary a lot and are comparatively overpriced but, the AC multicuisine restaurant (mains Rs 20 to 80), open 7am to 11.30pm, is a good place for a bite while waiting for a train.

Getting There & Away

Buses to Patna (Rs 50, three hours, hourly) and Ranchi (Rs 101, seven hours, hourly) leave from the Gandhi Maidan bus stand. Some buses to Patna also leave from a stand next to the train station. Buses to Rajgir (Rs 35, 2½ hours, every 30 minutes) use the Gaurakshini bus stand, across the river.

Gaya is on the Delhi–Kolkata railway line with regular trains to Delhi (sleeper/3AC Rs 319/899, 16 hours) and Kolkata (Rs 183/515, eight hours), and less frequent services to Varanasi (Rs 110/310, four hours). There are four daily trains to Patna (Rs 101/188, two hours).

At the train station you'll be besieged by autorickshaw drivers assuming you're heading to Bodhgaya. It should cost Rs 80, or you can take a cycle-rickshaw to Kacheri stand and a crowded shared autorickshaw (Rs 8) from there.

Getting Around

From the train station, a cycle-rickshaw should cost Rs 12 to the Kacheri autorickshaw stand, Rs 15 to Gandhi Maidan or Gaurakshini bus stands, and Rs 20 to the Vishnupad Temple.

RAJGIR

☎ 06112 / pop 33,691

Set among bushland and surrounded by five rocky hills, each lined with vestiges of ancient cyclopean walls, is the ancient capital of the Magadha kingdom, known today as Rajgir. Thanks to both Buddha and Mahavira spending some serious time here, Rajgir is an important pilgrimage site for Buddhists and Jains. A mention in the Mahabharata also ensures that Rajgir has a good supply of Hindu pilgrims who come to bathe in the hot springs at the Lakshmi Narayan Temple.

For travellers, a couple of days spent exploring the many historic Buddhist sites around Rajgir and the ancient university site of Nalanda, 12km south of town, provides the perfect complement to Bodhgaya, 80km away.

Rajgir Mahotsava (24 to 26 October) is the town's three-day cultural festival featuring Indian classical and folk music and dance.

Information

The dusty centre of this small town lies 500m east of the main road, on which you'll find the train station, bus stand and a number of hotels. There's a BSTDC tourist office at the Hotel Gautam Vihar, about 1km south of the

AJATASATRU: THE UNBORN ENEMY

According to legend, in the 6th century BC Bimbisara, the elderly ruler of the Magadha kingdom, was frustrated that he and his wife, Vaidehi, had not yet produced an heir. He called on a fortune teller, who told him that there was an old hermit three years from death in the distant hills and when the hermit passed, his spirit would impregnate Vaidehi. Impatient, Bimbisara ordered the hermit killed and soon Vaidehi was expecting.

However, the news was not all good for Bimbisara, as the hermit had cursed the future heir in his last breath. This led to numerous bad omens and prophecies that Bimbisara's heir would grow to murder him and usurp his crown. Bimbisara grew fearful and named his son Ajatasatru, which directly translates to 'He whose enemy is not born'.

It's thought that Bimbisara tried to have Ajatasatru killed on a few occasions, but the boy always eluded death and eventually grew up to seize the crown and starve his father to death in prison.

train station. There's a State Bank of India ATM (Bank Rd) about 200m west of the bus stand, but no foreign-exchange facilities.

Sights & Activities

Take the wobbly single-person chairlift (return Rs 30; 8.15am-1pm & 2-5pm) to the top of Ratnagiri Hill, about 5km south of town, to visit the huge 40m-high whitewashed Vishwashanti Stupa, built by Japanese Buddhists. Recesses in the stupa feature gilded statues of Buddha in the four stages of his life – birth, enlightenment, preaching and death. There's also a Japanese Monastery and the expansive views reveal some of the 26 Jain shrines dotting the distant hilltops. If you walk back down, you can stop to detour at Griddhakuta (Vulture's Peak) where Buddha preached to his disciples and the remains of a stupa can be seen.

Spread around the town are relics of the ancient city, caves and places associated with Ajatasatru and his father Bimbisara, who he imprisoned and starved to death here in the 5th century BC (see the boxed text, above). Within the rowdy and very pink Lakshmi Narayan Temple complex, about 2km south of town, Hindu pilgrims are drawn to the health benefits of the hot springs, where the water is piped from underground. Brahmakund, the hottest spring, is a scalding 45°C. Temple 'priests' will show you around, pour hot water on you and ask for excessive donations.

The easiest way to see Rajgir's scattered sites is to rent a tonga – a cushioned and covered horse-drawn cart. This should cost about Rs 150 for a half-day.

Sleeping & Eating

There are a few budget hotels around the bus station and east along Dharamsala Rd in the town centre, though none are very good. Midrange and top-end choices are spread out in the south, just west of the hot springs. High-season rates are given below, but up to 50% discount applies out of season or if occupancy is low.

Hotel Gautam Vihar (☎ 255273; Nalanda Rd; dm Rs 75, d Rs 450, d with AC Rs 700;) One of three Bihar Tourism hotels in town, this is well located between the bus and train stations, and the spacious, clean rooms have lounge chairs, TV and hot water. Out in the garden in a hexagonal hut is a decent restaurant.

Hotel Siddharth (☎ 255616; s/d Rs 450/650, d with AC Rs 750;) A bit of a hike south of the bus and train stations and near the hot springs, Siddharth doesn't look much from the outside but has a pleasant walled courtyard, good-sized rooms and a pleasant restaurant.

our pick Centaur Hokke Hotel (☎ 255245; centaur@dte.vsnl.net.in; s/d Rs 5200/6200;) Fronted by a towering cylindrical Buddhist prayer hall and surrounded by lovely manicured gardens, this is one of Bihar's most unique sleeping experiences. Twenty of the 26 rooms are in true Japanese form, complete with tatami mats instead of beds, teak furniture and Eastern décor. Soak in the Japanese bathhouse and meditate in the prayer hall. It's mighty popular with tour groups.

Green Restaurant (mains Rs 20-60) Opposite the temple complex and hot springs just south of town, this simple restaurant offers some of the best nonveg Indian meals in town.

Lotus Restaurant (meals Rs US$1-12;) At the Hokke Hotel, this elegant restaurant with high-backed chairs and long tables is part Japanese, part Indian. The Japanese menu features soba noodles, teriyaki and tempura with authentic flavours and fresh ingredients. No sushi, sashimi or sake, but still a memorable dining experience.

While the beloved puff-pastry sweet known as khaja is sold throughout Bihar, its origins lay in Silao, just north of Rajgir. This tiny village is still said to be home to the finest khaja in all the land – the wasps certainly love it.

Getting There & Around

Regular buses run to Gaya (Rs 45, 2½ hours) and Patna (Rs 60, three hours) from the bus stand on the Nalanda road. Ridiculously crowded shared jeeps shuttle between Rajgir and Nalanda (Rs 8). The best way to get to Patna is on one of two daily trains that originate in Rajgir (2nd class Rs 36, 2½ hours, 8.10am and 3.15pm), with stops at Nalanda (Rs 18, 15 minutes) and Pawapuri (Rs 20, 25 minutes).

AROUND RAJGIR

Nalanda

☎ 061194

Founded in the 5th century AD, Nalanda was one of the ancient world's great universities and an important Buddhist centre. When Chinese scholar and traveller Xuan Zang visited some time between AD 685 and 762, 10,000 monks and students resided here and studied theology, astronomy, metaphysics, medicine and philosophy. Nalanda's three libraries were so extensive they burnt for six months when Afghans sacked the university in the 12th century.

Allow an hour or two for wandering the extensive university's ruins (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; 9am-5.30pm) – they're peaceful and well maintained with a park-like atmosphere of clipped lawns, perfumed with the scent of roses and shrubs. Guides outside the gates clamour to offer their services for Rs 100 an hour and while a good guide may help bring the ruins to life, the printed guidebooks (Rs 40) are just as good.

The red-brick ruins comprise a main rectangle of nine monasteries and four main temple sites at the back. Most impressive is the Great Stupa, with steps, terraces and a few intact votive stupas around it, and the monks' chambers. Although you can climb up the steps of monastery No 1 for a view over the complex, the crumbling steps up the Great Stupa are now understandably out of bounds.

Across the road and entered separately is the archaeological museum (admission Rs 2; 10am-5pm Sat-Thu), a small but fascinating museum housing the Nalanda University seal and a host of sculptures and bronzes unearthed from Nalanda and Rajgir. Along with the many Buddha figures and Picasso-like 9th-century Kirtimukha, look out for the bizarre many-spouted pot.

About 2km further on from the ruins is the huge Xuan Zang Memorial Hall (admission free; 9am-5pm), built by the Chinese as a peace pagoda in honour of the famous Chinese traveller who studied and taught for some years at Nalanda. Modern-day backpackers will appreciate the statue of Xuan Zang at the front. A museum and exhibit devoted to Xuan Zang was due to open at the time of writing.

Regular shared jeeps run between Rajgir and Nalanda village (Rs 8), and from there you can take a shared tonga (Rs 10) or cycle-rickshaw (Rs 20) the final 3km to the site.

Pawapuri

Pawapuri is a major Jain pilgrimage centre, due to Mahavira, the final tirthankar and founder of Jainism, dying and being cremated here in about 500 BC. It is said the demand for his sacred ashes was so great that copious amounts of soil were removed around his funeral pyre, creating the massive lotus-filled tank here today. Seemingly floating in the middle of the tank is the ornate, marble temple of Jalmandir.

JHARKHAND

One of three new states created in India in 2000, Jharkhand was hewn out of neighbouring Bihar to meet the growing demands of the Adivasi (tribal) population. Despite the fledgling state having a jaw-dropping 40% of the country's mineral wealth (mainly coal, copper and iron ore), rich forests, several major industrial centres and the healthy budget of a newly formed state, it still suffers thanks to the crippling demands of tribal populations, poverty, corruption, and outbursts of Maoist and Naxalite violence. For travellers, Jharkhand's prime attractions are its national parks, a few waterfalls around the capital Ranchi and the chance to explore a tourist-free northern India – with Jharkhand off most visitors' radars, you may well be the only foreigner in the state.

RANCHI

☎0651 / pop 846,454

Jharkhand's capital, Ranchi was once the summer capital of Bihar under the British – set on a plateau at about 700m, it's marginally cooler than the plains. For travellers there's not a lot of interest in the city and it's not really on the way to anywhere – the only real reason for landing here is to transit to Betla National Park, or to tour the surrounding waterfalls.

There's a tourist office (☎2310230; 5 Main Rd; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) at the Birsa Vihar tourist complex, and a HDFC ATM across the road. The State Bank of India (Main Rd; 10am-3.30pm Mon-Fri) changes cash and travellers cheques. Check email at the i-way Internet Café (Station Rd; per hr Rs 25; 9am-9pm) next to Hotel Embassy.

Suhana Tour and Travels (☎3093808; Gurunanak Market, Station Rd) is a reliable travel agency that can organise day trips to local waterfalls (Rs 1200), two- or three-day trips to Betla National Park (from Rs 2500) and other transport ticketing.

Sights & Activities

If you're here for a day, visit the Hindu Jagannath Temple, a small version of the great Jagannath Mandir at Puri. It's 6km southwest of town (Rs 50 by autorickshaw). The Tribal Research Institute Museum (☎2541824; admission free; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) is also worth a visit to delve into the history of Jharkhand's many tribal groups, including the Asurs, Mundas and Gonds.

There are several pretty waterfalls that can be visited on day trips from Ranchi. The most spectacular, especially from November to February, are the Hundru Falls, 45km northeast of the city.

Sleeping & Eating

Dusty Station Rd, running between the train and bus stations, is lined with hotels of varying quality, though few are interested in checking in foreigners. Other hotels, restaurants and banks can be found on the seemingly endless Main Rd, running at right angles to Station Rd.

Hotel Birsa Vihar (☎2331828; Main Rd; dm/d Rs 70/300, d with AC Rs 500;) Jharkand Tourism's hotel is welcoming and cheap enough – and conveniently within the tourist complex – but it's a bit gloomy and the rooms are sadly grubby. All private rooms have geysers that sometimes work, and TVs that can distract you from the walls.

Hotel Embassy (☎2460813; Station Rd; s/d Rs 300/400, with AC Rs 650/850;) Staff are a little indifferent, but this is one of the few budget places along here to accept foreigners and the comfortable AC rooms are refreshingly contemporary and decently clean.

BNR Guesthouse-Southeastern Railway (☎2460584; Station Rd; s/d Rs 438/599, with AC from Rs 706/866;) Almost opposite the train station, this red-tiled terracotta-roofed Raj relic is a surprisingly pleasant haven. The gardens are unkempt and the rooms a little musty but they have an undeniable charm and travellers are welcomed.

Hotel Capitol Hill (☎2331330; www.hotelcapitolhill.com; Main Rd; s/d Rs 2800/3400;) Without doubt Ranchi's top hotel, this is in the new Capitol Hill shopping complex. The ultramodern 3rd-floor lobby with cream leather chairs gives way to equally modern rooms with a Scandinavian touch. The stylish restaurant and bar are also Ranchi's best.

Planet Masala (☎3291765; 56C Main Rd; mains Rs 30-80) Spotless and with a funky interior – high ceilings and a glassed-in upper level – this modern veg café is a great escape from Main Rd. Along with a full menu of dosas, thalis, veg pizzas and Chinese dishes, there's a great range of coffee, sundaes and chocolate brownies.

The Nook (☎2460128; Station Rd; mains Rs 45-95) The best restaurant in the train station area, the dining room in Hotel Kwality Inns is bright and comfortable, and the broad menu features tasty veg and nonveg food from roast chicken and prawn curry to Kashmiri and tandoori dishes, washed down with a cold beer.

Getting There & Away

Air Deccan has the cheapest fares, flying daily between Ranchi and Kolkata (one hour), and four times a week to Patna (50 minutes) and Delhi (three hours). Indian Airlines (☎2203042; Main Rd) has flights to Delhi (US$135) and Kolkata (US$82).

Buses to Gaya (Rs 101, six hours, hourly) and Patna (Rs 170, nine hours) leave from the main bus stand from 6.30am, while buses to Daltonganj (for Betla) leave from the Ratu Rd bus stand (Rs 85, six hours, hourly). From the Birsa Vihar tourist complex on Main Rd there are two deluxe buses to Patna at 8am (Rs 170, eight to nine hours) and 8pm (Rs 200).

There are three daily trains to Patna (sleeper/3AC Rs 218/612, 10 to 14 hours, 6.15am, 7.15pm and 10.15pm) and two to Gaya (sleeper/chair Rs 133/291, seven hours, 6.15am and 7.15pm). To Kolkata you can take the 1.45pm Shatabdi Express (chair/executive Rs 645/1220, 7½ hours) or the overnight Howrah-Hatia Express (sleeper/3AC Rs 170/480).

BETLA (PALAMAU) NATIONAL PARK

Home to the world's first tiger census in 1932 and now part of Project Tiger, this undisputed natural gem of the state is 140km west of Ranchi and is one of the best places in India to see wild elephants, though tiger sightings are comparatively rare. The entire Palamau Sanctuary covers around 1026 sq km, while the core area of 232 sq km was declared as Betla National Park in 1989. Pure stands of sal forest, rich evergreens, teak trees and bamboo thickets are home to some 37 tigers, 62 leopards, 210 elephants and 249 bison. There are several rickety observation towers for the brave to climb and lay low, while watching wildlife in silence. Living among the animals are eight local tribes spread across 200 small villages. This area was also the seat of power in the Chero dynasty and two of its 16th-century forts still exist in the jungle.

While open year-round, the best time to visit the park (☎ 06562-222650; admission per vehicle Rs 80, camera/video Rs 50/300; 5am-7pm) is October through April. If you can stand the heat, May is a prime time for tiger-spotting as the forest cover is reduced and the animals venture out in search of waterholes. Jeep safaris (per hr about Rs 200) can be arranged privately at the park gate. You must also hire a local guide (per hour Rs 20) to bring in your vehicle.

The park offers elephant safaris (per hr up to 4 people Rs 100) that take you off the vehicle tracks and into the jungle where you get an unparalleled look at the park's flora and fauna.

The government-run Van Vihar tourist complex (☎ 06567-226513; d Rs 400, with AC Rs 700;) is the best accommodation around the park entrance and it's the only option open all year. Spacious rooms are clean, bright and look onto the gardens – some have balconies. Jharkhand Tourism also runs the basic Tourist House (dm Rs 100).

The nearest town to the park entrance is Daltonganj, 25km away. There are five daily buses between Betla and Daltonganj (Rs 14, one hour), or you can arrange a taxi for around Rs 200. Daltonganj is connected to Ranchi by bus (Rs 85, six hours, hourly). Alternatively, organise a tour through a Ranchi travel agency that will take you directly to the park. Suhana Tour and Travels (see opposite) has two-day trips for Rs 2500 per person, including transport, accommodation and safari, or longer trips on demand. This isn't a bad option considering the safety issue in this isolated and lawless part of the state. In any case, it's imperative you call the park for security advice before leaving. For more information on getting the latest security updates, see p551.

☎ 06532

Parasnath, a dusty town in eastern Jharkhand, is the railhead for Sikayi, the major Jain pilgrimage centre in east India. The site and its many temples blanket the top of Parasnath Hill – Jharkhand's highest point. At the summit (1366m), where the Parasnath Temple now stands, 23 of the 24 Jain tirthankars reached salvation, including Parasnath at the age of 100. Given the remote location you'd have to have a serious interest in Jainism to warrant a special trip.

Starting from the serene and leaf-laden town of Madhuban, 25km northeast of Parasnath, the 6km walk up through lush forest is as rewarding as the grand view from the top.

If you're interested in spending the night, there are some dharamsalas (pilgrims' guesthouses), including the Dak Bungalow (admission by donation), a rudimentary place where you'll get a mattress on the floor. There's also a tourist lodge (☎ 0658-232378; s/d Rs 80/120) in Madhuban.

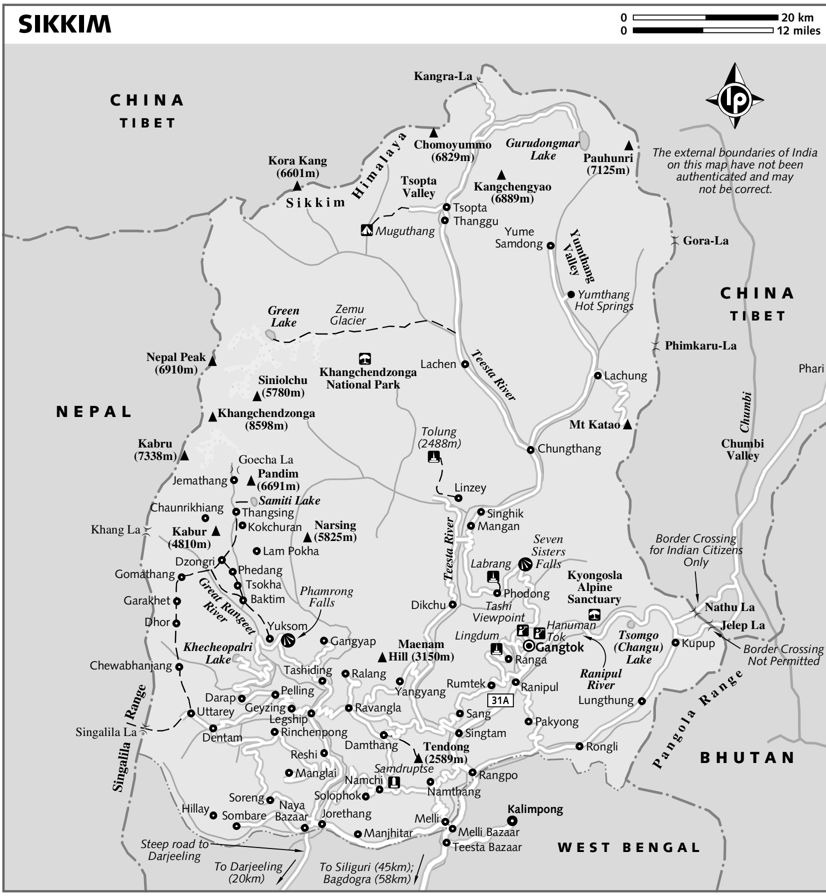
A handful of trains run from Gaya (2nd class/chair Rs 46/160, three hours) and Kolkata (sleeper/3AC Rs 130/365, six hours) to Parasnath daily, and there's a morning bus to Ranchi (Rs 85, 4½ hours). Regular minibuses run from Parasnath's bus stand to Madhuban (Rs 25).

Naxalite activity has been continuing in this area, so it's vital to get security advice before arriving (see p551).

Sikkim

If you're feeling jaded by the heat and hassles of India, Sikkim is the perfect antidote. It's clean (plastic bags are banned) and the mountain air is fresh. Best of all the people are among India's most friendly, with a charming manner that's unobtrusive and slightly shy. To really savour some true Sikkimese atmosphere, visit a village tongba-bar for some local millet beer: it's a bit like warm Japanese sake. Plunging mountain valleys are lushly forested, interspersed occasionally with rice terraces and groves of flowering rhododendrons. Tibetan-style Buddhist monasteries (gompas) add splashes of vermilion to the green ridgetops and are approached through atmospheric avenues of colourful prayer flags set on long bamboo poles.

Straddling the Sikkim–Nepal border is Khangchendzonga (Kanchenjunga; 8598m), the world's third-highest mountain. Khangchendzonga's guardian spirit is worshipped in a series of spectacular autumn festivals and its magnificent multiple white peaks can be spied from many points around the state.



An independent kingdom until 1975, Sikkim has long been considered one of the last Himalayan Shangri Las. But hurry. In the last few years a tourist boom has seen ever multiplying numbers of visitors, mostly middle-class Bengalis escaping the Kolkata heat. Every year more concrete hotels protrude from once-idyllic villagescapes and most towns are already architecturally lacklustre huddles of multistorey box-homes.

Fortunately, although Sikkim is tiny, its crazy contours make road construction very tough. So for now, finding the 'real' Sikkim is just a matter of hiking away from the metalled roads. Just watch out for those infamous leeches.

HIGHLIGHTS

- Hike between the endearing Buddhist gompa villages of Yuksom (p585) and Tashiding (p588)
- Get that Sound of Music feeling in the Alpine Yumthang Valley (p590)
- See two gigantic religious statues face-off at Namchi (p579)
- Gaze awestruck at India's highest mountain, Khangchendzonga, from the comfort of a café in Pelling (p582) or the strenuous trek to Goecha La (p587)
- Sup millet beer from antiquated tongba-tubs in end-of-the-world hamlets like Thanggu (p590)

History

Lepchas, the 'original' Sikkimese, migrated here from Assam or Myanmar (Burma) in the 13th century, followed by Bhutias (Khambas) who fled from religious strife in Tibet during the 15th century. The Nyingmapa form of Mahayana Buddhism arrived with three refugee Tibetan lamas who bumped into each other at the site of modern-day Yuksom. Here in 1641 they crowned Phuntsog Namgyal as first chogyal (king) of Sikkim. The capital later moved to Rabdentse (near Pelling), then to Tumlong (now hidden ruins behind Phodong) before finally settling in Gangtok.

At their most powerful the chogyals' rule encompassed eastern Nepal, upper Bengal and Darjeeling. However, much territory was later lost during wars with Bhutan and Nepal, and throughout the 19th century large numbers of Hindu Nepali migrants arrived, eventually coming to form a majority of Sikkim's population.

In 1835 the British bribed Sikkim's chogyal to cede Darjeeling to the East India Company.

FAST FACTS

- Population: 540,490
- Area: 7096 sq km
- Main language: Nepali
- When to go: late September to mid-November; April and May

Tibet, which regarded Sikkim as a vassal state, raised strong objections. In 1849, amid rising tensions, the British annexed the entire area between the present Sikkim border and the Ganges plains, repulsing a counterinvasion by Tibet in 1886. In 1903-04, Britain's real-life James Bond character Francis Younghusband twice trekked up to the Sikkim–Tibet border. There, armed with little more than derring-do, he deliberately set about inciting a fracas that would 'justify' his astonishing single-handed invasion of Tibet.

Sikkim's last chogyal ruled from 1963 to 1975, when he was deposed by the Indian government after a revolt by Sikkim's Nepali population. China has never officially recognised India's claim to Sikkim, so to bolster pro-Delhi sentiment the Indian government has made Sikkim a tax-free zone, pouring crores of rupees into road building, electricity, water supplies and local industry – including liquor production. As a result Sikkim is surprisingly affluent by Himalayan standards – and rates of alcoholism are the highest in the country. Meanwhile the Sikkim Democratic Front (SDF) state government has earned a reputation as the most environmentally aware in India, banning plastic bags and fining people who pollute streams.

Climate

When visiting Sikkim timing is crucial. Summer's monsoon rains hide the main attraction, those soaring mountains. The Yumthang and Tsopta Valleys are already very cold by October and will scare brass monkeys between December and February. Overall Sikkim's best season is late September to mid-November plus April and May.

Information

October and May are high seasons for Bengali tourists: prices double and normally serene monasteries get overrun. Crowd pressure is worst directly after the Durga Puja celebrations (early October). However, immediately before Durga Puja, things are contrastingly very quiet. Those few days can make a truly vast difference.

PERMITS

Standard Permits

Entering Sikkim requires a permit. Happily these are free and a mere formality, although you might need photos and passport photocopies to apply. Permits are most easily obtainable at the following:

- Indian Embassies abroad when getting your Indian visa (the best solution)
- the Rangpo border post on arrival (but not at Melli or Jorethang)
- Sikkim House in Kolkata (p491)
- Sikkim Tourism in Siliguri (p525)
- Major Foreigners' Regional Registration Offices (FRROs), including those in Kolkata (Calcutta; p491), Mumbai (Bombay; p773) or Darjeeling (p541)

FESTIVALS IN SIKKIM

Sikkim has dozens of festivals, many explained on www.sikkiminfo.net/fairs&festivals.htm. The most characteristic festivals feature colourful masked dances known as chaams, retelling stories from Buddhist mythology. Exact dates generally follow the Tibetan lunar calendar, handily listed under 'Government Holiday' on www.sikkim.gov.in.

Bumchu (Jan/Feb; Tashiding Gompa, p588)
Losar (Feb/Mar; Pemayangtse, p584, Rumtek, p577) Sikkim's biggest chaam dances take place just before Tibetan New Year.
Khachoedpalri Mela (Mar/Apr; Khecheopalri Lake, p585) Butter candles float across the lake.
Drupchen (May/Jun; Rumtek, p577) Chaam dances form part of the annual group-meditation ceremony, with Tse Chu dances every second year honouring Padmasambhava.
Saga Dawa (May/Jun; all monastery towns) Buddhist scriptures paraded through the streets.
Phang Lhabsol (Aug/Sep; Ralang, p581) Masked dances honouring Khangchendzonga.
Diwali (Oct/Nov; widespread) Firework time for the Nepali community.
Mahakala Dance (Nov; Ralang, p581)
Teesta-Tea-Tourism Festival (Dec; Gangtok & Rumtek, p578) Music, dancing, floral displays, archery and a river-rafting competition.
Losoong (Dec/Jan; widespread incl Old Rumtek, p578, Lingdum, p578, Phodong, p588) Sikkimese New Year, preceded by chaam dances in many locations.

Extensions

Standard permits are valid 15 days. Two days before expiry you can extend the permit for a further 15 days (free). This is possible up to three times, so 60 days is the maximum allowed in Sikkim. For the extension go to:

- Gangtok Foreigner Registration Office (p573)
- Tikjuk police station (p582) 5km from Pelling
- Superintendent of Police (SP) offices at Mangan or Namchi (a less-reliable option).

Once you leave Sikkim you must wait three months before you can reapply for another permit. However, if you're on Sikkim-to-Sikkim public transport cutting through a corner of West Bengal (between Rangpo and Melli), your permit remains valid.

Permit Validity

The standard permit is valid for visits to the following:

- Gangtok, Rumtek and Lingdum
- South Sikkim
- anywhere on the Gangtok–Singhik road
- most of West Sikkim to which paved roads extend.

However, for more remote areas you'll need additional special permits. For foreigners, areas nearest to the Chinese border are out of bounds entirely.

Special Permits

High-altitude treks, including the main Goecha La and Singalila Ridge routes, require trekking permits valid up to 15 days and organised by trekking agents.

Restricted area permits for Tsomgo (Changu) Lake (day trips) and visits anywhere north of Singhik (maximum of five days/four nights) are issued locally through approved tour agencies. You'll have to join the agent's 'tour', but such 'tours' simply mean a rental jeep, guide and agreed itinerary. Virtually any Gangtok agency can arrange this within 24 hours. You'll usually need a minimum group size of two (sometimes four), so single travellers have every excuse to make friends.

Dangers & Annoyances

Sikkim is generally a very safe place, but some locals' alcoholic tendencies add a certain unpredictability.

Sikkim's famous little leeches aren't dangerous but they're ubiquitous in damp grass. Stick to dry, wide paths. If trekking through leechy terrain, letting them suck a little blood is often easier than endless stops to remove the morph-magician rascals.

Activities

Sikkim offers considerable trekking potential. Day hikes between villages follow age-old footpaths and normally don't require extra permits: the best-known options are along the Monastery Loop, notably between Yuksam and Tashiding (p587). Nepal-style, multiday group treks head into the really high mountains towards Goecha La at the base of Khangchendzonga. For this, permits and guides are required and although there are variants, most groups tend to follow pretty much the same route (p587). Tour agencies are striving to open new trekking areas, notably the fabulous route across Zemu Glacier to Green Lake in Khangchendzonga National Park. However, the permits remain very expensive and take months to arrange, while several other tempting routes are close to sensitive borders so remain off limits, at least for now.

EAST SIKKIM

☎ 03592 / pop 31,100 / elev 1400-1700m

Sikkim's capital is mostly a functional sprawl of multistorey concrete boxes. But true to its name (meaning 'hill top') these are steeply layered along a sharp mountain ridge. When clouds clear (typically at dawn), views are inspiring, with Khangchendzonga poking its pointy white nose above the western horizon. Gangtok's manmade attractions are minor, but it's not a bad place to wait out a day or two while organising trekking permits or trips to the north.

Orientation

Gangtok's crooked spine is none other than the Rangpo–Mangan road, National Highway 31A, though commonly it's written cryptically as 31ANHWay. The tourist office, banks and many shops line central Mahatma Gandhi (MG) Marg. Nearby Tibet Rd is the nearest Gangtok gets to a travellers' enclave.

Information

BOOKSHOPS

Jainco Booksellers (31ANHWay) Small but very central.
Metroprints (31ANHWay) A little photocopy stall selling the excellent artist's-view map-guide, Gangtok, in a Nutshell (Rs 50).
Rachna Bookshop (☎ 204336; www.rachnabooks.com; Development Area) Gangtok's best-stocked and most convivial bookshop. A mini film-club and jazz café are planned upstairs. Gentle live guitar music sometimes serenades you while you browse.

EMERGENCY

Police station (☎ 222033; 31ANHWay)
STNM hospital (☎ 222944; 31ANHWay)

INTERNET ACCESS

Big Byte (Tibet Rd; per hr Rs 25; 8.30am-8pm) Slow but cheap.

LAUNDRY

Deepak Dry Cleaners (☎ 227073; Tibet Rd; 7am-8pm Fri-Tue) Next-day laundry service.

MONEY

Stock up with rupees in Gangtok: exchange is virtually impossible elsewhere in Sikkim. ATMs accepting foreign cards include UTI Bank and HDFC, both on MG Marg.
State Bank of India (MG Marg; 10am-2pm & 3-4pm Mon-Fri, 10am-1pm Sat) Changes cash and major travellers cheques.

PERMIT EXTENSION

Foreigners' Registration Office (Kazi Rd; 10am-4pm, 10am-noon on 'holidays') In the alley beside Indian Overseas Bank. Takes under an hour.

POST

Main post office (PS Rd) Has a poste-restante service.

TOURIST INFORMATION

Bookshops overflow with listings pamphlets and guidebooks on Sikkim, but few offer useful, critical appraisals. Maps approach pure fiction.
Sikkim Tourist Information Centre (☎ 221634; www.sikkimtourism.com; MG Marg; 10am-4pm, to 7pm high season) has some useful free booklets, sells helicopter tours and can advise on the latest permit requirements. Other queries will likely be passed to commission-paying travel agents.

Sights

NAMGYAL INSTITUTE OF TIBETOLOGY

Housed in traditionally styled Tibetan architecture, this unique institute (☎ 281642; www.tibetology.net; admission Rs 5; 10am-4pm Mon-Sat, closed 2nd Sat of month) was established in 1958 to promote research into Mahayana Buddhism and Tibetan culture. It contains one of the world's largest collections of Buddhist books and manuscripts, plus statuettes, thangkas (Tibetan cloth paintings) and sacred objects, such as a kapali (sacred bowl made from a human skull). Further along the same road, the Do-Drul Chorten is a large white Tibetan pagoda surrounded by dormitories for young monks.

The institute sits in an Orchid Sanctuary, and is conveniently close to the lower station of Damovar Ropeway (per person Rs 50; 9.30am-5.30pm), a new cable car running from just below the Tashi Ling offices on the ridge. Views are stupendous. Alternatively pay Rs 10 by share taxi from central Gangtok along 31ANHWay.

THE RIDGE

With views east and west, it's very pleasant to stroll through shady parks and gardens on the city's central ridgetop. Sadly its focal points, the Royal Palace and Raj Bhawan, are out of bounds for visitors. When the orchids bloom (March) it's worth peeping inside the Flower Exhibition Centre (admission Rs 5; 8.30am-5.30pm), a modestly sized tropical greenhouse full of bonsai and exotic plants. The once-grand 1932 White Memorial Hall (Nehru Marg) opposite is now a dilapidated childrens' sports hall.

ENCHEY GOMPA & VIEWPOINTS

Approached through gently rustling conifers high above Gangtok, this monastery (6am-4pm Mon-Sat), dating back to 1909, is Gangtok's most attractive, with some decent murals and statues of Tantric deities. It comes alive for the colourful Detor Chaam (December/January) masked dances.

From the gompa, follow the access road northeast around the base of an unmissable telecommunications tower. An initially obvious path scrambles up in around 15 minutes to Ganesh Tok viewpoint. Festooned in colourful prayer flags, Ganesh Tok offers superb city views and its minicafé serves hot teas. Across the road, a lane leads into the Himalayan Zoological Park (☎ 223191; admission Rs 10, vehicles Rs 25, video Rs 500; 8am-4pm). Red pandas, Himalayan bears and snow leopards roam around in extensive wooded enclosures so large that you'll really value a car to shuttle between them.

Hanuman Tok, another impressive viewpoint, sits on a hilltop around 4km drive beyond Ganesh Tok, though there are short cuts for walkers.

Perhaps Gangtok's best view of Khangchendzonga is from the Tashi viewpoint at the northwest edge of town beside the main route to Phodong.

Activities

SCENIC FLIGHTS

For eagle-eye mountain views, Sikkim Tourism (☎ 281372; stdcsikkim@yahoo.co.in) arranges scenic helicopter flights. Book at least three days ahead. Prices are for up to five passengers (four for Khangchendzonga ridge):

- brief (approximately 20 minutes) buzz over Gangtok (Rs 6900)
- circuit of West Sikkim (Rs 46,750, one hour)
- Yumthang Valley (Rs 55,250, 70 minutes)
- Khangchendzonga ridge (Rs 63,750, 1½ hours)

Tours

Classic 'three-point tours' show you Ganesh Tok, Hanuman Tok and Tashi viewpoints (Rs 350). Almost any travel agent, hotel or taxi driver offers variants, including a 'five-point tour' adding Enchey Gompa and Namgyal Institute (Rs 400), or 'seven-point tours' tacking on either old-and-new Rumtek (Rs 650) or Rumtek plus Lingdum (Rs 900). All prices are per vehicle holding three or four passengers.

TOUR AGENCIES

For high-altitude treks, visits to Tsomgo Lake or tours to Northern Sikkim you'll need a travel agency. We've been very happy with Altitude Tours & Travels (☎ 9832370501; www.trekkinginsikkim.com; Tourism Bldg, MG Marg) and Modern Treks & Tours (☎ 224670; www.modernhospitality.com; Modern Central Lodge, MG Marg). However, as there are over 120 agencies available, the best idea is to check with fellow travellers for the latest recommendations. Other well-known if less recently tested agencies include:

Blue Sky Treks & Travels (☎ 205113; blueskytourism@yahoo.com; Tourism Bldg, MG Marg)
Potala Tours & Treks (☎ 200043; www.sikkimhimalayas.com; PS Rd)
Sikkim Tours & Travels (☎ 202188; www.sikkimtours.com; Church Rd)

Sleeping

Accommodation rates typically drop 15% to 30% low season, much more if demand is very low and you're good at bargaining.

BUDGET

Many cheaper hotels quote walk-in rates of around Rs 500. Some are worth it. Others are just waiting for you to bargain them to Rs 200. Check rooms carefully as standards can vary widely even within the same hotel. Foreigners generally flock around central Tibet Rd, the only area where a Rs 150 room is likely to be approximately inhabitable.

New Modern Central Lodge (☎ 201361; newmoderncentral@hotmail.com; Tibet Rd; dm Rs 50-70, d Rs 150-250, d with private bathroom Rs 300) It's been the traveller favourite for so long that people still come here despite somewhat ill-kept rooms and the complacent albeit friendly new management. With plenty of cheap rooms and a useful meeting-point café, it will probably remain the backpacker standby.

Modern Central Lodge (☎ 204670; info@modernhospitality.com; 31ANHWay; d from Rs 200) Former managers of what is now the New Modern Central Lodge have taken their reliable services to this handy but noisy new location. All rooms have private bathroom. Although standards aren't luxurious, the price is right. Great home-cooked food on the roof garden.

Hotel Lhakpa (☎ 201175; Tibet Rd; d from Rs 200) Very gloomy, cheap box rooms with rarely functioning geysers lurk above an unrepentantly local Tibetan café.

Travel Lodge (☎ 203858; Tibet Rd; d Rs 250-600) Unusually good-value rooms have BBC World TV and well-heated showers with towels and soap provided, though the ground-floor cheapies have thin walls and upstairs a few suffer from damp. Price depends heavily on season and bargaining.

Hotel Mig-Tin (☎ 204101; Tibet Rd; d Rs 250-600) Above a lobby with naïve Tibetan-style murals and a great little meet-up café, the best rooms are slightly worn but excellent value out of season, assuming you bargain a little. Avoid the cheapest rooms that are damp and airless.

Tenzing Lodge (☎ 204036; Development Area; d Rs 300-600) Of over 40 similar hotels in Development Area, Tenzing is comparatively inexpensive, with clean, simple rooms off misleadingly plush marble stairways. Some private bathrooms lack toilet seats. Eerily empty low season.

MIDRANGE & TOP END

All places listed here have cable TV and private bathroom with hot showers. Most add 10% tax.

Kanchen Residency (☎ 9732072614; kanchenresidency@indiatimes.com; Tibet Rd; d back/side/front Rs 450/600/700) Above the dismal (unrelated) Hotel Prince, this sparklingly airy discovery is spacious, light and well run. Front rooms have great views.

Mintokling Guest House (☎ 224226; www.mintokling.com; Bhanu Path; s/d from Rs 450/650) Set on a lawn within in a secluded garden, this expanded family home is a real oasis with Bhutanese fabrics, timber ceilings and some local design features. Very friendly.

Hotel Downtown (☎ 284219; Tamang Gompa Rd, Upper Sichey; d Rs 550/650) Certainly not downtown, but this new, out-of-centre minihotel is neat, clean and great value.

Hotel Sonam Delek (☎ 222566; slg_hsdelek@sancharnet.in; Tibet Rd; d Rs 600-1000) This longstanding favourite has good service, reliable food, and the best-value 'deluxe' rooms (Rs 700 to 880) have real mattresses, Tibetan motif bedheads and decent views. Bigger 'super deluxe' rooms have better views, but the cheapest 'standard' rooms are a very noticeable step down – in the basement.

Hotel Soyang (☎ 229219; www.sunflower-hotels.com/soyang.html; d Rs 850-1500) The outlandish pseudo-Chinese lobby décor is simultaneously cheesy yet atmospheric. Rooms are old fashioned, but the cheapest ones are excellent value with very clean, white-tiled bathrooms. The Soyang is the third of four hotels along a quiet, winding, easy-to-miss back lane off MG Marg signed for the Hotel Ben.

Oriental (☎ 221180/1; www.orientalsikkim.com; MG Marg; s/d/ste Rs 1200/1600/1800) This cosy boutique hotel has Sanderson-style fabrics, a hint of canopy over beds, and an appealing little 1st-floor lounge area decorated with aspidistra and Tibetan ornaments.

Netuk House (☎ 202374; slg_netuk@sancharmet.in; Tibet Rd; s/d Rs 1450/2200) Perfectly central yet unsigned and easy to miss amid endless flowers, the Netuk has 10 rooms in three very different styles. The newest have colourful Tibetan-style façades, local rugs and shared sitting terraces. There's a delightful communal sitting lounge.

Chumbi Residency (☎ 226618; www.chumbiresidency.com; Tibet Rd; s/d from Rs 1550/1950) This wonderfully central, three-star hotel has comfortable if somewhat cramped rooms with fresh white walls and green marble tables. A few have views. Service is professional and the relaxed Tangerine bar-restaurant is firmly recommended (see below).

Hotel Nor-Khill (☎ 205637; norkhill@elginhotels.com; PS Rd; d Rs 5865) Oozing 1930s elegance, this sumptuous 'house of jewels' was originally the King of Sikkim's royal guesthouse. Historical photos and artwork feature throughout, and the piano-lounge lobby features antique furniture and imperial-sized mirrors. The spaciously luxurious old-building rooms attract film stars and Dalai Lamas.

Eating

RESTAURANTS & CAFES

Most budget hotels have cheap café-restaurants serving standard Chinese/Tibetan dishes, basic Indian meals and Western breakfasts. For good-value South Indian vegetarian food, try Parivar Restaurant (dishes Rs 25-50) and Thalee (mains Rs 25-50), next to each near the Gandhi statue (MG Marg). Beside Enchey Gompa, the misleadingly named Tourist Amenity (snacks Rs 8-20) is a cheap, basic teahouse serving great veg momos (dumplings) for a giveaway Rs 12, including complimentary soup.

Hotel Golden Pagoda (MG Marg; curries Rs 35-100 plus rice Rs 350; 10am-3pm & 7-9.30pm) The licensed restaurant on the top floor of this midrange hotel serves tasty Indian vegetarian food at reasonable prices.

Bakers Cafe (MG Marg; mains Rs 30-100; 8.30am-8.30pm) The perfect breakfast escape, this cosy Western-style café has great Viennese coffee (Rs 35) and excellent pastries.

our pick Tangerine (Ground fl, Chumbi Residency, Tibet Rd; mains Rs 50-100) Descend five floors of stairs for sublime cuisine, tasty Western snacks or cocktails at the brilliant Japanese-style floor-cushioned bar area. Try the paneer makahani (Indian cheese in a creamy, garlic-tomato-ginger sauce) or sample Sikkimese specialities, like pork gyaree (with ginger and garlic) or sochhya (stew with nettle shoots). Stylishly relaxed décor.

Rasoi (Blue Sheep) Restaurant (MG Marg; buffet adult/child Rs 90/50; noon-3.30pm & 6-11pm) Brand new and thus super clean, the buffet offers four excellent vegetarian choices plus breads, rice and dessert. No alcohol.

QUICK EATS

Roll House (MG Marg; rolls Rs 10-25; 8am-8pm) In an alley just off MG Marg this hole-in-the-wall serves delicious kati rolls (see p509) that upstage even the Kolkata originals.

Quickbite (MG Marg; snacks Rs 20-40; 8am-8pm) Takeaway snacks from dosas to pizzas to Indian sweets.

Oberoi's (MG Marg; snacks Rs 25-60; 7.30am-8.30pm) Momos, chowmein, sandwiches, Indian snacks and pizzas.

Drinking

Lounge 31a (Zero Point; beers Rs 59, snacks Rs 40-130, waterpipes Rs 99; 11.30am-9pm) Swooping glass architecture offers light-suffused sunset views and a hip sense of modernist style.

Square (PS Rd; meals from Rs 135, beers Rs 60) This stylish little restaurant-bar has big view windows that are great for a cosy beer, but the pseudo-Thai food is overpriced.

Golden Tips (www.goldentipstea.com/Showrooms.asp; Kazi Rd; teas from Rs 25; 12.30-9.30pm) An inviting tea showroom with a wide selection of blends to buy and taste.

Entertainment

Denzong Cinema (☎ 202692; Lal Bazar; tickets from Rs 15) Screens the latest Bollywood blockbusters in Hindi.

X'cape (☎ 228636; Vajra Cinema Hall; entry Rs 400; from 7pm Sat) Gangtok's leading nightclub.

Shopping

Directorate of Handicrafts & Handloom Emporium (☎ 222926; Zero Point; 10am-4pm Mon-Sat, daily Jul-Mar) This emporium sells a range of excellent-value gifts, including purses (Rs 25), handwoven carpets (from Rs 2110), handmade paper and ornately carved choktse (Sikkimese low wooden tables, from Rs 1500).

Several souvenir shops on MG Marg and PS Rd sell pricier Tibetan and Sikkimese handicrafts. Bustling Lal Bazaar has several stalls selling wooden tongba pots, prayer flags and Nepali-style knives.

A few Sikkimese liquors come in novelty souvenir containers. Opening a 1L monk-shaped bottle of Old Monk Rum (Rs 210) means screwing off the monk's head! Fireball comes in a bowling ball–style red sphere.

Getting There & Away

Landslides and route changes mean road journeys can take vastly longer than expected. If flying out of Bagdogra, play safe by making the Gangtok–Siliguri trip a full day ahead.

AIR

The nearest airport to Sikkim is Bagdogra near Siliguri (p526), with flights to Kolkata, Delhi and Guwahati. TSA Helicopters (☎ 0353-2531959; www.mountainflightindia.com) shuttle from Gangtok to Bagdogra (Rs 2000, 30 minutes) supposedly departing at 10am daily, returning around 1.30pm. However, service is weather dependent and might also be cancelled if bookings are insufficient. In Gangtok, Sikkim Tourism (☎ 221634) sells the tickets. See p1170 for information on helicopter safety in India.

Bagdogra is 124km from Gangtok. If you don't want to bother going into Siliguri (12km away) for public transport, fixed-price taxis cost Rs 1450 direct Gangtok–Bagdogra. You

SIKKIM SIPS

In much of India, drinking alcohol seems a slightly shameful activity, boozers often huddle in half-dark bars as though embarrassed to be seen. Not so in Sikkim. Here every second café serves beer (Hit and Dansberg are local brews) and the state is famous for its liquors. But although quality is pretty good, telling between Sikkimese rum, whisky and brandy isn't always easy on a blind tasting. Locals tend to slurp 'pegs' (60ml measures) at a prodigious speed. As a result it's not uncommon to see unconscious figures sprawled face down on the streets, left snoring where they fell.

In Sikkimese villages, don't miss a chance to try tongba. You'll receive a girded wooden tub of fermented millet seeds onto which you pour boiling water. Suck the resultant liquid through a bamboo straw. It tastes a little like Japanese sake. Regular sipping and topping up prevents the drink getting too strong.

Note that on full-moon and new-moon days, selling alcohol is prohibited so bars stay closed.

might get slightly better prices from jeeps in the carpark: look for Sikkim (SK) number plates.

BUS

See the table, below, for buses from the governmental SNT bus station (PS Rd).

SHARE JEEPS & MINIBUSES

From the hectic but relatively well-organised private bus and taxi station (31ANHWay), share jeeps/minibuses depart until mid afternoon to Darjeeling (Rs 125/90, five hours), Kalimpong (Rs 87/60, three hours) and Siliguri (Rs 130/80, four hours), some continuing to New Jalpaiguri train station (Rs 135/100, 4½ hours). There are one-off jeeps to Kakarbhitta (Rs 160, 4½ hours) on the Nepali border and Phuentsholing (Bhutan border, Rs 200, six hours, 8am). Prepurchase tickets.

West Sikkim sumos depart when full from Namnang jeep stand. That's roughly hourly for Geyzing (Rs 120, 4½ hours), Ravangla (Rs 70, three hours), Namchi (Rs 92, three hours) and Jorethang (Rs 98 to 112, three hours). Last service is around 3pm. Jeeps for Yuksom, Tashiding and Pelling (Rs 130 to 150, five hours) depart around 7am and again around 12.30pm, but services to Pelling multiply in the high season. With a small group, consider chartering for 10 times the one-way fare, thereby allowing photo stops en route.

Sumos to North Sikkim use the north jeep stand (31ANHWay), about 3km north of the centre.

TRAIN

The nearest major train station is over 120km away at New Jalpaiguri (NJP). There's a computerised railway booking counter (☎ 222016; 🕑 8am-1pm Mon-Sat, to noon Sun) at the SNT Bus Stand.

Getting Around

Share taxis (Rs 10 per hop) run along 31ANHWay stopping at designated 'Taxi Stops'. Fixed-rate service (chartered) taxis loiter on MG Marg.

AROUND GANGTOK

Rumtek and Lingdum Gompa are most easily visited on a 'seven-point tour' (see p574). Viewing the temples takes perhaps half an hour each, but the infinitely winding county lane that links them is a big part of the attraction, curving through mossy forests high above river valleys and artistically terraced rice-slopes.

Rumtek

☎ 03592 / elev 1690m

Facing Gangtok distantly across a vast green valley, Rumtek village is entirely dominated by its very extensive gompa complex. Spiritually the monastery is hugely significant as the surrogate home of Buddhism's Kagyu (Black Hat) sect (see the boxed text, p578). However, visually it is not Sikkim's most spectacular and by day it can get annoyingly crowded in the high season. To experience Rumtek at its most serene, stay the night and hike around the delightful nearby hilltops at dawn.

SIGHTS

Rumtek Gompa Complex

This rambling, walled complex (☎ 252329; www.rumtek.org; admission free) is a whole village within a village containing religious buildings, schools and several small lodge-hotels. To enter, foreigners must show both passport and Sikkim permit.

Within, the main monastery building (admission Rs 5; 🕑 6am-5pm) was constructed between 1961 and 1966 to replace the Tsurphu Monastery in Tibet, which had been destroyed during China's Cultural Revolution. The giant throne within awaits the crowning of Kagyu's current spiritual leader, the (disputed) 17th Karmapa (Ogyen Trinley Dorje; www.kagyuoffice.org). This young lama fled from Tibet in 2000 but currently remains based at Dharamsala: Indian authorities have prevented him officially taking up his Rumtek seat for fear of upsetting Chinese government sensibilities.

Rear stairs lead up to the Golden Stupa. It's not really a stupa at all, just a smallish concrete room, but it holds the ashes of the 16th Karmapa in a jewel-studded reliquary to which

FLYING BLACK HATS

The Black Hat sect is so named because of the priceless ruby-topped headgear used to crown the Karmapa (spiritual leader) during key ceremonies. Being woven from the hair of angels, the hat must be kept locked in a box to prevent it from flying back to heaven. But maybe that's just what it has done. Nobody has seen it since 1993 when the 16th Karmapa died. Only when the 17th Karmapa is finally crowned, will anyone dare to unlock the box and check.

pilgrims pay their deepest respects. If locked, someone from the colourful Karma Shri Naland Institute of Buddhist Studies opposite can usually open it for you.

Rumtek holds impressive masked chaam dances during the annual Drupchen (group meditation) in May/June, and two days before Losar (Tibetan New Year) when you might also catch traditional lhamo (Tibetan opera) performances.

Old Rumtek Gompa

About 1.5km beyond the gompa towards Sang, a long avenue of white prayer flags leads attractively down to powder-blue Old Rumtek Gompa (admission free). Despite the name, the attractive main prayer hall has been so thoroughly renovated that it looks virtually new. However, the interior is a riotous festival of colour and the lonely location is idyllic with some wonderful west-facing views. Two days before Losoong (Sikkimese New Year), Old Rumtek holds the celebrated Kagyed Chaam dance.

SLEEPING & EATING

Options within the gompa complex include Sungay Guesthouse (☎ 252221; dechenb@dte.vsnl.net.in; d/tr Rs 400/200) whose comfortable if rather Spartan rooms have varnished wood-veneer walls and private bathrooms with geyser. Doubles have great balcony views, hence the higher price. Further up where the monastery access road bends, Sangay Hotel (☎ 252238; s/d with shared bathroom per person Rs 100/150) is a typically Sikkimese half-timbered house offering tiny cell rooms above a rustic restaurant.

Outside the gompa walls and 300m back towards Gangtok, the friendly Shambhala Mountain Resort (☎ 252240; resort_shamhala@sify.com; d Rs 2500) has attractive gardens and an appealing lobby, but the once-pleasant rooms have some scuffing and the bathtubs are somewhat stained. Rooms 201 to 204 have balconies at no extra charge.

Several new, quietly upmarket resorts are springing up along the Ranipul–Rumtek road.

Lingdum Gompa

Only completed in 1998, peaceful Lingdum Gompa is more visually exciting than Rumtek. Its structure grows out of the forest in grand layers with photogenic side towers, though the exterior paintings are not especially accomplished. The extensively muralled main prayer hall enshrines a large Sakyamuni Buddha wreathed in an expansive gilded aura. Frenetic chanting adds to the magical atmosphere. The isolated gompa complex has a café but its pilgrims' rooms no longer accept general tourists.

Getting There & Away

Rumtek is 26km from Gangtok by a very winding road. Lingdum Gompa is a 2km walk from Ranka village, reached by rough backlanes from Gangtok. Relatively sporadic share jeeps run to either from Gangtok's Lal Bazaar (Rs 22, one hour), but return transport fizzles out by 1pm. Linking the two sites requires private transport or a tour.

TOWARDS TIBET

Tsomgo (Changu, Tsangu) Lake

elev 3780m

Pronounced Changu, this scenic lake is an established tour stop for Indian visitors, but permits are necessary. To get one sign up for a 'tour' by 2pm and most Gangtok agents can get the permit for next-day departure (two photos required). Tours (ie guided shared taxis) typically cost Rs 700/450 per person for groups of two/three. Individual travellers usually can't get the permit.

At the lakeside, food stalls sell hot chai, chow mein and momos, while short yak rides (about Rs 80) potter along the shore. If you can muster the puff, the main attraction is clambering up a nearby hilltop for inspiring views.

Nathu La

Four days a week, Indian citizens (but not foreigners) are permitted to continue 18km along the spectacular road from Tsomgo Lake to the 4130m Nathu La (Listening Ears Pass). Here the border post to southeastern Tibet 'opened' with much fanfare in 2006. As yet only local villagers are eligible to cross, and only to travel 8km to the first Tibetan market. But keep asking. Maybe one day it will be possible to reach Yatung (52km) in Tibet's fabled Chumbi Valley, where the Sikkimese kings once had their summer palace. From there, the road towards Lhasa (525km) winds up onto the Tibetan plateau via the old fortress town of Phari, one of the world's highest settlements.
